A special Senate committee opened hearings today on the proposal for a new civilian space agency. / The first witness was retired General James Doolittle, who is now chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. / He expressed the view that the United States should send a manned space ship to the moon as soon as research permits, "and then on to other planets." / If Russia gains control of outer space, he said, the result would be "probable Soviet world domination." / The civilian agency would handle non-military space projects. / A member of the special committee---Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico---contended that the agency would be controlled by private industry. Doolittle conceded under questioning that the original plan had been re-drafted...so that non-government members would outnumber government members, 9 to 8. / He also conceded that the agency...at some future date...would be awarding large contracts. / It was his opinion, however, that the proposed membership was revised in order to gain more scientific and technological representation. Senator Anderson pressed his charges later in a speech on the Senate floor.

In Copenhagen, the foreign ministers of all fifteen NATO countries...large and small...agreed today on the necessity of thorough preparation for a possible summit conference. / This has been the policy of Secretary of State Dulles all along, but it is a policy with regard to which not all NATO countries until now have seen eye to eye. / Mr. Dulles has insisted that there must first be some prior assurance of success. / In their closed door sessions, the foreign ministers today considered the possibility of breaking down the West's over-all disarmament program into separate parts.

And tonight, Mr. Dulles received a first-hand report from Llewelyn Thompson, the United States ambassador to Moscow, on the Soviet attitude toward a summit conference. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd was present at this meeting, as was a representative of France. The French foreign minister did not attend because of a prior engagement. / They were able to go over a long memorandum from Foreign Minister Gromyko, outlining the Soviet position. This memorandum...said to run some 15 pages... is in addition to the other briefer note delivered by Gromyko to the Western powers last night. / That note agreed to continue preliminary talks

~~without the participation of Poland and Czechoslovakia.~~

Red China and North Korea said today that a complete withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea is "the necessary condition" for a peaceful settlement of the Korean question. The Communist statement was in answer to last month's British note, asking that free elections be held in North and South Korea under United Nations supervision. ~~The British note was delivered in Peiping on behalf of the United Nations Command.~~ The Communists say they will propose an international conference to settle the Korean problem, if all United Nations forces---mostly American---are withdrawn from South Korea. Red China claims that an evacuation of its forces from North Korea already is under way.

Reports from Washington say that President Eisenhower has chosen Arthur S. Flemming, president of Ohio Wesleyan University, to succeed Marion B. Folsom as Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. White House News Secretary Hagerty confirmed today that Mr. Folsom wishes to leave his post this year for personal reasons. The report of the possible Flemming nomination is unconfirmed.

Edward R. Murrow: May 6, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

To judge from the latest Soviet note on preparation for a summit conference, the Russians are trying to regain some of the ground they lost by vetoing Arctic inspection in the U.N. Security Council. The note not only presses for an early foreign ministers' meeting -- a meeting which Mr. Dulles had proposed and they at first had scorned - they offer something else Mr. Dulles insisted on, a discussion of substantive issues by both the Ambassadors in Moscow, and the foreign ministers. The offer is circumscribed, but even as limited, represents a significant retreat by the Kremlin. It has been trying to limit the entire pre-summit discussion to procedural matters. The Western powers took the line that without discussing the problems -- first through the ambassadors, later through the foreign ministers - it would be impossible to set up an agenda for the summit that had a chance of producing results.

The Soviet note meets the Western requirement more than halfway. It says: "The Soviet government does not exclude the possibility that an exchange of opinion in some of the questions that the sides propose for the agenda of the summit conference can take place" and adds: "in case of necessity and by common consent." It concedes this latitude to the meetings with ambassadors as well as to the foreign ministers.

Free discussion is limited by the phrase, "common consent", which means that the Soviet Union clings to the right to veto the discussion of any topic it doesn't like, and to do so not only at the summit, but in the preparatory talks. / The purpose now appears to be to limit the summit conference to subjects on which agreement is fairly well assured. / The Soviet note states that the object of discussion would be "to ascertain the advisability of placing this or that question on the agenda, and the possibility of adopting mutually acceptable decisions on them."

This too is a change from what the Russians originally proposed. / As the West understood the plan, the Russians would arbitrarily decree what could and could not be on the agenda, and this would almost inevitably lead to the summit meeting being a dead-sure propaganda triumph for the Kremlin.

Another gulf remains to be bridged. / The Russians want the holding of a foreign ministers' meeting to be a binding commitment to hold a summit meeting. This the Western Powers refuse to promise. / They want to decide whether to hold a summit meeting only after the foreign ministers have explored the ground. / The difference still could cause trouble. / One side or the other must yield before the foreign ministers even start their meeting. So this may be a further test of the Kremlin's sincerity in wanting a summit meeting..

A good deal of skepticism is being expressed in Copenhagen on the sincerity of the Soviet Union's summit policy./ Obviously nobody knows just what is going on inside the Kremlin. But signs of shift and uncertainty are detected. / It is assumed that Dag Hammarskjold would not have intervened on the side of Arctic inspection at the U.N. security council if someone in Moscow - most likely Khrushchev himself - had not said some things when he was there that Hamoshold took to be a green light for such an action. / True, he may have misread the signals. But it is more credible that Khrushchev ran into opposition at home, and found he had to reject Arctic inspection.

It is interesting to hear that Eastern European diplomats in Washington see a connection between Khrushchev's summit policy, and the recent tightening of the bonds that hold the satellites to the Kremlin./ Khrushchev himself went to Hungary to issue a strong warning against another uprising./ He forced Gomulka to strengthen communist controls in Poland. He launched a bitter attack on Yugoslavia, that seemed to reverse the decision to give wide latitude to national communist parties. These diplomats have an explanation for this upsurge of severity./ They think Khrushchev expects a summit meeting, expects it to lead to some relaxation of tensions, and dreads that in consequence, the ties between the Kremlin and the satellites will be loosened to the great peril of communist unity. / So he is giving these ties a special hitch before the summit meeting takes place.

The point to make is that these diplomats don't know what is happening in Moscow. Neither do the ministers now meeting in Copenhagen. They can only study and guess. And of course this inscrutability, which the Russians exploit to the utmost, hides the light to their exclusive advantage. / It is one of the inherent difficulties of dealing with the Russians.

Back in a moment. —
Joan Bryan —
Need a word from Ford

No one knows...and never has known...just what goes on inside the Kremlin. And this inscrutibility helps the Russians in their dealings with other states. President Eisenhower recognized this fact when he once said, "We are dealing with people who are unpredictable and, at times, they are practically inexplicable...so far as we are concerned."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower tonight will make a new appeal for bipartisan support for his foreign aid program and for his proposals for reorganizing the Department of Defense. Mr. Eisenhower will also promise to "stand beside" every Republican candidate who supports these programs...and he predicted a Republican congressional victory in November, "if we will but try." Mr. Eisenhower will be addressing a dinner, honoring Republican members of Congress. He will say that from his reorganization program he expects very specific results: "A stronger, more efficient defense---a less costly, more tightly directed defense---and every Spring, come appropriation time, a more rational, less noisy defense." With respect to his foreign aid and reciprocal trade programs, he will warn of Russia's current economic offensive. He will say, "Either we stand idly by and watch this tremendous force funneled into violence, dissolution of orderly government and Communist exploitation or we help channel it into better education andimproved living standards and thereby strengthen peace and freedom everythere in the world."

This morning, President Eisenhower spoke off-the-cuff before the annual meeting of the Advertising Council. He advocated extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act...warning that high tariffs and restrictive import quotas could "ruin" America. And again he urged approval of his defense reorganization program.

Chairman Cannon of the powerful House Appropriations Committee defended Mr. Eisenhower's reorganization plan today as a "reasonable, sensible, long-delayed much needed" piece of legislation which should be approved at the earliest possible date. Cannon said the Defense Department needs to be reorganized to eliminate duplication in spending, put an end to "insane" inter-service rivalry, and save the country from possible military disaster. He referred to criticism of the President's program by "obtuse admirals" who, he charged, "never learn how to fight the next war." Chairman Cannon spoke from the House floor. And Representative Taber of New York, the top Republican on the appropriations committee, called it "a magnificent speech." By his action, Cannon split publicly with Chairman Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee, who strongly opposes the reorganization program.

A special Senate committee opened hearings today on the proposal for a new civilian space agency. The first witness was retired General James Doolittle, who is now chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. He expressed the view that the United States should send a manned space ship to the moon as soon as research permits "and then on to other planets." If Russia gains control of outer space, he said, the result would be "probably Soviet world domination." The civilian agency would handle non-military space projects. A member of the special committee---Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico---contended that the agency would be controlled by private industry. Doolittle conceded under questioning that the original plan had been re-drafted...so that non-government members would outnumber government members, 9 to 8. He also conceded thtt the agency...at some future date...would be awarding large contracts. It was his opinion, however, that the proposed membership was revised in order to gain more scientific and technological representation. Senator Anderson pressed his charges later in a speech on the Senate floor.

In Copenhagen, the foreign ministers of all fiftenn NATO countries...large and small...agreed today on the necessity of thorough preparation for a possible summit conference. This has been the policy of Secretary of State Dulles all along, but it is a policy with regard to which not all NATO countries until now have seen eye to eye. Mr. Dulles has insisted that there must first be some prior assurance of success. In their closed door sessions, the foreign ministers today considered the possibility of breaking down the West's over-all disarmament program into separate parts. And tonight, Mr. Dulles received a first-hand report from Llewelyn Thompson, the United States ambassador to Moscow, on the Soviet attitude toward a summit conference.

Red China and North Korea said today that a complete withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea is "the necessary condition" for a peaceful settlement of the Korean question. The Communist statement was in answer to last month's British note, asking that free elections be held in North and South Korea under United Nations supervision. The Communists say they will propose an international conference to settle the Korean problem, if all United Nations forces---mostly American---are withdrawn from South Korea. Red China claims that an evacuation of its forces from North Korea already is under way.

Reports from Washington say that President Eisenhower has chosen Arthur S. Flemming, president of Ohio Wesleyan University, to succeed Marion B. Folsom as Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. White House News Secretary Hagerty confirmed today that Mr. Folsom wishes to leave his post this year for personal reasons. The report of the possible Flemming nomination is unconfimmed.

To judge from the latest Soviet note on preparation for a summit conference, the Russians are trying to regain some of the ground they lost by vetoing Arctic inspection in the U.N. Security Council. The note not only presses for an early foreign ministers' meeting - a meeting which Mr. Dulles had proposed and they at first had scorned - they offer something else Mr. Dulles insisted on, a discussion of substantive issues by both the Ambassadors in Moscow, and the foreign ministers. The offer is circumscribed, but even as limited, represents a significant retreat by the Kremlin. It has been trying to limit the entire pre-summit discussion to procedural matters. The Western powers took the line that without discussing the problems - first through the ambassadors, later through the foreign ministers, it would be impossible to set up an agenda for the summit that had a chance of producing results.

The Soviet note meets the Western requirement more than halfway. It says: "The Soviet government does not exclude the possibility that an exchange of opinion in some of the questions that the sides propose for the agenda of the summit conference can take place" and adds: "in case of necessity and by common consent." It concedes this latitude to the meetings with ambassadors as well as to the foreign ministers.

Free discussion is limited by the phrase, "common consent," which means that the Soviet Union clings to the right to veto the discussion of any topic it doesn't like, and to do so not only at the summit, but in the preparatory talks. The purpose now appears to be to limit the summit conference to subjects on which agreement is fairly well assured. The Soviet note states that the object of discussion would be "to ascertain the advisability of placing this or that question on the agenda, and the possibility of adopting mutually acceptable decisions on them."

This too is a change from what the Russians originally proposed. As the West understood the plan, the Russians would arbitrarily decree what could and could not be on the agenda, and this would almost inevitably lead to the summit meeting being a dead-sure propaganda triumph for the Kremlin.

Another gulf remains to be bridged. The Russians want the holding of a foreign ministers' meeting to be a binding commitment to hold a summit meeting. This the Western Powers refuse to promise. They want to decide whether to hold a summit meeting only after the foreign ministers have explored the ground. The difference still could cause trouble. One side or the other must yield before the foreign ministers even start their meeting. So this may be a further test of the Kremlin's sincerity in wanting a summit meeting.

A good deal of skepticism is being expressed in Copenhagen on the sincerity of the Soviet Union's summit policy. Obviously nobody knows just what is going on inside the Kremlin. But signs of shift and uncertainty are detected. It is assumed that Dag Hammarskjold woold not have intervened on the side of Arctic inspection at the U.N. Security Council, if someone in Moscow - most likely Khrushchev himself - had not said some things when he was there that Hammarskjold took to be a green light for such an action. True, he may have misread the signals. But it is more credible that Khrushchev ran into opposition at home, and found he had to reject Arctic inspection.

It is interesting to hear that Eastern European diplomats in Washington see a connection between Khrushchev's summit policy, and the recent tightening of the bonds that hold the satellites to the Kremlin. Khrushchev himself went to Hungary to issue a strong warning against another uprising. He forced Gomulka to strengthen communist controls in Poland. He launched a bitter attack on Yugoslavia, that seemed to reverse the decision to give wise latitude to national communist parties. These diplomats have an explanation for this upsurge of severity. They think Khrushchev expects a summit meeting, expects it to lead to some relaxation of tensions, and dreads that in consequence, the ties between the Kremlin and the satellites will be loosened to the great peril of communist unity. So he is giving these ties a special hitch before the summit meeting takes place.

The point to make is that these diplomats don't know what is happening in Moscow. Neither do the ministers now meeting in Copenhagen. They can only study and guess. And of course this inscrutability, which the Russians exploit to the utmost, hides the light to their exclusive advantage. It is one of the inherent difficulties of dealing with the Russians.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, a word from Ford.

COMMERCIAL

MURROW: No one knows...and never has known,..just what goes on inside the Kremlin. And this inscrutability helps the Russians in their dealings with other states. President Eisenhower recognized this fact when he once said, "We are dealing with people who are unpredictable and, at times, they are practically inexplicable... so far as we are concerned."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 7, 1958

This is the news:

The NATO foreign ministers meeting ended in Copenhagen today with the issuance of a joint communique. For a first-hand report on this, we switch to my colleague, Charles Collingwood, in Copenhagen.

(Tape runs 5:25
(Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

This morning...before the communique was issued...the United States, Britain and France said that other Western countries besides themselves might participate in talks with Russia, either on the foreign ministers level or at the summit. "For instance," they said, "Italy might then be included."

The statement did not admit the Soviet claim for numerical parity in future negotiations with the West. / Nevertheless, there is speculation that the inclusion of Italy...or some other Western country besides the "Big Three"... might open the way for the participation of either Ccechoslovakia or Poland in a foreign ministers conference and perhaps...later...at the summit. Russia has asked that these Communist countries be allowed to participate, and last week the United States turned down the request. Now the door seems to be left slightly ajar.

In Washington, the Atomic Energy Commission announces that it started its Spring series of nuclear tests in the Pacific on April 27th. / It gave no details. / Word that the tests had begun came first---not from the Atomic Energy Commission---but from Democratic Representative Porter of Oregon, in a speech earlier in the afternoon on the House floor. Porter returned from the test area last night. / He attacked the [redacted] failure of the A.E.C. to announce the explosion, calling it "a defiance of the people's right to know." And he [redacted] called for an end to nuclear weapons tests...as he has on occasion in the past.

The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report says that President Eisenhower may try a new approach in order to put his defense reorganization plan in operation. The committee...which is a private group...says Mr. Eisenhower may submit a presidential reorganization plan, which would automatically become law sixty days after submission to Congress---unless it is rejected by a majority vote in either house. The plan presently is in the form of legislation which requires approval by both houses of Congress. Doubt is expressed in official quarters that the President will try to by-pass the normal procedures.

Senate-House conferees agreed tonight on a military pay bill designed to keep highly skilled personnel from leaving the armed forces for private industry. The price tag on the measure...raising the pay of most officers and enlisted men...is 576-million dollars.

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Marion B. Folsom as Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare./ Arthur S. Flemming, former director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, was named to succeed Folsom effective the latter part of July./ He is now president of Ohio Wesleyan University. Folsom had expressed a desire to resign for personal reasons. And in accepting the resignation, Mr. Eisenhower praised Folsom's "vital" service as a cabinet officer.

House Speaker Rayburn said today that President Eisenhower must make some concessions, if he wants Congress to extend the reciprocal trade program. Rayburn said this does not mean abandoning the principle of reciprocal trade, which he strongly supports./ The House Ways and Means Committee has put off a vote on the extension bill until Monday to see what concessions---if any---the Administration may offer. (In Mr. Eisenhower's speech last night urging approval of the trade program there was no suggestion of compromise. And Secretary of Commerce Weeks said tonight, "We are standing pat."

The House Foreign Affairs Committee has approved...and sent to the House floor...a measure authorizing 3-billion, 603-million dollars in foreign aid. This is 339-million dollars less than President Eisenhower requested. And A drastic cutback in foreign aid, the committee said,

"would inevitably mean that we lose the Cold War."

The Head of the new military space egency in the Pentagon...Roy W. Johnson...said today that he cannot endorse President Eisenhower's proposal for a new civilian space agency. / Hohnson said he had not been consulted in the drafting of the proposal. / And he suggested that the measure as now written might hinder scientific research vital to defense. / Johnson testified before the special Senate [redacted] space committee. He said that after the testimony, "I may not have a job."

An Indonesian military spokesman charged today than a San Francisco businessman had offered to sell 50-thousand semi-automatic rifles to leaders of the Indonesian rebel movement. In San Francisco, Robert Hirsch said he made the offer last month without clearing it with the State Department. He said the [redacted] arms were not sent.

West Germany today signed an agreement under which it will give technical assistance to the United Arab Republic for the improvement of harbors and the setting up of technical education centers. The West German government will also underwrite private industrial loans to Egypt and Syria up to 83-million dollars. In return, the United Arab Republic promises to return to German control various properties confiscated by Egypt after World War Two. These properties include a Protestant church, a library and two mission stations.

In London, wage talks aimed at averting a nationwide rail strike have collapsed. A decision...whether to call a walkout...is expected

The NATO foreign ministers have said...once again...that a summit conference must be properly prepared. But all the preparation in the world does not insure success. For as Montaigne observed, "Preparation gives more to hope than it brings with it. A man doth often strip himself into his doublet to leap shorter than he did in his gown."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, May 7, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M. EDT

MURROW: The NATO Foreign Ministers meeting ended tin Copenhagen today with the issuance of a joint communique. For a first hand report on this we switch to my colleague Charles Collingwood in Copenhagen.

COLLINGWOOD: As the NATO Foreign Ministers conference broke up in Copenhagen tonight, John Foster Dulles was puppy-eyed and tired. But he was tired with the air of a man who could feel that his efforts had been to good avail. For things at this meeting have gone very much Mr. Dulles's way. His 15-ministerial colleagues unanimously agreed with what he would have every right to call "the Dulles attitude toward the summit conference." The final communique fairly drips with caution about the approach to such a conference. It's at pains to point out that meetings at the summit are not the only way or necessarily the best way of conducting negotiations or reducing international tension. It's heavy with suspicion of Russian motives and flatly lays down that any summit meeting must offer prospects of reaching settlements and must be properly prepared and take place in a favorable atmosphere. Now, before the Foreign Ministers came to Copenhagen, it was by no means certain that that was the way they would feel. After all, the last time they met in Paris last December there was powerful sentiment for a summit meeting almost at once and almost on any terms. These, were the days of the Sputniks and the Bulganin letters and the growing wave of popular demand for accomodation with the Russians. Dulles was hard put then to stave it off. As it was he had to make concessions. And as this Copenhagen meeting neared it looked as though he might have to make some more concessions for public opinion in Europe was still the pressing the NATO governments to make faster progress toward the summit.

But then the Russians played into Dulles's hands and it was felt all through this conference by a series of obstructive moves culminating in their veto of the United States Arctitic inspection plan, they convinced NATO's political leaders that Russian price for a summit meeting is too high. "I hate to admit it" a Scandinavian diplomat told a reporter, "but it looks as though Dulles was right."

So tonight, Mr. Dulles is basking in the warm glow of success. And, NATO is congratulating itself on a new found unanimity on a major question. The congratulation is doubtless justified for the unanimity is real. But, it might be worth noting, that that unanimity was achieved only by concentration on one subject, the summit. All the other things which perplex and divide the nations of the western coalition were brushed aside at this meeting or touched upon only lightly. No one knows that better than our Paris colleague David Schoenbrun whose daily watch includes the permanent headquarters of NATO in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The Middle East, North Africa and Indonesia are among the areas of the world that NATO BRUSHED under the carpet here at Copenhagen. And yet, the resources of these areas in oil, rubber and other raw materials are vast and their loss could be a catastrophe, particularly at this time when the West is suffering from an economical recession in the home of the leader of the Alliance. Several of the ministers did refer to the Middle East but there was little discussions and no new ideas presented about a joint strategy to be followed in this area where the West has been losing friends and influence. North Africa was not discussed at all, although Algeria is legally within the treaty area. France was on the point of bringing the Algerian crisis under discussion, but the Government fell before the meeting was convened, so there was little point in discussing it with a lame duck Foreign Minister. Nevertheless, Algeria is very much on the minds of the Atlantic allies and is a source of dissention, for there is little sympathy for French policies. There is (indistinct) pressure in America and Britain to persuade France to attempt to negotiate a cease fire with the rebels and then proceed to hold democratic elections, leading to a new status for Algeria.

But no one has any clear idea of what that new status can be. Even those who are most critical of the French agree that an early grant of independence and a French evacuation would be a disaster for the Algerian people as well as for Western influence in North Africa. This Algerian question remains unanswered and it's likely to become the most critical issue facing NATO this year. Equally critical and perhaps in the long run more improtant is the economic crisis of the West. If the American recession worsens or even continues much longer at its present level the reperecussions here in Europe will be grave. The Russians will be presented with the unique opportunity for making mischief. Their purchase of 7,000 tons of Danish butter on the eve of this conference in Denmark is an example of economic warfare looming ahead. And, as the Secretary General warned the diplomats "The Soviets have already had success in telling the non-committed and under developed nations of the world that the capitalist countries cannot solve their problems. The doctrine and the future of the free enterprise system is being challenged. Many of the NATO countries already have Socialistic or have Socialist economies. The bastion of Democratic capitalism is in the United States which also happens to be the bastion of the Western Alliance. Thus, the United States is on trial both at home and abroad. The success or failure of America's struggle with its own economy involves the success and defense of the free alliance. This issue is as much on the minds of the diplomats as anything discussed at the conference table here in Copenhagen the last 3-days. This is David Schoenbrun reporting, now back to EDWARD R. MURROW in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM DST

This is the news:

The NATO foreign ministers meeting ended in Copenhagen today with the issuance of a joint communique. For a first-hand report on this, we switch to my colleague, Charles Collingwood, in Copenhagen.

COLLINGWOOD: As the NATO Foreign Ministers conference broke up in Copenhagen tonight, John Foster Dulles was puppy-eyed and tired. But he was tired with the air of a man who could feel that his efforts had been to good avail. For things at this meeting have gone very much Mr. Dulles's way. His 15-ministerial colleagues unanimously agreed with what he would have every right to call "the Dulles attitude toward the summit conference." The final communique fairly drips with caution about the approach to such a conference. It's at pains to point out that meetings at the summit are not the only way or necessarily the best way of conducting negotiations or reducing international tension. It's heavy with suspicion of Russian motives and flatly lays down that any summit meeting must offer prospects of reaching settlements and must be properly prepared and take place in a favorable atmosphere. Now, before the Foreign Ministers came to Copenhagen, it was by no means certain that that was the way they would feel. After all, the last time they met in Paris last December there was powerful sentiment for a summit meeting almost at once and almost on any terms. Those, were they days of the Sputniks and the Bulganin letters and the growing wave of popular demand for accomodation with the Russians. Dulles was hard put then to stave it off. As it was he had to make concessions. And as this Copenhagen meeting neared it looked as though he might have to make some more concessions for public opinion in Europe was still pressing the NATO governments to make faster progress toward the summit. But then the Russians played into Dulles's hands and it was felt all through this conference by a series of obstructive moves culminating in their veto of the United States Arctic inspection plan, they convinced NATO's political leaders that Russian price for a summit meeting is too high. "I hate to admit it" a Scandinavian diplomat told a reporter, "but it looks as though Dulles was right."

So tonight, Mr. Dulles is basking in the warm glow of success. And, NATO is congratulating itself on a new-found unanimity on a major question. The congratulation is doubtless justified for the unanimity is real. But, it might be worth noting, that that unanimity was achieved only by concentration on one subject, the summit. All the other things which perplex and divide the nations of the western coalition were brushed aside at this meeting or touched upon only lightly. No one knows that better than our Paris colleague David Schoenbrun whose daily watch includes the permanent headquarters of NATO in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The Middle East, North Africa and Indonesia are among the areas of the world that NATO brushed under the carpet here at Copenhagen. And yet, the resources of these areas in oil, rubber and other raw materials are vast and their loss could be a catastrophe, particularly at this time when the West is suffering from an economical recession in the home of the leader of the Alliance. Several of the ministers did refer to the Middle East but there was little disucssions and no new ideas presented about a joint strategy to be followed in this area where the West has been losing friends and influence. North Africa was not discussed at all, although Algeria is legally within the treaty area. France was on the point of bringing the Algerian crisis under discussion, but the Government fell before the meeting was convened, so there was little point in discussing it with a lame duck Foreign Minister. Nevertheless, Algeria is very much on the minds of the Atlantic allies and is a source of dissention, for there is little sympathy for French policies. There is (indistinct) pressure in America and Britain to persuade France to attempt to negotiate a cease fire with the rebels and then proceed to hold democratic elections, leading to a new status for Algeria.

But no one has any clear idea of what that new status can be. Even those who are most critical of the French agree that an early grant of independence and a French evacuation would be a disaster for the Algerian people as well as for Western influence in North Africa. This Algerian question remains unanswered and it's likely to become the most critical issue facing NATO this year. Equally critical and perhaps in the long run more important is the economic crisis of the West. If the American recession worsens or even continues much longer at its present level the repercussions here in Europe will be grave. The Russians will be presented with the unique opportunity for making mischief. Their purchase of 7,000 tons of Danish butter on the eve of this conference is Denmark is an example of economic warfare looming ahead. And, as the Secretary General warned the diplomats "The Soviets have already had success in telling the non-committed and under-developed nations of the world that the capitalist countries cannot solve their problems. The doctrine and the future of the free enterprise system is being challenged. Many of the NATO countries already have Socialistic or have Socialist economies. The bastian of Democratic capitalism is in the United States which also happens to be the bastian of the Western Alliance. Thus, the United States is on trial both at home and abroad. The success or failure of America's struggle with its own economy involves the success and defense of the free alliance. This issue is as much on the minds of the diplomats as anything discussed at the conference table here in Copenhagen the last 3 days. This is David Schoenbrun reporting, now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York

MURROW: This morning...before the communique was issued...the United States, Britain, and France said that other Western countries besides themselves might participate in talks with Russia, either on the foreign ministers level or at the summit. "For instance," they said, "Italy might then be included." The statement did not admit the Soviet claim for numerical parity in future negotiations with the West. Nevertheless, there is speculation that the inclusion of Italy...or some other Western country besides the "Big Three"...might open the way for the participation of either Czechoslovakia or Poland in a foreign ministers conference and perhaps....later...at the summit. Russia has asked that these Communist countries be allowed to participate, and last week the United States turned down the request. Now the door seems to be left slightly ajar.

In Washington, the Atomic Energy Commission announces that it started its Spring series of nuclear tests in the Pacific on April 27th. It gave no details. Word that the tests had begun came first---not from the Atomic Energy Commission---but from Democratic Representative Porter of Oregon, in a speech earlier in the afternoon on the House floor. Porter returned from the test area last night. He attacked the failure of the A.E.C. to announce the explosion, calling it "a defiance of the people's right to know." And he callled for an end to nuclear weapons tests...as he has on occasion in the past.

The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report says that President Eisenhower may try a new approach in order to put his defense reorganization plan in operation. The committee...which is a private group...says Mr. Eisenhower may submit a presidential reorganization plan, which would automatically become law sixty days after submission to Congress---unless it is rejected by a majority vote in either house. The plan presently is in the form of legislation which requires approval by both houses of Congress. Doubt is expressed in official quarters that the President will try to by-pass the normal procedures.

Senate-House conferees agreed tonight on a military pay bill designed to keep highly skilled personnel from leaving the armed forces for private industry. The price tag on the measure...raising the pay of most officers and enlisted men... is 576 million dollars.

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Marion B. Folsom as Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. Arthur S. Flemming, former director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, was named to succeed Folsom effective the latter part of July. He is now president of Ohio Wesleyan University. Folsom had expressed a desire to resign for personal reasons. And in accepting the resignation, Mr. Eisenhower praised Folsom's "vital" service as a cabinet officer.

House Speaker Rayburn said today that President Eisenhower must make some coneessions, if he wants Congress to extend the reciprocal trade program. Rayburn said this does not mean abandoning the principle of reciprocal trade, which he strongly supports. The House Ways and Means Committee has put off a vote on the extension bill until Monday to see what concessions---if any---the Administration may offer. In Mr. Eisenhower's speech last night urging approval of the trade program, there was no suggestion of compromise. And Secretary of Commerce Weeks said tonight, "We are standing pat."

The House Foreign Affairs Committee has approved...and sent to the House floor...a measure authorizing 3-billion, 603-million dollars in foreign aid. This is 339 million dollars less than President Eisenhower requested. And a drastic cutback in foreing aid, the committee daid,"would inevitably mean that we lose the Cold War."

Tee head of the new military space agency in the Pentagon...Roy W. Johnson... said today that he cannot endorse President Eisenhower's proposal for a new civilian space agency. Johnson said he had not been consulted in the drafting of the proposal. And he suggested that the measure as now written might hinder scientific research vital to defense. Johnson testified before the special Senate space committee. He said that after the testimony, "I may not have a job."

An Indonesian military spokesman charged today that a San Francisco businessman had offered to sell 50-thousand semi-automatic rifles to leaders of the Indonesian rebel movement. In San Francisco, Robert Hirsch said he made the offer last month without clearing it with the State Department. He said the arms were not sent.

West Germany today signed an agreement under which it will give technical assistance to the United Arab Republic for the improvement of harbors and the setting up of technical education centers. The West German government will also underwrite private industrial loans to Egypt and Syria up to 83 billion dollars. Un return, the United Arab Republic promises to return to German control various properties confiscated by Egypt after World War Two. These properties include a Protestant church, a library and two mission stations.

In London, wage talks aimed at averting a nationwide rail strike have collapsed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The NATO foreign ministers have said...once again...that a summit conference must be properly prepared. But all the preparation in the world does not insure success. For as Montaigne observed, "Preparation gives more to hope than it brings with it. A man doth often strip himself into his doublet to leap shorter than he did in his gown."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 8, 1958

This is the news:

Vice President Nixon was the target today in a violent anti-American demonstration in Lima, the capital of Peru. For a first-hand report on the incident, we switch to my colleague, Wells Church, in Lima.

(Tape runs 1:30
(Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

In Washington, the State Department announces that the government of Peru has formally apologized for the incident and has expressed its "deep regret". The apology was delivered by officials of the Peruvian Embassy, who called at the State Department. So far, the White House has declined comment.

In Congress, the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee...[redacted]

→

Representative Morgan of Pennsylvania...said the incident "proves" the Communists of South America are a real menace. ~~"I hope," he said, "that this convinces the State Department and takes up the assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs."~~ Anti-American feeling has increased in Peru since the United States Tariff Commission recommended raising the import duty on two of Peru's major exports---zinc and lead.

Secretary of State Dulles visited West Berlin today...and said ~~[illegible]~~ the continued division of Germany shows that mere Soviet promises cannot be trusted. Dulles referred to Russia's promise... made at Geneva in 1955...that it would agree to the reunification of Germany on the basis of free elections. The agreements of Russia, he said, carry "no moral sanction". But he predicted that some day as in the case of Austria Russia may suddenly come around to the Western point of view. Mr. Dulles ~~[illegible]~~ reaffirmed the pledge of the United States that it would regard an attack on West Berlin as an attack upon itself. ~~And he again called for "dependable steps" to reduce the prospect of a new war.~~

The Soviet government today announced that it will not send an observer to witness a "shot" in the current series of American nuclear tests. The United States

→

—INSERT—

Russia said tonight that the NATO attempt to include the German question on the agenda of a summit conference indicates a desire to [redacted] "wreck" such a conference.

(This "insert" on Pg 3)

had invited the United Nations atomic radiation committee to observe one of the American test explosions. Russia is a member of that committee. It points to its own suspension of tests...and claims that accaptance of the invitation "would encourage the policy of a nuclear arms race."

— INSERT —

Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission said today that future American tests "of any significance" will be announced as they occur. Yesterday, Democratic Representative Porter of Oregon disclosed that the first explosion in the current series of tests took place at Eniwetok on April 27. Strauss said today that the explosion had involved "a very small device."

President Eisenhower today ordered the withdrawal of the last federalized National Guardsmen from the Little Rock central high school, effective May 29th. Mr. Eisenhower said he was issuing the order "since the summer recess starts at Central High School on May 28." "Following that date," he said, "I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the Federal Court are not obstructed."

A federal grand jury today indicted Representative Adam

→

Clayton Powell of New York on charges of income tax evasion. Powell is accused...on three counts...of misrepresenting the income of himself and his wife in the early 1950's.

In London, Britain's three railroad unions today accepted a government offer to mediate their deadlocked wage dispute. / The House of Commons debated the refusal of the Labor Ministry to intervene in the strike of London bus workers now in its fourth day.

In Paris today, President Coty asked three former cabinet ministers to try to form a new government and all three refused. / Coty made the requests after former Premier Pleven gave up his attempt to form a government earlier in the day.

The United States Air Force today claimed a new world altitude record of 91-thousand, 249 feet. / The flight was made yesterday by Major Howard C. Johnson of Knoxville, Tennessee...flying an F-104-A Starfighter over the Mojave Desert. / ~~In achieving a height of 17 miles, he bettered by more than two miles the altitude mark set only last week by a French ace.~~

~~Major Johnson said after his flight that today's fighter pilot "is moving well out to the region where the sky is deep blue, turning almost black."~~

A test version of the Navy's Polaris missile was fired today at Cape Canaveral, Florida. / Observers saw it rise vertically about 35-thousand feet and break into several pieces. A Navy announcement said the breakup was expected and that the test appeared normal. The rocket was a test vehicle carrying components of the Polaris---not a complete missile.

→

The Polaris is a ballistic weapon designed for firing from nuclear submarines while submerged. Its range is 15-hundred miles.

Edward R. Murrow: May 8, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Congress has been given its first look at what the White House proposes for an outer space agency. / President Eisenhower plumped for civilian control, which was the right start, so far as Congress is concerned. / But the form of the agency, as set up in legislation drafted by the Budget Bureau, is already the subject of strong criticism. / It hardly looks as though it would become a streamlined and ~~distinguished~~ effective organization / capable of ~~ushering~~ leading this country into the space age.

There is even doubt over the reality of the civilian control. / It might be swamped by military considerations. Then it is obvious that nobody is given clear responsibility to plan and build space vehicles, which is what the agency is for. / Even full government control is almost dramatically absent. Private persons - which presumably means private interests - will fix policy and hand out contracts. / Little vision seems to have been shown on what the space age may become, or what is required in initiative, tenacity, and expense. The blue-print looks like another agency, in which the lines between the public good - and the private good - are not clearly drawn.

Senator Anderson has been the most explicit critic of the legislation sent over from the White House. He starts by finding fault with its structure.

It is linked with the existing National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, which is only a research and study group. / It services the air forces and private plane manufacturers, but it never sets up and carries through a project. It simply studies small phases of projects, and gives advice. An outer space agency, the Senator is sure, must devise and direct entire projects, much as Admiral Rickover and his staff built the Nautilus, and now are nuclearizing much of the future Navy.

The proposed space agency would work through committees. At the top would be one of seventeen members, nine from private life, eight from the government. An agency that is destined to spend vast sums of public money is thus being purposely freed from rigid government control. / Senator Anderson wants the agency to be small in top members, not more than five, preferably three, all full-time government administrators, confirmed by the Senate, reporting to Congress, and forbidden to have outside interests. / Only in this way does he believe responsibility can be pinpointed, and results achieved promptly. [And almost incomprehensible omission from the draft legislation, is any reference to the development of nuclear energy for outer space propulsion. [~~The government does have a modest program of research on the application of nuclear power to missiles. But of the far-flung~~ scientific and engineering staff which the government is financing, not one man in a hundred of its top men had had even an opportunity of studying the role of nuclear power as applied to missiles, let alone outer space. Even since the Sputniks, Senator Anderson says, the Atomic Energy Commission has not been instructed to conduct broad studies of outer space propulsion.

The Russians, we know, are going in for nuclear rocket propulsion in a most thorough way, which is one reason we must do it. The need for it is made all the greater by the evidence supplied by our own space satellites. They have demonstrated that a deadly band of radiation exists outside the earth's atmosphere, so that space vehicles will need shielding, and that calls for the use of the most powerful Rocket Engines available.

The dividing line between civilian and military personnel is not clearly defined in the proposed legislation. The military is going to get the lion's share of the money, and the suspicion exists that the agency will be primarily a military program concealed under a civilian label. However, Roy Johnson, who heads the advanced missile research in the Pentagon, told a Senate Committee he was afraid that such civilian control as is provided would hamper military development.

Senator Anderson would like the new agency set up to service the military in the same way the Atomic Energy Commission now does, which certainly is proving satisfactory. / He also wants it authorized to requisition the assistance of all existing government facilities for its projects. He suggests dividing the field with the military, by giving the Defense Department jurisdiction only over missiles fired from the earth or its atmosphere, and returning to an earth target. / Everything else he would turn over to the civilian agency. And he wants the agency clearly dedicated to work for the limitation of outer space for peaceful uses.

Defense Secretary McElroy and other military spokesmen made it clear today that they want the new agency to handle only the non-military aspects of space exploration. / So the question is an old one: how to divide the control, how to determine what gets priority, and how to divide up the dollars appropriated for the exploration of outer space.

If we believe in the space age at all, except as an era dominated by missiles, now is the time to plan for it wisely. If it is only for military missiles, an Outer Space Agency would hardly seem necessary.

Back in a moment
now - a word from Ford.
George Hamilton

Word for Today

In planning for the Space Age, it is important to get the right start. For as the German poet Goethe observed, "If you miss the first button-hole, you will not succeed in buttoning up your coat." And Robert Burdette, the American writer, said, "If a man had half as much foresight as he has hindsight, he'd be a lot better off."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, May 8, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M. EDT

MURROW: Vice President Nixon was the target today in a violent anti-American demonstration in Lima, the capital of Peru. For a first-hand report on the incident, we switch to my colleague Wells Church in Lima.

CHURCH: Vice President Richard Nixon was struck by a small stone, was pelted with refuse and spat upon in Lima, the capital of Peru, today as he attempted to talk to students at San Marco's University in connection with his good-will tour of South America. The incident occured when Nixon ignored the withdrawal of an invitation to speak to the students in the belief the withdrawal was a Communist manipulated move. Authorities say the mob of 2,500 which greeted Nixon when he arrived at the campus was Communist led, although it purported to be just students. The crowd has obviously been inspired to great anti-American heights before Nixon arrived and the cheers, the whistles - that's the Latin version of a boo, reached fever pitch as he stepped from his open car and headed for the center of the exsited crowd. Nixon shouted at the police not to harm the students and he shouted at the students to let him speak to their leaders. With his interpreter repeating at the top of his voice, Nixon said, "are you afraid of the truth?" in minutes the stones began to fly, one struck the car where I stood another knocked a chip off a tooth of John Sherwood, Nixon's secret service chief. Nixon then, reluctantly left to visit the Catholic University here and while he did that, the San Marco's mob reformed in front of his hotel and on his return, the flying wedge rushed for him, throwing refuse and spitting at him. He had been in his hotel room for 10-minutes before more police arrived and dispersed the crowd.

Now, back to Edward R, Murrow in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Vice President Nixon was the target today in a violent anti-American demonstration in Lima, the capital of Peru. For a first-hand report on the incident, we switch to my colleague, Wells Church, in Lima.

CHURCH: Vice President Richard Nixon was struck by a small stone, was pelted with refuse and spat upon in Lima, the capital of Peru, today as he attempted to talk to students at San Marco's University in connection with ths good-will tour of South America. The incident occurred when Nixon ignored the withdrawal of an invitation to speak to the students in the belief the withdrawal was a Communist manipulated move. Authorities say the mob of 2,500 which greeted Nixon when he arrived at the campus was Communist led, although it purported to be just students. The crowd has obviously been inspired to great anti-American heights before Nixon arrived and the cheers, the whistles - that's the Latin version of a boo, reached fever ptich as he stepped from his open car and headed for the center of the excited crowd. Nixon shouted at the police not to harm the students and he shouted at the students to let him speak to their leaders. With his interpreter repeating at the top of his voice, Nixon said, "Are you afraid of the truth?" In minutes the stones began to fly, onestruck the car where I stood, another knocked a chip off a tooth of John Sherwood, Nixon's secret service chief. Nixon then, reluctantly left to visit the Catholic University here and while he did that, the San Marco's mob reformed in front of his hotel and on his return, a flying wedge rushed for him, throwing refuse and spitting at him. He had been in his hotel room for ten minutes before more police arrived and dispersed the crowd.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Washington, the State Department announces that the government of Peru has formally apologized for the incident and has expressed its "deep regret." The apology was delivered by officials of the Peruvian Embassy who called at the State Department. So far, the White House has declined comment. In Congress, the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee...Representative Morgan of Pennsylvania...said the incident "proves" the Communists of South America are a real menace. Anti-American feeling has increased in Peru since the United States Tariff Commission recommended raising the import duty on two of Peru's major exports---zinc and lead.

Secretary of State Dulles visited West Berlin today....and said the continued division of Germany shows that mere Soviet promises cannot be trusted. Dulles referred to Russia's promise... made at Geneva in 1955...that it would agree to the reunification of Germany on the basis of free elections. The agreements of Russia, he said, carry "no moral sanction." But he predicted that some day as in the case of Austria Russia may suddenly come around to the Western point of view. Mr. Dulles reaffirmed the pledge of the United States that it would regard an attack on West Berlin as an attack upon itself.

The Soviet government today announced that it will not send an observer to witness a "shot" in the current series of American nuclear tests. The United States had invited the United Nations atomic radiation committee to observe one of the American test explosions. Russia is a member of that committee. It points to its own suspension of tests...and claims that acceptance of the invitation "would encourage the policy of a nuclear arms race."

Russia said tonight that the NATO attempt to include the German question on the agenda of a summit conference indicates a desire to "wreck" such a conference.

Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission said today that future American tests "of any significance" will be announced as they occur. Yesterday, Democratic Representative Porter of Oregon disclosed that the first explosion in the current series of tests took place at Eniwetok on April 27th. Strauss said today that the explosion had involved "a very small device."

President Eisenhower today ordered the withdrawal of the last federalized National Guardsmen from the Little Rock central high school, effective May 29th. Mr. Eisenhower said he was issuing the order "since the summer recess starts at Central High School on May 28th." "Following that date," he said, "I trust that state and local officials and citizens will assume their full responsibility and duty for seeing that the orders of the Federal Court are not obstructed."

A federal grand jury today indicted Representative Adam Clayton Powell of New York on charges of income tax evasion. Powell is accused...on three counts ...of misrepresenting the income of himself, and his wife in the early 1950s.

In London, Britain's three railroad unions today accepted a government offer to mediate their deadlocked wage dispute. The House of Commons delayed the refusal of the Labor Ministry to intervene in the strike of London bus workers now in its fourth day.

In Paris today, President Coty asked three former cabinet ministers to try to form a new government and all three refused. Coty made the requests after former Premier Pleven gave up his attempt to form a government earlier in the day.

The United States Air Force today claimed a new world altitude record of 91-thousand, 249 feet. The flight was made yesterday by Major Howard C. Johnson of Knoxville, Tennessee...flying an F-104-A Starfighter over the Mojave Desert.

A test version of the Navy's Polaris missile was fired today at Cape Canaveral, Florida. Observers saw it rise vertically about 35thousand feet and break into several pieces. A Navy announcement said the breakup was expected and that the test appered normal. The rocket was a test vehicle carrying components of the Polaris---not a complete missile. The Polaris is a ballistic weapon designed for firing from nuclear submarines while submerged. Its range is 15-hundred miles.

Congress has been given its first look at what the White House proposes for an outer space agency. President Eisenhower plumped for civilian control, which was the right start, so far as Congress is concerned. But the form of the agency, as set up in legislation drafted by the Budget Bureau, is already the subject of strong criticism. It hardly looks as though it would become a streamlined and effective organization capable of leading this country into the space age.

There is even doubt over the reality of the civilian control. It might be swamped by military considerations. Then it is obvious that nobody is given clear responsibility to plan and build space vehicles, which is what the agency is for. Even full government control is almost dramaticalllyabsent. Private persons - which presumably means private interests - will fix policy and hand out contracts. Little vision seems to have been shown on what the space age may become, or what is required in initiative, tenacity, and expense. The blue-print looks like another agency, in which the lines between the public good - and the private good - are not clearly drawn.

Senator Anderson has been the most explicit critic of the legislation sent over from the White House. He starts by finding fault with its structure. It is linked with the existing National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, which is only a research and study group. It services the air forces and private plane manufacturers, but it never sets up and carries through a project. It simply studies small phases of projects, and gives advice. An outer space agency, the Senator is sure, must devise and direct entire projects, much as Admiral Rickover and his staff built the Nautilus, and now are nuclearizing much of the future Navy.

The proposed space agency would work through committees. At the top would be one of seventeen members, nine from private life, eight from the government. An agency that is destined to spend vast sums of public money is thus being purposely freed from rigid government control. Senator Anderson wants the agency to be small in top members, not more than five, preferably three, all full-time government administrators, confirmed by the Senate, reporting to Congress and forbidden to have outside interests. Only in this way does he believe responsibility can be pinpointed, and results achieved promptly. And almost incomprehensible omission from the draft legislation, is any reference to the development of nuclear energy for outer space propulsion. Even since the Sputniks, Senator Anderson says, the Atomic Energy Commission has not been instructed to conduct broad studies of outer space propulsion.

The Russians, we know, are going in for nuclear rocket propulsion in a most thorough way, which is one reason we must do it. The need for it is made all the greater by the evidence supplied by our own space satellites. They have demonstrated that a deadly band of radiation exists outside the earth's atmosphere, so that space vehicles will need shielding and that calls for the use of the most powerful rocket engines available.

The dividing line between civilian and military personnel is not clearly defined in the proposed legislation. The military is going to get the lion's share of the money, and the suspicion exists that the agency will be primarily a military program concealed under a civilian label.

Senator Anderson would like the new agency set up to service the military in the same way the Atomic Energy Commission now does, which certainly is proving satisfactory. He also wants it authorized to requisition the assistance of all existing government facilities for its projects. He suggests dividing the field with the military, by giving the Defense Department jurisdiction only over missiles fired from the earth or its atmosphere, and returning to an earth target. Everything else he would turn over to the civilian agency. And he wants the agency clearly dedicated to work for the limitation of outer space for peaceful uses.

Defense Secretary McElroy and other military spokesmen made it clear today that they want the new agency to handle only the non-military aspects of space exploration. So the question is an old one: how to divide the control, how to determine what gets priority, and how to divide up the dollars appropriated for the exploration of outer space.

If we believe in the space age at all, except as an era dominated by missiles, now is the time to plan for it wisely. If it is only for military missiles, an Outer Space Agency would hardly seem necessary.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now - a word from Ford.

COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In planning for the Space Age, it is important to get the right start. For as the German poet Goethe observed, "If you miss the first button-hole, you will not succeed in buttoning up your coat." And Robert Burdette, the American writer, said, "If a man had half as much foresight as he has hindsight, he'd be a lot better off."

Goodnight and good luck!

Lesueur for Murrow Fri., May 9, 1958

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

Vice President Nixon arrived in Ecuador, the next scheduled stop on his South American goodwill tour. And there was no incident. He was courteously received in marked contrast to the violence that greeted him yesterday in Lima, the capital of Peru. President Eisenhower sent a personal message to Mr. Nixon, praising him for how he acted in the face of the angry mob that stoned him...and spat on him...when he tried to speak at San Marcos University. "Your [redacted] courage, patience and calmness in the demonstration directed against you by radical agitators," said the President, "have brought you new respect and admiration in our country.

I am certain," he said, "that the vast majorities of citizens...both in Peru and in the United States...deplore the incident caused by a few." President Eisenhower used the phrase "radical agitators". The State Department issued a statement which described the incident as "Communist inspired." And the United States, it said, does not intend to let this impair the friendly relations between our two countries. A statement ALSO was issued by the Peruvian Embassy...following up last night's apology. It said: "American public opinion may rest assured that this most unfortunate incident is no indication of the real feelings of the Peruvian people toward the United States and the noble cause she is striving for." A spokesman for the embassy said the affair may "open our eyes" to the menace of Communist infiltration in Latin America--a threat, he said, to peace, progress and understanding in the hemisphere.

In Congress, the Senate Democratic whip...Mansfield of Montana,..praised Mr. Nixon's display of "courage and dignity." He denounced the incident as "outrageous"...an attack, not on Nixon, but on the people of the United States..."a blot on the good name of Peru, one of our oldest and best friends." But Senator Mansfield said the "net result" may be better understanding. He said, "I know that the good sense and innate decency of the Peruvian government AND the Peruvian people will prevail." Another Democratic senator---Sparkman of Alabama---says the Nixon incident shows how badly United States relations with some Latin American countries have deteriorated. It was regrettable, he said, that the Vice President had to experience it.

Secretary of State Dulles met in Paris today with the United States ambassadors to 14 European countries. in what is described as a diplomatic "pep talk". Mr. Dulles gave the ambassadors a first-hand report on what happened at the recent NATO foreign ministers meeting. And the ambassadors, in turn, briefed the Secretary of State on developments in the various capitals to which they are assigned. Mr. Dulles also kept a social engagement---an informal luncheon with French Foreign Minister Christian Pineau. And this may have been their last meeting as working foreign ministers. Mr. Pineau is serving in what is only a caretaker government. He is a Socialist, and the Socialist Party has said that it will not participate in any new cabinet which may be formed.

The latest French political figure with the FORTITUDE to try to form a new government. and end the 24 DAY crisis, [redacted] day... is the former premier, Pierre Pflimlin. Pflimlin is a Moderate Republican, an economic expert like Felix Gaillard, whose government fell on April 15th. And tonight he's conferring with the leaders of other political parties, to see if they will help him form a coalition which the National Assembly will approve. He's given not much more than a 50-50 chance.

→

In Algeria, the National Liberation Front announces that it has executed three French soldiers...on charges of "murder committed against the civilian population." The announcement says the soldiers were tried in a rebel court on April 25th..and that [redacted] their death sentences were carried out five days later at dawn. Such an announcement is bound to stir up strong emotion in France.

In this country---a decline in the number of persons covered by the unemployment insurance program who are out of work. The drop...amounting to almost 67-thousand persons in the week ending April 26th...is the BIGGEST drop to be recorded since last July. The decline in the number of claims filed for unemployment compensation was most noticeable in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan.

And the Agriculture Department says that FARM employment in April increased more than usual--to within one percent of the number working a year ago.

A "more than seasonal" increase ALSO is reported in the construction of new homes. Twenty-two thousand new units were started under F.H.A. inspection in April.

A voluntary one-year "freeze" on wages and prices was recommended today by a special anti-recession committee of the Business Advisory Council. The council is a semi-governmental body formed 25 years ago to advise the Secretary of Commerce. And it is made up, for the most part, of prominent leaders of industry. The chairman of the special committee...which made today's report...is T.V. Houser, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck and Company. In fact, it's being called "The Houser Report". The report says the call for a voluntary moratorium on wage AND price increases should be made by President Eisenhower. The group strongly opposes federal projects of the so-called "make work" variety. And it is AGAINST any general tax reduction at this time. The members of the committee agreed unanimously that [redacted] the principal LONG-TERM threat to the economy is inflation. And they urged that all measures [redacted] to combat the recession be taken with the inflationary risks in mind.

(1)

There's been much conjecture over the reasons for Moscow's sudden turn-about, in its drive for a summit conference[illegible]s.. But out of the welter of speculation, only two things are outstandingly clear...Russia has lost the diplomatic initiative, temporarily, at least.. And her sputnick diplomacy has failed..

For reasons best known to the masters of the Kremlin, Russia has failed to follow up the panic in the West[illegible] That followed its first SPUTNICK last [illegible] October, and its sensational dog-launching in November.. Indeed, May Day has come and gone, leaving only the three american satellites [illegible] orbiting the globe..

With their demonstrations of A rocket-thrust potentially capable of hitting any spot on earth with a nuclear war-head, The Russians began their drive for a summit conference by refusing to negotiate any longer with the United Nations Disarmament Commission...They flatly declared that its composition was too heavily weighted in favor of the West...[illegible] and These rough Soviet demands for equality with the United States on the basis of demonstrated scientific ACHIEVMENT, JOLTED the smaller western Powers... it forced a convalescing Eisenhower, to stake his personal prestige on a visit to the Paris NATO conference, Last december to keep the NATO nations in line...Even then the president only secured an agreement"in Principle" from the smaller NATO powers, to station american rocket bases on their soil. And while the small nations were still wavering, Kruschyev called for a quick summit conference last April...

When we look back now, that appears to be the high tide of the Soviet sputnick diplomacy. , Secretary Dulles was then in the uncomfortable position of having to say "NO unless"... But now he finds himself in the happy situation of being able to say "YES" to the Russian--"IF"---

NOW This country is in a recession...But there's evidence in the skies, that we haven't lost our scientific skill...And Western Europe, miraculously enough, is still untouched by the American business slump...

From the vantage-point of hind-sight, it looks as tho the Russians overplayed their hand...They turned down the Nato offer of a foreign minister's conference and played for the big stakes ABSOLUTE equality between Kruschev and Eisenhower over the bargaining table..

3.3.3

Kruschev's star was certainly on the rise then..He got rid of his greatest potential rival, by sending Marshal Zhukov on a state visit to Yugoslavia, then cut the ground from under Zhukov, giving Bulganin the pitch, was EVEN easier.. since then, of course, It's been Premier Kruschev..

But then Dulles made his finesse, by demanding diplomatic talks at lower levels before even a foreign Minister's conference..The Russians countered by accepting the NATO demand for a foreign minister's Meeting.

But by this time the tide had changed..And the Army's explorer satellite was up in Space... The smaller powers of Western Europe, breathed easier..

By his maneuvers, Mr. Dulles forced the Russians to take the negative side of the issue..Moscow refused to talk to the Western Ambassadors jointly, insisted on talking to them one-by-one...And when the world recognized this as hedging... Foreign Minister Gromyko showed his frustration, [illegible] By his sensational charges that we are endangering the peace in the Arctic by our H-Bomb patrols..Then MR Dulles forced Russia into a U.N. veto of our arctic inspection PROPOSAL since any inspection is apparently intolerable to Russia..

The stage was then set for this week's Nato meeting in Copenhagen, where the smaller powers were willing to go along with a sharp criticism of Russia for "raising unreasonable conditions" FOR summit negotiations..

And Pressing their new-found advantage, the West is now AGAIN demanding some preliminary agreement on German re-unification, // Even tho Russia has already turned that down, as a basis for international discussion.. Asserting that only East and West Germany CAN talk about it

So the diplomatic wheel has turned almost full circle now.. with Russia taking the seamy side of the argument, and shouldering the blame FOR lack of a summit conference..

Meantime, Premier Kruschyev finds himself in other difficulties.. a few chickens have come home to roost. His friendship with Marshall Tito of Yugoslavia has never been the same, since he used Zhukov's visit to Tito, as a means of getting rid of HIS RIVAL.. Tito has declined to visit Moscow ever since, and indeed the Yugoslav communist party has pointedly refused to obey Moscow's dictation..

And this has gotten Kruschyev INTO trouble with his own Stalinist elements, and with Communist China.. He's apparently being accused of not being tough enough..

In order to please Red China, Pravda reprinted a Bayping attack on the "heritical"Yugoslav communists.// Following it up with a milder attack of its own, TEMPERED with a promise that Soviet President Voroshilov would pay Tito a state visit.// But this has failed to placate the Stalinist element in Russia and Red China. So tonight Premier Khrushchev has again been forced to [redacted] preparations for Voroshilov's visit [redacted] against Tito... accuses him of "currying favor with american monopolists." The very prospects of Voroshilov's visit to Belgrad, are [redacted] Communist bosses, are forcing Premier Khruschyev [redacted].

This is Larry LeSueur...Ed Murrow is on his way to London, to talk to the British Prime Minister.// We'll be hearing from Ed on Monday.. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News.. [redacted] First a word from George Bryan..

The [redacted] newspapers of [redacted] Moscow and Belgrad, exchanged a fresh round of barbed comments today...amid preparations for Soviet President Voroshilov's planned, but now doubtful visit..

[redacted] a Yugoslav spokesman was forced to resort to wry humor, to duck questions. Asked whether the new russian attacks on Marshall Tito had cast a cloud over Voroshilov's visit..//the Yugoslav spokesman said:/ I'm not the representative of a meteorological /institute/ able to discuss CLOUDS..

This is Larry LeSueur---Good nite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Vice President Nixon arrived in Ecuador, the next scheduled stop on his South American goodwill tour. And there was no incident. He was courteously received, in marked contrast to the violence that greeted him yesterday in Lima, the capital of Peru. President Eisenhower sent a personal message to Mr. Nixon, praising him for how he acted in the face of the angry mob that stoned him...and spat on him...when he tried to speak at San Marcos University. "Your courage, patience and calmness in the demonstration directed against you by radical agitators," said the President, "have brought you new respect and admiration in our country. I am certain," he said, "that the vast majorities of citizens...both in Peru and in the United States...deplore the incident caused by a few." President Eisenhower used the phrase "radical agitators." The State Department issued a statement which described the incident as "Communist inspired." And the United States, it said, does not intend to let this impair the friendly relations between our two countries. A statement also was issued by the Peruvian Embassy...following up last night's apology. It said: "American public opinion may rest assured that this most unfortunate incident is no indication of the real feelings of the Peruvian people toward the United States and the noble cause she is striving for." A spokesman for the embassy said the affair may "open our eyes" to the menace of Communist infiltration in Latin America---a threat, he said, to peace,progress and understanding in the hemisphere.

In Congress, the Senate Democratic whip...Mansfield of Montana...praised Mr. Nixon's display of "courage and dignity." He denounced the incident as "outrageous"...an attack, not on Nixon, but on the people of the United States... "a blot on the good name of Peru, one of our oldest and best friends." But Senator Mansfield said the "net result" may be better understanding. He said, "I know that the good sense and innate decency of the Peruvian government and the Peruvian people will prevail." Another Democratic senator---Sparkman of Alabama---says the Nixon incident shows how badly United States relations with some Latin American countries have deteriorated. It was regrettable, he said, that the Vice President had to experience it.

Secretary of State Dulles met in Paris today with the United States ambassadors to 14 European countries...in what is described as a "diplomatic pep talk." Mr. Dulles gave the ambassadors a first-hand report on what happened at the recent NATO foreign ministers meeting. And the ambassadors, in turn, briefed the Secretary of State on developments in the various capitals to which they are assigned. Mr. Dulles also kept a social engagement--an informal luncheon with French Foreign Minister Christian Pineau. And this may have been their last meeting as working foreign ministers. Mr. Pineau is serving in what is only a caretaker government. He is a Socialist, and the Socialist Party has said that it will not participate in any new cabinet which may be formed.

The latest French political figure with the fortitude to try to form a new government...and end the 24 day crisis, is the former premier, Pierre Pflimlin. Pflimlin is a Moderate Republican, an economic expert like Felix Gaillard, whose government fell on April 15th. And tonight he's conferring with the leaders of other political parties, to see if they will help him form a coalition which the National Assembly will approve. He's given not much more than a 50-50 chance.

In Algeria, the National Liberation Front announces that it has executed three French soldiers...on charges of "murder committed against the civilian population." The announcement says the soldiers were tried in a rebel court on April 25th...and that their death sentences were carried out five days later at dawn. Such an announcement is bound to stir up strong emotion in France.

In this country---a decline in the number of persons covered by the unemployment insurance program who are out of work. The drop...amounting to almost 67 thousand persons in the week ending April 26th...is the biggest drop to be recorded since last July. The decline in the number of claims filed for unemployment compensation was most noticeable in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan.

And the Agriculture Department says that farm employment in April increased more than usual---to within one percent of the number working a year ago.

A "more than seasonal" increase also is reported in the construction of new homes. Twenty-two thousand new units were started under F.H.A. inspection in April.

A voluntary one-year "freeze" on wages and prices was recommended today by a special anti-recession committee of the Business Advisory Council. The council is a semi-governmental body formed 25 years ago to advise the Secretary of Commerce. And it is made up, for the most part, of prominent leaders of industry. The chairman of the special committee...which made today's report.. is T.V. Houser, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck and Company. In fact, it's being called "The Houser Report." The report says the call for a voluntary moratorium on wage and price increases should be made by President Eisenhower. The group strongly opposes federal projects of the so-called "make work" variety. And it is against any general tax reduction at this time. The members of the committee agreed unanimously that the principal long-term threat to the economy is inflation. And they urged that all measures to combat the recession be taken with the inflationary risks in mind.

There's been much conjecture over the reasons for Moscow's sudden turn-about, in its drive for a summit conference. But out of the welter of speculation only two things are outstandingly clear...Russia has lost the diplomatic initiative, temporarily, at least...And her sputnik diplomacy has failed.

For reasons best known to the masters of the Kremlin, Russia has failed to follow up the panic in the West that followed its first sputnik last October, and its sensational dog-launching in November...Indeed, May Day has come and gone, leaving only the three American satellites orbiting the globe.

With their demonstrations of a rocket-thrust potentially capable of hitting any spot on earth with a nuclear war-head, theRussians began their drive for a summit conference by refusing to negotiate any longer with the United Nations Disarmament Commission...They flatly delcared that its composition was too heavily weighted in favor of the West.

These rough Soviet demands for equality with the United States, on the basis of demonstrated scientific acheivement, jolted the smaller western powers... it forced a convalescing Eisenhower, to stake his personal prestige on a visit to the Paris NATO conference last December to keep the NATO nations in line... Even then the president only secured an agreement "in Principle" from the smaller NATO powers to station American rocket bases on ther soil... And while the small nations were still wavering, Khrushchev called for a quick summit conference last April.

When we look back now, that appears to be the high tide of the Soviet sputnik diplomacy... Secretary Dulles was then in the uncomfortable position of having to say "No---unless"...But now he finds himself in the happy situation of being able to say "Yes" to the Russians---"If"---Now this country is in a recession...But there's evidence in the skies, that we haven't lost our scientific skill...And Western Europe, miraculously enough, is still untouched by the American business slump...

From the vantage-point of hind-sight, it looks as though the Russians overplayed their hand...They turned down the NATO offer of a foreign ministers' conference, and played for the big stakes---absolute equality between Khrushchev and Eisenhower over the bargaining table. Khrushchev's star was certainly on the rise then. He got rid of his greatest potential rival, by sending Marshal Zhukov on a state visit to Yugoslavia, then cut the ground from under Zhukov's feet and giving Bulganin the pitch, was even easier...since then, of course, it's been Premier Khrushchev.

But then Dulles made his finesse, by demanding diplomatic talks at lower levels before even a foreign Minister's conference...The Russians countered by accepting the NATO demand for a foreign minister's meeting. But by this time the tide had changed...And the Army's explorer satellite was up in space...The smaller powers of Western Europe breathed easier.

By his maneuvers, Mr. Dulles forced the Russians to take the negative side of the issue...Moscow refused to talk to the Western Ambassadors jointly, insisted on talking to them one-by-one...And when the world recognized this as hedging... Foreign Minister Gromyko showed his frustration by his sensational charges that we are endangering the peace in the Arctic by our H-Bomb patrols...Then Mr. Dulles forced Russia into a U.N. veto of our arctic inspection proposal since any inspection is apparently intolerable to Russia. The stage was then set for this week's NATO meeting in Copenhagen, where the smaller powers were willing to go along with a sharp criticism of Russia for "raising unreasonable conditions" for summit negotiations.

And pressing their new-found advantage, the West is now again demanding some preliminary agreement on German re-unification. Even though Russia has already turned that down, as a basis for international discussion...Asserting that only East and West Germany can talk about it.

So the diplomatic wheel has turned almost full circle now...with Russia taking the seamy side of the argument, and shouldering the blame for lack of a summit conference.

Meantime Premier Khrushchev finds himself in other difficulties...a few chickens have come home to roost. His friendship with Marshall Tito of Yugoslavia has never been the same since he used Zhukov's visit to Tito as a means of getting rid of his rival... Tito has declined to visit Moscow ever since, and indeed, the Yugoslav communist party has pointedly refused to obey Moscow's dictation.

And this has gotten Khrushchev into trouble with his own Stalinist elements and with Communist China...He's apparently being accused of not being tough enough. In order to please Red China, Pravda reprinted a Bayping attack on the "heretical" Yugoslav communists... Following it up with a milder attack of its own, tempered with a promise that Soviet President Voroshilov would pay Tito a state visit... But this has failed to placate the Stalinist element in Russia and Red China.

This is Larry LeSueur...Ed Murrow is on his way to London to talk to the British Prime Minister. We'll be hearing from Ed on Monday. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News. First a word from George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: The newspapers of Moscow and Belgrad exchanged a fresh round of barbed comments today...amid preparations for Soviet President Voroshilov's planned but now doubtful visit. A Yugoslav spokesman was forced to resort to wry humor in order to duck questions. Asked whether the new Russian attacks on Marshall Tito had cast a cloud over Voroshilov's visit...the Tito spokesman said: I'm not the representative of a meteorological institute able to discuss clouds.

This is Larry LeSueur---Good nite.

Lesueur for Murrow Mon., May 12, 1958

Good evening, everyone../.. Here's what happened today:

Angry mobs stormed through the streets of Beirut, capital of Lebanon, setting fire to at least five buildings../..including the library/of the United States \Information/Agency.// This is the SECOND American library to be sacked/by street mobs/in Lebanon/in three days. The U.S.I.A. library in Tripoli,/the country's second largest city/ was(burned)on Saturday. EACH TIME [illegible], the crowd was demonstrating/against/the pro-Western government of President Champun. Chamoun/not only follows a pro-Western policy, but he has stood up/to President Nasser of the United Arab Republic.// And propaganda broadcasts from Egypt and Syria have been trying to incite the Lebanese people into open revolt. The constitution of Lebanon allows a president to serve only one term. Chamoun has only four more months in office (under this provision) and there is speculation that he may ask to have the constitution amended so that he can seek re-election. Still another factor is the assassination last Thursday of a newspaper publisher in Beirut who was pro-Nasser. Today's disorders began with a general strike which is said to have been 100 percent effective in Beirut, with all shops closed. Then the mobs formed...setting fires, putting up street barricades and clashing with national security forces and police. At least five persons--including a woman and a child--were killed. Another report sets the death toll for the day at 10. Rioting on a smaller scale also broke out again in Tripoli. And the border between Lebanon and Syria is reported closed. Still another report is that tomorrow the Lebanese prime minister may ask parliament to invoke martial law. At the moment, order has been restored in Beirut, with armored cars patrolling the streets. And the Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik, has expressed his profound regret to the United States ambassador. Our embassy in Beirut has warned all Americans to stay indoors.

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters...in Washington...that the anti-American demonstrations in Lebanon and in Peru, as in the case of the Nixon incident, are part of a pattern. Mr. Dulles said, "Anti-American feeling is being cultivated by sources which we can all imagine." He did not identify the sources (which reporters immediately took to be Communist) but he added that, with sufficient propaganda and money, "anyone can stir up a demonstration."

Vice President Nixon received a cordial reception today in Bogota, the capital of Colombia. But his bodyguards have been told to watch out for a possible assassination attempt tomorrow, when he arrives in Venezuela--the last stop on his South American tour. The United States Secret Service has received a report that such an attempt may be made. The report is NOT verified, and it is the belief of U.E. Baughman, chief of the Secret Service, that there is no cause for alarm. ~~Nevertheless, the agents guarding the Vice President have been notified.~~

Secretary Dulles called at the White House to report to President Eisenhower on the NATO foreign ministers conference. He and Mr. Eisenhower also were expected to discuss Khrushchev's acceptance of the American proposal for technical talks on how to enforce an international ban on nuclear tests. // Mr. Dulles said Khrushchev's note was "gratifying" in that it indicates a step toward the American position. But the message, he said, requires further evaluation.

Congress completed action today on the bill raising the pay of most members of the armed forces. // And President Eisenhower is expected to sign the measure in time for it to go into effect on June first. The purpose of the bill is to keep trained personnel from leaving the armed forces for better paying jobs in private industry. During the first year of operation it will cost ~~[illegible]~~ Five Hundred and 76 million dollars. //

Chairman Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee announces that his group ~~[illegible]~~ has completed its open hearings on President Eisenhower's plan for reorganizing the Defense Department. // .."at least for the time being." The committee will now start writing its own reorganization measure behind closed doors. //

The House began debate today on the foreign aid bill, and Speaker Sam Rayburn predicted the 3-billion, 600-million-dollar measure will pass in substantially its present form. The measure has strong bipartisan support.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson suggested today that the current rise in farm prices may act as a boomerang against some congressmen who have demanded his resignation. Said Benson: "It's going to be hard to 'demagogue' on the agricultural issue this fall, and that's going to be hard on a few people." He told a group of farm editors that farmers "aren't dumb, they know American agriculture is not going to pot." Mr. Benson said farm prices are up 10 percent from a year ago...and he expects the trend to continue in the months ahead.

A federal grand jury has indicted five of the country's biggest drug companies on charges of violating the federal anti-trust law. The defendants are Eli Lilly and Company of Indianapolis, Allied Laboratories, Incorporated of Kansas City; American Home Products Corporation, New York City; Merck & Company of Rahway, New Jersey, and Parke, Davis & Company of Detroit. The companies are accused of conspiring to fix prices and eliminate competition in the sale of the Salk Polio vaccine to federal, state and local government agencies. The charge has been promptly denied by all the companies involved.

Poland's Communist leader Gomulka flew to Roumania today after a three-day meeting in Budapest with Hungarian leaders. A joint communique---signed by Gomulka and Hungarian party boss Janos Kadar--denounced both revisionism AND dogmatism. "Revisionism", of course, is the charge leveled by Russia and Red China against President Tito of Yugoslavia, who insists on following an independent line. "Dogmatism" is rigid adherence to doctrine in the Stalin manner. And so it would appear that Gomulka--very conscious of his own position in Poland--chose to soft-pedal the issue. The communique does not even mention Yugoslavia by name. It DOES note with satisfaction the "achievements" of the Hungarian Communist Party--Kadar's party. And it supports Russia's call for an end to nuclear weapons ~~[illegible]~~ tests.

Latest returns in the Greek general election confirm the victory of Premier Karamanlis' pro-Western party. The new revised count gives his party 173 seats in the 300-member parliament--in other words, a clear working majority. But the new Leftist party, which succeeded the outlawed Communist organization, has shown unexpected strength, winning more than twice as many votes as it did in the last election in 1956. ~~The leftists who may be expected to oppose the setting up of American [illegible] bases in~~ rocket

→

Greece, are estimated to have won 70 seats, making them the country's second party. The center Liberal party, which had been expected to run a close second to the government party, ran a poor third.

Ed Murrow is in London, on a brief overseas assignment. For his direct report, we take you now to the British capital.

(Tape runs 4:55
(Ends on cue: "Goodnight and good luck!"

We expect to have another report from Ed Murrow in London tomorrow night. This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the day's news. First, here is George Bryan.

Great Powers rarely Bluff...and there may be more than co-incidence / connecting \today's anti-western Violence in Lebanon, with Russia's phony war scare over Turkey and Syria, last October..

At THAT time, Russia said it could NOT ignore, the situation on its Caucasus frontier...and grimly threatened to go to war, if Turkey harmed Syria... Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko \was telling the U.N. that the Soviet Frontiers lie in Syria.//

And \if that's the case, the Russians were also \staking a claim to almost completely surrounded Lebabon...

This is Larry LeSueur---Good Nite..

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, May 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is London. Many years ago, a wise editor counselled this reporter "When reporting from England you must always make your discounts for the weather." He meant that the English are starved for sun, react to it in an altogether exaggerated fashion. A Mediterranean climate over this island would change the character of the people who live here. For the past three days, there have been what's called "bright intervals," which means that for an hour or two at a time the sun has lanced down through the white clouds and bounced off the bright green of hedge, lawn and trees with an almost blinding brilliance. The tulips, standing steady in martial formation, the white tenons bent from the horse-chestnuts and the sun have combined to make this city a place that men in far places like to remember. There are no buses, a strike. There are letters in the papers saying there were too many buses anyway; walking is good for you. Reminds me of the war when people were told to eat carrots instead of chocolate, better for them and improved the night vision too.

These people are best in adversity. Most courteous when there is most reason to complain. They stand patiently in line waiting for the subway. Private cars offer lifts. And you can travel all day without being shoved or pushed.

The visiting American is asked about our recession, but in a rather detached way - you aren't expected to do anything about it or even to understand it. These people have their own problems and some of them are much like ours. The government is trying to streamline its Defense Department, trying to save money, and the draft, put the main reliance on missiles. The Royal Air Force is in almost open revolt, contending that missiles may be the big deterrent in a few years but not now, that you can't find today's battles with tomorrow's weapons. And the men who saved Britain once don't believe that the American intermediate range missiles - due to be installed by the end of this year - will be the answer. They're prepared to admit that the days of manned bomber may be numbered, but contend that the number isn't up yet. Britain is the third power with nuclear capability. They have the bombs and they can deliver them. The United States and Russia have a greater capability, more bombs and more planes. But in considering the military posture of a nation, more than capability must be considered. There is also the matter of intention.

In vast areas of the world, there is fear that the Russians may use their weapons deliberately for world conquest. There is also the fear that the United States - through reckless inadvertence - may start the destruction of humanity. But there is no evidence of any widespread concern about British intentions or recklessness. Vast areas of the world appear to rate the British as more reliable and restrained than either Russia or the United States. There is considerable agitation in this country for the abolition of nuclear weapons, proposals that Britain should announce that she is giving up testing, manufacture and development no matter what other nations may do. The present government isn't going to do that. The British are behind us and the Russians in the development of weapons, although not in the peacetime uses of atomic energy. They don't want another power or powers to acquire the ability to make and deliver bombs or missiles. They might be willing to call a halt to further tests if we would tell them what we have learned. But under existing legislation we can't do that. It is reasonable to ask - as many people here are asking - why should this small island, which has beggered itself in two world wars, short of money and of trade, the recipient of repeated grants from the United States, why should this small island press forward with this expensive armaments program? The answer - at least for the time being - is that this government refuses to rely upon the forebearance of the Russians or the automatic cooperation of the United States. Put in its simplest terms: The British want their own deterrent and their own striking power. They're not prepared to rely upon neutralism or the United States. They are an ancient and prideful people and continue to want a hand in determining their own destiny. It is as simple and as difficult as that. The desire to have a weapon in hand. An old fashioned attitude perhaps, but understandable. And like the weather, subject to change. Good night and good luck.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening everyone...Here's what happened today:

Angry mobs stormed through the streets of Beirut, capital of Lebanon, setting fire to at least five buildings...including the library of the United States Information Agency. This is the second American library to be sacked by street mobs in Lebanon in three days. The U.S.I.A. library in Tripoli, the country's second largest city was burned on Saturday. Each time the crowd was demonstrating against the pro-Western government of President Chamoun. Chamoun not only follows a pro-Western policy, but he has stood up to President Nasser of the United Arab Republic. And propaganda broadcasts from Egypt and Syria have been trying to incite the Lebanese people into open revolt. Today's disorders began with a general strike which is said to have been 100 percent effective in Beirut, with all shops closed. Then the mobs formed...setting fires, putting up street barricades and clashing with national security forces and police. At least five persons---including a woman and a child---were killed. Another report sets the death toll for the day at 10. Rioting on a smaller scale also broke out again in Tripoli. And the border between Lebanon and Syria is reported closed.

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters...in Washington...that the anti-American demonstrations in Lebanon and in Peru as in the case of the Nixon incident are part of a pattern. Mr. Dulles said, "Anti-American feeling is being cultivated by sources which we can all imagine." He did not identify the sources (which reporters immediately took to be Communist) but he added that, with sufficient propaganda and money, "anyone can stir up a demonstration."

Vice President Nixon received a cordial reception today in Bogota, the capital of Colombia. But his bodyguards have been told to watch out for a possible assassination attempt tomorrow, when he arrives in Venezuela---the last stop on his South American tour. The United States Secret Service has received a report that such an attempt may be made. The report is not verified, and it is the belief of U.E. Baughman chief of the Secret Service, that there is no cause for alarm.

Secretary Dulles called at the White House to report to President Eisenhower on the NATO foreign ministers conference. He and Mr. Eisenhower also were expected to discuss Khrushchev's acceptance of the American proposal for technical talks on how to enforce an international ban on nuclear tests. Mr. Dulles said Khrushchev's note was "gratifying" in that it indicates a step toward the American position. But the message, he said requires further evaluation.

Congress completed action today on the bill raising the pay of most members of the armed forces. And President Eisenhower is expected to sign the measure in time for it to go into effect on June first. The purpose of the bill is to keep trained personnel from leaving the armed forces for better paying jobs in private industry. During the first year of operation it wil cost 576 million dollars.

Chairman Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee announces that his group has completed its open hearings on President Eisenhower's plan for re-organizing the Defense Department..."at least for the time being." The committee will now start writing its own reorganization measure behind closed doors.

The House began debate today on the foreign aid bill, and Speaker Sam Rayburn predicted the 3-billion, 600-million-dollar measure will pass in substantially its present form. The measure has strong bipartisan support.

A federal grand jury has indicted five of the country's biggest drug companies on charges of violating the federal anti-trust law. The defendants are Eli Lilly and Company of Indianpolis, Allied Laboratories, Incorporated of Kansas City; American Home Products Corporation, New York City; Merck & Company of Rahway, New Jersey, and Parke, Davis & Company of Detroit. The companies are accused of conspiring to fix prices and eliminate competition in the sale of the Salk polio vaccine to federal, state and local government agencies. The charge has been promptly denied by all the companies involved.

Poland's Communist leader Gomulka flew to Roumania today after a three-day meeting in Budapest with Hungarian leaders. A joint communique---signed by Gomulka and Hungarian party boss Janos Kadar---denounced both revisionism and dogmatism. "Revisionism," of course, is the charge leveled by Russia and Red China against President Tito of Yugoslavia...who insists on following an independent line. "Dogmatism" is rigid adherance to doctrine in the Stalin manner. And so it would appear that Gomulka---very conscious of his own position in Poland, chose to soft-pedal the issue. The communique does not even mention Yugoslavia by name. It does note with satisfaction the "achievements" of the Hungarian Communist Party---Kadar's party. And it supports Russia's call for an end to nculear weapons tests.

Latest returns in the Greek general election confirm the victory of Premier Karamanlis' pro-Western party. The new revised count gives his party 173 seats in the 300 member parliament---in other words, a clear working majority. But the new Leftist party...which succeeded the outlawed Communist organization...has shown unexpected strength, winning more than twice as many votes as it did in the last election in 1956.

Ed Murrow is in London on a brief overseas assignment. For his direct report, we take you now to the British capital.

MURROW: This is London. Many years ago, a wise editor counselled this reporter "When reporting from England you must always make your discounts for the weather." He meant that the English are starved for sun, react to it in an altogether exaggerated fashion. A Mediterranean climate over this island would change the character of the people who live here. For the past three days there have been what's called "bright intervals," which means that for an hour or two at a time the sun has lanced down through the white clouds and bounced off the bright green of hedge, lawn and trees with an almost blinding brilliance. The tulips, standing steady in martial formation, the white tenons bent from the horse-chestnuts and the sun have combined to make this city a place that men in far places like to remember. There are no buses, a strike. There are letters in the papers saying there were too many buses anyway; walking is good for you. Reminds me of the war when people were told to eat carrots instead of chocolate, better for them and improved the night vision too.

These people are best in adversity. Most courteous when there is most reason to complain. They stand patiently in line waiting for the subway. Private cars offer lifts. And you can travel all day without being shoved or pushed.

The visiting American is asked about our recession, but in a rather detached way - you aren't expected to do anything about it or even understand it. These people have their own problems and some of them are much like ours. The government is trying to streamline its Defense Department, trying to save money end the draft, put the main reliance on missiles. The Royal Air Force is in almost open revolt, contending that missiles may be the big deterrent in a few years but not now, that you can't fight today's battles with tomorrow's weapons. And the men who saved Britain once don't believe that the American intermediate range missiles - due to be installed by the end of this year - will be the answer. They're prepared to admit that the days of manned bombers may be numbered, but contend that the number isn't up yet. Britain is the third power with nuclear capability. They have the bombs and they can deliver them. The United States and Russia have a greater capability,more bombs and more planes. But in considering the military posture of a nation, more than capability must be considered. There is also the matter of intention.

In vast areas of the world, there is fear that the Russians may use their weapons deliberately for world conquest. There is also the fear that the United States - through reckless inadvertance - may start the destruction of humanity.

But there is no evidence of any widespread concern abuut British intentions or recklessness. Vast areas of the world appear to rate the British as more reliable and restrained than either Russia or the United States. There is considerable agitation in this country for the abolition of nuclear weapons, proposals that Britain should announce that she is giving up testing, manufacture and development no matter what other nations may do. The present government isn't going to do that. The British are behind us and the Russians in the development of weapons, although not in the peacetime uses of atomic energy. They don't want another power or powers to acquire the ability to make and deliver bombs or missiles. They might be willing to call a halt to further tests if we would tell them what we have learned. But under existing legislation we can't do that. It is reasonable to ask - as many people here are asking - why should this small island, which has beggered itself in two world wars, short of money and of trade, the recipient of repeated grants from the United States, why should this small island press forward with this expensive armaments program? The answer - at least for the time being - is that this government refuses to rely upon the forebearance of the Russians or the automatic cooperation of the United States. Put in its simplest terms: The British want their own deterrent and their own striking power. They're not prepared to rely upon neutralism or the United States. They are an ancient and prideful people and continue to want a hand in determining their own destiny. It is as simple and as difficult as that. The desire to have a weapon in hand. And old-fashioned attitude perhaps, but understandable. And like the weather, subject to change. Good night and good luck.

LESUEUR: We expect to have another report from Ed Murrow in London tomorrow night. This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the day's news. First, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: Great powers rarely bluff...and there may be more than co-incidence connecting today's anti-western violence in Lebanon, with Russia's phony war scare over Turkey and Syria, last October.

At that time, Russia said it could not ignore the situation on its Caucasus frontier...and grimly threatened to go to war if Turkey harmed Syria... Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko was telling the U.N. that the Soviet frontiers lie in Syria.

If that's the case, the Russians were also staking a claim to almost completely surrounded Lebanon...

This is Larry LeSueur...Good nite.

Lesueur for Murrow Tues., May 13, 1958

13
15

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

An historic development in France. And for that story we switch AT ONCE ~~a~~ to Paris and CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 6:00
(Ends on cue: "---to CBS News in New York."

In Venezuela today, Vice President Nixon was subjected to still another mob attack. He "narrowly" escaped serious injury. And tonight the Defense Department announced that...as a precautionary measure...two companies of Airbourne Infantry and two companies of Marines are being moved to "certain United States bases in the Caribbean area." // The bases were not identified. The paratroopers are en route from 101st Airbourne Division headquarters at

→

Fort Campbell, Kentucky..|.and,| including the two Marine companies, the entire force numbers about 1-thousand men.| According to the Defense Department, |the movement |is being undertaken /so these troops will be in position /to cooperate with the Venezuelan Government, |should their assistance be requested.' The announcement repeats: "This is a purely precautionary measure../.and there is no indication that such assistance will be required."

In Washington this afternoon,\ Secretary Dulles summoned| the Venezuelan// chargé d'affaires /to the State Department and demanded.|.bluntly.//.that Venezuela \"take every possible measure"/ to protect the Vice President. Mr. Dulles acted /on instructions /from President Eisenhower. He told the Venezuelan diplomat \that if there is any lack of will, or capacity, on the part of the government of Venezuela |to give protection, "we want to know that quickly." //And the White House said tonight| that the situation looks "much better."// It said, "Mr. Nixon's staff in Caracas /assures us that both the Vice President and his security aides /are satisfied the situation is under control." //However, there is a new report of violence in Caracas---this time against leaders of the Venezuelan government. Members of the ruling junta had [redacted] stones thrown at their cars, as they returned from a meeting with Mr. Nixon. Windows in one of the cars were smashed.

→

Today's attack on Vice President Nixon was more serious than the incident in Lima, PERU five days ago. Today the Nixon motorcade was entering Caracas...on the way from the airport...when a crowd stormed the lead car in which the Vice President was riding and smashed its windows [redacted] with rocks. Mr. Nixon was showered with broken glass, but escaped injury. The foreign minister of Venezuela...who was with him...suffered a cut lip. At least two U.S. secret servicemen were stoned. And the American flag was ripped from the Vice President's car...and from the car in which Mrs. Nixon was riding. The crowd...at one point...rushed at Mrs. Nixon, but secret servicemen intervened. Both her car and that of [redacted] the Vice President were attacked with clubs...as well as rocks...and smeared with spit and rotten eggs. Mrs. Nixon was in tears. Mr. Nixon WAS to have laid a wreath at the tomb of Simon Bolivar. But when a large crowd gathered at the scene...shouting anti-Nixon slogans...the wreath-laying ceremony was cancelled.

The pro-western government of Lebanon has formally accused Egypt AND Syria of "massive interference" in Lebanese Affairs.. The accusation against Nasser's United Arab Republic, follows four days of anti-western rioting throughout Lebanon..

Lebanon's foreign minister, Doctor Charles Malik, charged that six Lebanese frontier officials had been killed on the Syrian border, by 500 armed men coming from Syria..He said the invading force was driven back across the Syrian frontier. ADDED THAT Doctor Malik said three other groups, from the Egyptian-occupied Gaza strip, had been captured trying to enter Lebanon aboard small boats..He said the men were armed and had orders to carry out a campaign of terrorism inside Lebanon..

As the Lebanese foreign minister spoke, street fighting and explosions continued in Beirut, in demonstrations against President Camille Chamoun's pro-western regime..Much of the violence was expressed as anti-americanism..Yesterday the rioters sacked and burned the U.S. Information Service Library in Beirut, and sabotaged an Iraq Petroleum company pipeline, near the Syrian border.. Today a leftist mob was driven off from an attempt to storm the U.S. Embassy.

The state department in Washington has instructed embassies in Europe to discourage travel by americans to Lebanon, where the famed American University in Beirut is situated.. No Americans have been ordered to leave, however.

Lebanon's internal strife is reported hottest in a desert area where Moslem Druze tribesmen have entered the fray..Lebanese military planes reported in action against the tribesmen, and the small Lebanese army is now reported committed against the rebels.

~~Young King Hussein of Jordon pledged his support today to~~ the Lebanese government...He did so before flying to Baghdad to seal his country's union with oil-rich Iraq. Informed sources say the Saudi Arabian Ambassador in Beirut has also delivered an important message from the Saudi Government.

Some american officials are saying the crisis is Lebanon may go to the U.N. Security Council, if it gets worse.. Lebanese President Chamoun ~~says his country is the "object of attacks from abroad."~~ SAID

As yet there ~~has~~ HAS been no request for invocation of the Eisenhower Middle East doctrine.. It pledges this country to use armed force to help any Middle East nation against armed aggression... ~~London officials predict the Lebanese situation will put the Eisenhower doctrine to its most severe test.~~ SEVERE TEST,..

In Washington, President Eisenhower's foreign aid program has survived its first test on the floor of the House of Representatives. A move to slash all economic aid from the measure...and make it a MILITARY aid bill.... was defeated by a vote of 102 to 59.

The Commerce Department reports national production of goods and services down 4 22-billion dollars in the first quarter of 1958. This is a drop of 2 and a half percent from the rate for the FINAL quarter of LAST year.

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the day's news. Now a word from Ford.

Lost note

The Scene--the top of the sixth inning in Chicago...The St. Louis cardinals trailing, three to one...Stan Musial on the bench..He'd been held out of the game, because Manager Fred Hutchinson wanted him to wait for his record try before a home audience in Saint Louis..

But the die was cast...There was a man on second and the pitcher due to bat...Manager Hutchinson shrugged his shoulders and called upon Stan the Man. MUSIAL ran the count to two and two, and then connected to become the eighth [redacted] big LEAGUER in history ever to hit safely three thousand times..

This is L.L. good note.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (LARRY LE SUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Tuesday, May 13, 1958
7:45-8:00 P. M.

LE SUEUR: And historic development in France. And, for that story we switch at once to Paris and CBS NEWS Correspondent David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The National Assembly here in Paris has suspended itd decision in view of the grave crisis in Algers where rioting Frenchmen have stormed and occupied the Government-General building while at the same-time, what appears to be a revolutionary hunta of Army officers and civilians has been formed in Algers. Here in Paris, the National Assembly was holding a debate on the investiture as the new Prime Minister of a Catholic Party politician Pierre Pflimlin. Mr. Pflimlin himself interrupted the debate with when news came through of rioting in Algers and he asked for a suspension of session in order to gather the Democratic forces of France together to face this grave situation in Algeria. The candidate Premier left the Parliament building immediately to go to the Prime Ministers residence to confer with Premier Felix Gaillard the care-taker Premier of the government whose Cabinet was defeated one month ago tonight.

What is happening in Algers is a most extraordinary thing. The junta which was was informed calls itself the Committee of Public of Public Safety. Now, that is an historic name in France, taken from the French Revolution which leads observers here to believe that this is a revolutionary movement. The Committee is headed by Army General Jacques Massu, he is commander of the paratroopers in Algers. General Massu sent a telegram to the President of the Republic - Rene Coty tonight informing him of the formation of this Committee and announcing that it was done because of the gravity of the situation and the absolute necessity of maintaining order and avoiding all bloodshed. General Massu's telegram stated that he was the chief of the Committee and he called upon President Coty to form a government of Public Safety in Paris, because he said, "such a government alone is capable of keeping Algeria an integral part of metropolitan France." At the very moment that these events were taking place in Algers the Deputies of France were meeting here in the Palais Bourbon. And, earlier today, the candidate Premier Pierre Pflimlin told these Deputies that if elected Prime Minister he would on the one hand increase the war effort to crush the rebels in Algeria but that he would at the sametime seek cease fire talks with the rebels and hold free elections. This liberal policy of candidate Premier Pflimlin led to riots here in Paris this afternoon when a crowd of war veteran tried to march upon the Palais Bourbon. There were 2000 demonstrators here but they were broken up by the police lines. However, the police were apparently less successful in breaking up the Algers riots where there were tens of thousands of demonstraters. The Algers rioters attacked the government general building and they easily broke through the lines and incidentally according to reports from Algers, these were surprisingly thin lines of police guarding the building, leading to the suspicion that there may have been some collusion between the police and the rioters.

The rioters have occupied the Government-building and at this moment they are still in control of headquarters. In this context, General Massu seems to be emerging as the strong man of the Algers movement which is taking on the shape of an insurrection. General Massu did not say that he was assuming power nor did he call his movement a coup d'etat. However, he did say, that his Committee was assuming direct contact between the military and the people. And, he did send a telegram to the Chief of State which is well outside the narrow limits of a paratroopers General command. General Massu told the rioting crowds this afternoon in Algers "Our Committee is with you - it will not leave the scene until a government of Public Safety is formed." This committee is composed of 3 Army colonels in addition to the General. They are; Col. Geta, Col. Faintai and Col. Thomaso. They are all known to be close associates of General Massu. There are also 7 civilians on the committee but this reporter has not yet received their names. I know

General Massu and when I was in Algers some six months ago I interviewed the General. He told me at that time, "make no mistake about it Algeria is part of France and will remain French and our Army will see to it that that happens We are going to fight here - if necessary, we are going to die here. The Army will never leave Algeria." That's what General Massu told me six months ago and tonight when it appeared that a candidate Premier was perhaps going to make some move to deal with the Nationalist rebels in Algeria, General Massu made his move. That's the situation here in Paris tonight. It's one of great confusion, nobody knows what the reaction will be of the Army Chief of Staff of the police, the dangers of riots in Paris and perhaps an insurrection in this city cannot be ruled out. A broadcast has just been monitored here in Paris coming from Radio Algers. A representative of the junta has just been on the air and he had said and I quote, "This is a Committee which we have formed and not a government. Now, we await the news from Paris. We have good reason to believe that we have won the battle and that Algeria will remain French definitely." Apparently this broadcast from the representative of the Committee is destined to avoid charges that this is a coup d'etat and so they are using the word "committee," that's the latest development in the news crisis of France, David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. Now, back to CBS NEWS in New York.

LE SUEUR: In Venezuela, today, Vice President .....

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

An historic development in France. And for that story we switch at once to Paris and CBS News Correspondent, David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The National Assembly here in Paris has suspended its decision in view of the grave crisis in Algiers where rioting Frenchmen have stormed and occupied the Government-General building while at the same time, what appears to be a revolutionary junta of Army officers and civilians has been formed in Algiers. Here in Paris, the National Assembly was holding a debate on the investiture as the new Prime Minister of the Catholic Party politician Pierre Pflimlin. Mr. Pflimlin himself interrupted the debate with when news came through of rioting in Algiers and he asked for a suspension of session in order to gather the Democratic forces of France together to face this grave situation in Algeria. The candidate Premier left the Parliament building immediately to go to the Prime Minister's residence to confer with Premier Felix Gaillard, the care-taker Premier of the government whose cabinet was defeated one month ago tonight.

What is happening in Algiers is a most extraordinary thing. The junta which was informed? calls itself the Committee of Public Safety. Now, that is an historic name in France, taken from the French revolution which leads observers here to believe that this is a revolutionary movement. The Committee is headed by Army General Jacques Massu, he is commander of the paratroopers in Algiers. General Massu sent a telegram to the President of the Republic - Rene Coty tonight informing him of the formation of this Committee and announcing that it was done because of the gravity of the situation and the absolute necessity of maintaining order and avoiding all bloodshed. General Massu's telegram stated that he was the chief of the Committee and he called upon PresidentCoty to form a government of Public Safety in Paris, because he said, "Such a government alone is capable of keeping Algeria an integral part of metropolitan France." At the very moment that these events were taking place in Algiers the Deputies of France were meeting here in the Palais Bourbon. And, earlier today, the candidate Premier Pierre Pflimlin told those Deputies that if elected Prime Minister, he would on the one hand increase the war effort to crush the rebels in Algeria, but that he would at the same time seek cease fire talks with the rebels and hold free elections. This liberal policy of candidate Premier Pflimlin led to riots here in Paris this afternoon when a crowd of war veterans tried to march upon the Palais Bourbon. There were 2,000 demonstrators here, but they were broken up by the police lines. However, the police were apparently less successful in breaking up the Algiers riots where there were tens of thousands of demonstrators. The Algiers rioters attacked the Government General building and they easily broke through the lines and incidentally according to reports from Algiers, these were surprisingly thin lines of police guarding the building, leading to the suspicion that there may have been some collusion between the police and the rioters.

The rioters have occupied the Government-building and at this moment they are still in control of headquarters. In this context, General Massu seems to be emerging as the strong man of the Algiers movement which is taking on the shape of an insurrection. General Massu did not say that he was assuming power nor did he call his movement a coup d'etat. However, he did say, that his Committee was assuming direct contact between the military and the people. And, he did send a telegram to the Chief of State which is well outside the narrow limits of a paratroopers general command. General Massu told the rioting crowds this afternoon in Algiers, "Our Committee is with you - it will not leave the scene until a government of Public Safety is formed." This committee is composed of three Army colonels in addition to the General, They are; Col Geta?. Col. Paintal? and

Col. Thomazo. They are all known to be close associatesof General Massu. There are also 7 civilians on the Committee, but this reporter has not received their names. I know General Massu, and when I was in Algiers, some six months ago I interviewed the General. He told me at that time, "Make no mistake about it; Algeria is part of France and will remain French and our Army will see to it that that happens. We are going to fight here - if necessary, we are going to die here. The Army will never leave Algeria." That's what General Massu told me six months ago and tonight when it appeared that a candidate Premier was perhaps going to make some move to deal with the Nationalist rebels in Algeria, General Massu made his move. That's the situation here in Paris tonight. It's one of great confusion; nobody knows what the reaction will be of the Army Chief of Staff of the police, the dangers of riots in Paris and perhaps an insurrection in this city cannot be ruled out. A broadcast has just been monitored here in Paris coming from Radio Algiers. A representative of the junta has just been on the air and he had said and I quote, "This is a Committee which we have formed and not a government. Now, we await the news from Paris. We have good reason to believe that we have won the battle and that Algeria will remain French definitely." Apparently this broadcast from the representative of the Committee is destined to avoid charges that this is a coup d'etat and so they are using the word "committee." That's the latest development in the news crisis of France, David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: In Venezuela today, Vice President Nixon was subjected to still another mob attack. He "narrowly" escaped serious injury. And tonight the Defense Department announced that...as a precautionary measure...two companies of Airbourne Infantry and two companies of Marines are being moved to "certain United States bases in the Caribbean area." The bases were not identified. The paratroopers are en route from 101st Airbourne Division headquarters at Fort Campbell, Kentucky, and, including the two Marine companies, the entire force numbers about 1-thousand men. According to the Defense Department, the movement is being undertaken so these troops will be in position to cooperate with the Venezuelan Government, should their assistance be "requested." The announcement repeats: "This is a purely precautionary measure...and there is no indication that such assistance will be required."

In Washington this aftrrnoon, Secretary Dulles summoned the Venezuelan charge d'affaires to the State Department and demanded...bluntly...that Venezuela "take every possible measure" to protect the Vice President. Mr. Dulles acted on instructions from President Eisenhower. He told the Venezuelan diplomat that if there is any lack of will or capacity on the part of the government of Venezuela to give protection, "We want to know that quickly." And the White House said tonight that the situation looks "much better." It said, "Mr. Nixon's staff in Congress assures us that both the Vice President and his security aides are satisfied the situation is under control." However, there is a new report of violence in Caracas---this time against leaders of the Venezuelan government. Members of the ruling junta had stones thrown at their cars, as they returned from a meeting with Mr. Nixon. Windows in one of the cars were smashed.

Today's attack on Vice President Nixon was more serious than the incident in Lima, Peru five days ago. Today the Nixon motorcade was entering Caracas... on the way from the airport...when a crowd stormed the lead car in which the Vice President was riding and smashed its windows with rocks. Mr. Nixon was showered with broken glass, but escaped injury. The foreign minister of Venezuela...who was with him...suffered a cut lip. At least two U.S. secret serviceman were stoned. And the American flag was ripped from the Vice President's car...and from the car in which Mrs. Nixon was riding. The crowd...at one point..rushed at Mrs. Nixon, but secret servicemen intervened. Both her car and that of the Vice President were attacked with clubs...as well as rocks..and smeared with spit and rotten eggs. Mrs. Nixon was in tears. Mr. Nixon was to have laid a wreath at the tomb of Simon Bolivar. But when a large crowd gathered at the scene... shouting anti-Nixon slogans...the wreath-laying ceremony was cancelled.

The pro-western government of Lebanon has formally accused Egypt and Syria of "massive interference" in Lebanese Affairs...The accusation against Nasser's United Arab Republic, follows four days of anti-western rioting throughout Lebanon.

Lebanon's foreign minister, Doctor Charles Malik, charged that six Lebanese frontier officials had been killed on the Syrian border, by 500 armed men coming from Syria. He said the invading force was driven back across the Syrian frontier...Doctor Malik added that three other groups, from the Egyptian-occupied Gaza strip had been captured trying to enter Lebanon aboard small boats. He said the men were armed and had orders to carry out a campaign of terrorism inside Lebanon.

As the Lebanese foreign minister spoke, street fighting and explosions continued in Beirut, in demonstrations against President Camille Chamoun's pro-western regime...Much of the violence was expressed as anti-americanism...Yesterday the rioters sacked and burned the U.S. Information Service Library in Beirut, and sabotaged an Iraq Petroleum company pipeline,near the Syrian border...Today a leftist mob was driven off from an attempt to storm the U.S. Embassy.

The State Department in Washington has instructed embassies in Europe to discourage travel by Americans in Lebanon where the famed American University in Beirut is situated. No Americans have been order to leave, however.

Lebanon's internal strife is reported hottest in a desert area where Moslem Druze tribesmen have entered the fray...Lebanese military planes reported in action against the tribesmen, and the small Lebanese army is now reported committed against the rebels.

As yet there has been no request for invocation of the Eisenhower Middle East doctrine....It pledges this country to use armed force to help any Middle East nation against armed aggression.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the day's news. Now a word from Ford.

COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR:The Scene---the top of the sixth inning in Chicago...The St. Louis Cardinals trailing, three to one...Stan Musial on the bench...He'd been held out of the game, because Manager Fred Hutchinson wanted him to wait for his record try before a home audience in St. Louis.

But the die was cast...There was a man on second and the pitcher due to bat...Manager Hutchinson shrugged his shoulders and called upon Stan the Man... Musial ran the count to two and two, and then connected to become the eighth big leaguer in history ever to hit safely three thousand times...

This is Larry LeSueur...Good nite.

Lesueur for Murrow Wed., May 14, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The new shaky government of Pierre Pflimlin...25th postwar premier of France...fought to prevent a possible coup d'etat. He ordered all [redacted] public demonstrations banned in France. The leaves of all French Army troops in Metropolitan France are cancelled. And Pflimlin ordered General Salan, commander of French Army troops in Algeria, to maintain order in Algiers. General Massu, who formed a committee of public safety yesterday...and called for the return of General DeGaulle to power... played his cards close to his chest. It is not certain whether Massu's apparent attempt at a coup in Algeria is succeeding. It is not even sure which side General Salan is on. (In a few minutes we'll have a direct report--an analysis of the situation from CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun in Paris).

President Eisenhower began his NEWS conference today...by asking to be excused from commenting on what he called the "delicate" situation in Algeria and Lebanon. He said developments there are being watched closely. They COULD become "very grave."

Anti-American disorders continued today in Lebanon. A stick of [redacted] dynamite exploded on the lawn of the United States Embassy in Beirut. And our ambassador urged all Americans in the port city of Tripoli to leave. (A ship is being sent to Tripoli [redacted] FOR THEM, if they WANT to be evacuated. // They are not being ORDERED out.) The pro-Western president of Lebanon, Camille Chamoun, [redacted] conferred again today with the American, British and French ambassadors. // HE shows no sign of yielding to the terrorist campaign to overthrow his government. [redacted] Radio broadcasts from Egypt and Syria have been urging Chamoun's downfall, and yesterday the Lebanese foreign minister, DR. Charles Malik, formally accused President Nasser's United Arab Republic of "massive interference" in Lebanon's internal affairs. Today, the United Arab Republic rejected this protest by Lebanon. // .called it "full of lies and falsehoods." In Washington, the State Department praised the

→

"courageous efforts" of the Lebanese government to preserve its security. And we are giving more than MORAL support. The United States announces that it is airlifting a quantity of "police equipment" to Lebanon, to help Chamoun maintain the country's "internal security." CBS News Correspondent Dick Kallsen...reporting from Beirut... says this equipment consists of tear gas, gas masks and ammunition and the first delivery is due within 48 hours. At Gibraltar, twelve American warships OF THE 6TH FLEET have weighed anchor and headed for the Eastern Mediterranean. The Navy refuses to disclose their mission OR destination. According to some naval sources, say the ships are leaving on maneuvers planned long before the present situation arose. There IS a formal announcement by the Navy in Washington that IT'S DOUBLING the size of its amphibious force in the Mediterranean. The announcement says: "Certain amphibious units originally scheduled to return to the United States shortly will remain in the Mediterranean for the time being." A Navy spokesman insisted the action is NOT related to the (EVENTS IN) Lebanon

Vice President Nixon cut short his visit to Venezuela late today...and flew to San Juan, Puerto Rico, where he is spending the night. Actually, Mr. Nixon shortened his stay in Venezuela by only a few hours. // He WAS to have left around midnight. //.and because of the stopover in Puerto Rico, he will be back in Washington tomorrow as originally planned.

Mr. and Mrs. Nixon spent most of today inside the United States Embassy in Caracas...guarded by about fifty Venezuelan M.P.'s armed with rifles and machettes. // The Vice President left the embassy once...around noon...to attend a luncheon given by leaders of the government. // HE MADE ~~There were~~ NO public appearances. There was No repetition of yesterday's ugly outbreak // .and no need to call on those United States MARINES AND PARATROOPERS dispatched yesterday to the Caribbean as a precautionary measure. // Mr. and Mrs. Nixon rode out to the Caracas airport this afternoon in a bullet-proof limousine supplied by the Venezuelan government. // The route itself was patrolled by armored cars and tanks.

At his news conference today, President Eisenhower defended the airlifting of troops to the Caribbean area as "the simplest precautionary measure in the world." The troops were made available, in the event the Venezuelan government asked for assistance to protect the Vice President. "THAT," he said, "is all there was to it." Mr. Eisenhower would not accuse the Communists directly of setting off the disturbances in South America...or the anti-American demonstrations in Lebanon. But where there's so much smoke, he said, there probably is some fire.

Mr. Eisenhower added that there are economic factors. Some Latin-American countries are in economic difficulties....and there's natural envy of the United States. // In Peru, he said, there's bitterness over the new low prices of lead and zinc. And in Venezuela, there are rumors the United States wants to impose an import quota on Venezuelan oil.

Mr. Eisenhower said that regarding oil imports, there is no truth to this at all.

Venezuela has sent a note to Washington...apologizing for yesterday's "lamentable occurrence." The Venezuelan charge d'affaires in Washington is said to have described the majority of anti-Nixon demonstrators as sympathizers of General Perez Jimenez, the ousted Venezuelan dictator. But he assured the State Department that the role played by Communist agitators ALSO is being investigated.

The Soviet news agency Tass denies that Communists were to blame...calls the charges "provocative fabrications spread by foreign agents." Russian newspapers are reporting the Nixon story in great detail. And the Moscow radio says the REAL fiasco is not Mr. Nixon's tour but...in Moscow's phrase..."the fiasco of United States policy."

In Congress today, the House passed the Administration's foreign aid bill...and sent it to the Senate. The measure authorizes the SPENDING of 3-billion, Gfundred and 3-million dollars for economic and military assistance. It gives the President 339-million dollars LESS than he asked for. But this cut was made in committee and all other attempts to slash the measure further...in the course of House debate...were beaten down. The final vote of approval: 259 to 134.

President Eisenhower told reporters to

(7)

Now for THAT analysis of the French political situation...as it has evolved in recent years, up to today...[redacted] we switch now to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 4 minutes
Ends on cue: "---to CBS News in New York.")

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the [redacted] News. Now, here is George Bryan.

(8)

Vice President Nixon will get a different kind of reception when he arrives home at Washington airport about noon tomorrow..

President Eisenhower will be there to shake his hand...So will the entire cabinet. Plus more than half of Congress... ALL the Latin-American Ambassadors... and a couple of thousand College students.

The Capital pay tribute to the Nixons. "for the Admirable way they handled themselves

And a reporter relayed it and agreed

Thus ends CL- Good Nite

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Wednesday, May 14, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... In a few minutes we'll have a direct report, an analysis on the situation, from CBS News correspondent David Schoenbrun in Paris.

... Now, for that analysis of the French political situation, as it has evolved in recent years up to today, we switch now to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Anarchy is the French people's sword of defense against tyranny. But anarchy is a double-edged sword and it cuts into the heart of democracy as it fights tyranny - and that's the tragic dilemma of the Fourth Republic of France tonight. This Fourth Republic, now eleven years old, has been fighting since its post-war birth against two forces of tyranny, communism on the Left and autocracy on the Right. In order to assure their defense against these extremes, the framers of the French Constitution deliberately wrote anarchy into their laws. The Constitution puts a premium on unstable government, apparently to prevent any strong man, like de Gaulle, or any powerful group like the Communists, from seizing control of the Legislature. From this viewpoint the Constitution has admirably fulfilled its purpose. Only three men have been able to hold office for more than one year in the past decade. And in the meantime - despite Cabinets that change with the seasons of the year, France has prospered miraculously. Thus, one edge of the blade has cut clean and true for the Republic. But at the same time - the authority of the State, the prestige of the democratic regime, has been slashed to ribbons in the battle. And tonight the fabric of the Republic is hanging together by a thread. Why did this happen? How did this happen? What's likely to happen now? These are the questions being asked tonight, not only here in France but by an anxious Western world. Let's try to deal with each question in turn, trying to separate fact from fiction. First, why is France in this present crisis, teetering on the brink of civil war? Well, we've noted that the authority of the State has been progressively weakened by unstable government. In the past year, France has been without a government three months out of twelve, a political phenomenon unique in the history of a great country. In the absence of government, special interest groups are tempted to seize power for their own objectives. The current insurrection of Algeria is not unique; it's part of a series of coup d'force going back eleven years. It began with Admiral d'Argenlieu's seizure of power in Cochin-China, in 1946. Then Army officers and colonials carried out a coup d'etat against the Sultan of Morocco, in 1953. This coup was followed by the air kidnaping of Algerian nationalist leader Ben Bella, in 1956. And this year the French Air Force bombed the Tunisian village of Sakiet, while in Paris the police marched upon Parliament. There is thus little new or surprising in the incurrectional act of General Jacques Massu and his Committee of Public Safety in Algiers. It's all part of a pattern; the withering away of the State, not in the Marxist sense but in the French sense of unstable government.

Most of these spectacular coup d'force you will note, have been carried out in the overseas territories. That too is logical, not surprising, for they are furthest removed from the central government - and this crisis of authority has been heightened by the great emotional crisis of the desperate French attempt to stop the clock of history, to maintain Eighteenth Century power and privelege in the Twentieth Century world of renascent nationalism. That's the meaning of the current agony of France. The most severe, the most complex of all the crises of this country, for Algeria is not just a colony, it has been regarded by France as part of this country, even more than we Americans regard Alaska or Hawaii or Puerto Rico to be American territory. More than a million Europeans live in Algeria, an island of wealth and strength, in a sea of Arab misery. This complex problem can be surmounted. All human problems are susceptible to solution, but only on condition that there is the necessary unity of purpose to solve it. That is what France lacks. And for that unity there is no easy solution. It depends upon the courage and responsibility of political leaders. And tonight there is some small hope. For the Socialist party has revoked last week's decision not to participate in government and has decided to join the new Cabinet to save the Republic. We hope in subsequent reports on this program to analyze the chances for a last-minute recovery. Meanwhile, for tonight, this is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The new shaky government of Pierre Pflimlin...25th postwar premier of France...fought to prevent a possible coup d'etat. He ordered all public demonstrations banned in France. The leaves of all French Army troops in Metropolitan France are cancelled. And Pflimlin ordered General Salan, commander of French Army troops in Algeria, to maintain order in Algiers. General Massu, who formed a committee of public safety yesterday...and called for the return of General DeGaulle to power played his cards close to his chest. It is not certain whether Massu's apparent attempt at a coup in Algeria is succeeding. It is not even sure which side General Salan is on. (In a few minutes we'll have a direct report---an analysis of the situation from CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun in Paris.)

President Eisenhower began his news conference today...by asking to be excused from commenting on what he called the "delicate" situation in Algeria and Lebanon. He said developments there are being watched closely. They could become "very grave."

Anti-American disorders continued today in Lebanon. A stick of dynamite exploded on the lawn of the united States Embassy in Beirut. And our ambassador urged all Americans in the port city of Tripoli to leave. A ship is being sent to Tripoli for them if they want to be evacuated. They are not being ordered out. The pro-Western president of Lebanon, Camille Chamoun, conferred again today with the American, British and French ambassadors. He shows no sign of yielding to the terrorist campaign to overthrow his government. Radio broadcasts from Egypt and Syria have been urging Chamoun's downfall, and yesterday the Lebanese foreign minister, Dr. Charles Malik, formally accused President Nasser's United Arab Republic of "massive interference" in Lebanon's internal affairs. Today, the United Arab Republic rejected this protest by Lebanon...called it "full of lies and falsehoods." In Washington, the State Department praised the "courageous efforts" of the Lebanese government to preserve its security. And we are giving more than moral support. The United States announces it is airlifting a quantity of "police equipment" to Lebanon, to help Chamoun maintain the country's "internal security." CBS News Correspondent Dick Kallsen...reporting from Beirut says this equipment consists of tear gas, gas masks and ammunition and the first delivery is due within 48 hours. At Gibraltar, twelve American warships of the 6th fleet have weighed anchor and headed for the Eastern Mediterranean. The Navy refuses to disclose their mission or destination. According to some naval sources, the action is tied in directly with the new Middle East crisis. Other naval sources say the ships are leaving on maneuvers planned long before the present situation arose. There is a formal announcement by the Navy in Washington that it's doubling the size of its amphibious force in the Mediterranean. The announcement says: "Certain amphibious units originally schaduled to return to the United States shortly will remain in the Mediteraanean for the time being." A Navy spokesman insisted the action is not related to the events in Lebanon.

Vice President Nixon cut short his visit to Venezuela late today...and flew to San Juan, Puerto Rico, where he is spending the night. Actually, Mr. Nixon shortened his stay in Venezuela by only a few hours. He was to have left around midnight...and because of the stopover in Puerto Rico, he will be back in Washington tomorrow as originally planned. Mr. and Mrs. Nixon spent most of today inside the United States Embassy in Caracas...guarded by about fifty Venezuelan M.P.'s armed with rifles and machettes. The Vice President left the embassy once....around noon...to attend a luncheon given by leaders of the government. He made no public appearances. There was no repitition of yesterday's ugly outbreak...and no need to call on those United States Marines and Paratroopers dispatched yesterday to the Caribbean as a precuationary measure. Mr. and Mrs. Nixon rode out to the Caracas airport this afternoon in a bullet-proof limousine supplied by the Venezuelan govennment. The route itself was patrolled by armored cars and tanks.

At his news conference today, President Eisenhower defended the airlifting of troops to the Caribbean area as the simplest precautionary measure in the world." The troops were made available, in the event the Venezuelan government asked for assistance in protecting the Vice President. That," he said, "is all there was to it." Mr. Eisenhower would not accuse the Communists directly of setting off the disturbances in South America...or the anti-American demonstrations in Lebanon. But where there's so much smoke, he said, there probably is some fire. Mr. Eisenhower added that there are economic factors. Some Latin-American countries are in economic difficulties...and there's natural envy of the United States. In Peru, he said, there's bitterness over the new low prices of lead and zinc. And in Venezuela, there are rumors the United States wants to impose an import quota on Venezuelan oil. Mr. Eisenhower said that regarding oil imports, there is no truth to this at all.

Venezuela has sent a note to Washington...apologizing for yesterday's "lamentable occurrence." The Venezuelan charge d'affaires in Washington is said to have described the majority of anti-Nixon demonstrators as sympathizers of General Perez Jimenez, the ousted Venezuelan dictator. But assured the State Department that the role played by Communist agitators also is being investigated.

The Soviet news agency Tass denies that Communists were to blame...calls the charges they were responsible "provocative fabrications spread by foreign agents." Russian newspapers are reporting the Nixon story in great detail. And the Moscow radio says the real fiasco is not Mr. Nixon's tour but...in Moscow's phrase..."The fiasco of United States policy."

In Congress today, the House passed the Administration's foreign aid bill and sent it to the Senate. The measure authorizes the spending of 3-billion, 603-million dollars for economic and military assistance. It gives the President 339-million dollars less than he asked for. But this cut was made in committee and all other attempts to slash the measure further...in the course of House debate...were beaten down. The final vote of approval: 259 to 134.

Now for that analysis of the French political situation...as it has evolved in recent years, up to today...we switch now to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Anarchy is the French people's sword of defense against tyranny. But anarchy is a double-edged sword and it cuts into the heart of democracy as it fights tyranny - and that's the tragic dilemma of the Fourth Republic of France tonight. This Fourth Republic, now eleven years old, has been fighting since its post-war birth against two forces of tyranny, communism on the Left and autocracy on the Right. In order to assure their defense against these extremes, the framers of the French Consitution deliberately wrote anarchy into their laws. The Constitution puts a premium on unstable government, apparently to prevent any strong man, like De Gaulle or any powerful group like the Communists from seizing control of the Legislature. From this viewpoint the Constitution has admirably fulfilled its purpose. Only three men have been able to hold office for more than one year in the past decade. And in the meantime - despite cabinets that change with the seasons of the year, France has prospered miraculously. Thus, one edge of the blade has cut clean and true for the Repbulic. But at the same time - the authority of the State, the prestige of the democratic regime, has been slashed to ribbons in the battle. And tonight the fabric of the Republic is hanging together by a thread. Why did this happen? How did this happen? What's likely to happen now? These are the questions being asked tonight, not only here in France but by an anxious Western world. Let's try to deal with each question in turn, trying to separate fact from fiction. First, why is France in this present crisis, teetering on the brink of civil war?

Well, we've noted that the authority of the State has been progressively weakened by unstable government. In the past year, France has been without a government three months out of twelve, a political phenomenon unique in the history of a great country. In the absence of government, special interest groups are tempted to seize power for their own objectives. The current insurrection of Algeria is not unique; it's part of a series of coup d'force going back eleven years. It began with Admiral d'Argenlieu's seizure of power in Cochin-China, in 1946. Then Army officers and colonials carried out a coup d'etat against the Sultan of Morocco in 1953. This coup was followed by the air kidnaping of Algerian nationalist leader Ben Bella in 1956. And this year the French Air Force bombed the Tunisian village of Sakiet, while in Paris the police marched upon Parliament. There is thus little new or surprising in the insurrectional act of General Jacques Massu and his Committee of Public Safety in Algiers. It's all part of a pattern: the withering away of the State, not in the Marxist sense but in the French sense of unstable government.

Most of the spectacular coups d'force you will note, have been carried out in the overseas territories. That too is logical, not surprising, for they are furthest removed from the central government - and this crisis of authority has been heightened by the great emotional crisis of the desperate French attempt to stop the clock of history, to maintain eighteenth century power and privilege in the twentieth century world of renascent nationalism. That's the meaning of the current agony of France. The most severe, the most complex of all the crises of this country, for Algeria is not just a colony, it has been regarded by France as part of this country, even more than we Americans regard Alaska or Hawaii or Puerto Rico to be American territory. More than a million Europeans live in Algeria, an island of wealth and strength, in a sea of Arab misery. This complex problem can be surmounted. All human problems are susceptible to solution, but only on condition that there is the necessary unity of purpose to solve it.

That is what France lacks. And for that unity there is no easy solution. It depends upon the courage and responsibility of political leaders. And tonight there is some small hope. For the Socialist party has revoked last week's decision not to participate in government and has decided to join the new Cabinet to save the Republic. We hope in subsequent reports on this program to analyze the chances for a last minute recovery. Meanwhile, for tonight, this is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. Now, back to CBS News in New York.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: Vice President Nixon will get a different kind of reception when he arrives home at Washington airport about noon tomorrow...President Eisenhower will be there to shake his hand...So will the entire cabinet. Plus more than half of Congress...all the Latin-American Ambassadors...and a couple of thousand American college students.

This is Larry LeSueur. Goodnite.

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., May 15, 1958

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

General DeGaulle broke his long silence...said he is willing in the face of mounting difficulties to assume power in France. For a first-hand report, we switch to CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun in Paris.

(Tape runs
(Ends on cue: "---to CBS News in New York."

We will, of course, report further developments in the French crisis as soon as they are available. //

Vice President Nixon returned to Washington today from his South American tour and received a welcome which broke all precedent. For the story, we switch to Washington and CBS News Correspondent Wells Church, who accompanied the Vice President.

Church to run approx 2:30
Returns on cue: "--to CBS News in N.Y."

The new Russian sputnik...weighing almost a ton and a half...MAY be visible over parts of the United States tonight. According to Russian figures, Sputnik III is circling the earth every 106 minutes at a maximum altitude of about 1-thousand, 200-miles. It has solar batteries, many scientific instruments, but apparently NO LIVING animal passenger. At least, the Soviet announcement makes no mention of one. The new Sputnik is CONE-shaped.. almost 12 feet in length and about six feet across at the base. It joins our three much smaller satellites, which have had outer space all to themselves since April 14th...when the second Sputnik and the remains of the dog Laika ceased to exist. There is no indication whether the Russians hope to bring THIS satellite back to earth intact.

The American scientist, Dr. William Pickering, says the THRUST of the rocket that launched the new one-and-a-half-ton Sputnik must have been AT LEAST half a million pounds. Dr. Pickering told the Senate Space Committee this demonstrates beyond doubt that the Soviet Union can launch [redacted] intercontinental ballistic missiles with "very substantial warheads".

[redacted]

agree that the new satellite is more than DOUBLE the size of Sputnik II. The one exception is Dr. John Rinehart of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Laboratory who thinks the second sputnik ALSO weighed [redacted] about one and a half tons. He believes the weight of HALF a ton--as given by the Russians for the second sputnik---applied only to the instruments it carried, NOT to the satellite AND the instrumentation.

[redacted]

In Moscow, Nikita Khrushchev made a speech ridiculing the size of the American satellites...calling them "oranges". Then he complimented the Russian scientists on their achievement but said it is not the purpose of the new Sputnik to "blackmail the world." He said, "We must stop scaring each other. We must sit down at the same table and talk about how we can live together on one planet." Khrushchev was speaking at a Kremlin meeting in honor of Gamal Abdel Nasser, visiting president of the United Arab Republic. Khrushchev said, ON the subject of disarmament, that it is possible to approach the question in "gradual" stages. "It is time," said he, "to seek a settlement of urgent and topical questions in a businesslike manner." He accused "some countries" of obstructing a summit conference by trying to introduce unrelated issues---such, he said, as German reunification and the situation in Eastern Europe. He also denounced "colonialism". President Nasser then made a speech, saying it was obvious from what he had seen on his visit that Russia was working for peace and the development of its economy. He thanked Russia for the arms he said it had given Egypt "without strings"... and Nasser invited Khrushchev to visit the United Arab Republic.

In Lebanon, anti-government violence continues. Four persons died today when a bomb exploded in a cafe in Beirut. [redacted]

AND the United Press reports from Washington that Lebanon has appealed to the United States for a shipment of tanks, to help put down the disorders.

[redacted]

The threat of a British rail strike ended today in London. Leaders of the biggest railroad union accepted a three percent wage boost offered by the British Transport Commission. But the BUS strike continues.

Red China warned the United States today---in a Peiping broadcast---that it is prepared to give Indonesia "further assistance." The broadcast did not say just what this "assistance" might be...although it referred to past shipments of cotton piece-goods and rice. Peiping again accused the United States of actively supporting the rebel movement in Indonesia---something the State Department repeatedly has denied.

In Congress today, the House Ways and Means Committee voted to limit President Eisenhower's authority to regulate tariffs under the Reciprocal Trade Act. It approved a plan whereby Congress...by a two-thirds vote of House and Senate...could enforce the recommendations of the Tariff Commission to raise tariff rates. Under the present system, the President has discretionary authority to reject the findings of the commission...IF he deems it in the national interest. The House Ways and Means Committee then went on to approve this compromise extension of the reciprocal trade program. The extension is for FIVE years.

This is Larry Haseman - I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News - First a word from Greg Bergen Most frenchmen have a traditional fear of another Napoleon, but despite the strong feelings many of them HOLD about De Gaulle, he still remains a political enigma... He's been publically silent for several years..But one thing is certain...if he assumes power, it will be on his own terms..And one of them is--to change the French constitution, so that the Chief executive would have more power and the French Assembly would have less..

This is Larry LeSueur... Ed Murrow will be back from London tomorrow... Good nite..

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Thursday, May 15, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today. General de Gaulle broke his long silence, said he is willing - in the face of mounting difficulties - to assume power in France. For a first-hand report we switch to CBS correspondent David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: French Premier Pierre Pflimlin has just come out of a Cabinet session to say that he would ask Parliament to declare a state of emergency in France when it meets in special session tomorrow morning. This is just short of martial law and will permit the government to outlaw subversive activity. This, he said, is not a time for division. However, the premier's appeal was made to a France that is more divided than ever, agonizing through what may be a fatal fever. A powerful blow against a weak and sick regime was struck today by the father of the Republic himself, the liberator of France, General Charles de Gaulle, who broke a silence of almost three years to announce his readiness to assume power. The General, who came to Paris yesterday from his retreat in the eastern provinces, issued a statement this afternoon that has staggered France. He said that the problems facing this nation are too great now to be solved by a political party regime. He reminded his fellow countrymen that once before in the past they trusted him to rescue the nation and that today he was again holding himself ready to assume the powers of the Republic. By the time his manifesto was made public, the General had already left this capital and returned to his home in Colombey to await events. What kind of events is he awaiting? What does the statement mean? What can happen next and what is happening now?

Meanwhile in Algiers - the insurrection is gathering momentum and a virtual military dictatorship now rules in that province. The commanding general there, Raoul Salan, whom the government thought was loyal and to whom it entrusted the mission of restoring order, made a nationwide radio address today which ended with the words: "Long live France. Long live French Algeria. Long live General de Gaulle." Not one word about a defense of the Republic. He only spoke of France - and instead of paying homage to the President who's the symbol of the nation, he invoked the name of de Gaulle. Throughout Algeria new branches of the original Committee of Public Safety are sprouting in the village squares and on the farms, more than one hundred ofthem, and to all practical effects Algeria tonight has seceded from the Republic. Not from France but from the authority of the Central Government. Nothing has been heard today from General Massu, the paratroop commander who staged the Algiers putsch. My informants there have told me that he is actively consolidating his command and letting Salan make the public speeches for the moment. It wasMassu who first called for de Gaulle's return to power. And the question everybody is asking is, what did de Gaulle mean by being ready to assume power, how could he return to power? What is likely to happen? The first observation to make is that many observers here believe that General de Gaulle's statement came as close to sedition as many any man can come. He did not claim to be seeking political office. He said he would assume powers of the Republic. Well, in this country the powers of the Republic are posed in the hands of the President and the sovereign Parliament, and to assume these powers there must be something like a coup d'etat. Unless the President chooses to resign and call de Gaulle in - and even that would be unconstitutional. What does de Gaulle mean by he is holding himself ready? Well, against the background of the appeal from General Massu that could mean that he's waiting for somebody to strike and then 'invite' him to take power. Whatever happens it means there must be some kind of a violent or illegal change of regime for that to come about. Meanwhile, what are the other parties doing about it? At the moment, the Socialists are saying that they've got to rally all the Democratic forces to save the Republic from fascism. The Communists are saying nothing. There is the threat of a general strike. This can go anywhere. The Fourth Republic seems to be in its death agonies at this moment. Only a miracle can save democracy in France.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: We will, of course, report further developments of the French crisis as soon as they are available.

Vice President Nixon returned to Washington today from his South American tour and received a welcome which broke all precedent. For the story we switch to Washington - and CBS News correspondent Wells Church, who accompanied the Vice President.

CHURCH: Immediately after those ceremonies at the airport, Mr. Nixon went to the White House, where he gave a verbal report to the President and Secretary of State Dulles. His specific recommendations will come later. But it was clear as we toured South America that Mr. Nixon was, time after time, being questioned closely by Latin American journalists about how we handled our relations with dictatorship countries to the South. And one of Mr. Nixon's recommendations will concern a way in which we can deal with dictators so as not to arouse the resentment of truly democratic leaders. Criticisms heard on the tour were largely directed at the way we do things, not what we do. These criticisms have been building for a long time and officials who have worried about losing the friendship of our Latin American neighbors, like United Nations Ambassador Lodge, had good reason to do so, judging by what happened to Mr. Nixon in Latin America.

Here is how Mr. Nixon put the problem today at the airport.

VICE PRES. NIXON: One rule we must never forget, in international relations as well as in political or business affairs, is that we must never take our friends for granted. We do not take our friends for granted in Latin America. We don't think that we ever have. But some of them may have gotten the impression that we did. And may I say that in that connection that what we must get across, there as well as in other parts of the world, is this very simple message that we, the Government, the people of the United States, want for other peoples just what we have for ourselves, independence for our country, freedom for our people and the greatest possibilities for economic progress that can be devised. (Applause)

CHURCH: Mr. Nixon's trip appears to have come at a good time. It came when the Communist leadership in South America felt strong enough to attack him with violence, another instance of communism helping us by waking us up to a bad situation. As Mr. Nixon sees it, if anti-Americanism is widespread enough to produce those riots against him, it is time we checked ourselves before we lose our Latin American friendships.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: The new Russian Sputnik, weighing ...

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

General De Gaulle broke his long silence...said he is willing in the face of mounting difficulties to assume power in France. For a first-hand report, we switch to CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: French Premier Pierre Pflimlin has just come out of a cabinet session to say that he would ask Parliament to declare a state of emergency in France when it meets in special session tomorrow morning. This is just short of martial law and will permit the government to outlaw subversive activity. This, he said, is not a time for division. However, the premier's appeal was made to a France that is more divided than ever, agonizing through what may be a fatal fever. A powerful blow against a weak and sick regime was struck today by the father of the Republic himself, the liberator of France, General Charles De Gaulle, who broke a silence of almost three years to announce his readiness to assume power. The General, who came to Paris yesterday from his retreat in the eastern provinces, issued a statement this afternoon that has staggered France. He said that the problems facing this nation are too great now to be solved by a political party regime. He reminded his fellow countrymen that once before in the past they trusted him to rescue the nation and that today he was again holding himself ready to assume the powers of the Republic. By the time his manifesto was made public, the General had already left this capital and returned to his home in Colombey to await events. What kind of events is he awaiting? What does the statement mean? What can happen next and what is happening now?

Meanwhile in Algiers - the insurrection is gathering momentum and a virtual military dictatorship now rules in that province. The commanding general there, Raoul Salan, whom the government thought was loyal and to whom it entrusted the mission of restoring order, made a nationwide radio address today which ended with the words: "Long live France, Long live French Algeria. Long live General De Gaulle." Not one word about a defense of the Republic. He only spoke of France,- and instead of paying homage to the President who's the symbol of the nation, he invoked the name of De Gaulle. Throughout Algeria new branches of the original Committee of Public Safety are sprouting in the village squares and on the farms, more than one hundred of them, and to all practical effects, Algeria tonight has seceded from the Republic. Not from France but from the authority of the Central Government. Nothing has been heard today from General Massu, the paratroop commander who staged the Algiers putsch. My informants there have told me that he is actively consolidating his command and letting Salan make the public speeches for the moment. It was Massu who first called for De Gaulle's return to power. And the question everybody is asking is, what did De Gaulle mean by being ready to assume power, how could he return to power? What is likely to happen? The first observation to make is that many observers here believe that General de Gaulle's statement came as close to sedition as any man can come. He did not claim to be seeking political office. He said he would assume powers of the Republic. Well, in this country the powers of the Republic are posed in the hands of the President and the sovereign Parliament and to assume those powers there must be something like a coup d'etat. Unless the President chooses to resign and call De Gaulle in - and even that would be unconstitutional. What does De Gaulle mean by he is holding himself ready? Well, against the background of the appeal from General Massu that could mean that he's waiting for somebody to strike and then "invite" him to take power. Whatever happens, it means there must be somekind of a violent or illegal change of regime for that to come about. Meanwhile, what are the other parties doing about it? At the moment, the Socialists are saying that tney've got to rally all the democratic forces to save the Republic from fascism. The communists are saying nothing. There is the threat of a general strike. This can go anywhere. The Fourth Republic seems to be in its death agonies at this moment. Only a miracle can save democracy in France.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: We will, of course, report further developments of the French crisis as soon as they are available.

Vice President Nixon returned to Washington today from his South American tour and received a welcome which broke all precedent. For the story we switch to Washington - and CBS News correspondent Wells Church, who accompanied the Vice President.

CHURCH: Immediately after those ceremonies at the airport, Mr. Nixon went to the White House, where he gave a verbal report to the President and Secretary of State Dulles. His specific recommendations will come later. But it was clear as we toured South America that Mr. Nixon was, time after time, being questioned closely by Latin American journalists about how we handled our relations with dictatorship countries to the South. And one of Mr. Nixon's recommendations will concern a way in which we can deal with dictators so as not to arouse the resentment of truly democratic leaders. Criticisms heard on the tour were largely directed at the way we do things, not what we do. These criticisms have been building for a long time and officials who have worried about losing the friendship of our Latin American neighbors, like United Nations Ambassador Lodge, had good reason to do so, judging by what happened to Mr. Nixon in Latin America.

Here is how Mr. Nixon put the problem today at the airport.

VICE PRES. NIXON: One rule we must never forget, in international relations as well as in political or business affairs, is that we must never take our friends for granted. We do not take our friends for granted in Latin America. We don't think that we ever have. But some of them may have gotten the impression that we did. And may I say that in that connection that what we must get across, there as well as in other parts of the world, is this very simple message that we, the Government, the people of the United States, want for other peoples just what we have for ourselves, independence for our country, freedom for our people and the greatest possibilities for economic progress that can be devised. (Applause)

CHURCH: Mr. Nixon's trip appears to have come at a good time. It came when the Communist leadership in South America felt strong enough to attack him with violence, another instance of communism helping us by waking us up to a bad situation. As Mr. Nixon sees it, if anti-Americanism is widespread enough to produce those riots against him, it is time we check ourselves before we lose our Latin American friendships.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: The new Russian sputnik...weighing almost a ton and a half...may be visible over parts of the United States tonight. According to Russian figures, Sputnik III is circling the earth every 106 minutes at a maximum altitude of about 1-thousand, 200-miles. It has solar batteries, many scientific instruments, but apparently no animal passenger. At least, the Soviet announcement makes no mention of one. The new Sputnik is cone-shaped...almost 12 feet in length and about six feet across at the base. It joins our three much smaller satellites, which have had outer space all to themselves since April 14th...when the second Sputnik and the remains of the dog Laika ceased to exist. There is no indication whether the Russians hope to bring this satellite back to earth intact.

The American scientist, Dr. William Pickering says the thrust of the rocket that launched the new one-and-a-half-ton Sputnik must have been at least half a million pounds. Dr. Pickering told the Senate Space Committee this demonstrates beyond doubt that the Soviet Union can launch intercontinental ballistic missiles with "very substantial warheads."

In Moscow, Nikita Khrushchev made a speech ridiculing the size of the American satellites...calling them "oranges." Then he complimented the Russian scientists on their achievement, but said it is not the purpose of the new Sputnik to "blackmail the world." He said, "We must stop scaring each other. We must sit down at the same table and talk about how we can live together on one planet." Khrsshchev was speaking at a Kremlin meeting in honor of Gamal Abdel Nasser, visiting president of the United Arab Republic. Khrushchev said, on the subject of disarmament, that it is possible to approach the question in "gradual" stages. "It is time," said he, "to seek a settlement of urgent and topical questions in a businesslike manner." He accused "some countries" of obstructing a summit conference by trying to introduce unrelated issues---such, he said, as German reunification and the situation in Eastern Europe. He also denounced "colonialism." President Nasser then made a speech, saying it was obvious from what he had seen on his visit that Russia was working for peace and the development of its economy. He thanked Russia for the arms he said it had given Egypt "without strings"... and Nasser invited Khrushchev to visit the United Arab Republic.

In Lebanon, anti-government violence continues. Four persons died today when a bomb exploded in a cafe in Beirut. And the United Press reports from Washington that Lebanon has appealed to the United States for a shipment of tanks to help put down the disorders.

The threat of a British rail strke ended today in London. Leaders of the biggest railroad union accepted a three percent wage boost offered by the British Transport Commission. But the bus strike continues.

Red China warned the United States today---in a Peiping broadcast---that it is prepared to give Indonesia "further assistance." The broadcast did not say just what this "assistance" might be...although it referred to past shipments of cotton piece-goods and rice.

In Congress today, the House Ways and Means Committee voted to limit President Eisenhower's authority to regulate tariffs under the Reciprocal Trade Act. It approved a plan whereby Congress...by a two-thirds vote of House and Senate...could enforce the recommendations of the Tariff Commission to raise tariff rates. Under the present system, the President has discretionary authority to reject the findings of the commission...if he deems it in the national interest.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a meoment with a footnote to the news. First a word from George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: Most Frenchman have a traditional fear of another Napoleon but despite the strong feelings, may of them hold about DeGaulle, he still remains a political enigma...He's been publicly silent for several years...But one thing is certain... if he assumes power, it will be on his own terms...And one of them is---to change the French constitution, so that the Chief executive would have more power and the French Assembly would have less.

This is Larry LeSueur. Ed Murrow will be back from London tomorrow. Good nite.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 16, 1958

This is the news:

The French parliament has voted Premier Pflimlin emergency powers to fight what he called "a plot against the Republic." / Pflimlin told the National Assembly, "This is not a time for speeches but for action." He denied that his policy ever was to "scuttle" Algeria. / He did not name names, but he said "certain civilian leaders" had tried to create an "insurrectional situation." Nor did he refer specifically to General DeGaulle's declaration that he---DeGaulle---was ready to assume power. / Pflimlin said: "There is a real plot against the Republic and the established order. / The government will react with vigor against those who prepared it." To enable the government to "react with vigor" to the threat against its existence,

→

Pflimlin asked the assembly to pass a bill declaring a state of emergency. And the assembly, after six hours of debate, granted his request. The vote was 461 to 114...with the Communists and the Socialists joining the center parties to give him an overwhelming majority.

Under the emergency powers, the Pflimlin government will be able to order the house arrest of anyone whose activities are deemed dangerous to public law and order. Foreigners who endanger public order may be expelled. Newspapers, radio and television programs, and motion pictures may be censored. Curfews may be ordered, and the movement of persons and vehicles forbidden by decree.

All French troops on leave in Metropolitan France have been ordered back on duty. In Algeria, the various "Committees of National Safety" are banding themselves together in one organization...and are continuing to call for the return of General DeGaulle.

But the focus is on Paris. For a direct report on how the French capital looks and feels in this hour of crisis, we switch to Paris and my colleague David Schoenbrun.

Jules Moch ~ Comm. 47-48

(Tape runs 4:35
Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

The United States government is viewing the French crisis with deep concern. But the State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, told reporters today it would be "completely inappropriate" to comment . It is an internal affair. White added, "We are, of course, following developments with great, great care and attention."

A member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee...Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota...said the United States should do everything possible "by word and deed" to help avert a collapse of civil order in France. The loss of France's contribution to NATO, he said, would be "a staggering blow."

Secretary of State Dulles met this afternoon with the ambassadors of Tunisia and Morocco at their request. The two North African countries flank Algeria on the East and West. After this meeting of 40 minutes...at the State Department...there was no comment.

There is also a crisis in Lebanon...where the pro-Western government headed by President Chamoun is under strong attack. For the latest on that story, here is Richard Kallsen, reporting from Beirut.

Tape runs 2:07
Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

The United States said today that it expects to send further "modest" military assistance to Lebanon soon to bolster the Chamoun government. The State Department said the new military supplies will include tanks.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted today to inquire into the background of the anti-American riots in Lebanon, in South America, "and elsewhere." Democratic Senator Morse first proposed an investigation of the disorders that marked Vice President Nixon's visits to Venezuela and Peru. Morse said he wanted to know whether the State Department and the Central Intelligence Agency were -- in his phrase -- "ignorant or knowingly taking a gamble" in letting Mr. Nixon visit those countries. Chairman Green says witnesses from these agencies will be heard behind closed doors...and that the investigation will include incidents "elsewhere".

The House Armed Services Committee today approved legislation for reorganizing the Defense Department. /The committee rewrote the Administration measure, but gives President Eisenhower most of what he asked for. /It calls...as did Mr. Eisenhower...for a single director in charge of all military engineering and research./ It agrees that the command functions of the heads of the three separate armed services should be reduced. It would enlarge the staff operating under the Joint Chiefs./ And the authority of the Defense Secretary would be strengthened. President Eisenhower has sent the committee a letter...commending its work "by and large." / He expressed hope that some of the language of the bill would be "suitably adjusted" in the course of debate on the House floor. One thing the committee refused to do was authorize the Defense Secretary to reassign military functions among the services.

The Moscow radio said today that Russia is ready to negotiate a "radical solution" to the problem of disarmament. It did not spell out the "radical solution". /The broadcast did warn the Western powers against trying to dictate their own terms.

Today...in a New York federal court...Democratic Representative Adam Clayton Powell pleaded innocent to charges of income tax evasion. He was released without bail, pending the filing of motions and the setting of a trial date.

The United States Air Force today claimed a new world speed record for operational aircraft---one thousand, four hundred and four miles an hour. The plane was a Lockheed F-104-A jet, flown over Edwards Air Force Base in California at 40-thousand feet. The pilot was Captain Walter Irwin of the Hamilton Air Force Base.

Back in a moment
George Bryan

Word for Today

David Schoenbrun...a few minutes ago...was describing Paris as a city which is quiet but not calm, because its citizens are aware that "anything can happen." What will happen? Last year, Schoenbrun wrote a book, "As France Goes". And in it, he said: "The latent Bonapartism of the French people is always there under the surface, ready to erupt."

Goodnight and good luck."

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE news

May 16, 1958, Friday
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: For a direct report on how the French capital looks and feels in this hour of crisis, we switch to Paris and my colleague David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Paris is calm tonight. Ominously calm. This usually frivolous almost frantically gay nightspot is sedate. Except for the normal noise of shattered glass and the clash of metal on metal as French cars meet at intersections, Paris is a quiet city. It's the kind of quiet that makes one extremely uneasy. Like that of parents of a particularly boisterous child who begin worrying when Johnny is suddenly well behaved. Paris tonight is too well behaved to be true. And, this calm obviously is not true. It does not reflect the kind of sang froid that the government appealed for, that's a different kind of coolness. The coolness of people who go about their usual business with courage, determination and no fuss like the British under the blitz - no, this is an unusual calm, reflecting fear and indecision rather then coolness and determination. This capital does not know what's going to hit it and it's not taking any chances. People are staying home. Traffic is down about 80 percent in the streets. Cafes and restaurants which normally insult waiting customers are now almost empty and the frustrated waiters of Paris have nobody to keep waiting. This just is not Paris tonight.

Indeed it isn't Paris. Not the Paris that cynically smiles at crisis with a 2000-year-old habit of trouble shrugging it off with the addage "the more things change the more they stay the same." No, not tonight. There are no smiles, few cynics - much change. No matter how this crisis ends and for once the word crisis is properly being used, things will not be the same here. The case of General de Gaulle is the case - the perfect case of change without similiarity or return. For more then a decade ever since that day in January 1946, when he folded his presidential tent and stole silently away to sulk in the bleak forests of the east, Charles de Gaulle has been the man of crisis. He's been a kind of retired aging, ailing but willing Joan of Arc. Now, in this crisis, de Gaulle - like Joan has heard voices again. But, they are real voices calling him back to power, voices of his old comrades in arms and he's answered those voices. For de Gaulle now, there's no retreat possible. Either one of two alternatives is before him. Either the government of the Republic freightened and powerless will resign and call him back with unlimited powers - which is his real desire or the Generals who led the insurrection in Algers will succeed in leading similiar revolts here inside France. The first possibility is fading for at this moment, the government of Pierre Pflimlin does not seem freightened nor on the point of resigning. The Prime Minister has called in Army and police reinforcements today around Paris. He apparently trusts the troops to be loyal. Today he arrested two army officers, he outlawed four subversive organizations. He has even sent police to surround de Gaulle's own house and keep him under surveillance. Pflimlin is fighting back. He doesn't look like a man ready to call in a savior. That leaves the other alternative, an army coup d'etat in France. The terrible choice from which de Gaulle himself shrinks.

Joan of Arc is exhalted by the fight against a foreign enemy but not against her own King and Charles de Gaulle fought the Germans but hesitates to leave the fight personally against the Republic which he saved. This is his dilemma. It is the dilemma of millions of his countrymen who are sickened by the weakness and division of the Republic but who hesitate to follow insurrectionists who wish to strike the coup de grasse. This is the key to the drama being played out here tonight. Will the Army strike for power? Will the people stand by or will they fight against the coup? Will the colonial virus of Algeria infect this motherland? No one can say for sure. That is why Parisis so quiet tonight, but not calm.

This is David Schoenbrun reporting. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Jules Moch has been named the Minister of Interior in the new government.

MURROW: For the latest on that story here is Richard Carlson reporting from Beirut.

CARLSON: In some ways Arab politics is like French politics - the same intensity, the same condition of semi-anarchy, the same rather brutal maneuvering for power. Tonight here in Beirut a Lebanonese friend suggested another similiarity. "Soon," he said, "we also will have our de Gaulle." This is a somewhat exaggerated way of saying what Beirut is talking about tonight. But, there is not any doubt that efforts are being made here to bring the Army Commander in Chief General Chechab to the Premiership. He's a highly respected man acceptable to both Moslems and Christians and one who has managed to keep a record of impartiality. The idea is that he would be able to end the present chaos and hold the country together until Presidential elections are held this summer. This would mean that President Chamoun would have to give up his reported desire to amend the constitution and succeed himself. It is reported in Beirut tonight that the President has discretely passed the word around that he is indeed willing to do this. The question now, is whether too much blood has been shed already. Whether the opposition will or can back down on its demand for the President's resignation. Meanwhile, the fighting goes on. The government has announced that 8 people were killed in the countryside today. The government used airplanes in the action. The situation seems to be worsening in the south. The curfew was imposed in Saida tonight and there are reports that bridges were blown up earlier today.

Here in Beirut there was a pleasant reprieve today from major incidents but most of the stores were closed. The opposition newspapers came out in concerted rath against the American airlift of anti-riot supplies to Lebanon. One paper said, that if the United States insists on violating the sovereignty of Lebanon then we - meaning the opposition Lebanonese would welcome any intervention that would rescue us.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM DST

This is the news:

The French parliament has voted Premier Pflimlin emergency powers to fight what he called "a plot against the Republic." Pflimlin told the National Assembly, "This is not a time for speeches but for action." He denied that his policy ever was to "scuttle" Algeria. He did not name names, but he said "certain civilian leaders" had tried to create an "insurrectional situation." Nor did he refer specifically to General DeGaulle's declaration that he---DeGaulle---was ready to assume power. Pflimlin said: "There is a real plot against the Republic and the established order. The government will react with vigor against those who prepared it." To enable the government to "react with vigor" to the threat against its existence, Pflimlin asked the assembly to pass a bill declaring a state of emergency. And the assembly, after six hours of debate, granted his request. The vote was 461 to 114...with the Communists and the Socialists joining the center parties to give him an overwhelming majority.

Under the emergency powers, the Pflimlin government will be able to order the house arrest of anyone whose activities are deemed dangerous to public law and order. Foreigners who endanger public order may be expelled. Newspapers, radio and television programs, and motion pictures may be censored. Curfews may be ordered, and the movement of persons and vehicles forbidden by decree.

All French troops on leave in Metropolitan France have been ordered back on duty. In Algeria the various "Committees on National Safety" are banding themselves together in one organization...and are continuing to call for the return of General DeGaulle.

But the focus is on Paris. For a direct report on how the French capital looks and feels in this hour of crisis, we switch to Paris and my colleague David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Paris is calm tonight, ominously calm. This usually frivolous, almost frantically gay nightspot is sedate. Except for the normal noise of shattered glass and the clash of metal on metal as French cars meet at intersections, Paris is a quiet city. It's the kind of quiet that makes one extremely uneasy. Like that of parents of a particularly boisterous child who begin worrying when Johnny is suddenly well-behaved. Paris tonight is too well behaved to be true. And, this calm obviously is not true. It does not reflect the kind of sang froid that the government appealed for; that's a different kind of coolness, the coolness of people who go about their usual business with courage, determiniation and no fuss like the British under the blitz. No, this is an unusual calm, reflecting fear and indecision rather than coolness and determination. This capital does not know what's going to hit it and it's not taking any chances. People are staying home. Traffic is down about 80 percent in the streets. Cafes and restaurants which normally insult waiting customers are now almost empty and the frustrated waiters of Paris have nobody to keep waiting. This just is not Paris tonight.

Indeed, it isn't Paris, not the Paris that cynically smiles at crises with a 2,000 year old habit of trouble shrugging it off with the adage, "The more things change, the more they stay the same." No, not tonight. There are no smiles, few cynics - much change. No matter how this crisis ends and for once the word crisis is properly being used, things will not be the same here. The case of General De Gaulle is the case - the perfect case of change without similarity or return. For more than a decade, ever since that day in January, 1946, when he folded his presidential tent and stole silently away to sulk in the bleak forests of the east, Charles De Gaulle has been the man of crisis. He's been a kind of retired aging, ailing, but willing Joan of Arc. Now, in this crisis, De Gaulle - like Joan has heard voices again, But, they are real voices calling him back to power, voices of his old comrades in arms and he's answered those voices.

For De Gaulle now, there's no retreat possible. Either one of two alternatives is before him. Either the government of the Republic frightened and powerless will resign and call him back with unlimited powers - which is his real desire or the Generals who led the insurrection in Algiers wil succeed in leading similar revolts here inside France. The first possiblility is fading for at this moment, the government of Pierre Pflimlin does not seem frightenednor on the point of resigning. The Prime Minister has called in Army and police reinforcements today around Paris. He apparently trusts the troops to be loyal. Today he arrested two army officers, he outlawed four subversive organizations. He has even sent police to surround De Gaulle's own house and keep him under surveillance. Pflimlin is fighting back. He doesn't look like a man ready to call in a savior. That leaves the other alternative, an army coup d'etat in France. The terrible choice from which De Gaulle himself shrinks.

Joan of Arc is exhalted by the fight against a foreign army but not against her own King and Charles De Gaulle fought the Germans but hesitates to lead the fight personally against the Republic which he saved. This is his dilemma. It is the dilemma of millions of his countrymen who are sickened by the weakness and divisions of the Republic but who hesitate to follow insurrectionists who wish to strike the coup de grasse. This is the key to the drama being played out here tonight. Will the Army strike for power? Will the people stand by or will they fight against the coup? Will the colonial virus of Algeria infect this motherland? No one can say for sure. That is why Paris is so quiet tonight, quiet but not calm.

This is David Schoenbrun reporting. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Jules Moch has been named the Minister of Interior in the new government.

The United States government is viewing the French crisis with deep concern. But the State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, told reporters today it would be "completely inappropriate" to comment. It is an internal affair. White added, "We are, of course, following developments with great, great care and attention."

There is also a crisis in Lebanon...where the pro-Western government headed by President Chamoun is under strong attack. For the latest on that story, here is Richard Kallsen, reporting from Beirut.

RICHARD KALLSEN: In some ways Arab politics is like French politics - the same intensity, the same condition of semi-anarchy, the same rather brutal maneuvering for power. Tonight here in Beirut a Lebanese friend suggested another similarity. "Soon," he said, "we also will have our De Gaulle." This is a somewhat exaggerated way of saying what Beirut is talking about tonight. But, there is not any doubt that efforts are being made here to bring the Army Commander in Chief General Chechab to the Premiership. He's a highly respected man acceptable to both Moslems and Christians and one who has managed to keep a record of impartiality. The idea is that he would be able to end the present chaos and hold the country together until presidential elections are held this summer. This would mean that President Chamoun would have to give up his reported desire to amend the constitution and succeed himself. It is reported in Beirut tonight that the President has discretely passed the word around that he is indeed willing to do this. The question now, is whether too much blood has been shed already. Whether the opposition will or can back down on its demand for the President's resignation. Meanwhile, the fighting goes on. The government has announced that 8 people people were killed in the countryside today. The government used airplanes in the action. The situation seems to be worsening in the south. The curfew was imposed in Saida tonight and there are reports that bridges were blown up earlier today.

Here in Beirut there was a pleasant reprieve today from major incidents but most of the stores were closed. The opposition newspapers came out in concerted wrath against the American airlift of anti-riot supplies to Lebanon. One paper said, that if the United States insists on violating the sovereignty of Lebanon then we - meaning the opposition Lebanonese would welcome any intervention that would rescue us. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The United States said today that it expects to send further "modest" military assistance to Lebanon soon to bolster the Chamoun government. The State Department said the new military supplies will include tanks.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted today to inquire into the background of the anti-American riots in Lebanon, in South America, "and elsewhere."

The House Armed Services Committee today approved legislation for reorganizing the Defense Department. The committee rewrote the Administration measure, but gives President Eisenhower most of what he asked for. It calls... as did Mr. Eisenhower...for a single director in charge of all military engineering and research. It agrees that the command functions of the heads of the three separate armed services should be reduced. It would enlarge the staff operating under the Joint Chiefs. And the authority of the Defense Secretary would be strengthened. President Eisenhower has sent the committee a letter...commending its work "by and large." He expressed hope that some of the language of the bill would be "suitably adjusted" in the course of debate on the House floor. One thing the committee refused to do was authorize the Defense Secretary to reassign military functions among the services.

The Moscow radio said today that Russia is ready to negotiate a "radical solution" to the problem of disarmament. It did not spell out the "radical solution." The broadcast did warn the Western powers against trying to dictate their own terms.

Today in a New York federal court...Democratic Representative Adam Clayton Powell pleaded innocent to charges of income tax evasion. He was released without bail, pending the filing of motions and the setting of a trial date.

The United States Air Force today claimed a new world speed record for operational aircraft---one thousand, four hundred and four miles an hour. The plane was a Lockheed F-104-A jet, flown over Edwards Air Force Base in California at 40-thousand feet. The pilot was Captain Walter Irwin of the Hamilton Air Force Base.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: David Schoenbrun...a few minutes ago...was describing Paris as a city which is quiet but not calm because its citizens are aware that "anything can happen." What will happen? Last year, Schoenbrun wrote a book, "As France Goes." And in it, he said: "The latent Bonapartism of the French people is always there under the surface, ready to erupt."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 19, 1958

This is the news:

General DeGaulle has offered...at an extraordinary news conference...to lead France out of its crisis by legal means. He denied any intention of becoming a dictator. For a direct report, we switch to my colleague, David Schoenbrun, in Paris.

Tape runs 3:50

Ends on cue: "--This is David Schoenbrun reporting.

Alex Kendrick attended the DeGaulle News conference. How was it, Alex?

Tape runs 2:43

Ends on cue: "---to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

CBS News will present a special program on the French crisis at 10:05 tonight, Eastern Time, over most of these CBS Radio stations.

In Lebanon, the pro-Western government of President Chamoun is still in jeopardy. His opponents still demand his resignation, and there has been more scattered fighting throughout the country. CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen says the reports of casualties in the week-end action in Tripoli ---reports that went as high as one hundred dead---are exaggerated. A more accurate death toll, he says, would be twenty.

President Eisenhower discussed the French situation with Republican congressional leaders today at their weekly White House meeting. The crisis in Lebanon also was discussed, but those who attended the meeting gave out no details.

The President saw Secretary of State Dulles this afternoon.

The White House announces that Mr. Eisenhower will fly to Gettysburg tomorrow morning by helicopter...to vote in the Pennsylvania primary. The White House shed no light on whether the President will vote for Harold Stassen, who is seeking the Republican gubernatorial nomination.

Tomorrow afternoon, Mr. Eisenhower will fly to New York...where he will make a major speech dealing with the national economy. The speech to be delivered in the evening will be before a special economic conference...called by the American Management Association. Secretary of Commerce Weeks told the conference today that the federal government "will do everything possible to build a firm foundation for confidence."

In Miami Beach, the Governors Conference today debated President Eisenhower's offer to shift some federal activities...and tax money...to the states. The governors of some states with low population complained that they would lose money in the "swap", while more densely populated states would gain. Mr. Eisenhower would shift the responsibility for vocational education...and the control of stream pollution...back to the states. The states, in turn, would get a bigger cut of the federal tax on local telephone calls.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today began its inquiry into the disorders that attended Vice President Nixon's visit to South America...as well as the recent anti-American demonstrations in Lebanon "and elsewhere." The committee met behind closed doors, with the head of the Central Intelligence Agency...Allen Dulles...as its first witness.

The House space committee says the United States must overcome Russia's lead in space, in order to ensure our survival. / The committee has been hearing testimony regarding the formation of a civilian space agency. It says, in its first report, that the agency should have authority to direct the "boldest and most sustained large-scale effort in the history of exploration." / It recommends that the new agency...like the Atomic Energy Commission..."be the supreme arbiter, subject only to priority considerations of national security." / And it says these decisions, as to priority, should be made by the National Security Council and the President; that it "must be coordinated...at the highest levels of government...with other aspects of our military, foreign, technological, and economic policy." The committee tonight approved such legislation.

→

The United States Supreme Court today refused to review a lower court order...requiring the racial integration of four white schools in Arlington County, Virginia. / Seven Negro students are involved in the case, which Arlington County authorities had appealed. / No further step toward enrolling the Negroes in classes is expected to be taken until school re-opens in the fall.

The Supreme Court also threw out the contempt of Congress conviction of Harry Sacher, a New York attorney who had represented various Communist leaders. / Sacher refused to answer questions put to him by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee in 1955. The Supreme Court said...in a 6-to-2 decision...that the questions were "not clearly pertinent."

The United States and Canada today formally announced the establishment of a joint North American Air Defense Command. / Under the agreement...which has been operating on an interim basis for some time... American interceptor aircraft carrying nuclear missiles may fly over Canada without advance approval by the Canadian government.

In Rome, the last sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church were administered tonight to Samuel Cardinal Stritch...a few hours after he (suffered a cerebral stroke. The cardinal underwent the amputation of his right arm three weeks ago. Doctors believed, until today, that he was making a good recovery.

And in Santa Barbara, California... Ronald Colman died today of a lung infection. The actor was best known for his starring roles in the motion pictures, "Lost Horizon" and "Random Harvest". He was 67.

[redacted]

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

WORD FOR TODAY.

Elmer Davis died yesterday. In a sense he wrote his own epitaph: "This Republic was not established by cowards, and cowards will not preserve it." No man ever used a microphone with less fear or greater faith in the republic.

Elmer Davis brought to this medium, wisdom, maturity, a fierce faith in democratic processes, and an unequalled ability to condense news without distorting it. He never knowingly did violence to the truth. He was at all times a responsible man. Those of us who worked with him, and those who listened to him, are alike in his debt. ~~He was tolerant of most things, save intolerance, and never abused his privileged position.~~

~~Elmer used to say: "Radio would be improved by a little more silence". The next few seconds are his.~~

Good Night & Good Luck -

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, May 19, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... For a direct report we switch to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is the first broadcast to CBS from France under the new decree of censorship, which went into effect at midnight here in Paris, lessthan one hour ago. There is no censor in this studio. Nor have I had to submit my script to a censor. I would guess, although I cannot confirm this, that the censor, if he is already installed in office, is sitting at a monitoring station somewhere along the cable link. It is a strange feeling broadcasting under censorship from the land of France, which so fiercely fights for its liberties, particularly the liberty of expression. But it is precisely because the democratic government believesthese liberties to be threatened that it has imposed censorship upon all references to Algeria.

Government sources here have pointed out to me that all reports coming from Algeria are already being censored by the insurrectionists. Indeed, they claim the situation is worse than censorship. Sources here insist that the Algiers committee is spreading lies to influence the political situation back here in France, for it is here in Paris, not in Algiers, that the fate of the Republic is at stake.

Tonight it might be said that the Republic has survived another day. A big day. The day of a great challenge - the challenge ... the challenge of General Charles de Gaulle. If de Gaulle had given the signal for a coup today, then France might have been plunged into civil war tonight. But de Gaulle did not do that. On the contrary, he rejected the charges that he had any dictatorial ambitions and made it clear that he was not seeking power by violent or illegal means. Frenchmen already owe this lonely, dour general a great debt of the past. That debt has increased in value today by the General's restraint on the issue of force, and by his statement that he wanted to assume power only if it is offered by those who hold it legally, that is - a bid to be chosen chief of government. De Gaulle went further than that in easing tensions, for he made it clear despite his tortured and elliptical prose, that he was disavowing his so called spokesmen in Parliament. He didn't even mention the name of his self appointed chief lieutenant, Jacques Soustelle. The General proved again, if any proof was needed that he is not a vulgar rabble-rouser nor a thick-browed, spur-jangling dictator. No, De Gaulle's role is rather that of Prince Louis Napoleon, the nephew of the emperor, the legal dictator of France, who used his popularity through plebiscite to win full powers from the people. De Gaulle sees himself as the father of all the people of France.

He said today without a blush, and I quote, "I am a man who belongs to no one, yet, who belongs to everyone." That's how de Gaulle sees himself. The question now is, how do his countrymen see him? Is this their vision? That question was answered once before, in 1951, when some 40% of the French voted for the General's party. 40% is a huge plurality but it's not everyone. Yet, it does include some powerful forces in this country and they will come into play in the next few days. The government is still under heavy pressure, but under less pressure than last night. De Gaulle's thunderbolts today look more like Roman candles than Jovian fire. And now tonight the gloomy hermit of Colombey has gone back to his retreat to await the reply of his people in answer to the call he made here in Paris today. This is David Schoenbrun reporting.

MURROW: Alexander Kendrick attended the de Gaulle news conference today. How was it, Alex?

KENDRICK: The ...? is the first bridge on the Seine below the Place de la Concorde and the Chamber of Deputies and ...? was the place where the Paris police and riot squads concentrated today. Fifty carloads of them

- instead of at the chamber. So did thousands of other people or tried to, for a tight cordon was put around the antiquated Palais d' Orsay, the hotel that looks like a railway station and is. Nobody got through without a piece of paper stamped 'Cabinet of General de Gaulle.' At the other end of the bridge stood two French rifle squads with rifles. But in front of the hotel, in the lobby, up and down the corridors, were strapping young men not in uniform but obvious military types, some with the French equivalent of the British Guardsman's mustache. They allowed close to a thousand reporters, correspondents and cameramen to fight a way into the huge Rococo ballroom of the hotel. The cameras needed bright lights. There were 15 sound cameras on the job, so the windows had to be blacked out with heavy red curtains. The temperature began to rise. The room was full an hour before de Gaulle arrived for his first news conference in three years and in his reappearance on the French political stage. Right on the stroke of three, after looking at his watch in the hallway, the tall, clumsy but still erect figure shouldered a path into the room through scores of still photographers. His hair was gray and thinning. His face was pale, almost waxen, despite his residence in the country. He had on a ...? Oxford gray suit. He sat behind the battery of fifteen microphones and seemed nervous and looked tired. He made his opening statement still ill at ease. And then the questions began. He answered them as if leading an infantry charge; he made all the Gallic gestures, energetically, almost fiercely sometimes. He expressed scorn, indignation, calm reasonableness, Olympian rectitude all in turn. But he was saying words that he had said before. At the end of a half hour exactly he looked at his watch again, arose and said he was returning to his small village to await the call. The fifteen sound cameras stopped turning. The one thousand reporters began to fight their way out. It was one hundred degrees in the ballroom and the General was the only one not perspiring. Outside the sun was shining brightly. The river was serene and beautiful.

The props were still there and so were the two rifle squads at the other end of the bridge of ... And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 19, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

General DeGaulle has offered...at an extraordinary news conference... to lead France out of its crisis by legal means. He denied any intention of becoming a dictator. For a direct report, we switch to my colleague, David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is the first broadcast to CBS from France under the new decree of censorship, which went into effect at midnight here in Paris, less than one hour ago. There is no censor in this studio. Nor have I had to submit my script to a censor. I would guess, although I cannot confirm this, that the censor, if he is already installed in office, is sitting at a monitoring station somewhere along the cable link. It is a strange feeling broadcasting under censorship from the land of France, which so fiercely fights for its liberties, particularly the liberty of expression. But it is precisely because the democratic government believes these liberties to be threatened that it has imposed censorship upon all references to Algeria.

Government sources here have pointed out to me that all reports coming from Algeria are already being censored by the insurrectionists. Indeed, they claim the situation is worse than censorship. Sources here insist that the Algiers committee is spreading lies to influence the political situation back here in France, for it is here in Paris, not in Algiers, that the fate of the Republic is at stake.

Tonight it might be said that the Republic has survived another day, a big day, the day of a great challenge - the challenge...the challenge of General Charles de Gaulle. If de Gaulle had given the signal for a coup today, then France might have been plunged into civil war tonight. But de Gaulle did not do that. On the contrary, he rejected the charges that he had any dictatorial ambitions and made it clear that he was not seeking power by violent or illegal means. Frenchmen already owe this lonely, dour general a great debt of the past. That debt has increased in value today by the General's restraint on the issue of force, and by his statement that he wanted to assume power only if it is offered by those who hold it legally, that is - a bid to be chosen chief of government. De Gaulle went further than that in easing tensions, for he made it clear despite his tortured and elliptical prose, that he was disavowing his so-called spokesmen in Parliament. He didn't even mention the name of his self appointed chief lieutenant, Jacques Soustelle. The General proved again, if any roof was needed that he is not a vulgar rabblerouser nor a thick-browed, spur-jangling dictator. No, De Gaulle's role is rather that of Prince Louis Napoleon, the nephew of the emperor, the legal dictator of France, who used his popularity through plebiscite to win full powers from the people. De. Gaulle sees himself as the father of all the people of France.

He said today without a blush, and I quote, "I am a man who belongs to no one, yet, who belongs to everyone." That's how de Gaulle sees himself. The question now is, how do his countrymen see him? Is this their vision? That question was answered once before, in 1951 when some 40% of the French voted for the General's party. 40% is a huge plurality, but it's not everyone. Yet, it does include some powerful forces in this country and they will come into play in the next few days. The government is still under heavy pressure, but under less pressure than last night. De Gaulle's thunderbolts today look more like Roman candles than Jovian fire. And now tonight the gloomy hermit of Colombey has gone back to his retreat to await the reply of his people in answer to the call he made here in Paris today. This is David Schoenbrun reporting.

MURROW: Alexander Kendrick attended the de Gaulle news conference today. How was it, Alex?

KENDRICK: The Pont de Solserino is the first bridge on the Seine below the Place de la Concorde and the Chamber of Deputies and Solserino was the place where the Paris police and riot squads concentrated today. Fifty carloads of them - instead of at the chamber. so did thousands of other poeple or tried to, for a tight cordon was put around the antiquated Palais d'Orsay, the hotel that looks like a railway station and is. Nobody got through without a piece of paper stamped Cabinet of General de Gaulle. At the other end of the bridge stood two French rifle squads with rifles. But in front of the hotel, in the lobby, up and down the corridors, were strapping young men not in uniform but obvious military types, some with the French equivalent of the British Guardsman's mustache. They allowed close to a thousand reporters, correspondents and cameramen to fight a way into the huge Rococco ballroom of the hotel. The cameras needed bright lights. There were 15 sound cameras on the job, so the windows had to be blacked out with heavy red curtains. The temperature began to rise. The room was full an hour before de Gaulle arrived for his first news conference in three years and in his reappearance on the French political stage. Right on the stroke of three, after looking at his watch in the hallway, the tall, clumsy but still erect figure shouldered a path into the room through scores of still photographers. His hair was gray and thinning. His face was pale, almost waxen, despite his residence in the country. He had on an Oxford gray suit. He sat behind the battery of fifteen microphones and seemed nervous and looked tired. He made his opening statement still ill at ease. And then the questions began. He answered them as if leading an infantry charge; he made all the Gallic gestures, energetically, almost fiercely sometimes. He expressed scorn, indignation, calm reasonableness, Olympian rectitude all in turn. But he was saying words that he had said before. At the end of a half hour exactly he looked at his watch again, arose and said he was returning to his small village to await the call. The fifteen sound cameras stopped turning. The one thousand reporters began to fight their way out. It was one hundred degrees in the ballroom and the General was the only one not perspiring Outside the sun was shining brightly. The river was serene and beautiful. The props were still there and so were the two rifle squads at the other end of the bridge of Solsetino

And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: CBS News will present a special program on the French crisis at 10:05 tonight, Eastern Time, over most of these CBS Radio stations.

In Lebanon, the pro-Western government of President Chamoun is still in jeopardy. His opponents still demand his resignation, and there has been more scattered fighting throughout the country. CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen says the reports of casualties in the week-end action in Tripoli---reports that went as high as one hundred dead---are exaggerated. A more accurate death toll, he says, would be twenty.

President Eisenhower discussed the French situation with Republican congressional leaders today at their weekly White House meeting. The crisis in Lebanon also was discussed, but those who attended the meeting gave out no details.

The President saw Secretary of State Dulles this afternoon. Tomorrow afternoon, Mr. Eisenhower will fly to New York...where he will make a major speech dealing with the national economy. The speech to be delivered in the evening will be before a special economic conference...called by the American Management Association. Secretary of Commerce Weeks told the conference today that the federal government "will do everything possible to build a firm foundation for confidence."

In Miami Beach, the Governors Conference today debated President Eisenhower's offer to shift some federal activities...and tax money....to the states. The governors of some states with low population complained that they would lose money in the "swap," while more densely populated states would gain. Mr. Eisenhower would shift the responsibility for vocational education...and the control of stream pollution...back to the states. The states, in turn, would get a bigger cut of the federal tax on local telephone calls.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today began its inquiry into the disorders that attended Vice President Nixon's visit to South America...as well as the recent anti-American demonstrations in Lebanon "and elsewhere." The committee met behind closed doors with the head of the Central Intelligence Agency Allen Dulles...as its first witness.

The House space committee says the United States must overcome Russia's lead in space in order to ensure our survival. The committee has been hearing testimony regarding the formation of a civilian space agency. It says in its first report that the agency should have authority to direct the "boldest and most sustained large-scale effort in the history of exploration." It recommends that the new agency...like the Atomic Energy Commission..."be the supreme arbiter subject only to priority considerations of national security." And it says these decisions as to priority, should be made by the National Security Council and the President; that it "must be coordinated...at the highest levels of government... with other aspects of our military, foreign, technological, and economic policy." The committee tonight approved such legislation.

The United States Supreme Court today refused to review a lower court order...requiring the racial integraion of four white schools in Arlington County, Virginia. Seven Negro students are involved in the case, which Arlington County authorities had appealed. No further step toward enrolling the Negroes in classes is expected to be taken until school re-opens in the fall.

In Rome, the last sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church were administered tonight to Samuel Cardinal Stritch...a few hours beter he suffered a cerebral stroke. The cardinal underwent the amputation of his right arm three weeks ago. Doctors believed until today that he was making a good recovery.

And in Santa Barbara, California...Ronald Colman died today of a lung infection. The actor was best known for his starring roles in the motion pictures, "Lost Horizon" and "Random Harvest." He was 67.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Elmer Davis died yesterday. In a sense he wrote his own epitaph: "This Republic was not estabiished by cowards, and cowards will not preserve it." No man ever used a microphone with less fear or greater faith in the republic.

Elmer Davis brought to this medium, wisdom, maturity, a fierce faith in democratic processes, and an unequalled ability to condense news without distorting it. He never knowingly did violence to the truth. He was at all times a responsible man. Those of us who worked with him, and those who listened to him are alike in his debt.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 20, 1958

This is the news:

The French National Assembly today gave Premier Pflimlin what amounted to a vote of confidence./ Here is my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting from Paris.

(Tape runs 2:30
(Ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow in New York."

Secretary of State Dulles was asked about the French crisis today, at his weekly news conference. /Mr. Dulles said he hopes...and expects... with every American that France will find a solution in keeping with its great tradition for freedom and democracy. It would be inappropriate, he said, for him to make any further comment./ He said President Eisenhower may reply this week to Khrushchev's message...agreeing to technical talks on how to enforce a ban on nuclear wespons tests. / Mr. Dulles accused the United Arab Republic of intervening in Lebanon on the side of the forces trying to overthrow its pro-Western government. / He said the situation in Lebanon, as of now, does not warrant the sending of American troops. | But the United States, he added, will not be deterred from doing what it thinks is right by any Soviet threats. (Mr. Dulles commented on the Eisenhower Doctrine, as it applies to Lebanon, and I should like to examine these remarks in a few minutes).

→

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today ordered a full-scale study of the relations of the United States with Latin American countries. / The investigation is to be carried out by a subcommittee headed by Democratic Senator Morse. And it is an outgrowth of the disorders which marked Vice President Nixon's South American tour. / Another subcommittee will investigate American policy toward other countries such as Lebanon where there have been recent anti-American demonstrations.

Here in New York tonight, President Eisenhower will make a major speech on the state of the American economy. ~~Mr. Eisenhower will be speaking before~~

→

~~the economic mobilization conference sponsored by the American Management Association. And the text of his speech already has been released.~~

There are strong indications, he will say, that the economic decline of recent months is slowing down...although "not all our troubles are over by any means." He will promise "certain decisions soon in the field of ~~[illegible]~~ taxation," after consultation with congressional leaders. But News Secretary Hagerty says the decisions could be either for or against a tax cut. No decisions have been reached. Mr. Eisenhower will again urge business to tempt buyers with better values and to expand its industrial plant. As for wages and prices, he will say the American people are going to be "looking over the shoulders" of those sitting at the bargaining table, "to see whether the wage settlement and subsequent price decisions are consistent with a stable dollar." The future, he will say, "is bursting with vitality and promise. America is not going to stand still. America is going to grow." (The President's speech will be broadcast over most of these stations ~~tonight~~ at 9:30 p.m., Eastern Time).

~~Before Mr. Eisenhower came to New York, he flew to Gettysburg by~~ helicopter...to vote in the Pennsylvania primary, where his former disarmament adviser, Harold Stassen, is seeking the Republican nomination for governor. Mr. Eisenhower did not say how he voted. And the election results are not yet available.

→

Maryland also held a primary today. In both elections, the voting was light.

President Eisenhower began his day by signing legislation raising the pay of nearly all military personnel who have served more than two years.

The Army today announced the organization of a new, special force set up to deal with limited wars "and move promptly to potential trouble spots anywhere in the world." The force is composed initially of about 50-thousand men...and is known officially as the Strategic Army Corps. It includes two airborne divisions---the 82nd and 101st...and the First and Fourth Infantry Divisions.

Twelve persons died today when a Capital Airlines plane and an Air National Guard jet trainer collided over Maryland. The airliner... bound from Chicago to Baltimore...with a stopover at Pittsburgh...carried seven passengers and a crew of four. The pilot of the jet trainer parachuted...and escaped with burns. His companion was killed. This is the fifth collision between military and civilian aircraft since 1949.

Edward R. Murrow: May 20, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Last week the United States ordered 3,000 Marines, who were slated to be relieved, to stay in the Mediterranean, thus doubling the number available for use. / Then the Sixth Fleet sailed East, ostensibly to take part in maneuvers with the British, but making a show of Western power in a troubled area. / We next airlifted defense weapons for police use in Lebanon, at the request of the government. As violence increased in Lebanon, the United States sent eighteen big transport planes - C 124's - to German bases. / These could deliver light tanks promised to the Lebanese government, or evacuate Americans from Lebanon, or take troops there. / On Saturday evening the State Department admitted that consideration was being given to the dispatch of troops, should President Chamoun of Lebanon ask for them, because he could not guarantee the safety of American lives and property. [~~The State Department also consulted Britain and others on concerted action in Lebanon.~~] On Saturday the Soviet government charged the West with interfering in internal affairs in Lebanon, and warned that these activities would lead to serious consequences, for Lebanon and the Middle East. Today Secretary Dulles told his news conference that the United States is not barred by Soviet communist threats, from doing its duty anywhere in the world. The United States, he said, has "plenty of authority" under the language of the Eisenhower doctrine ~~resolution~~ to act to preserve Lebanon's independence and integrity if asked to do so.

This chain of events looks very much like a new crisis of so-called "brinkmanship". We openly offer American troops to Lebanon if requested; the Soviet Union warns of serious consequences. Whatever the merits of the case, the crisis is grave and has incalculable possibilities.

It may have surprised some congressmen who voted for the Eisenhower resolution, to discover that it gives Mr. Dulles "plenty of authority" to use American forces in Lebanon at this time. There would be no question if the troubles there were due to armed aggression by a country controlled by international communism." That is the precise wording of the Eisenhower doctrine. In the Congressional resolution were two introductory sentences before the doctrine was stated. One authorized the President to undertake military assistance programs. "Furthermore", the resolution went on to say, "the United States regards as vital to the national interest and world peace the preservation of the independence and integrity of the nations of the Middle East." This is the authority to which Mr. Dulles referred. But the resolution did not authorize the use of American forces without limitation. It proceeded to say: "To this end, the United States is prepared to use armed forces to assist any nation or group of nations requesting assistance against armed aggression from any country controlled by international communism."

Nobody attributes the troubles in Lebanon to armed aggression by a country under communist domination. The State Department doesn't, neither does the government of Lebanon. It is due to an involved tangle of difficulties, many of them domestic. Undoubtedly the United Arab Republic has agents at work stirring up and arming resistance to the Lebanese government. Undoubtedly Syrians have crossed the border to take part in the fighting. But at least half the population of Lebanon is Moslem and is opposed to President Chamoun's openly Western policy. So are certain Christian elements. This is an Arab nation, and probably half the population would favor some kind of association with the United Arab Republic.

What triggered the crisis was President Chamoun's intention to amend the constitution to give himself a second six-year term. This would mean commitment to another six years of pro-Western policy. Enough Arabs took to the streets to fight against this to threaten the government. Efforts to bring about a compromise failed in Beirut today, and Chamoun's opponents promised to keep up the fight until he resigns.

Naturally the United States would like to save a pro-Western government in Beirut, and for it to fall would be a serious setback for this country. But it may be questioned that the Eisenhower doctrine was devised to keep friendly governments in the Middle East in office against strong internal opposition. And it is internal opposition more than anything else - and certainly not external aggression, ~~let alone communist aggression~~ - that is threatening the Chamoun regime.

Back in a moment
Jerry Bryan

Word for Today

The Pflimlin government has received a virtual vote of confidence, making the return of General DeGaulle less likely than it was 24 hours ago. "Never," some one said, "underestimate the French talent for tinkering and patching up." And it was a master politician, Thomas Jefferson, who observed...very wisely..."The hole and the patch should be commensurate."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 20, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The French National Assembly today gave Premier Pflimlin what amounted to a vote of confidence. Here is my colleague David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The government of France today won the biggest majority vote of the current legislature, an 80% majority, almost unheard of in any Western democracy but just about impossible in France. The vote was 475 for the government against only 100 negative votes. How did this happen? Well, it was the Assembly's answer to General de Gaulle's appeal to call him to power. What the Parliament said in effect today was this: No, to General de Gaulle. They rallied behind the Catholic prime minister, Pierre Pflimlin, and voted him special powers to deal with the situation in Algeria. This reporter was present at that vote - and rarely have I seen such a unanimity of opinion in the Parliament of France. For the first time in many a day the Communists voted for the government. I sat there and I watched the roly-poly Communist leader Jacques Duclos and say "We are voting for the government," and then he shook his fist at the deputies of France and he said "I want you to understand this, if there is any danger of a De Gaulle dictatorship, then there will be civil war in this country. What happened yesterday in our sporadic work stoppages was only a first warning, only a warning, as to what will come later if de Gaulle comes back." That is why the Communists are voting for France to save the Republic. The Prime Minister refused to accept the Communist votes. He made it perfectly clear that if he won his majority with their votes he would resign but he didn't have to resign. For even if you deduct the Communist votes he still comes up with a clear net majority of 325, more than half the House. Meanwhile, down in Algeria, the man to whom special powers have just been granted - the Commander-in-Chief, General Raoul Salan, delivered an address. The general's every word, every move is being watched attentively by the followers of General de Gaulle and by the government, for everybody wants to know exactly where General Salan stands. Well, after today's address, we know. He's standing on a high fence. He gave praise to General de Gaulle, paid tribute and homage to the liberator of France - but he said not a word about the general's call for power and he talked about the Republic and the necessity of maintaining it. That's the big question mark that hangs over France tonight. David Schoenbrun reporting. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The French National Assembly today gave Premier Pflimlin what amounted to a vote of confidence. Here is my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting from Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The government of France today won the biggest majority vote of the current legislature, an 80% majority, almost unheard of in any Western democracy but just about impossible in France. The vote was 475 for the government against only 100 negative votes. How did this happen? Well, it was the Assembly's answer to General de Gaulle's appeal to call him to power. What the Parlimment said in effect today was this: No, to General deGaulle. They rallied behind the Catholic prime minister, Pierre Pflimlin, and voted him special powers to deal with the situation in Algeria. This reporter was present at that vote - and rarely have I seen such a unanimity of opinion in the Parliament of France. For the first time in many a day the Communists voted for the government. I sat there and I watched the roly-poly Communist leader Jacques Duclos and say "We are voting for the government," and then he shook his fist at the deputies of France and he said, "I want you to understand this, if there is any danger of a de Gaulle dictatorship then there will be civil war in this country. What happened yesterday in our sporadic work stoppages was only a first warning, only a warning, as to what will come later if de Gaulle comes back." That is why the Communists are voting for France to save the Republic. The Prime Minister refused to accept the Communist votes. He made it perfectly clear that if he won his majority with their votes he would resign but he didn't have to resign. For even if you deduct the Communist votes he still comes up with a clear net majority of 325, more than half the House. Meanwhile, down in Algeria, the man to whom special powers have just been granted - the Commander-in-Chief, General Raoul Salan, delivered an address. The general's every word, every move is being watched attentively by the followers of General de Gaulle and by the government, for everybody wants to know exactly where General Salan stands. Well, after today's address, we know. He's standing on a high fence. He gave praise to General de Gaulle, paid tribute and homage to the liberator of France - but he said not a word about the general's call for power and he talked about the Republic and the necessity of maintaining it. That's the big question mark that hangs over France tonight. David Schoenbrun reporting. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles was asked about the French crisis today at his weekly news conference. Mr. Dulles said he hopes..and expects....with every American, that France will find a solution in keeping with its great tradition for freedom and democracy. It would be inappropriate, he said, for him to make any further comment. He said President Eisenhower may reply this week to Khrushchev's message...agreeing to technical talks on how to enforce a ban on nuclear weapons tests. Mr. Dulles accused the United Arab Republic of intervening in Lebanon on the side of the forces trying to overthrow its pro-Western government. He said the situation in Lebanon, as of now, does not warrant the sending of American troops. But the United States, he added, will not be deterred from doing what it thinks is right by any Soviet threats. (Mr. Dulles commented on the Eisenhower Doctrine, as it applies to Lebanon, and I should like to examine these remarks in a few minutes.)

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today ordered a full-scale study of the relations of the United States with Latin American countries. The investigation is to be carried out by a subcommittee headed by Democratic Senator Morse. And it is an outgrowth of the disorders which marked Vice President Nixon's South American tour. Another subcommittee will investigate American policy toward other countries such as Lebanon where there have been recent anti-American demonstrations.

Here in New York tonight, President Eisenhower will wake a major speech on the state of the American economy. There are strong indications, he will say, that the economic decline of recent months is slowing down...although "not all our troubles are over by any means." He will promise "certain decisions soon in the field of taxation," after consultation with congressional leaders. But News Secretary Hagerty says the decisions could be either for or against a tax cut. No decisions have been reached. Mr. Eisenhower will again urge business to tempt buyers with better values and to expand its industrial plant. As for wages and prices, he will say the American people are going to be "looking over the shoulders" of those sitting at the bargaining table, "to see whether the wage settlement and subsequent price decisions are consistent with a stable dollar." The future, he will say, "is bursting with vitality and promise. America is not going to stand still. America is going to grow." (The President's speech will be broadcast over most of these stations at 9:30 PM, Eastern Time.)

President Eisenhower began his day by signing legislation raising the pay of nearly all military personnel who have served more than two years.

The Army today announced the organization of a new, special force set up to deal with limited wars "and move promptly to potential trouble spots anywhere in the world." The force is composed initially of about 50-thousand men...and is known officially as the Strategic Army Corps. It includes two airborne divisions the 82nd and 101st---and the First and Fourth Infantry Divisions.

Twelve persons died today when a Capital Airlines plane and an Air National Guard jet trainer collided over Maryland. The airlines...bound from Chicago to Baltimore...with a stopover at Pittsburgh...carried seven passengers and a crew of four. The pilot of the jet trainer parachuted...and escaped with burns. His companion was killed. This is the fifth collision between military and civilian aircraft since 1949.

Last week the United States ordered 3,000 Marines who were slated to be relieved, to stay in the Mediterranean, thus doubling the number available for use. Then the Sixth Fleet sailed East, ostensibly to take part in maneuvers with the British, but making a show of Western power in a troubled area. We next airlifted defense weapons for police use in Lebanon at the request of the government. As violence increased in Lebanon, the United States sent eighteen big transport planes C 124's - to German bases. These could deliver light tanks promised to the Lebanese government, or evacuate Americans from Lebanon, or take troops there. On Saturday evening the State Department admitted that consideration was being given to the dispatch of troops, should President Chamoun of Lebanon ask for them because he could not guarantee the safety of American lives and property. On Saturday the Soviet government charged the West with interfering in internal affairs in Lebanon, and warned that these activities would lead to serious consequences for Lebanon and the Middle East. Today Secretary Dulles told his news conference that the United States is not barred by Soviet communist threats from doing its duty anywhere in the world. The United States, he said, has "plenty of authority" under the language of the Eisenhower doctrine to act to preserve Lebanon's independence and integrity if asked to do so.

It may have surprised some congressmen who voted for the Eisenhower resolution, to discover that it gives Mr. Dulles "plenty of authority" to use American forces in Lebanon at this time. There would be no question if the troubles there were due to "armed aggression by a country controlled by international communism." That is the precise wording of the Eisenhower doctrine. In the Congressional resolution were two introductory sentences before the doctrine was stated. One authorized the President to undertake military assistance programs. "Furthermore," the resolution went on to say, "the United States regards as vital to the national interest and world peace the preservation of the independence and integrity of the nations of the Middle East." This is the authority to which Mr. Dulles referred. But the resolution did not authorize the use of American forces without limitation. It proceeded to say: "To this end, the United States is prepared to use armed forces to assist any nation or group of nations requesting assistance against armed aggression from any country controlled by international communism."

Nobody attributes the troubles in Lebanon to armed aggression by a country under communist domination. The State Department doesn't, neither does the government of Lebanon. It is due to an involved tangle of difficulties, many of them domestic. Undoubtedly the United Arab Republic has agents at work stirring up and arming resistance to the Lebanese government. Undoubtedly Syrians have crossed the border to take part in the fighting. But at least half the population of Lebanon is Moslem and is opposed to President Chamoun's openly Western policy. So are certain Christain elements. This is an Arab nation, and probably half the population would favor some kind of association with the United Arab Republic.

Naturally the United States would like to save a pro-Western government in Beirut, and for it to fall would be a serious setback for this country. But it may be questioned that the Eisenhower doctrine was devised to keep friendly governments in the Middle East in office against strong internal opposition. And it is internal opposition more than anything else - and certainly not external aggression - that is threatening the Chamoun regime.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, a word from Ford.

COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Pflimlin govenment has received a virtual vote of confidence, making the return of General DeGaulle less likely than it was 24 hours ago. "Never," some one said, "underestimate the French talent for tinkering and patching up." And it was a master politician, Thomas Jefferson, who observed, very wisely..."The hole and the patch should be commensurate."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 21, 1958

This is the news:

Premier Pflimlin is sending the new commander of the French armed forces to Algiers...apparently in an effort to make sure that French military leaders there will support the Fourth Republic. / The commander is General Lorillot. Only last Saturday, he succeeded General Ely...who resigned. / A Reuters dispatch says that the conservative leader, Antoine Pinay, has offered to act as a mediator between Pflimlin and General DeGaulle to negotiate the terms under which DeGaulle would assume power. / Reuters says the offer has not been accepted. Paris tonight is reported much less tense.

In Algiers today, General Salan spoke from a balcony and said, "We will all go to the Champs-Elysees." / And the crowd shouted back, "DeGaulle to power"...Long live the Army!" / Salan has indicated support of DeGaulle in his speeches. / On the other hand, he has not committed himself against the Republic. Pflimlin said today, "Salan has never conducted himself in a manner disloyal to the Republic." (I should like to discuss this situation further, in a few minutes).

Today...in Beirut...President Chamoun of Lebanon told a news conference that he will "withstand every pressure." / He accused the United Arab Republic of "massively interfering" in the internal affairs of Lebanon, to secure the overthrow of his pro-Western government. / And today Lebanon complained of this "interference" to the council of the Arab League.

Russia offered today to sign a non-aggression pact with Italy. Italy will elect a new parliament on Sunday, and the Russian offer would appear to be timed to help the Italian Communists in that election.

Vice President Nixon told a National Press Club luncheon today that his South American tour will have been a success if it alerts people to the importance of Latin America, and the true nature of Communism. / United States diplomats, he said, should pay more attention to the students and labor leaders of Latin America...because, he said, "they are the wave of the future." (Mr. Nixon's talk will be rebroadcast over most of these CBS Radio stations tonight at 10:05, Eastern Time).

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has voted to restore 220-million of the 339-million dollars cut from President Eisenhower's foreign aid program by the House. The money put back in the authorization bill would go for military assistance and defense support. The committee also wrote in a provision...expressing the view of Congress that this country should help India complete its current economic development program.

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a compromise bill that would extend the reciprocal trade program for five years. The measure embodies most of what President Eisenhower asked for. However, as rewritten, ~~Congress would be able to vote any refusal by~~ the President ~~to~~ Refuses higher import duties recommended by the Tariff Commission. Congress can overide him. The measure now goes to the House floor.

The bill to grant statehood to Alaska is also going to the House floor because of a ruling by Speaker Sam Rayburn. Rayburn overruled opponents of Alaskan statehood, who argued that the measure would have to go first to the House Rules Committee. The House then voted 217 to 172 to by-pass the committee.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a compromise bill to raise postal rates. The cost of mailing a First Class letter out of town would be increased to four cents, effective August first. Second and Third Class rates would also be raised. And half a million Post Office workers are due to get a pay raise, amounting to 265-million dollars a year. For most postal workers, this amounts to a raise of about 10 percent...retroactive to the first of the year.

The House Education Committee became deadlocked today on a measure that would have provided one and a half billion dollars for new schools. In two votes...which were tied 15-to-15...the committee was unable either to approve the measure, or send it back to a subcommittee for further study. The Administration introduced the bill last year, then abandoned it in favor of other legislation for accelerating the science education program. Democratic Representative Thompson of New Jersey tried to revive the measure. He concedes it is now dead so far as this session of Congress is concerned.

Final returns in the Pennsylvania primary show that Harold Stassen failed to win the Republican nomination for governor by more than 230-thousand votes. In conceding defeat today to businessman Arthur McGonigle, the Republican organization candidate, Stassen said, "I will continue my life-long devotion to public service and the Republican Party." His immediate plans call for continuing the practice of law.

In Miami Beach, the annual Governors Conference ended today with assurance from the Army chief of staff...General Taylor...that the Army has given up the plan to drop six National Guard divisions. However, Secretary of DEFENSE McElroy refused to commit the Administration, as to, maintaining the National Guard at the numerical strength of 400-thousand men. The governors passed a resolution which would have President Eisenhower work out a new bipartisan anti-recession program with leaders of Congress.

The director of the budget...Maurice Stans...told President Eisenhower today that federal spending in the 1960 fiscal year probably will climb to near 80-billion dollars. Spending in the current fiscal year ending June 30t is expected to run about 73-billion dollars.

In Indonesia...a rebel broadcast says the revolutionary government is ready to negotiate "a reasonable solution" to the Indonesian crisis. The broadcast was made by the leader of rebel forces in the North Celebes.

Edward R. Murrow: May 21, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

A sense of relief -- in France and in the Western World -- followed the vote of confidence given Premier Pflimlin by the French Assembly yesterday. It may have been human to feel that way, but it was highly irrational. / The fate of the Republic now lies with those who have the power. / What the Assembly voted Pflimlin was not power, but the phraseology of power. / The actual power is with the army. / Pflimlin is not exercising power against the army in Algeria, even though it is involved in open insurrection. / Instead, he entrusted his authority to General Salan, a man who continues to call for DeGaulle, and has refrained from openly pledging loyalty to the Paris government. / And Premier Pflimlin is sending to Algeria his new Chief of Staff, General Henri Lorillot. His mission, the news dispatches say, is not to discipline or depose the unruly and disloyal generals. / It is "to make peace with them."

If Pflimlin were to try to enforce discipline, the army could easily seize France, for it has that power. / It does not have all of the power there is, for French workers under Communist leadership also have some, and civil war might well result. That would depend on how Moscow decided to play the game. Moscow stands to gain from a DeGaulle government in the long run. But it may want to play safe, and order at least a token resistance against a facsimile of fascism. Civil war is what Pflimlin wants above all else to avoid. He wants to avoid it more than he wants to assert the power of the Republic over the army. General Salan and the other DeGaullist partisans in the army also want to avoid it. They want DeGaulle to come in without a shot being fired.

So Pflimlin and the army leaders are going through an elaborate make-believe. Pflimlin pretends he is exercising power when he hands it over to Salan, and Salan pretends he is a servant of the people when he wields it. The situation gives a sudden and tragic meaning to a wisecrack attributed to DeGaulle. He is said to have denied that he wanted a coup d'etat. "How could I" he asked, "when there is no state to overthrow?"

The DeGaulle conspiracy obviously was worked out to the last detail, from the dismissal of civil authorities in Algeria, the establishment of a Committee of Public Safety, the strident call of army leaders for DeGaulle, to DeGaulle's emergence with his remarkably temperate bid for power. He wants a lot of power, he said, but he wants it legally. That is, his would be a sugar-coated dictatorship, the sweetening being a thin layer of legality.

Then if fighting resulted, it would be the communists who started it. That would allow him to pose as upholder of law and the Republic, and to seek approval of the anti-communist West for his personal brand of dictatorship.

What this would mean for the United States would be little less than catastrophic. DeGaulle has two strong dislikes in foreign policy. He dislikes NATO, and he dislikes France's isolation from Russia. If he comes into power he can give vent to both dislikes. He wouldn't necessarily smash NATO. He might remain in it, but still make it impotent by reducing French co-operation. He could refuse bases for intermediate missiles for NATO. He could paralyze the web of supply and communications for NATO forces that honeycomb most of French territory. He could reduce French manpower in NATO. He could build up France as an atomic power working independently of the West. And he could restore the Franco-Russian entente.

It is ironic that after the restoration of NATO unity at the Copenhagen meeting, the Western allies now are faced with the possibility of losing everything that NATO has stood for. And it is clear that if this comes to pass, the foreign policy of the United States will have to go through a re-appraisal far more agonizing than anything Mr. Dulles has previously conceived of. During the last days, with news of anti-American outbursts around the world, American concern has been chiefly over what was happening in Venezuela, Burma, Lebanon and Algeria. / But the implication of the events in France outweighs all of these troubles put together.

And the farther one looks down the road that seems to be opening, the more serious it becomes. If DeGaulle comes to power, he will not be there forever. [It would be asking too much of a Republic that could not keep him out, to overthrow him once he was in.] If he or his successor were to be overthrown, it probably would be by the communists. / And if that happened, the Kremlin would not only have realized its fondest dream of smashing the Western alliance, it would have all Europe in the palm of its hand.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

General DeGaulle has no fondness for NATO. And should he come to power, every member of the alliance...including the United States... would be less secure. None of us in these times is independent. "Independence?" said George Bernard Shaw. "That's middle-class blasphemy. We are all dependent on one another, every soul of us on earth."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Premier Pflimlin is sending the new commander of the French armed forces to Algiers...apparently in an effort to make sure that French military leaders there will support the Fourth Republic. The commander is General Lorillot. Only last Saturday, he succeeded General Ely...who resigned. A Reuters dispatch says that the conservative leader, Antoine Pinay, has offered to act as a mediator between Pflimlin and General DeGaulle to negotiate the terms under which DeGaulle would assume power. Reuters says the offer has not been accepted. Paris tonight is reported much less tense.

In Algiers today, General Salan spoke from a balcony and said, "We will all go to the Champs-Elysees." And the crowd shouted back, "DeGaulle to power"... Long live the Army!" Salan has indicated support of DeGaulle in his speeches. On the other hand, he has not committed himself against the Republic. Pflimlin said today, "Salan has never conducted himself in a manner disloyal to the Republic." (I should like to discuss this situation further in a few minutes."

Today...in Beirut...President Chamoun of Lebanon told a news conference that he will withstand every pressure." He accused the United Arab Republic of "massively interfering" in the internal affairs of Lebanon to secure the overthrow of his pro-Western government. And today Lebanon complained of this "interference" to the council of the Arab League.

Russia offered today to sign a non-aggression pact with Italy. Italy will elect a new parliament on Sunday, and the Russian offer would appear to be timed to help the Italian Communists in that election.

Vice President Nixon told a National Press Club luncheon today that his South American tour will have been a success if it alerts people to the importance of Latin America and the true nature of Communism. United States diplomats, he said, should pay more attention to the students and labor leaders of Latin America because, he said, "they are the wave of the future." (Mr. Nixon's talk will be rebroadcast over most of these CBS Radio stations tonight at 10:05, Eastern Time.)

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has voted to restore 220-million of the 339 million dollars cut from President Eisenhower's foreign aid program by the House. The money put back in the authorization bill would go for military assistance and defense support. The committee also wrote in a provision... expressing the view of Congress that this country should help India complete its current economic development program.

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved a compromise bill that would extend the reciprocal trade program for five years. The measure embodies most of what President Eisenhower asked for. However, as rewritten, if the President refuses higher import duties recommended by the Tariff Commission, Congress can override him. The measure now goes to the House floor.

The bill to grant statehood to Alaska is also going to the House floor because of a ruling by Speaker Sam Rayburn. Rayburn overruled opponents of Alaskan statehood, who argued that the measure would have to go first to the House Rules Committee. The House then voted 217 to 172 to by-pass the committee.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a compromise bill to raise postal rates. The cost of mailing a First Class letter out of town would be increased to four cents, effective August first. Second and Third Class rates would also be raised. And half a million Post Office workers are due to get a pay raise amounting to 265 million dollars a year. For most postal workers, this amounts to a raise of about 10 percent...retroactive to the first of the year.

The House Education Committee became deadlocked today on a measure that oould have provided one and a half billion dollars for new schools. In two votes... which were tied 15 to 15...the committee was unable either to approve the measure or send it back to a subcommittee for furtherstudy. The Administration introduced the bill last year, then abandoned it in favor of other legislation for accelerating the science education program. Democratic Representative Thompson of New Jersey tried to revive the measure. He concedes it is now dead so far as this session of Congress is concerned.

Final returns in the Pennsylvania primary show that Harold Stassen failed to win the Republican nomination for governor by more than 230 thousand votes. In conceding defeat today to businessman Arthur McGonigle, the Republican organization candidate, Stassen said, "I will continue my life-long devotion to public service and the Republican Party." His immediate plans call for continuing the practice of law.

In Miami Beach, the annual Governors Conference ended today with assurance from the Army chief of staff...General Taylor...that the Army has given up the plan to drop six National Guard divisions. However, Secretary of Defense McElroy refused to commit the Administration as to maintainingthe National Guard at the numerical strength of 400 thousand men. The governors passed a resolution which would have President Eisenhower work out a new bipartisan anti-recession program with leaders of Congress.

In Indonesia...a rebel broadcast says the revolutionary government is ready to negotiate "a reasonable solution" to the Indonesian crisis. The broadcast was made by the leader of rebel forces in the North Celebes.

A sense of relief - in France and in the Western World - followed the vote of confidence given Premier Pflimlin by the French Assembly yesterday. It may have been human to feel that way, but it was highly irrational. The fate of the Republic now lies with those who have the power. What the Assembly voted Pflimlin was not power, but the phraseology of power. The actual power is with the army. Pflimlin is not exercising power against the army in Algeria, even though it is involved in open insurrection. Instead, he entrusted his authority to General Salan, a man who continues to call for DeGaulle and has refrained from openly pledging loyalty to the Paris government. And Premier Pflimlin is sending to Algeria his new Chief of Staff, General Henri Lorillot. His mission, the news dispatches say, is not to discipline or depose the unruly and disloyal generals. It is "to make peace with them."

If Pflimlin were to try to enforce discipline, the army could easily seize France, for it has that power. It does not have all the power there is, for French workers under Communist leadership also have some, and civil war might well result. That would depend on how Moscow decided to play the game. Moscow stands to gain from a DeGaulle government in the long run. But it may want to play safe, and order at least a token resistance against a facsimile of fascism. Civil war is what Pflimlin wants above all else to avoid. He wants to avoid it more than he wants to assert the power of the Republic over the army. General Salan and the other DeGaullist partisans in the army also want to avoid it. They want DeGaulle to come in without a shot being fired.

So Pflimlin and the army leaders are going through an elaborate make-believe. Pflimlin pretends he is exercising power when he hands it over to Salan, and Salan pretends he is a servant of the people when he wields it. The situation gives a sudden and tragic meaning to a wisecrack attributed to DeGaulle. He is said to have denied that he wanted a coup d'etat. "How could I" he asked, "when there is no state to overthrow?"

The DeGuulle consipiracy obviously was worked out to the last detail, from the dismissal of civil authorities in Algeria, the establishment of a Committee of Public Safety, the strident call of army leaders for DeGaulle, to DeGaulle's emergence with his remarkablytemperate bid for power. He wants a lot of power, he said, but he wants it legally. That is, his would be a sugar-coated dictatorship, the sweetening being a thin layer of legality. Then if fighting resulted, it would be the communists who started it. That would allow him to pose as upholder of law and the Republic, and to seek approval of the anti-communist West for his personal brand of dictatorship.

What this would mean for the United States would be little less than catastrophic. DeGaulle has two strong dislikes in foreign policy. He dislikes NATO, and he dislikes France's isolation from Russia. If he comes into power he can give vent to both dislikes. He wouldn't necessarily smash NATO. He might remain it it, but still make it impotent by reducing French co-operation. He could refuse bases for intermediate missiles for NATO. He could paralyze the web of supply and communications for NATO forces that honeycomb most of French territory. He could reduce French manpower in NATO. He could build up France as an atomic power working independently of the West. And he could restore the Franco-Russian entente.

It is ironic that after the restoration of NATO unity at the Copenhagen meeting, the Western allies now are faced with the possibility of losing everything that NATO has stood for. And it is clear that if this comes to pass, the foreign policy of the United States will have to go through a re-appraisal far more agonizing than anything Mr. Dulles has previously conceived of. During the last days, with news of anti-American outbursts around the world, American concern has been chiefly over what was happening in Venezuela, Burma, Lebanon and Algeria. But the implication of the events in France outweighs all of these troubles put together.

And the farther one looks down the road that seems to be opening, the more serious it becomes. If DeGaulle comes to power, he will not be there forever. It would be asking too much of a Republic that could not keep him out, to overthrow him once he was in. If he or his successor were to be overthrown, it probably would be by the communists. And if that happened, the Kremlin would not only have realized its fondest dream of smashing the Western alliance, it would have all Europe in the palm of its hand.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now, Here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General DeGaulle has no fondness for NATO. And should he come to power, every member of the alliance...including the United States would be less secure. None of us in these times is independent. "Independence?" said George Bernard Shaw. "That's middle-class blasphemy. We are all dependent on one another, every soul of us on earth."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 22, 1958

This is the news:

The French cabinet today approved a series of constitutional amendments designed to strengthen...and make more stable...the French form of government. Under one of the reforms, it would be impossible for the National Assembly to vote a prime minister out of office unless it could first agree on a program of its own...and a new prime minister who would carry out that program. These amendments...proposed by the Pflimlin government... must still be approved by parliament. Premier Pflimlin has made their adoption an issue of confidence, and a confidence vote may come in the National Assembly next week. If Pflimlin loses that test, it will mean the fall of his government. If his government falls, President Coty could ask General DeGaulle to assume power.

→

The conservative leader, Antoine Pinay, drove to General DeGaulle's country residence today...150 miles from Paris...and talked with him for an hour and a half. The reports were that Pinay would try to get DeGaulle to mediate the differences between the Pflimlin government and the pro-DeGaulle leaders in Algiers. Pinay has not announced the outcome of his conversation. Sources in Paris who are close to DeGaulle say the general would not mediate.

In Algeria today, there were new exortations for General DeGaulle to take over the government. Jacques Soustelle and General Salan made speeches praising DeGaulle and reaffirming their intention to keep Algeria French. Soustelle...who was once governor-general of Algeria...said, "There will be no intervention." "For the past nine days," he said, "we have been taking part in an overwhelming movement of insurrection, which France has not known since the days of 1789."

The French situation was further complicated today when fighting broke out between French colonial forces and Tunisian troops. The incident occurred in Southern Tunisia, at the Gafsa airstrip...where the French have been basing some of their aircraft. / President Bourguiba said today that four French planes took off from the airfield..and that one of the planes dropped a bomb. / The French embassy in Tunis denied that any bomb was dropped. / It said the Tunisians had tried to keep the planes from leaving, and that there was gunfire which lasted two and a half hours. The fighting, it said, was between French air force guards and Tunisian national guardsmen. / Bourguiba again called for the evacuation of French troops from Tunisian soil.

Lebanon decided today to take its complaint of "massive interference" by the United Arab Republic to the United Nations Security Council. / The action was decided on at a meeting of the Lebanese cabinet. / For two weeks, the pro-Western government of Lebanon has been rocked by violence, which it accuses the United Arab Republic...made up of Egypt and Syria...of fomenting. / There was new fighting in Lebanon today between government and rebel forces. / And a bomb exploded in a bazaar in Beirut, killing one person and wounding four others.

In London, the Bank of England today announced another cut in its official interest rate---from six to five and one-half percent. / Until March 20, the bank rate had been seven percent. The Bank of England said it could make the further reduction "because speculative pressure against the pound sterling had ceased." / ~~Reserves of sterling have continued to increase in the last two months.~~

The cost of living in this country climbed last month to a new record high. / The commissioner of labor statistics, Ewan Clague, says the entire increase of two-tenths of one percent can be attributed to the higher cost of food, with all other items balancing out. He said the cost-of-living index "may move up a little more by summer"...but that after that food prices are expected to decline.

→

Congress completed action today on a bill...raising the cost of mailing a First Class letter to four cents. Second and Third Class rates also would be raised, and half a million postal workers are due for higher pay. House approval was unanimous, following passage yesterday in the Senate.

The Senate Finance Committee today approved the [redacted] bill to extend unemployment insurance payments up to 50 percent. Secretary of Labor Mitchell told Congress today that while we probably have reached the bottom of the recession, unemployment normally goes up this time of year.

President Eisenhower today ordered an emergency program for eliminating air collisions "to the maximum degree possible." There have been five collisions between commercial airliners and military aircraft in recent months; the pilot of a Capital Airlines plane reports that a jet bomber narrowly missed hitting his aircraft over Ohio last night. The President...after conferring with members of Congress...ordered five safety precautions [redacted] taken at the earliest possible time. He directed that jet pilots...making proficiency flights...stay off civilian airways; that jet planes...making cross-country flights...be required to file flight plans in advance with the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and that all jets flown by students on civilian airways must be under Instrument Flight Rules, rather than Visual Flight Rules, regardless of weather. Operational flights...as distinguished from training flights...made on civilian airways must also be conducted under Instrument Flight Rules and civilian control. And if jet aircraft want to change to a lower altitude, they must do it off the routes used by the airlines. The White House instructed the Civil Aeronautics Administration...and any other federal agencies which may be involved...to see that this emergency program is put in effect.

→

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted tentatively today, to restore all of the 339-million dollars cut from President Eisenhower's foreign aid program by the House. / The action raises the total authorization for the program to 3-billion, 950-million dollars.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland told a news conference today that Vice President Nixon is the "only major candidate for President on the Republican ticket." / Knowland said he does not "tie in" the events of Mr. Nixon's South American tour with the presidency and 1960. / He said that if the United States had helped Latin America as much as Yugoslavia, "we would be a lot better off."

Six persons were killed and at least 60 wounded today in a riot in Panama. / Dispatches from Panama say that National Guardsmen opened fire when a student demonstration...protesting school conditions...appeared to be taken over by "hoodlums". / The Panama government blamed the casualties on its political enemies...and said the clash was provoked by unpatriotic elements. / Panama tonight is in a state of siege.

An agreement...whereby the United States will sell surplus rice to Indonesia...was signed today in Jakarta. / The foreign minister of Indonesia called the agreement "the start of a new understanding between our two countries." He had charged...recently...that American "soldiers of fortune" were fighting on the rebel side in Indonesia.

→

In Washington today, the State Department said it is now authorizing the sale and shipment of small arms to the Indonesian government.

Early returns in the Japanese parliamentary election show the pro-Western party of Prime Minister Kishi leading. However, none of the early returns are from the large cities, where the opposition Socialist Party is believed to have it greatest strength. Kishi himself has been re-elected to his seat in the lower house. And his party is expected to win---although with a possibly smaller majority.

The keel of America's first nuclear-powered merchant ship was laid today at Camden, New Jersey. / Mrs. Richard Nixon, wife of the Vice President, attended the ceremonies. / She said the new ship...called the Savannah... is "another way in which the United States can extend the hand of friendship to the rest of the world." When completed, it will be able to carry sixty passengers and 95-hundred tons of cargo at a speed of 20 and a half knots. It will have to be refueled only once every [illegible] 300-thousand miles.

Seven Nike missiles exploded today at a guided missile base in Middletown, New Jersey. / Army officials say that at least seven...and possibly ten...persons were killed. / There were civilian EMPLOYES as well as enlisted men among the dead. / An Army spokesman says one of the anti-aircraft missiles exploded...and then set off six others in a chain reaction. / He says the missiles were not mounted with atomic warheads and that there is no danger from radiation. / The Nike base at Middletown is one of a series of such installations guarding New York City from air attack.

Now Here is Dick Hallet who has been Covering the Governors Conference in Miami Beach.

Word for Today

who wants to be Chief of the Free World—

General DeGaulle expressed his innermost feelings long ago, in public print. Writing in his memoirs, he said: "To take action on one's own responsibility...to want no mark upon it but one's own...to face destiny alone---this is the harsh, exclusive passion of a Chief."

Goodnight and good luck!

Back in a moment—

Joan Bryan—

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, May 22, 1958
6:45 - 7:00 P. M. EDT

MURROW: Now, here is Dick Hottlett who has been covering the Governor's Conference in Miami Beach.

HOTTLETT: The Governor's of the State's and territories have just spent 3-days at the 50th annual Governor's Conference. It was historic in that respect at least. A reporter who watched the proceedings and the results looking for rising stars in American politics and a fresh point of view on the great issues facing the country comes home with an empty notebook. If there was one problem directly concerning the governor's, it was that of regaining for the State's some of the responsibility that has drifted to the Federal government. Committee's meeting for the past year had sketched out some modest but concrete action. They advocated that the State's completely control and pay for two programs; vocational training and municipal sewage treatment. But, at Miami Beach, the Governor's could not get together on the financing. They could not agree at all on problems like unemployment compensation and the economic recession. The differences between the States - their standards and their incomes broke them up into shifting clusters of special interest and they merely be-moaned the fact that State Government is being squeezed out as the cities stake their problems straight to the Federal Government.

Some top domestic issues like Civil Rights and Labor legislation never came up at all. Civil Rights was just to hot to handle. As for foreign affairs, only in terms of national defense did the Governor's look out at the world and then - not very hard. Secretary of Defense James McElroy warned them bluntly, that within the next 2-years or less the Soviets would have the capability to hit us with long range rockets of appaling destructiveness, only intense effort by the United States would close the gap he said, and stressing the need for cutting down the fantastic cost of modern weapon systems wherever possible, he warned that if this were not done, the entire American economy would sooner or later have to be controlled. Came question time, however, and the governor's were interested in nothing but the national guard, keeping it at present strength and in the hands of the States. They argued this point at length with passion and with every metaphor at their disposal. Under the circumstances, said Governor Holmes of Oregon, "when both are economic and diplomatic slips are showing, we certainly need to keep our powder dry." In words at least, the Governor's Conference was rich.

Now, back to ED MURROW.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The French cabinet today approved a series of constitutional amendments designed to strengthen...and make more stable...the French form of government. Under one of the reforms, it would be impossible tor the National Assembly to vote a prime minister out of office unless it could first agree on a program of its own...and a new prime minister who would carry out that program. These amendments proposed by the Pflimlin government must still be approved by parliament. Premier Pflimlin has made their adoption an issue of confidence, and a confidence vote may come in the National Assembly next week. If Pflimlin loses that test, it will mean the fall of his government. If his government falls, President Coty could ask General DeGaulle to assume power.

The conservative leader, Antoine Pinay, drove to General DeGaulle's country residence today...150 miles from Paris...and talked with him for an hour and a half. The reports were that Pinay would try to get DeGaulle to mediate the differences between the Pflimlin government and the pro-DeGaulle leaders in Algiers. Pinay has not announced the outcome of his conversation. Sources in Paris who are close to DeGaulle say the general would not mediate.

In Algeria today, there were new exortations for General DeGaulle to take over the government. Jacques Soustelle and General Salan made speeches praising DeGaulle and reaffirming their intention to keep Algeria French. Soustelle....who was once governor-general of Algeria...said, "There will be no intervention." "For the past nine days," he said, "we have been taking part in an overwhelming movement of insurrection, which France has not known since the days of 1789."

The French situation was further complicated today when fighting broke out between French colonial forces and Tunisian troops. The incident occurred in Southern Tunisia, at the Gafsa airstrip...where the French have been basing some of their aircraft. President Bourguiba said today that four French planes took off from the airfield..and that one of the planes dropped a bomb. The French embassy in Tunis denied that any bomb was dropped. It said the Tunisians had tried to keep the planes from leaving and that there was gunfire which lasted two and a half hours. The fighting, it said, was between French air force guards and Tunisian national guardsmen. Bourguiba again called for the evacuation of French troops from Tunisian soil.

Lebanon decided today to take its complaint of "massive interference" by the United Arab Republic to the United Nations Security Council. The action was decided on at a meeting of the Lebanese cabinet. For two weeks, the pro-Western government of Lebanon has been rocked by violence, which it accuses the United Arab Republic...made up of Egypt and Syria...of fomenting. There was new fighting in Lebanon today between government and rebel forces. And a bomb exploded in a bazaar in Beirut, killing one person and wounding four others.

In London, the Bank of England today announced another cut in its official interest rate---from six to five and one-half percent. Until March 20, the bank rate had been seven percent. The Bank of England said it could make the further reduction "because speculative pressure against the pound sterling had ceased."

The cost of living in this country climbed last month to a new record high. The commissioner of labor statistics, Ewan Clague, says the entire increase of two-tenths of one percent can be attributed to the higher cost of food, with all other items blaancing out. He said the cost-of-living index "may move up a little more by summer"...but that after that, food prices are expected to decline.

Congress completed action today on a bill...raising the cost of mailing a First Class letter to four cents. Second and Third Class rates also will be raised, and half a million postal workers are due for higher pay. House approval was unanimous, following passage yesterday in the Senate.

The Senate Finance Committee today approved the bill to extend unemployment insurance payments up to 50 percent. Secretary of Labor Mitchell told Congress today that while we probably have reached the bottom of the recession, unemployment normally goes up this time of year.

President Eisenhower today ordered an emergency program for eliminating air collisions "to the maximum degree possible." There have been five collisions between commercial airliners and military aircraft in recent months; the pilot of a Capital Airlines plane reports that a jet bomber narrowly missed hitting his aircraft over Ohio last night. The President..after conferring with members of Congress...ordered five safety precautions taken at the earliest possible time. He directed that jet pilots...making proficiency flights...stay off civilian airways; that jet planes...making cross-county flights...be required to file flight plans in advance with the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and that all jets flown by students on civilian airways must be under Instrument Flight Rules, rather than Visual Flight Rules, regardless of weather. Operational flights...as distinguished from training flights...made on civilian airways must also be conducted under Instrument Flight Rules and civilian control. And if jet aircraft want to change to a lower altitude, they must do it off the routes used by the airlines. The White House instructed the Civil Aeronautics Administration...and any other federal agencies which may be involved...to see that this emergency program is put in effect.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted tentatively today to restore all of the 339 million dollars cut from President Eisenhower's foreign aid program by the House. The action raises the total authorization for the program to 3-billion, 950 million dollars.

Six persons were killed and at least 60 wounded today in a riot in Panama. Dispatches from Panama say that National Guardsmen opened fire when a student demonstration...protesting school conditions...appeared to be taken over by "hoodlums." Panama tonight is in a state of siege.

An agreement...whereby the United States will sell surplus rice to Indonesia...was signed today in Jakarta. The foreign minister of Indonesia called the agreement "the start of a new understanding between our two countries." He had charged...recently...that American "soldiers of fortune" were fighting on the rebel side in Indonesia.

In Washington today, the State Department said it is now authorizing the sale and shipment of small arms to the Indonesian government.

Early returns in the Japanese parliamentary election show the pro-Western party of Prime Minister Kishi leading. However, none of the early returns are from the large cities, where the opposition Socialist Party is believed to have its greatest strength.

The keel of America's first nuclear-powered merchant ship was laid today at Camden, New Jersey. Mrs. Richard Nixon, wife of the Vice President, attended the ceremonies. She said the new ship...called the Savannah...is "another way in which the United States can extend the hand of friendship to the rest of the world."

Seven Nike missiles exploded today at a guided missile base in Middletown, New Jersey. Army officials say that at least seven...and possibly ten... persons were killed. There were civilian employees as well as enlisted men among the dead. An Army spokesman says one of the anti-aircraft missiles exploded... and then set off six others in a chain reaction. He says the missiles were not mounted with atomic warheads and that there is no danger from radiation.

Now, here is Dick Hottelet who has been covering the Governors' Conference in Miami Beach.

HOTTELET: The governors of the states and territories have just spent three days at the 50th annual Governors' Conference. It was historic in that respect at least.

A reporter who watched the proceedings and the results looking for rising stars in American politics and a fresh point of view on the great issues facing the country comes home with an empty notebook. If there was one problem directly concerning the governors, it was that of regaining for the states some of the responsibility that has drifted to the federal government. Committees meeting for the past year had sketched out some modest but concrete action. They advocated that the states completely control and pay for two programs; vocational training and municipal sewage treatment. But, at Miami Beach, the governmors could not get together on the financing. They could not agree at all on problems like unemployment compensation and the economic recession. The differences between the states - their standards and their incomes broke them up into shifting cloisters of special interest and they merely bemoaned the fact that state government is being squeezed out as the cities take their problems straight to the federal government.

Some top domestic issues like civil rights and labor legislation never came up at all. Civil rights was just too hot to handle. As for foreign affairs, only in terms of national defense did the governors look out at the world and then - not very hard. Secretary of Defense, James McElroy warned them bluntly, that within the next 2 years or less the Soviets would have the capability to hit us with long range rockets of appaling destructiveness. Only intense effort by the United States would close the gap, he said, and stressing the need for cutting down the fantastic cost of modern weapon systems wherever possible, he warned that if this were not done, the entire American economy would sooner or later have to be controlled. Came question time, however, and the governors were interested in nothing but the national guard, keeping it at present strength and in the hands of the states. They argued this point at length with passion and with every metaphor at their disposal. Under the circumstances, said Governor Holmes of Oregon, "when both our economic and diplomatic slips are showing, we certainly need to keep our powder dry." In words at least, the Governors' Conference was rich.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General DeGaulle who wants to be chief of the French government expressed his innermost feelings long ago, in public print. Writing in his memoirs, he said, "To take action on one's own responsibility...to want no mark upon it but one's own...to face destiny alone---this is the harsh, exclusive passion of a Chief."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 23, 1958

This is the news:

An "all-Algeria" Committee of Public Safety was set up today in Algiers. The committee will serve, in effect, as a separate revolutionary government. It was formed with the help of General Salan, the principal military and civilian authority in Algeria. / And its co-chairmen...or co-presidents... are General Massu, the paratroop commander who took control in Algiers on May 13, and Cherif Sid Cara, a Moslem politician who was secretary of state for Algeria in the Gaillard cabinet. / Until today, General Salan seemed to be straddling the fence. But this morning he signed the papers incorporating the revolutionary committee. / The committee was formed, he said, "to make it possible to set up a government of public safety presided over by General DeGaulle." / And the committee issued a communique, saying it was "resolved" to establish a DeGaulle government in Metropolitan France. / Such a government, it said, would have for its purpose the promotion and defense of "a far-reaching reform of the institutions of the French Republic." / The communique called on all Frenchmen...in all the French territories, including Madagascar and French Equitorial Africa... to set up similar committees, for supporting the return of DeGaulle.

→

In Paris, the Socialist and center parties announced they were setting up their own "Committee for National Action and Defense of the Republic" in an apparent counter-move to the committee in North Africa. In a broadcast today to the French people, Premier Pflimlin said, "We want passionately to avoid a rupture between France and Algeria. We want to save public liberties." / He said changes must be made to give France a more stable form of government. / But the changes, he warned, "must be made in an orderly fashion." / It would be "inadmissable" for a fraction of the nation to impose its will on the whole. / He did not mention DeGaulle by name, nor the Gaullist supporters in Algiers. Pflimlin said he was staking the life of his government on his reform bill. / He said, "Our aim is simple.

→

It consists of giving the government of the Republic authority and length of life." The National Assembly will vote on the measure next week.

The complaint of Lebanon against the United Arab Republic probably will be taken up by the United Nations Security Council on Tuesday. Lebanon accuses the republic...made up of Egypt and Syria...of "massive interference" in its internal affairs, by seeking the overthrow of its pro-Western government. American Ambassador Lodge said today that the United States "has a lot of sympathy" for the Lebanese complaint. Cairo reports say a "popular" government...independent of the government in Beirut...has been formed in Southern Lebanon.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today voted a total authorization of 3-billion, 707-million dollars for foreign aid. This is 235-million dollars less than President Eisenhower asked for...but a hundred million dollars more than was voted by the House. The committee wrote into the bill a provision enabling the President...if he deems it in the best interests of the United States...to send economic aid to Communist countries like Poland and Hungary. The only exceptions would be Russia, Red China and North Korea.

The House Armed Services Committee issued a report today...saying it can make no further concessions to President Eisenhower in drafting legislation for reorganizing the Defense Department.

And the House Space Committee accused the Administration of "pinching pennies" on civilian space research. It will take a "genuine" mobilization on a national scale, it said, to catch up with the Russians in this field. The committee issued the warning in approving the creation of a civilian agency for supervising all non-military space projects.

The Army today suspended all modification work on Nike missiles throughout the country...as the result of the accidental explosion of eight of the missiles yesterday near Middletown, New Jersey, in which ten persons died. The cause of the accident has not been determined, but the missiles at the New Jersey base were in the process of being modified to improve performance.

In the interst of air safety, the military services have agreed to limit the number of jet flights below 20-thousand feet. This was announced by the White House tonight.

And the Labor Department announces tonight that the number of jobless persons drawing unemployment benefits dropped by more than 93-thousand in the week ending May 10th. This is the biggest drop [redacted] to occur in one week since August, 1956.

→

President Frondizi of Argentina said today that the Argentine Navy on Wednesday attacked...and perhaps sank...an unidentified submarine. He said the submarine was sighted in the territorial waters of Argentina and that it was attacked with depth charges by four destroyers. An oil slick appeared on the surface, he said, after the attack. In Washington, the Navy says no United States submarine was in the area.

Returns in the Japanese parliamentary election show the conservative pro-Western party of Prime Minister Kishi returned to power. He will, however, have a slightly smaller majority. The opposition Socialist Party gained eight seats. Within his own party, Kishi lost influence since fewer candidates supporting him were elected.

President Eisenhower went to Gettysburg today by helicopter...flying for the first time direct from the south lawn of the White House to his farm. This afternoon, he got in a round of golf.

Edward R. Murrow: May 23, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

David Schoenbrun, chief of our Paris bureau, flew in today. He recently published an excellent book, called: "As France Goes". David, which way is France going?

2) Would you say that the army in metropolitan France supports DeGaulle?

3) What are the steps required for him to come to power legally?

WHAT IS YOUR GUESS THAT DE GAULLE WILL COME TO POWER?

4) ~~Various groups in Algeria are today asking their fellow citizens in France to set up committees of public safety. Is this likely to happen?~~

50

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

Premier Pflimlin has made a radio appeal to the French people for their support. / But he still refrains from denouncing what amounts to insurrection across the Mediterranean in North Africa. / A remark Charles Kingsley once made comes to mind in this connection. "There are more ways of killing a cat," he said, "than choking her with cream."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M. EDT

MURROW: David Schoenbrun, chief of our Paris bureau and an authentic expert on France flew in today. He recently published an excellent book called "As France Goes." David, welcome home and which way is France going?

SCHOENBRUN: At the moment it seems to be going to pieces. And, indded it is. As you know, Algeria is now in a state of succession. They've set up what amounts to a revolutionary government there and in Paris the Government is holding on just by a very narrow threat indeed. This may in the long run, however, prove to be a pretty good thing. Even You and I have talked over the years about what's been happening to the Fourth Republic, how its evaded making decisions, how the state has been withering away - not in a Marxist sense, but in a French sense of failing to make a decision. I think whatever happens now - whether de Gaulle comes to power or the government holds on, we're going to see a different kind of governmental procedure in France. It's no longer true as the French used to say, "that the more things change, the more they stay the same." It won't be the same from now on in.

MURROW: David, it is quite clear that the Army - or at least a majority of it in Algeria supports de Gaulle. Would you say that the Army in metropalitan France also supports him or is the Army divided too?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, Ed, let's first examine the word "Army." The Army of France is a Republican army, the bulk of that Army is made up of draftees who are boys from Communists, Socialists, Catholic homes, who are faithful to their country and I would say that the Army is faithful to the Republic. If, however, you mean, the professional class of officer, and I think you do, there, I think that they are not faithful to the Republic, for the simple reason, that they say, and I think that right, the Republic just hasn't existed. How can you be true or loyal to something which simply isn't there? In that respect I think the superior officers in France like those in Algeria are ready to go along with somebody who can recapture the prestige, the integrity, the grandeur that once was France.

MURROW: Now, David, spell it out for us in simple terms. Will you? What are the steps required for General de Gaulle to come to power legally?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, that is simple Ed. It's not complicated at all. Either the Government resigns and the President of the Republic call de Gaulle in or the government is thrown out of office and the President calls de Gaulle in. So, the open door for de Gaulle is dependent upon a vacation of power in Paris. Now, it gets complicated because Mr. de Gaulle in his mystical fashion has said, exceptional circumstances require exceptional procedures. And, he will not go through the normal procedure of walking into Parliament in a democratic manner presenting his program, letting it be debated and then asking the Deputies to vote for him. De Gaulle has not said what he means by exceptional procedures, so I cannot give you a simple answer. I can make a guess I think based upon history and of personal knowledge of Mr. de Gaulle. He wants to do something like Prince Louis Napoleon and have a legal coup d'etat - that is, to say to Parliament, "alright fella's - now, you've messed things up - you want me to clean the mess up for me, give me two-years in office, no questions asked, go on vacation and I'll clear up the mess." That's what he wants to do if he's called in, that's the way he's gonna do it.

MURROW: Well, David, neither one of us have done much guessing - at least in public during the past few years, but is it your guess that de Gaulle will come to power?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, as of tonight, I would say yes. But, I've seen so many miracles in France and this Prime Minister Pierre Pflimlin is such a courageous man , he's been fighting so hard. He just might pull it off you know. If it were up to Pflimlin alone and the Democratic Center Parties, I think they could pull it off. However, the Right Wing in Franc e, which has been described by French politicians as the stupidist Right Wing in the entire world may just pull the hatch, and down the drain goes the Fourth Republic. And, if so, de Gaulle will come in. Based upon what's happening this very minute now, I would say de Gaulle is very close and if the Republic is not dead - it's as close to being dead as you can come and still be alive.

MURROW: David, let's do a little more prognosticating here. If de Gaulle should come to power, what in general terms would be his policy?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, Ed you know he says that NATO is an American protectorate that doesn't even have the virtue of protecting of France. You also remember, when you and I were working overseas together how de Gaulle behaved during the war, your friend Sir Winston Churchill used tosay, "of all the crosses that I've had to bear - the heaviest has been the Cross of Lorraine." You recall too, shortly after the liberation of France, the first thing that General de Gaulle did, was to get into an airplane and fly to Moscow, try to make a deal with the Russians. This fella's going to play a lone hand if he comes to power, he's going to play an aristocratic haughty-French version of Nasserism, positive neutrality working both sides against the middle for the greater glory of what he conceives to be the destiny of France, the 14th Century destiny of Joan of Arc You remember what Franklin Roosevelt said at the Casablanca conference, Ed when he wrote, I think a letter to John and he said "It's hard to deal with this fella cause he thinks he's Joan of Arc and he hears voices and how can you talk to a fella whose listening to somebody else's voice." Look for trouble.

MURROW: Thank you very much, David Schoenbrun.

And, while we have a few seconds left, let me thank you also for your reports on this program over the last ten days and indeed over the last ten years.

SCHOENBRUN: Thanks for the seize.

MURROW: (laughter) Thank you David. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now, here is George Bryan.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

An "all-Algeria" Committee of Public Safety was set up today in Algiers. The committee will serve, in effect, as a separate revolutionary government. It was formed with the help of General Salan, the principal military and civilian authority in Algeria. And its co-chairman...or co-presidents...are General Massu, the paratroop commander, who took control in Algiers on May 13, and Cherif Sid Cara, a Moslem politician who was secretary of state for Algeria in the Gaillard cabinet. Until today, General Salan seemed to be straddling the fence. But this morning he signed the papers incorporating the revolutionary committee. The committee was formed, he said, "to make it possible to set up a government of public safety presided over by General DeGaulle." And the committee issued a communique saying it was "resolved" to establish a DeGaulle government in Metropolitan France. Such a government, it said, would have for its purpose, the promotion and defense of "a far-reaching reform of the institutions of the French Republic." The communique called on all Frenchmen...in all the French territories including Madagascar and French Equitorial Africa...to set up similar committees for supporting the return of De Gaulle.

In Paris, the Socialist and center parties announced they were setting up their own "Committee for National Action and Defense of the Republic" in an apparent counter-move to the committee in North Africa. In a broadcast today to the French people, Premier Pflimlin said, "We want passionately to avoid a rupture between France and Algeria. We want to save public liberties." He said changes must be made to give France a more stable form of government. But the changes, he warned, must be made in an orderly fashion." It would be "inadmissable" for a fraction of the nation to impose its will on the whole. He did not mention DeGaulle by name nor the Gaullist supporters in Algiers. Pflimlin said he was staking the life of his government on his reform bill. He said, "Our aim is simple.

It consists of giving the government of the Republic authority and length of life." The National Assembly will vote on the measure next week.

The complaint of Lebanon against the United Arab Republic probably will be taken up by the United Nations Security Council on Tuesday. Lebanon accuses the republic...made up of Egypt and Syria...of "massive interference" in its internal affairs, by seeking the overthrow of its pro-Western government. American Ambassador Lodge said today that the United States "has a lot of sympathy" for the Lebanese complaint. Cairo reports say a "popular" government...independent of the government in Beirut...has been formed in Southern Lebanon.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today voted a total authorization of 3-billion, 707 million dollars for foreign aid. This is 235 million dollars less than President Eisenhower asked for...but a hundred million dollars more than was voted by the House. The committee wrote into the bill a provision enabling the President...if he deems it in the best interest of the United States...to send economic aid to Communist countries like Poland and Hungary. The only exceptions would be Russia, Red China and North Korea.

The House Armed Services Committee issued a report today...saying it can make no further concessions to President Eisenhower in drafting legislation for reorganizing the Defense Department.

And the House Space Committee accused the Administration of "pinching pennies" on civilian space research. It will take a "genuine" mobilization on a national scale, it said, to catch up with the Russians in this field. The committee issued the warning in approving the creation of a civilian agency for supervising all non-military space projects.

The Army today suspended all modification work on Nike missiles throughout the country...as the result of the accidental explosion of eight of the missiles yesterday near Middletown, New Jersey, in which ten persons died. The cause of the accident has not been determined, but the missiles at the New Jersey base were in the process of being modified to improve performance.

In the interest of air safety, the military services have agreed to limit the number of jet flights below 20-thousand feet. This was announced by the White House tonight.

And the Labor Department announces tonight that the number of jobless persons drawing unemployment benefits dropped by more than 93 thousand in the week ending May 10th. This is the biggest drop to occur in one week since August, 1956.

President Frondizi of Argentina said today that the Argentine Navy on Wednesday attacked...and perhaps sank...an unidentified submarine. He said the submarine was sighted in the territorial waters of Argentina and that it was attacked with depth charges by four destroyers. An oil slick appeared on the surface, he said, after the attack. In Washington, the Navy says no United States submarine was in the area.

Returns in the Japanese parliamentary election show the conservative pro-Western party of Prime Minister Kishi returned to power. He will, however, have a slightly smaller majority. The opposition Socialist Party gained eight seats. Within his own party, Kishi lost influence since fewer candidates supporting him were elected.

President Eisenhower went to Gettysburg today by helicopter...flying for the first time direct from the south lawn of the White House to his farm. This afternoon, he got in a round of golf.

David Schoenbrun, chief of our Paris bureau and an authentic expert on France flew in today. He recently published an excellent book called "As France Goes." David, welcome home and which way is France going?

SCHOENBRUN: At the moment it seems to be going to pieces. And, indeed, it is. As you know, Algeria is now in a state of secession. They've set up what amounts to a revolutionary government there and in Paris the Government is holding on just by a very narrow thread indeed. This may in the long run, however, prove to be a pretty good thing. Even you and I have talked over the years about what's been happening to the Fourth Republic, how its evaded making decisions, how the state has been withering away - not in a Marxist sense, but in a French sense of failing to make a decision. I think whatever happens now - whether de Gaulle comes to power or the government holds on, we're going to see a different kind of governmental procedure in France. It's no longer true as the French used to say, "that the more things change, the more they stay the same." It won't be the same from now on in.

MURROW: David, it is quite clear that the Army - or at least a majority of it in Algeria support de Gaulle. Would you say that the Army in metropolitan France supports him or is the Army divided too?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, Ed, let's first examine the word "Army." The Army of France is a Republican army, the bulk of that Army is made up of draftees who are boys from Communists, Socialists, Catholic homes, who are faithful to their country and I would say that the Army is faithful to the Republic. If however, you mean, the professional class of officer, and I think you do, there, I think that they are not faithful to the Republic for the simple reason, that they say and I think they're right, the Republic just hasn't existed. How can you be true or loyal to something which simply isn't there? In that respect I think the superior officers in France like those in Algeria are ready to go along with somebody who can recapture the prestige, the integrity, the grandeur that once was France.

MURROW: Now, David, spell it out for us in simple terms, will you? What are the steps required for General de Gaulle to come to power legally?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, that is simple Ed. It's not complicated at all. Either the Government resigns and the President of the Republic call de Gaulle in or the govennment is thrown out of office and the President calls de Gaulle in. So, the open door for de Gaulle is dependent upon a vacation of power in Paris. Now, it gets complicated because Mr. de Gaulle in his mystical fashion has said, exceptional circumstances require exceptional procedures. And, he will not go through the normal procedure of walking into Parliament in a democratic manner presenting his program, letting it be debated and then asking the Deputies to vote for him. De Gaulle has not said what he means by exceptional procedures, so I cannot give you a simple answer. I can make a guess I think based upon history and of personal knowledge of Mr. de Gaulle. He wants to do something like Prince Louis Napoleon and have a legal coup d'etat - that is, to say to Parliament, "All right fellas - now, you've messed things up - you want me to clean the mess up for me, give me two years in office, no questions asked, go on vacation and I'll clear up the mess." That's what he wants to do if he's called in, that's the way he's gonna do it.

MURROW: Well, David, neither one of us have done much guessing - at least in public during the past few years, but is it your guess that de Gaulle will come to power?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, as of tonight, I would say yes. But, I've seen so many miracles in France and this Prime Minister Pierre Pflimlin is such a courageous man, he's been fighting so hard. He just might pull if off you know. If it were up to Pflimlin alone and the democratic center parties, I think they could pull it off. However, the right wing in France, which has been described by French politicians as the stupidist right wing in the entire world may just pull the hatch, and down the drain goes the Fourth Republic. And, if so, de Gaulle will come in. Based upon what's happening this very minute now, I would say de Gaulle is very close and if the Republic is not dead - it's as close to being dead as you can come and still be alive.

MURROW: David, let's do a little more prognosticating here. If de Gaulle should come to power, what in general terms would be his policy?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, Ed you know he says that NATO is an American protectorate that doesn't even have the virtue of protecting France. You also remember, when you and I were working overseas together how de Gaulle behaved during the war, your friend Sir Winston Churchill used to say, "Of all the crosses that I've had to bear - the heaviest has been the Cross of Lorraine." You recall too, that shortly after the liberation of France, the first thing that General de Gaulle did, was to get into an airplane and fly to Moscow, try to make a deal with the Russians. This fella's going to play a lone hand if he comes to power; he's going to play an aristocratic haughty-Franch version of Nasserism, positive neutrality working both sides against the middle for the greater glory of what he conceives to be the destiny of France, the 14th century destiny of Joan of Arc. You remember what Franklin Roosevelt said at the Casablanca conference, Ed when he wrote, I think a letter to John and he said, "It's hard to deal with this fella cause he thinks he's Joan of Arc and he hears voices and how can you talk to a fella who's listening to somebody else's voice. Look for trouble."

MURROW: Thank you very much, David Schoenbrun. And while we have a few seconds left, let me thank you also for your reports on this program over the last ten days and indeed over the last ten years.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Premier Pflimlin has made a radio appeal to the French people for their support. But he still refrains from denouncing what amounts to insurrection across the Mediterranean in North Africa. A remark Charles Kingsley once made comes to mind in this connection. "There are more ways of killing a cat," he said, "then choking her with cream."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 26, 1958

This is the news:

The French crisis deepened today./ For a direct report, we switch to Ernest Leiser in Paris.

Tape runs 2:15
Ends on cue: "---Now back to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

In Algiers, there is an atmosphere of expectancy./ And for that story, here is Lou Cioffi, reporting from Algiers.

Tape runs 1:30
Ends on cue: "---Now back to Edw. R. Murrow."

In Tunis today, thousands of Moslem demonstrators marched through the streets...demanding arms and the immediate, total evacuation from Tunisia of all French troops. / Fighting broke out over the week-end between French and Tunisian forces in Southern Tunisia. / Each side blames the other, and President Bourguiba said tonight that Tunisia is taking the "extremely grave situation which has arisen to the United Nations." / He said the proposals made by France for the withdrawal of its forces are "not satisfactory." They come, he said, "from a feeble government without any real authority." Bourguiba told his people...in a nationwide broadcast... that Tunisia has asked for arms from Britain and the United States.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred with President Eisenhower today on several matters, including the crisis in France. / When a reporter asked Mr. Dulles if the United States were taking any action, he said, "No. This is a problem for the French."

The French ambassador today gave the State Department a note detailing what he called "the provocations suffered by the French Army in Tunisia in the last few days." French authorities in Algiers have been informed of this country's hope that further military action in Tunisia can be avoided.

At the United Nations today, Secretary General Hammarskjold cancelled a trip he was to have made to Minneapolis, to address a meeting of the World Health Organization. / He is staying close to headquarters, because of the critical situation in North Africa and the Middle East.

Lebanon's complaint that the United Arab Republic has interferred "massively" in its internal affairs, is scheduled to come up tomorrow in the Security Council. / The Security Council debate, however, is likely to be delayed. / A late dispatch [redacted] says the Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik, is postponing his departure for New York until the middle of the week. / Lebanon's complaint is also being taken up on Saturday by the Arab League. And there was [redacted] speculation earlier today that Lebanon might not press its charge against President Nasser until the Arab League was given an opportunity to act.

A time-bomb exploded today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, killing at least six persons. Perhaps as many as sixty persons were hurt. The bomb went off on a crowded street car. A communique...issued in Beirut tonight...said that, henceforth, the publication of material "of a nature in favor of the rebellion" is prohibited. / The Lebanese parliament meets tomorrow. And there is speculation [redacted] President Chamoun may drop his request that the constitution be amended, so that he could seek a new six-year term.

→

The head of the Israeli-Jordanian mixed armistice commission was shot and killed today in an incident on Mount Scopus. The United Nations official was Colonel George Flint, a Canadian. Mount Scopus is a demilitarized Israeli enclave in Jordanian territory. An Israeli Army spokesman says an exchange of gunfire broke out when Jordanian troops ambushed an Israeli police patrol...and that Colonel Flint was hit by a sniper's bullet while trying to rescue some wounded Israelis. The spokesman said four Israelis died in the action. Jordanian casualties are not reported.

The Soviet News Agency Tass tonight announced that Russia will pull its troops out of Roumania soon. The announcement...published in Budapest... said this decision was reached by the political committee of the eight Warsaw Pact countries meeting in Moscow. According to Tass, the Russians also are taking another division out of Hungary. Earlier this year, Moscow announced the withdrawal of 17-thousand troops from Hungary. It did not say how many would remain; nor does it say now.

President Eisenhower ruled out any tax cut today...so far as the Administration is concerned. He did this in identical letters sent by the White House to Vice President Nixon and Speaker Sam Rayburn of the House. Instead, the Administration wants corporation and cunsumer excise taxes continued after June 30 at their present level.

The United States today announced the fourth in its series of nuclear tests at the Eniwetok proving grounds in the Pacific. The announcement was issued jointly by the Defense Department and the Atomic Energy Commission. It gave no details.

At Groton, Connecticut, the country's sixth atomic-powered submarine, the Skipjack, was launched today. It reportedly will be the fastest nuclear powered submarine in the United States Fleet.

And other atomic submarines---the Skate and the Seawolf---have set endurance records of 30 days under water. This was announced by Admiral Burke, chief of naval operations.

President Eisenhower today formally dedicated the world's first large-scale atomic power plant devoted exclusively to peaceful purposes. The plant...located at Shippingport, Pennsylvania...will furnish electricity for nearly half a million customers of the Duquesne Light Company in the Pittsburgh area. Mr. Eisenhower said in his brief dedication speech, that the plant "represents what can be done, not only in America but throughout the world, to put the atom to work for the good of mankind."

Rear Admiral Rickover also spoke briefly. Admiral Rickover, who developed the atomic submarine, supervised the construction of the Shippinport plant in collaboration with the Atomic Energy Commission; He said:

Rickover tape runs 1:30, last 8 seconds is applause. Last words are: "--if we do not do it [redacted] wisely. Thank you." Fade applause after [redacted] two or three seconds."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a [redacted] moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

The news today demonstrated eloquently how the atom can be harnessed both for war and peace. In his book, Arms and Man, Walter Millis refused to accept a prognosis of universal catastrophe. "Presumably," he said, "the human race will in the future...as in the past... find means of getting along somehow, probably for the better, rather than for the worse."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW with THE NEWS

Monday, May 26th, 1958

MURROW: ... supervised the construction of the Shipping Port plang in collaboration with the Atomic Energy Commission. He said:

RICKOVER: The Shipping Port station represents combined efforts of many individuals and many organizations. No one organization and no one man is responsible for what was accomplished here. Those who worked so hard and with such personal sacrifice to speed every part of this project can never receive full recognition. It is to them and to their families that I wish to pay tribute today. This atomic power station is their off-spring, whatever credit there is belongs to them. As for myself, I am honored to have had the privilage of assisting with this project, and to be able to contribute whatever I could. Now, that man has released the energy of the atom, he holds in his own hands, the power to change his enviornment. Up till now, he has had the ability to accompdate himself to nature but not to change it. This power to modify his enviornment confers on man the great responsibility both moral and political to act wisely. In attempting to do God's work - God help us if we do not do it wisely . Thank you. (applause.)

MURROW: That was Admiral Rickover speaking at Shipping Port, Penna, today. This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

PT/n.m.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW with THE NEWS

Monday, May 26th, 1958

MURROW: ... supervised the construction of the Shipping Port plant in collaboration with the Atomic Energy Commission. He said:

RICKOVER: The Shipping Port station represents combined efforts of many individuals and many organizations. No one organization and no one man is responsible for what was accomplished here. Those who worked so hard and with such personal sacrifice to speed every part of this project can never receive full recognition. It is to them and to their families that I wish to pay tribute today. This atomic power station is their off-spring, whatever credit there is belongs to them. As for myself, I am honored to have had the privilage of assisting with this project, and to be able to contribute whatever I could. Now, that man has released the energy of the atom, he holds in his own hands, the power to change his environment. Up till now, he has had the ability to accomodate himself to nature but not to change it. This power to modify his environment confers on man the great responsibility both moral and political to act wisely. In attempting to do God's work - God help us if we do not do it wisely . Thank you. (applause.)

MURROW: That was Admiral Rickover speaking at Shipping Port, Penna, today. This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The French crisis deepened today. For a direct report, we switch to Ernest Leiser in Paris.

ERNEST LEISER: The biggest news in France tonight, Ed, is that General Charles de Gaulle drove back to Paris, at his own pace, and in his own time, from his country home a hundred and fifty miles away. When he was here just a week ago, de Gaulle said that he was going home to "await the call of the country." It is not considered likely that he would have come back unless he thought that the call to head the government was coming in a matter of days, perhaps of hours. De Gaulle's trip dominated the rush of other events here today. It's attracting a good deal more attention than the declaration of Communist parliamentary chief, Jacques Duclos, this afternoon that the Communist-run unions throughout France will strike at two P.M. tomorrow, in opposition to a de Gaulle bid for power. The Communist union's statement called on workers to be ready for the most decisive and energetic action necessary to defend the Republic. That's the words of the Communists. There was no indication of how long the strike was to be called for.

An effective strike now, many observers here say, would be the surest way to bring down Premier Pierre Pflimlin's shaky government - and the question is being raised tonight how much do the Communists really want to save the present regime?

Pflimlin did survive one test today. The National Assembly voted strongly to lift the parliamentary immunity of Deputy Pascal Arrighi, a leader of the insurrection, Saturday, that put Corsica under the control of the Algeria led Committees of Public Safety. Arrighi can now be brought to trial for his part in the coup. However, even in this case, Pflimlin was forced to compromise to hold the government line for the moment. Pflimlin had proposed to throw Arrighi out of Parliament altogether for what he did.

The uncertain government of Pflimlin has exercised a strong but erratic censorship on radio and press today. This evening's Paris papers were spotted with blank columns where articles had been cut out. But there was plenty in the papers to make it clear how fast government control was being lost. And no effective government action was taken today to suppress has been called the "sedition in Corsica." The rebels there remain in uncontested control.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Algiers, there is an atmosphere of expectancy. And for that story here is Lou Cioffi reporting from Algiers.

CIOFFI: The Committee of Public Safety in Algiers today predicted that from now on political events will be moving very fast. A spokesman refused to be pinned down on just what he meant except to say that "events in Paris seem to be taking shape." He warned that now there is no middle road. The committee oddly enough has not been emphasizing events in Corsica. One officer told me today that events there were different from here. He said in Algeria it was a patriotic and emotional movement. In Corsica, purely political.

There's not much question that the take-over on the litte Mediterranean island has gone a bit beyond what people hoped. And like all success, it can get a bit frightening.

The committee is also being very discreet about revealing the sentiments of the French Navy, which has just completed NATO maneuvers. Two aircraft carriers arrived at Algerian ports today, along with escort vessels. More units are expected. But when questioned about how the Navy feels, a spokesman said, "That's for Admiral Obrnaneau himself to say." The Admiral has already indicated his support for the movement.

The entire movement now appears to be marking time here. Except for the usual demonstrations, there's not much that can be done except to keep up a steady stream of propaganda and to lead the organization of the movement. The feeling here appears to be that the decisions that will affect the future of France and of Algeria are now being made in Paris. And there's confidence here that the solution will result in General de Gaulle heading the next government.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: In Tunis today, thousands of Moslem demonstrators marched through the streets...demanding arms and the immediate, total evacuation from Tunisia of all French troops. Fighting broke out over the weekend between Franch and Tunisian forces in Southern Tunisia. Each side blames the other, and President Bourguiba said tonight that Tunisia is taking the "extremely grave situation which has arisen to the United Nations." He said the proposals made by France for the withdrawal of its forces are "not satisfactory." They come, he said, "from a feeble government without any real authority." Bourguiba told his people...in a nationwide broadcast...that Tunisia has asked for arms from Britain and the United States.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred with President Eisenhower today on several matters, including the crisis in France. When a reporter asked Mr. Dulles if the United States were taking any action, he said, "No, This is a problem for the French."

The French ambassador today gave the State Department a note detailing what he called "the provocations suffered by the French Army in Tunisia in the last few days." French authorities in Algiers have been informed of this country's hope that further military action in Tunisia can be avoided.

At the United Nations today, Secretary General Hammarskjold cancelled a trip he was to have made to Minneapolis to address a meeting of the World Health Organization. He is staying close to headquarters because of the critical situation in North Africa and the Middle East.

Lebanon's complaint that the United Arab Republic has interferred "massively" in its interanl affairs is scheduled to come up tomorrow in the Security Council. The Secuirty Council debate, however, is likely to be delayed. A late dispatch says the Lebanese foreign minister, Chalres Malik is postponing his departure for New York until the middle of the week. Lebanon's complaint is also being taken up on Saturday by the Arab League. And there was speculation earlier today that Lebanon might not press its charge against President Nasser until the Arab League was given an opportunity to act.

A time-bomb exploded today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, killing at least six persons. Perhaps as many as sixty persons were hurt. The bomb went off on a crowded street car. A communique...issued in Beirut tonight... said that, henceforth, the publication of material "of a nature in favor of the rebellion" is prohibited. The Lebanese parliament meets tomorrow. And there is speculation President Chamoun may drop his request that the constitution be amended, so that he could seek a new six-year term.

The head of the Israeli-Jordanian mixed armistice commission was shot and killed today in an incident on Mount Scopus. The United Nations official was Colonel George Flint, a Canadian. Mount Scopus is a demilitarized Israeli enclave in Jordanian territory. An Israeli Army spokesman says an exchange of gunfire broke out when Jordanian troops ambushed an Israeli police patrol...and that Colonel Flint was hit by a sniper's bullet while trying to resume some wounded Israelis. The spokesman said four Israelis died in the action. Jordanian casualities are not reported.

The Soviet News Agency Tass tonight announced that Russia will pull its troops out of Roumania soon. The announcement...published in Budapest... said this decision was reached by the political committee of the eight Warsaw Pact countries meeting in Moscow. According to Tass, the Russians also are taking another division out of Hungary.Earlier this year, Moscow announced the withdrawal of 17-thousand troops from Hungary. It did not say how many would remain; nor does it now.

President Eisenhower ruled out any tax cut today...so far as the Administration is concerned. He did this in identical letters sent by the White House to Vice President Nixon and Speaker Sam Rayburn of the House. Instead, the Administration wants corporation and consumer excise taxes continued after June 30th at their present level.

The United States today announced the fourth in its series of nuclear tests at the Eniwetok proving grounds in the Pacific. The announcement was issued jointly by the Defense Department and the Atomic Energy Commission. It gave no details.

At Groton, Connecticut, the country's sixth atomic powered submarine, the Skipjack, was launched today. It reportedly will be the fastest nuclear powered submarine in the United States Fleet.

And other atomic submarines---the Skate and the Seawolf---have set endurance records of 30 days under water. This was announced by Admiral Burke, chief of naval operations.

President Eisenhower today formally dedicated the world's first large-scale atomic power plant devoted exclusively to peaceful purposes. The plant...located at Shippingport, Pennsylvania...will furnish electricity for nearly half a million customers of the Duquesne Light Company in the Pittsburgh area. Mr. Eisenhower said in his brief dedication speech that the plant "represents what can be done, not only in America but throughout the world, to put the atom to work for the good of mankind."

Rear Admiral Rickover also spoke briefly. Admiral Rickover who developed the atomic submarine, supervised the construction of the Shippingport plant in collaboration with the Atomic Energy Commission. He said:

RICKOVER: The Shippingport station represents combined efforts of many individuals and many organizations. No one organization and no one man is responsible for what was accomplished here. Those who worked so hard and with such personal sacrifice to speed every part of this project can never receive full recognition. It is to them and to their families that I wish to pay tribute today. This atomic power station is their off-spring, whatever credit there is belong to them. As for myself, I am honored to have had the privilege of assisting with this project, and to be able to contribute whatever I could. Now, that man has released the energy of the atom, he holds in his own hands, the power to change his environment. Up till now, he has had the ability to accommodate himself to nature but not to change it. This power to modify his environment confers on man the great responsibility both moral and political to act wisely. In attempting to do God's work - God help us if we do not do it wisely. Thank you. (applause)

MURROW: That was Admiral Rickover speaking at Spippingport, Pa. today. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The news today demonstrated eloquently how the atom can be harnessed both for war and peace. In his book, Arms and Man, Walter Millis refused to accept a prognosis of universal catastrophe. "Presumably," he said, "the human race will in the future...as in the past...find means of getting along somehow probably for the better, rather than for the worse."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 27, 1958

as bumper to the day network

This is the news:

Premier Pflimlin won a narrow vote of confidence tonight in the French National Assembly. The Communists voted for Pflimlin, but he won a majority without the help of their 148 votes. The final official vote was 408 to 165. For a direct report, we switch to my colleague, ~~Eleanor Lepson~~ Alex Kendrick, in the French capital.

Runs about 2:14

Ends on cue: "--to ERM IN NY."

presence of French troops on Tunisian soil. There were no incidents.

The United Nations Security Council has postponed debate on Lebanon's complaint against the United Arab Republic, ~~The postponement will give~~ IN ORDER TO GIVE the Arab League an opportunity to act in the dispute. The Arab League Council meets on Saturday. In Beirut today, the Lebanese prime minister told parliament that President Chamoun has "no intention" of trying to change the constitution, so he can run for another six-year term. The prime minister said the constitutional issue had been used as a pretext by anti-government forces for stirring up revolt.

Final returns in Italy's parliamentary election confirm that the ruling Christian Democratic Party again failed to win a clear majority. It did pick up a few seats...but so did the left-wing Socialists. The Communists lost one seat in the Chamber of Deputies, although they polled 6-million, 700-thousand votes. ~~The Christian Democrats...as in the past...will need the support of at least one of the smaller center parties to form a coalition government.~~

~~Secretary of State Dulles conferred with President Eisenhower for almost an hour today on the French crisis. Mr. Dulles declined to comment afterward...saying again that what is happening in France is a French problem. He said, "While we follow affairs with close attention and deep interest, we do not in any way interfere."~~

President Eisenhower today signed the bill raising postal rates and increasing the pay of half a million postal workers.

House Speaker Rayburn said today that he agrees with President Eisenhower's stand against a tax cut. /And Senate Democratic Leader Johnson predicted that a "substantial majority" in Congress will go along with the President's tax policy.

The House has voted...tentatively...to kill the measure giving statehood to Alaska. /The vote to strike out the bill's enacting clause was 144 to 106, with a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats joining forces against the measure. /Their action could be reversed tomorrow by a roll-call vote.

~~The House Judiciary Committee today approved a "states rights" bill~~ to keep federal laws from taking precedence over state laws on the same

Edward R. Murrow: May 27, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Now that DeGaulle is so close to power, more has to be looked at than the ethics of the way it has come about. / What matters now is the effect of a DeGaulle government on a number of countries; France first of all, Algeria and its neighbors, Germany, the Soviet Union, and the United States.

For France, the choice is a beggarly one, between a powerless parliamentary regime defied by its armed forces, and a government that again wears the garments of authority, even though they are soiled. / A legal government supported by the armed forces and obeyed by them, appears preferable to a lot of Frenchmen.

What a DeGaulle government would mean to France beyond the meager satisfaction of a restored authority is hard to say. Little is known of DeGaulle's present program. He will want more power in his own hands, power that lies with the parties in the Assembly. Since he has cast himself in the role of savior of the Republic, he probably can get it. / Beyond that he will want power to stop the rise of prices and wages. / He sees stabilization of the economy as part of the process of making France "grand" again.

DeGaulle is credited by some followers with having a moderate policy for Algeria. They say he wants a federation of France with Algeria, Tunisia and Morocco, including extended rights for Moslems, genuine autonomy and ultimate self-determination. The Algerian rebels insist on the right to be free without saying it must happen at once. DeGaulle has told visitors he would give the right to secede in twenty years. Even if Moslems were inclined to trust DeGaulle's word, twenty years is too long for them.

It is hard to know what the army in Algeria would accept. Soustelle, DeGaulle's former lieutenant, calls now for integration. If he means it, this would be equal citizenship for Moslems, and that in itself would spell the end of white supremacy, and that is what the army leaders and the French in Algeria have been fighting to save. ~~Other army leaders insist on the right to crush the help Tunisia and Morocco are sending into Algeria, so that they can stamp out the rebellion. Should this lead to military interference in those countries, the United States might find itself again lined up with the Soviet Union in the United Nations, as at the time of the Suez crisis. If DeGaulle can lord it over the generals, he might come up with a solution in North Africa which both they and the Moslems would accept. This is conceivable, but not much more.~~ aid

DeGaulle has told nobody what he will do in European affairs. Since he is emphasizing legality, he is expected to stay in NATO, which he is legally bound to do. But within NATO he can change the entire tone and meaning of the alliance. He is a passionate nationalist, dedicated to restore the departed glories of France, something that NATO was not devised to do. He would try to do it, even if he remained an ally.

He has said that he is not against the common market, the coal and steel community, and Euratom. But he insists that France must be strong before joining them. It is too late to stay out of the coal and steel community, but if France waits before completing the other projects, they too will have to wait.

Naturally the most decisive issue in Europe is the future of Franco-Soviet relations. If DeGaulle comes to power, Moscow already will have won a victory, for NATO manifestly would be weakened. Moscow has much to bargain with. It can throw France at once into civil war, or it can be satisfied with a token resistance to DeGaulle's assumption of power. DeGaulle doesn't believe in isolating Russia, and friends of his expect him to revive the Russian entente. Presumably Moscow will play the board both ways, will take what it can get from DeGaulle now, but keep the communists in training to try to seize power when the time comes.

In Germany, the effect of a DeGaulle regime would be to strengthen the two extremes in politics. German nationalism would be whipped up by DeGaulle's nationalism, and the left would be repelled by DeGaulle's autocracy. / If DeGaulle bargains with Moscow, the Germans are sure to do it too. And that prospect is not one to steady Western nerves.

It is enough to mention the effects of DeGaulle on North Africa, Germany and the Soviet Union to see that the United States will be as much affected as anybody. / We say that our foreign policy rests on helping people who want to be free, on NATO and on keeping a united front against Soviet expansion. / If we could do it - and we can't - we would like to keep DeGaulle out. / If we can't, we must adjust ourselves to reality. / The ability to adjust to reality is, after all, the test of sanity. / For us this would mean writing a new foreign policy, re-drafting it from scratch.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

A DeGaulle government would have far-reaching effect on many countries, including the United States. More than 200 years ago, Joseph Butler said, "Things and actions are what they are, and the consequences of them will be what they will be. Why then," he asked, "should we desire to be deceived?"

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 27, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The French National Assembly has begun voting on a choice between Premier Pflimlin and General de Gaulle. For a direct report we switch at once to my colleague, Alex Kendrick in the French capital.

KENDRICK: They order these things - if not better, as some say - at least differently in France. After two weeks of momentous events, in Algeria, in Corsica, on the parliamentary front, General Charles de Gaulle has tonight translated his intentions into action and is in the process, he says, of forming a new French government to replace the coalition of Pierre Pflimlin. But the Pflimlin government, as of this moment, is not abdicating. So how precisely de Gaulle intends to accomplish his aim, what formula he has in mind for subscribing to, or seeming to subscribe to the rules of the parliamentary regime which he despises, who is for him and who is against him in his move toward power, these things remain unknown, shrouded in a thick of the de Gaulle mystique. In cognizance of this state of affairs, the independent and respected Paris newspaper, Le Monde, tonight in a front page editorial, called on the government to tell the French people what is going on behind the scenes. However, the National Assembly is now meeting in what may be an all night session and is already a stormy one. And de Gaulle's power plays and any counter plays that may be made against him should become plainer during the course of this meeting.

Until now, despite its utter seriousness, the situation has had many of the elements of a French farce on the stage. Cabinet ministers popping in and out of doors, mistaken identities, fluctuating affiliations, de Gaulle himself making a late night dash to Paris last night, spending hours in an unknown place or places, with person or persons unknown, and then telephoning from his rural retreat at Colombey at noon today to say that he has undertaken the regular and necessary process of forming a government. A Republican government, he added, and presumably this means he seeks to replace the Pflimlin government legally and therefore will try to find a parliamentary majority in the National Assembly. But Monsieur Pflimlin has tonight in the Assembly refused to resign, and the only other ways he can be brought down is by the resignation of other ministers or by being defeated in a vote of confidence on the subject of constitutional reform. This vote will be taken by the Assembly during the course of the night. Pflimin can be voted out. De Gaulle can be brought in. But a de Gaulle majority is by no means certain after that. The Socialists - the chief bulwark of present-day French governments - this afternoon in a party caucus voted unanimously against supporting de Gaulle. The Communists will not vote for him nor will Pflimlin's followers in the MRP. And on the record of their past statements neither will Radical leader Mendes-France and his supporters. How de Gaulle means to circumvent this set of circumstances remains to be seen.

Meanwhile, his chief opponents, the Communists, today delivered what they had hoped would be a major blow at his aspirations. They called a 24-hr. strike of a half dozen key labor unions, on the railways, in gas, electricity, in the coal mines. But the strike had very little effect and is accounted a misfire. The Paris subways and buses just kept on running. Have the workers refused to heed the Communist strike call because they do not want to oppose de Gaulle? This and a dozen other questions remain unanswered tonight, so far. The only thing clear is that Charles de Gaulle, by some means known so far only to himself, intends to take power in France. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York. Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 27, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT (As broadcast to the daylight network)

This is the news:

The French National Assemblyhas begun voting on a choice between Premier Pflimlin and General de Gaulle. For a direct report, we switch at once to my colleague, Alex Kendrick in the French capital.

KENDRICK: They order these things - if not better, as some say - at least differently in France. After two weeks of momentous events, in Algeria, in Corsica, on the parliamentary front, General Charles de Gaulle has tonight translated his intentions into action and is in the process, he says of forming a new French government to replace the coalition of Pierre Pflimlin. But the Pflimlin government, as of this moment, is not abdicating. So how precisely de Gaulle intends to accomplish his aim, what formula he has in mind for subscribing to, or seeming to subscribe to the rules of the parliamentary regime which he despises, who is for him and who is against him in his move toward power, these things remain unknown, shrouded in a thick of the de Gaulle mystique. In cognizance of this state of affairs, the independent and respected Paris newspaper, Le Monde, tonight in a front page editorial, called on the government to tell the French people what is going on behind the scenes. However, the National Assembly is now meeting in what may be an all night session and is already a stormy one. And de Gaille's power plays and any counter plays that may be made against him should become plainer during the course of this meeting.

Until now, despite its utter seriousness, the situation has had many of the elements of a French farce on the stage. Cabinet ministers popping in and out of doors, mistaken identities, fluctuating affiliations, de Gaulle himself making a late night dash to Paris last night, spending hours in an unknown place or places, with person or persons unknown, and then telephoning from his rural retreat at Colombey at noon today to say that he has undertaken the regular and necessary process of forming a government. A Republican government, he added, and presumably this means he seeks to replace the Pflimlin government legally and therefore will try to find a parliamentary majority in the National Assembly. But Monsieur Pflimlin has tonight in the Assembly refused to resign, and the only other ways he can be brought down is by the resignation of other ministers or by being defeated in a vote of confidence on the subject of constitutional reform. This vote will be taken by the Assembly during the course of the night. Pflimlin can be voted out. De Gaulle can be brought in. But a de Gaulle majority is by no means certain after that. The Socialists - the chief bulwark of present-day French government - this afternoon in a party caucus voted unanimously against supporting de Gaulle. The Communists will not vote for him nor will Pflimlin's followers in the MRP. And on the record of their past statements neither will Radical leader Mendes-France and his supporters. How de Gaulle means to circumvent this set of circumstances remains to be seen.

Meanwhile, his chief opponents, the Communists, today delivered what they had hoped would be a major blow at his aspirations. They called a 24-hour strike of a half dozen key labor unions, on the railways, in gas, electricity, in the coal mines. But the strike had very little effect and is accounted a misfire. The Paris subways and buses just kept on running. Have the workers refused to heed the Communist strike call because they do not want to oppose de Gaulle? This and a dozen other questions remain unanswered tonight, so far. The only thing clear is that Charles de Gaulle, by some means known so far only to himself, intends to take power in France.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The United Nations Security Council has postponed debate on Lebanon's complaint against the United Arab Republic in order to give the Arab League an opportunity to act in the dispute. The Arab League Council meets on Saturday. In Beirut today, the Lebanese prime minister told parliament that President Chamoun has "no intention" of trying to change the constitution so he can run for another six-year term. The prime minister said the constitutional issue had been used as a pretext by anti-government forces for stirring up revolt.

Final returns in Italy's parliamentary election confirm that the ruling Christian Democratic Party again failed to win a clear majority. It did pick up a few seats...but so did the left-wing Socialists. The communists lost one seat in the Chamber of Deputies, although they polled 6-million, 700 thousand votes.

President Eisenhower today signed the bill raising postal rates and increasing the pay of half a million postal workers.

House Speaker Rayburn said today that he agrees with President Eisenhower's stand against a tax cut. And Senate Democratic Leader Johnson predicted that a "substantial majority" in Congress will go along with the President's tax policy.

The House has voted...tentatively...to kill the measure giving statehood to Alaska. The vote to strike out the bill's enacting clause was 144 to 106, with a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats joining forces against the measure. Their action could be reversed tomorrow by a roll-call vote.

Now that DeGaulle is so close to power, more has to be looked at than the ethics of the way it has come about. What matters now is the effect of a De Gaulle government on a number of ouuntries; France first of all, Algeria and its neighbors, Germany, the Soviet Union, and The United States.

For France, the choice is a beggarly one, between a powerless parliamentary regime defied by its armed forces, and a government that again wears the garments of authority, even though they are soiled. A legal government supported by the armed forces and obeyed by them, appears preferable to a lot of Frenchmen.

What a DeGaulle government would mean to France beyond the meager satisfaction of a restored authority is hard to say. Little is known of DeGaulle's present program. He will want more power in his own hands, power that lies with the parties in the Assembly. Since he has cast himself in the role of savior of the Republic, he probably can get it. Beyond that he will want power to stop the rise of prices and wages. He sees stabilization of the economy as part of the process of making France "grand" again.

De Gaulle is credited by some followers with having a moderate policy for Algeria. They say he wants a federation of France with Algeria, Tunisia and Morocco, including extended rights for Moslems, genuine autonomy and ultimate self-determination. The Algerian rebels insist on the right to be free without saying it must happen at once. De Gaulle has told visitors he would give the right to secede in twenty years. Even if Moslems were inclined to trust De Gaulle's word, twenty years is too long for them.

It is hard to know what the army in Algeria would accept. Soustelle, De Gaulle's former lieutenant, calls now for integration. If he means it, this would be equal citizenship for Moslems, and that in itself would spell the end of white supremacy, and that is what the army leaders and the French in Algeria have been fighting to save.

De Gaulle has told nobody what he will do in European affairs. Since he is emphasizing legality, he is expected to stay in NATO, which he is legally bound to do. But within NATO he can change the entire tone and meaning of the alliance. He is a passionate nationalist, dedicated to restore the departed glories of France, something that NATO was not devised to do. He would try to do it, even if he remained an ally.

He has said that he is not against the common market, the coal and steel community and Euratom. But he insists that France must be strong before joining them. It is too late to stay out of the coal and steel community, but if France waits before completing the other projects, they too will have to wait.

Naturally the most decisive issue in Europe is the future of Franco-Soviet relations. If De Gaulle comes to power, Moscow already will have won a victory, for NATO manifestly would be weakened. Moscow has much to bargain with. It can throw France at once into civil war, or it can be satisfied with a token resistance to DeGaulle's assumption of power. De Gaulle doesn't believe in isolating Russia, and friends of his expect him to revive the Russian entente. Presumably Moscow will play the board both ways, will take what it can get from De Gaulle now, but keep the communists in training to try to seize power when the time comes.

In Germany, the effect of a De Gaulle regime would be to strengthen the two extremes in politics. German nationalism would be whipped up by De Gaulle's nationalism, and the left would be repelled by De Gaulle's autocracy. If De Gaulle bargains with Moscow, the Germans are sure to do it too. And that prospect is not one to steady Western nerves.

It is enough to mention the effects of De Gaulle on North Africa, Germany, and the Soviet Union to see that the United States will be as much affected as anybody. We say that our foreign policy rests on helping people who want to be free, on NATO and on keeping a united front against Soviet expansion. If we could do it - and we can't - we would like to keep De Gaulle out. If we can't, we must adjust ourselves to reality. The ability to adjust to reality is, after all, the test of sanity. For us this would mean writing a new foreign policy, re-drafting it from scratch.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: A De Gaulle government would have far-reaching effect on many countries, including the United States. More than 200 years ago, Joseph Butler said, "Things and actions are what they are, and the consequences of them will be what they will be. Why then," he asked, "should we desire to be deceived?"

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 28, 1958

This is the news:

President Coty of France has acted to bring General DeGaulle back to power. For a direct report, we switch at once to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

(Tape runs 2:00
(Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

Ernest Leiser covered the anti-DeGaulle demonstrations in Paris this afternoon. Here is his report of what he saw...and heard.

(Tape runs:50 seconds
(Ends on cue: "--to Edw R. Murrow in N.Y."

Another CBS News correspondent has an important story in Algiers. Here is Lou Cioffi, reporting from Algiers.

(Tape runs 1:42
(Ends on cue: "---to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he did not intend to discuss the French situation. Then ten minutes later, in answer to a question as to what he thought of General DeGaulle personally...without reference to the political situation...Mr. Eisenhower, said, "I happen to be one of those people who liked him. I had a long experience of friendly contact with him." The President recalled his associations with DeGaulle during World War Two and later, when he was NATO commander.

Regarding the Eisenhower Doctrine, the President said that if a friendly Middle East government is threatened, "there are probably certain actions that we might be able to take beyond aggression from a Communist-controlled state." This question recently came up with regard to the pro-Western government of Lebanon, which has accused the United Arab Republic of interfering in its internal affairs...in an attempt to aid in the overthrow of that government.

A shipment of American arms and light tanks is reported to have arrived today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon.

President Eisenhower said he favors statehood for both Hawaii and Alaska. And this afternoon the House voted to make Alaska the 49th state. The final roll-call vote was 208 to 166...reversing yesterday's action tentatively killing the measure. The bill now goes to the Senate.

→

Mr. Eisenhower told reporters the recession "has largely spent its force." But, he added, it is too early to say flatly that "now we are on the upper leg." ~~He deplored the rising spiral of wages and prices...but said he did not know what the government could do as long as it insists upon the freedom of an economy to establish its own wage and price levels."~~

Tonight, the Labor Department classified 86 of the country's industrial centers as "areas of substantial unemployment." This compared to a total of 70 such areas in March.

The Senate tonight passed...and sent to the White House...a bill to provide a temporary extension of unemployment benefits. The Senate approved the measure unanimously, after Democratic efforts to liberalize the measure went down in defeat. The bill allows states to extend the various periods in which they pay jobless benefits by 50 percent. The states would borrow the money to pay these benefits from the Federal Government.

The House Appropriations Committee voted today to increase military spending in the next fiscal year to 38-billion, 310-million dollars. An extra 600-million dollars was allowed for the construction of four atomic submarines, capable of launching the Polaris ballistic missile. Cuts were made in other categories...making an over-all increase in the defense budget of about a hundred million dollars. ~~The committee ignored President Eisenhower's request for authority to transfer up to 2-billion dollars from one program to another should the need arise.~~

The action was taken as Mr. Eisenhower asked Congress for an additional 334-million dollars for the Atomic Energy Commission, mostly for normal operating expenses and new plant construction.

And the House Ways and Means Committee today approved an extension of present corporation and excise taxes for one year, as recommended by the President. A separate proposal to reduce the excise tax on new cars was defeated 19 to 2.

A dispatch from Tunis says that Tunisian forces have encircled two French troop garrisons in Tunisia. A Tunisian government spokesman says the action is "a purely defensive and precautionary measure."

The Civil Aeronautics Board today ordered the creation of three special transcontinental air lanes to reduce the danger of aerial collisions. Each air lane will be 40 miles wide and extend from an altitude of 17-thousand to 22-thousand feet. All aircraft flying these lanes---whether military or commercial---must operate under instrument flying rules with ground supervision. The order is effective June 15th.

President Eisenhower has issued a new statement...objecting to some of the language of the defense reorganization bill written by the House Armed Services Committee. He said one committee revision would permit "legalized insubordination." He referred to the provision that would authorize the military and civilian chiefs of the individual services to protest directly to Congress, if they disagree with any defense policy.

Russia has suspended a multi-million-dollar credit agreement it made with Yugoslavia two years ago. Relations between Russia and Yugoslavia have been strained, due to the insistence of President Tito on the right to follow a policy independent of Moscow. Yugoslavia was to have used the Soviet loan to build a new aluminum extraction plant and modernize its mines. Moscow says it is "freezing" the loan for five years.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

The government of Pierre Pflimlin appeared resolute, at the beginning of the French crisis, in its opposition to the insurgent movement in Algiers and the return of General DeGaulle. Later it was not resolute...recalling the warning of Elihu Root, who said: "The government that shakes its fist first and its finger afterward falls into contempt."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, May 28, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... President Coty, of France, has acted to bring General de Gaulle back to power. For a direct report we switch at once to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The President of the Republic, Rene Coty, has announced that he has instructed the heads of the houses of Parliament to make contact with General de Gaulle with a view to forming a government for France. This news was announced here in Paris tonight to some four hundred reporters, gathered in the courtyard of the Presidential palace, and some three thousand Parisians standing outside wondering about the fate of their country. This is one of the most unusual announcements in French history, for normally when a President chooses a chief of government he simply calls him in, gives him a mandate to prepare a program and asks him to consult with the political parties. The candidate then goes before Parliament, proposes his government and his program and awaits a vote. This is normal, democratic procedure under the Republic of France. This is, however, not the procedure which is being adopted tonight. On the contrary - the President has merely said that he has asked the Speakers of Parliament to make contact with the general, to establish the conditions under which he is to come to power. Why this unusual procedure? Well, because General de Gaulle himself stated that these were exceptional circumstances and that he would only come to power under exceptional procedures. These sibylline remarks of the general need clarification. And the clarification is the following: General de Gaulle has several times expressed his disapproval, if not his contempt, for the constitutional proceduresof the Fourth Republic. He has said that he holds himself above political parties, and will not descend into what he calls the "swamps of French politics." Therefore, he refuses to consult with parties in the normal way; he refuses to go to Parliament; he requires special procedures; and therefore, the explanation is that the President of the Republic tonight has yielded to the demands of General de Gaulle and has asked him to set up his unusual procedures for coming to power. However, the big question has been answered, they're calling de Gaulle to power.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Ernest Leiser covered the anti-de Gaulle demonstrations in Paris this afternoon. Here is his report of what he saw and heard.

LEISER: A few hours ago, demonstrators, mainly Communist and Socialist, marched down the streets of Paris from the Square of the Nation to the Square of the Republic, bearing banners that said: "Long Live the Republic" and shouting slogans that said: "De Gaulle shall not pass" "De Gaulle shall not come to power." The echoes of the demonstration had barely died away - but de Gaulle is now coming to power. I watched that three-hour defile down the streets earlier, listened to the surprisingly good-natured comments that the marchers made when they were not shouting for the record. I had the feeling then that they had already accepted the inevitable, despite the slogans. Tonight the calm in the city tonight would indicate that this is so, that Paris now awaits tomorrow to see what the people who were willing to march at least today will do.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Another CBS News correspondent has an important story in Algiers. Here is Lou Cioffi reporting from Algiers.

CIOFFI: A member of the Committee of Public Safety here today said that a government of national union, even with General de Gaulle at its head, would be unacceptable. In an exclusive interview with CBS

News, Leon Delbecque, who was chief aide to former Defense Minister Chaban Delmas, said that a government of national union, which was mentioned in Paris today, is really a compromise. "We want no compromises," he said. "We want a government of public safety, with General de Gaulle at its head." And he added smiling, "Long live the Fifth Republic." The question of a government of national union came up during today's usual news conference. A spokesman announced that one has just come from Paris, that the Catholic M.R.P. had just asked for such a government, with General de Gaulle leading it. Later Delbecque told me, "The political parties in France have lost the confidence of the people. We forced their hand - and now the politicians are scrambling about trying to keep their portfolios. They are trying to save as much as they can. Well," he said, "they are finished now. It will be up to de Gaulle himself to decide just which men he may want." A government of public safety, he explained, will be a government of technicians, representing the various branches of activity in the country. Delbecque said that the committee naturally expects that de Gaulle will keep the promises made here for complete integration of the two races in a French Algeria. When I asked what his position would be if de Gaulle himself agrees to head a government of national union, Delbecque spread his hands and said "I don't think he will accept. And anyway," he added, "that word 'if' is like putting all of Algeria into a bottle." Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he did not intend to discuss the French situation.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Coty, of France has acted to bring General DeGaulle back to power. For a direct report we switch at once to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The President of the Republic, Rene Coty has announced that he has instructed the heads of the houses of Parliament to make contact with General DeGaulle with a view to forming a government for France. This news was announced here in Paris tonight to some four hundred reporters, gathered in the courtyard of the Presidential palace, and some three hundred Parisians standing outside wondering about the fate of their country. This is one of the most unusual announcements in French history, for normally when a President chooses a chief of government, he simply calls him in, gives him a mandate to prepare a program and asks him to consult with the political parties. The candidate then goes before Parliament, proposes his government and his program and awaits a vote. This is normal, democratic procedure under the Republic of France. This is, however, not the procedure which is being adopted tonight. On the contrary - the President has merely said that he has asked the Speakers of Parliament to make contact with the general, to establish the conditions under which he is to come to power. Why this unusual procedure? Well, because General DeGaulle himself stated that these were exceptional circumstances and that he would only come to power under exceptional procedures. These sibylline remarks of the general need clarification. And the clarification is the following: General DeGaulle has several times expressed his disapproval, if not his contempt, for the constitutional procedures of the Fourth Republic. He has said that he holdshimself above polticial parties and will not descend into what he calls the "swamps of French politics." Therefore he refuses to consult with parties in the normal way; he refuses to go to Parliament; he requires special procedures; and therefore, the explanation is that the President of the Republic tonight has yielded to the demands of General DeGaulle and has asked him to set up his unusual procedures for coming to power. However, the big question has been answered, they're calling DeGaulle to power.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Ernest Leiser covered the anti-DeGaulle demonstration in Paris this afternoon. Here is his report of what he saw and heard.

LEISER: A few hours ago, demonstrators, mainly Communist and Socialist, marched down the streets of Paris from the Square of the Nation to the Square of the Republic, bearing banners that said: "Long live the Republic" and shouting slogans that said: "DeGaulle shall not pass" De Gaulle shall not come to power." The echoes of the demonstration had barely died away - but DeGaulle is now coming to power. I watched that three-hour defile down the streets earlier, listened to the surprisingly good-natured comments that the marchers made when they were not shouting for the record. I had the feeling then that they had already accepted the inevitable, despite the slogans. Tonight the calm in the city tonight would indicate that this is so, that Paris now awaits tomorrow to see what the people who were willing to march at least today will do.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Another CBS News Correspondent has an important story in Algiers. Here is Lou Cioffi reporting from Algiers.

CIOFFI: A member of the Committee of Public Safety here today said that a government of national union, even with General DeGaulleat its head, would be would be unacceptable. In an exclusive interview with CBS News, Leon Delbecque, who was chief aide to former Defense Minister Chaban Delmas said that a government of national union which was mentioned in Paris today, is really a compromise. "We want no compromises," he said, "We want a government of public safety, with General DeGaulle at its head." And he added smiling, "Long live the Fifth Republic." The question of a government of national union came up during today's usual news conference. A spokesman announced that one has just come from Paris that the Catholic M.R.P. had just asked for such a government with General DeGaulle leading it. Later Delbecque told me, "The political parties in France have lost the confidence of the people. We forced their hand - and now the politicians are scrambling about trying to keep their portfolios. They are trying to save as much as they can. "Well," he said, "They are finished now. It will be up to De Gaulle himself to decide just which men he may want." A government of public safety, he explained, will be a government of technicians, representing the various branches of activity in the country. Delbecque said that the committee naturally expects that DeGaulle will keep the promises made here for complete integration of the two races in a French Algeria. When I asked what his position would be if DeGaulle himself agrees to head a government of national union, Delbecque spread his hands and said "I don't think he will accept. And anyway," he added, "that word 'if' is like putting all of Algeria into a bottle."

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he did not intend to discuss the French situttion. Then ten minutes later in answer to a question as to what he thought of General De Gaulle personally...without reference to the political situation...Mr. Eisenhower said, "I happen to be one of those people who liked him. I had a long experience of friendly contact with him." The President recalled his associations with De Gaulle during World War Two and later when he was NATO commander.

Regarding the Eisenhower Doctrine, the President said that if a friendly Middle East government is threatened, "there are probably certain actions that we might be able to take beyond aggression from a Communist-controlled state." This question recently came up with regard to the pro-Western government of Lebanon, which has accused the United Arab Republic of interfering in its internal affairs...in an attempt to aid in the overthrow of that government.

A shipment of American arms and light tanks is reported to have arrived today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon.

President Eisenhower said he favors statehood for both Hawaii and Alaska. And this afternoon the House voted to make Alaska the 49th state. The final roll-call vote was 208 to 166...reversing yesterday's action tentatively killing the measure. The bill now goes to the Senate.

Mr. Eisenhower told reporters the recession "has largely spent its force." But it is too early to say flatly that "now we are on the upper leg."

Tonight, the Labor Department classified 86 of the country's industrial centers as "areas of substantial unemployment." This compares to a total of 70 such areas in March.

The Senate tonight passed...and sent to the White House...a bill to provide a temporary extension of unemployment benefits. The Senate approved the measure unanimously, after Democratic efforts to liberalize the measure went down in defeat. The bill allows states to extend the various periods in which they pay jobless benefits by 50 percent. The states would borrow the money to pay these benefits from the Federal Government.

The House Appropriations Committee voted today to increase military spending in the next fiscal year to 38-billion, 310-million dollars. An extra 600 million dollars was allowed for the construction of four atomic submarines capable of launching the Polaris ballistic missile. Cuts were made in other categories...making an over-all increase in the defense budget of about a hundred million dollars.

The action was taken as Mr. Eisenhower asked Congress for an additional 334-million dollars for the Atomic Energy Commission mostly for normal operating expenses and new plant construction.

And the House Ways and Means Committee today approved an extension of present corporation and excise taxes for one year, as recommended by the President. A separate proposal to reduce the excise tax on new cars was defeated 19 to 2.

A dispatch from Tunis says that Tunisian forces have encircled two French troop garrisons in Tunisia. A Tunisian government spokesman says the action is "a purely defensive and precautionary measure."

Russia has suspended a multi-million-dollar credit agreement it made with Yugoslavia two years ago. Relations between Russia and Yugoslavia have been strained, due to the insistence of President Tito on the right to follow a policy independent of Moscow. Yugoslavia was to have used the Soviet loan to build a new aluminum extraction plant and modernize its mines. Moscow says it is "freezing" the loan for five years.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The government of Pierre Pflimlin appeared resolute at the beginning of the French crisis in its opposition to the insurgent movement in Algiers and the return of General De Gaulle. Later it was not resolute...recalling the warning of Elihu Root, who said: "The government that shakes its fist first and its finger afterward falls into contempt."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs,m May 29, 1958

This is the news:

President Coty today asked General DeGaulle to try to form a new [redacted] government. / DeGaulle accepted the task. / He also said that the General Assembly would have to give him "full powers". / For a direct report, here is my colleague, David Schoenbrun speaking from Paris.

(Tape runs approx 5 mins
Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R, Murrow in N.Y."

Nowhere are the developments in Paris being watched more closely than from Algiers. For a direct report, we switch to Algiers and Lou Cioffi.

(Tape runs 1:12
Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

Painful reticence is being shown by officials in Washington and London about the prospect of a DeGaulle government. / This is the caution of allies. / DeGaulle is expected to weaken the alliance, but it is being left to him to do it. / The less said, the less provoked he will be.

A similar reticence in Moscow, however, has a different reason, and is much more intriguing. Since DeGaulle has long been listed as a fascist, in the Communist book, ~~and since communism is anti-colonial,~~ and DeGaulle has the French army in Algeria to thank for his return to power, one would expect unrestrained vehemence in the Moscow press. But it is not blowing off steam. ~~The~~ Russian reporting from Paris is brief and almost objective.

This is a tribute to the unusual position DeGaulle will occupy. His allies have to get along with him the best they can. / The Russians have everything to gain and nothing to lose. Khrushchev is not following the communists in the Paris Assembly, he is leading them. Last week, in Warsaw, he said that the just demands of the Algerian people have to be met. But he added that a peaceful solution should be reached "with due consideration for the historically evolved relations between France and Algeria." This is a veto on absolute independence for Algeria, which the whole Arab world demands. So Khrushchev is prepared to snub the Arab world for bigger and more immediate results elseqhere. / He expects to get them from DeGaulle.

~~In Washington,~~ Secretary of Defense McElroy was asked this afternoon at a news conference about reports that some NATO equipment might be moved out of Paris because of the critical French situation. McElroy said he was not aware of any such plan. Developments in Paris are being watched. But the present situation, he said, does not call for a change in the alignment of either American or NATO forces in the area. When asked whether he had ever met General DeGaulle, McElroy said he had not. He suggested that no "searching" questions about France be put to him at this time.

There was a new incident today involving French forces in Tunisia. A Tunisian Army spokesman said a French patrol tried to break through a roadblock a few miles outside of Remada, in Southern Tunisia. He said the French opened fire when they were refused permission to pass and that Tunisian troops returned the fire. The action is reported to have lasted five hours. Casualties are not given. But the Tunisian government says it is calling for an immediate Security Council meeting to hear Tunisia's complaint.

Rifle and small arms fire broke out today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. The shooting occurred in the Moslem quarter, where rebel forces are well entrenched. Several explosions were heard during the early morning hours. At least three persons are reported dead.

In Washington, the government announces that the number of unemployed workers receiving compensation has dropped for the fifth straight week. The total, however, is still more than twice as high as it was a year ago. And the decline is due in large part to the fact that many jobless workers have exhausted their benefits. Congress has passed a bill to extend the payment periods...prescribed by the various states...by 50 percent. It is now on President Eisenhower's desk.

The Treasury Department says that next month it will float a 1-billion dollar bond issue. The bonds will mature in 1985...and bear interest at three and one-quarter percent. The new subscription is in addition to the 9-billion-dollar issue to be offered next week for refinancing the national debt.

Today...in Britain...18-thousand stevedores went on strike tying up the London docks. The dockworkers walked out in sympathy with striking meat truck drivers at the Smithfield Market. And the strike of London busmen...belonging to the same union...has now gone through its 25th day.

Negotiations have been resumed in Moscow looking toward a summit conference. The British ambassador called yesterday on Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. And today...in London...a British Foreign Office spokesman said both East and West have agreed at this stage to keep the discussions confidential.

A Federal grand jury today indicted 29 of the country's biggest oil companies on charges of conspiring to violate the anti-trust laws. / The indictment...returned in Alexandria, Virginia...climaxes an investigation started by the grand jury a year and a half ago, at the height of the Suez Canal crisis. The indictment accuses the companies of conspiring to fix the price of gasoline and crude oil.

In Detroit... representatives of General Motors and the United Auto Workers Union are still negotiating a new wage contract to replace the agreement that expires at midnight tonight. / There have been no new concessions. Each side accuses the other of refusing to bargain. / But the union says there will be no strike. G.M. has said it will keep the plants operating without a contract, and Ford and Chrysler are expected to follow suit...if there is no agreement when their contracts run out at midnight Sunday.

West Germany announced tonight that it has agreed to pay Great Britain 240-million dollars for the maintenance of British forces in Germany until 1961. / West Germany agrees...in addition...to deposit 140-million dollars in Britain to help finance German arms purchases. / And to speed up payments to Britain on its postwar debt. / The agreement climaxes months of negotiation.

Back in a moment—
now a word from Ford—

Word for Today

Moscow has no love for DeGaulle, but the Soviet press...with an eye to the future...is reporting the French story with great restraint. Russia's leaders would seem to know the old Chinese proverb, "Suit self to circumstances." And of course Cato said, "The wise man does no wrong in changing his habits with the times."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, May 29, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... President Coty today asked General de Gaulle to try to form a new government. De Gaulle accepted the task. He also said that the General Assembly would have to give him full powers. For a direct report here is my colleague David Schoenbrun speaking from Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The rasping blasts of the French car horns, once the late motif of the Paris Symphony but outlawed in an anti-noise campaign four years ago, were heard again on the boulevards of this nation's capital tonight. The calm indifference of Parisians was suddenly broken by a spontaneous demonstration in favor of General de Gaulle as the news spread that the President of the Republic had begun the process of bringing General de Gaulle to power. The news was broadcast to the people after dinner tonight, at the end of a long tense day, highlighted by a pathetic appeal by President Rene Coty to Parliament warning that the nation was hovering on the brink of civil war. Monsieur Coty sent his warning in a precedent-shattering message to Parliament. The chief magistrate who's sworn to uphold the constitution admitted in his message that he was going beyond constitutional traditions in making a direct appeal to the legislative power. But he said the gravity of the hour made necessary a break with tradition. This, he said, was why he had asked the speakers of Parliament to contact General de Gaulle, to attempt to reach agreement with him on the formation of a government of national union to save the Republic from anarchy and civil war. The contact was made at dawn today, but agreement was not reached, the President said, because some parties still opposed the General. He did not name the parties but everyone knew that he meant the Communists and above all the Socialists. And just so long as a major democratic party like the Socialists refuses to vote for de Gaulle, the General will not try to form a government. For obviously, to be a government of national safety and of union, to unite the country it must be backed by all of the democratic parties and particularly the party of the workers of France.

To break this deadlock the President appealed once more to Parliament to rally behind the liberator of France, and he said that this would be his last appeal. If his plea fell upon deaf ears he would resign as Chief of State.

The Coty message was listened to in deathly silence, and when the speaker ended the silence was torn by a roar from the House. On the extreme left the Communists, the biggest group in Parliament, rose from their seats and began to sing The Marseillaise. Socialist deputies jumped to attention for the national anthem and then in their turn they began to sing a song that tears at the hearts of Frenchmen, "Le ..." the song of the deportees on their way to Nazi concentration camps. The extreme Right, infuriated, began to shout and stamp and sing The Marseillaise in their turn, while from the public galleries people began to throw pro-de Gaulle cracks down into the House. While this tumult was raging inside the divided and desperate Parliament, de Gaulle himself was once again speeding to Paris, for this third flying trip since he said that he would not return until called to office. Well, he had been called again by President Coty, who appealed to him for a third and last time, he said, to try to form a government. De Gaulle saw Coty here as night was falling over Paris. He agreed to make a try - but the General refused to play the political game. He said he would not negotiate personally with the parties. They had to call him. The tired old President of France, 76-yr. old Rene Coty, caught in the riptide of passions, loosed by stubborn and tempestuous men, decided to take upon himself the role of negotiator for General de Gaulle, his intermediary with the party leaders. These consultations will begin tomorrow morning. It is the last act of the drama of the Fourth Republic. What is there to negotiate? What's really going on inside this deadly struggle? Well, the heart of the matter is the refusal, thus far, of the Socialists to commit suicide and convert the Republic into one-man rule. President Coty will try to convince them tomorrow that de Gaulle is a savior not a dictator, that he wants power only for a limited time to accomplish a limited purpose. The time period, this reporter is told, is one year. The purpose? To bring the Army back into the ranks of the Republic, to reunite France, to restore law and order in Algeria, to create a France-Moslem community to end the war. De Gaulle, and de Gaulle alone, can do this the President believes. Many of the Democratic politicians also believe now that de Gaulle alone can end the immediate threat of civil war but they fear that the price he's asking is personal rule, and they don't believe it will end in a year as promised, and they fear the forces behind Charles de Gaulle. This is the red and angry eye of the storm. The fear and suspicion that surrounds de Gaulle and the Army behind him. How will this end? Will Coty succeed in dispelling the storm clouds? Will he win confidence for de Gaulle? One cannot be sure. For no one knows how men will react under this terrible soul searching pressure. For these are men haunted by the ghosts of the past. The Socialists remember how their fathers voted full power to old Marshal Petain, in 1940, and how the Marshal killed the Third Republic. They don't want to make the same mistake with another military man. They don't want to live eternally in history with this new shame. This is the agony of France tonight, as the Fourth Republic in its death throes yet refuses to die. This is Paris. David Schoenbrun reporting. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Nowhere are the developments in Paris being watched more closely than from Algiers. For a direct report we switch to Algiers and Lou Cioffi.

CIOFFI: The leaders of Algeropia's revolutionary movement made it clear tonight that if there is a showdown the Army will move. The threats levelled at Paris are both veiled and open. A spokesman pointed out that this morning's resolution, voted unanimously by the Committee of Public Safety, warned that the Army would be on guard against those anti-national subversives. He also called attention to a comment by General Salan this morning as a formation of planes flew overhead in the form of a Cross of Lorraine. General Salan said "That sign is our sign and we will follow it against all comers and all opposition." The planes by the way were troop carriers used by parachutists in their air drops.

A more direct threat came from committee member Leon Delbecque, who stated flatly that the Army will move if General de Gaulle is stymied in his bid to gain power. He said the Army cannot remain static at this time. "It cannot keep on looking from the Balcony at the forum. We have had enough of the Fourth Republic," Delbecque said and he expressed the hope that this morning's resolution, issued by the committee, would not have to be acted upon, except Delbecque called it an "ultimatum."

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Coty today asked General de Gaulle to try to form a new government. De Gaulle accepted the task. He also said that the General Assembly would have to give him full powers. For a direct report here is my colleague David Schoenbrun speaking from Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The rasping blasts of the French car horns, once the late motif of the Paris Symphony but outlawed in an anti-noise campaign four years ago, were heard again on the boulevards of this nation's capital tonight. The calm indifference of Parisians was suddenly broken by a spontaneous demonstration in favor of General de Gaulle as the news spread that the President of the Republic had begun the process of bringing General de Gaulle to power. The news was broadcast to the people after dinner tonight, at the end of a long tense day, highlighted by a pathetic appeal by President Rene Coty to Parliament warning that the nation was hovering on the brink of civil war. Monsieur Coty sent his warning in a precedent-shattering message to Parliament. The chief magistrate who's sworn to uphold the constitution admitted in his message that he was going beyond constitutional traditions in making a direct appeal to the legislative power. But he said the gravity of the hour made necessary a break with tradition. This, he said, was why he had asked the speakers of Parliament to contact General de Gaulle, to attempt to reach agreement with him on the formation of a government of national union to save the Republic from anarchy and civil war. The contact was made at dawn today, but agreement was not reached, the President said, because some parties still opposed the General. He did not name the parties but everyone knew that he meant the Communists and above all the Socialists. And just so long as a major democratic party like the Socialists refuses to vote for de Gaulle, the General will not try to form a government. For obviously, to be a government of national safety and of union, to unite the country it must be backed by all of the democratic parties and particularly the party of the workers of France.

To break this deadlock the President appealed once more to Parliament to rally behind the liberator of France, and he said that this would be his last appeal. If his plea fell upon deaf ears he would resign as Chief of State.

The Coty message was listened to in deathly silence, and when the speaker ended the silence was torn by a roar from the House. On the extreme left the Communists, the biggest group in Parliament, rose from their seats and began to sing The Marseillaise. Socialist deputies jumped to attention for the national anthem and then in their turn they began to sing a song that tears at the hearts of Frenchmen, "Le..." the song of the deportees on their way to Nazi concentration camps. The extreme Right, infuriated, began to shout and stamp and sing The Marseillaise in their turn, while from the public gallaries people began to throw pro-de Gaulle cracks down into the House. While this tumult was raging inside the divided and desperate Parliament, de Gaulle himself was once again speeding to Paris, for this third flying trip since he said that he would not return until called to office. Well, he had been called again by President Coty, who appealed to him for a third and last time, he said, to try to form a government. De Gaulle saw Coty here as night was falling over Paris. He agreed to make a try - but the General refused to play the political game. He said he would not negotiate personally with the parties. They had to call him. The tired old President of France, 76-yr. old Rene Coty, caught in the riptide of passions, loosed by stubborn and tempestuous men, decided to take upon himself the role of negotiator for General de Gaulle, his intermediary with the party leaders. These consultations will begin tomorrow morning. It is the last act of the drama of the Fourth Republic. What is there to negotiate? What's really going on inside this deadly struggle? Well, the heart of the matter is the refusal, thus far, of the Socialists to commit suicide and convert the Republic into one-man rule. President Coty will try to convince them tomorrow that de Gaulle is a savior not a dictator, that he wants power only for a limited time to accomplish a limited purpose. The time period, this reporter is told, is one year. The purpose? To bring the Army back into the ranks of the Republic, to reunite France, to restore law and order in Algeria, to create a Franco-Moslem community to end the war. De Gaulle, and de Gaulle alone, can do this the President believes. Many Democratic politicians also believe now that de Gaulle alone can end the immediate threat of civil war but they fear that the price he's asking is personal rule, and they don't believe it will end in a year as promised, and they fear the forces behind Charles de Gaulle. This is the red and angry eye of the storm. The fear and suspicion that surrounds de Gaulle and the Army behind him. How will this end? Will Coty succeed in dispelling the storm clouds? Will he win confidence for de Gaulle? One cannot be sure. For no one knows how men will react under this terrible soul searching pressure. For these men are haunted by the ghosts of the past. The Socialists remember how their fathers voted full power to old Marshal Petain, in 1940, and how the Marshal killed the Third Republic. They don't want to make the same mistake with another military man. They don't want to live eternally in history with this new shame. This is the agony of France tonight, as the Fourth Republic in its death throes yet refuses to die. This is Paris. David Schoenbrun reporting. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Nowhere are the developments in Paris being watched more closely than from Algiers. For a direct report we switch to Algiers and Lou Cioffi.

CIOFFI: The leaders of Algeria 's revolutionary movement made it clear tonight that if there is a showdown the Army will move. The threats levelled at Paris are both veiled and open. A spokesman pointed out that this morning's resolution, voted unanimously by the Committee of Public Safety, warned that the Army would be on guard against those anti-national subversives. He also called attention to a comment by General Salan this morning as a formation of planes flew overhead in the form of a Cross of Lorraine. General Salan said "That sign is our sign and we will follow it against all comers and all opposition." The planes by the way were troop carriers used by parachutists in their air drops.

A more direct threat came from committee member Leon Delbecque, who stated flatly that the Army will move if General de Gaulle is stymied in his bid to gain power. He said the Army cannot remain static at this time. "It cannot keep on looking from the balcony at the forum. We had had enough of the Fourth Republic," Delbecque said and he expressed the hope that this morning's resolution, issued by the committee, would not have to be acted upon, except Delbecque called it an "ultimatum."

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Painful reticence is being shown by officials in Washington and London about the prospect of a de Gaulle government. This is the caution of allies. De Gaulle is expected to weaken the alliance, but it is being left to him to do it. The less said, the less provoked he will be.

A similar reticence in Moscow, however, has a different reason, and is much more intriguing. Since de Gaulle has long been listed as a fascist, in the Communist book, and de Gaulle has the French army in Algeria to thank for his return to power, one would expect unrestrained vehemence in the Moscow press. But it is not blowing off steam. Russian reporting from Paris is brief and almost objective.

This is a tribute to the unusual position de Gaulle will occupy. His allies have to get along with him the best they can. The Russians have everything to gain and nothing to lose. Khrushchev is not following the communists in the Paris Assembly, he is leading them. Last week, in Warsaw, he said that the just demands of the Algerian people have to be met. But he added that a peaceful solution should be reached "with due consideration for the historically evolved relations between France and Algeria." This is a veto on absolute independence for Algeria, which the whole Arab world demands. So Khrushchev is prepared to snub the Arab world for bigger and more immediate results elsewhere. He expects to get them from de Gaulle.

Secretary of Defense McElroy was asked this afternoon at a news conference about reports that some NATO equipment might be moved out of Paris because of the critical French situation. McElroy said he was not aware of any such plan. Developments in Paris are being watched. But the present situation, he said, does not call for a change in the alignment of either American or NATO forces in the area. When asked whether he had ever met General de Gaulle, McElroy said he had not. He suggested that no "searching" questions about France be put to him at this time.

There was a new incident today involving French forces in Tunisia. A Tunisian Army spokesman said a French patrol tried to break through a roadblock a few miles outside of Remada, in Southern Tunisia. He said the French opened fire when they were refused permission to pass and that Tunisian troops returned the fire. The action is reported to have lasted five hours. Casualties are not given. But the Tunisian government says it is calling for an immediate Security Council meeting to hear Tunisia's complaint.

Rifle and small arms fire broke out today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. The shooting occured in the Moslem quarter, where rebel forces are well entrenched. Several explosions were heard during the early morning hours. At least three persons are reported dead.

In Washington, the government announces that the number of unemployed workers receiving compensation has dropped for the fifth straight week. The total, however, is still more than twice as high as it was a year ago. And the decline is due in large part to the fact that many jobless wokkers have exhausted their benefits. Congress has passed a bill to extend the payment periods... prescribed by the various states...by 50 percent. It is now on President Eisenhower's desk.

The Treasury Department says that next month it will float a 1-billion dollar bond issue. The bonds will mature in 1985...and bear interest at three and one-quarter percent. The new subscription is in additon to the 9-billion dollar issue to be offered next week for refinancing the national debt.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, a word from Ford.

COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Moscow has no love for de Gaulle, but the Soviet press..with an eye to the future...is reporting the French story with great restraint. Russia's leaders would seem to know the old Chinese proverb, "Suit self to circumstances." And of course Cato said, "The wise man does no wrong in changing his habits with the times."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 30, 1958

This is the news:

The French crisis continues. For a direct report of what is happening, we switch to David Schonebrun in Paris:

Tape runs 3:55

Ends on cue :"to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

In the past few days, there has been increasing evidence that both Russia and the United States want to keep their hands free to deal with General DeGaulle---if and when he comes to power. What is not known is how DeGaulle would deal with us. My colleague. Daniel Schorr, has some information on this, and so we switch to him now in Washington.

(Tape runs 2:51
(Ends on cue: "--to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

[redacted] Algiers tonight saw its biggest demonstration since the DeGaulle movement started on May 13. A crowd...estimated at 100-thousand...cheered the name of DeGaulle and kept shouting, "Algeria is French."

A new exchange of gunfire is reported between French and Tunisian forces at Remada, in Southern Tunisia. And Tunisian officials call the situation "highly dangerous". Tunisia has lodged a complaint against France in the United Nations Security Council, charging "armed aggression." France...in a counter-complaint...accuses Tunisia of helping the Algerian rebels and of breaching agreements looking toward a settlement of the French-Tunisian problem. The Security Council will meet Monday.

Lebanon reports new sporadic fighting in the port city of Tripoli. It also reports continuing "mop-up" operations against rebel forces in Southern Lebanon.

In Moscow, the Army newspaper Red Star says "imperialist interference" is threatening "to develop into open aggression against Lebanon." It claims "imperialist plotters" are making ready for a new war in the Middle East.

Yugoslavia today announced that President Nasser will visit Belgrade in July. Nasser recently returned to Egypt after a 17-day visit in the Soviet Union. A Yugoslav government spokesman said that a meeting between President Tito and Prime Minister Nehru of India also would be "very useful".

The government spokesman denounced Russia's suspension of economic credits to Yugoslavia. He said the action...postponing a 285-million-dollar aid program for five years...amounted to the unilateral cancellation of a valid agreement, something "obviously at odds with generally accepted norms in international relations." Yugoslavia is sending a note of protest to Moscow. And if the Soviet government does not accept the Yugoslav attitude, the spokesman said, then Yugoslavia "will be forced to demand compensation for the losses incurred." He explained that the credit suspension would create "certain difficulties" for the fulfillment of Yugoslavia's current five-year plan. Russia suspended the loan after Yugoslav Communist leaders at their recent party congress reaffirmed their political independence of Moscow.

The London dock strike has gone through its second day...idling 97 ships. And the London bus strike is in its fourth week.

In Geneva, Switzerland, the International Labor Organization today issued a report that unemployment is rising in most countries---including the Communist countries of Eastern Europe. The report says it would be a "mistake" to exaggerate the severity of the recession. But any worsening of the situation, it warns, could have "grave consequences". The report suggests that highly industrialized nations in Europe and North America might help combat the situation by stepping up production of capital equipment for under-developed countries. It says there are "indications" that the recession...particularly in the United States...may be primarily a "machine depression" resulting in idle machinery-producing capacity.

→

General Motors was operating today without a contract after the expiration...last midnight...of its old contract with the United Auto Workers Union. There is no threat of a strike. The union's contracts with Ford and Chrysler are due to expire at midnight Sunday. Negotiations held on that front today are said to have resulted in "no progress".

The body of Samuel Cardinal Stritch...who died last Tuesday in Rome... was brought back today to the Chicago archdiosese, which he had served for 18 years. The body rests tonight in a casket before the altar in Holy Name Cathedral. The burial will be next Tuesday.

Today, at Arlington National Cemetery, the bodies of two servicemen---one who died in World War Two, the other in the Korean War---were laid to rest beside the unknown soldier who died in World War One. No one knew their names, rank, service, color, or how they died. Two black caissons...each drawn by six gray horses...had brought them down Constitution Avenue from the Capitol, where they had lain in state in the great rotunda for two days. At the Arlington amphitheatre, President Eisenhower bestowed on them the Medal of Honor, "on behalf," he said, "of a grateful people."

This was the high service this Memorial Day. Throughout most of the country, there were parades, and graves were decorated. Cars filled the highways. Ned Dearborn, president of the National Safety Council...noting the occurrence of nearly 60 traffic deaths...said the holiday death count is "tragically on schedule."

At the Indianapolis Speedway...Jimmy Bryan, of Phoenix, Arizona, won the 500-mile Memorial Day auto race with an average speed of almost 134 miles an hour. The veteran driver, Pat O'Connor, was killed in a 12-car pile-up [redacted] at the start.

Back in moment—

George Bryson.

Word for Today

The Unknown Soldier of World War One was joined today by the unknown servicemen of Korea and World War Two. And a newspaperman, Dud Chamberlain, Jr., would have the first Unknown Soldier ask them:

"Tell me, friends, how came you here? How did you die?"
If you fell as I, alone, unknown upon some bloody field,
then tell me this:
How came the wars in which you fought? Whither went
"eternal peace" for which I died?"

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 30, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The French crisis continues. For a direct report of what is happening, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris - a capital amazingly calm for a country threatened with an imminent change of regime and the menace of civil war. If you were here with us at this moment, at the CBS News studios just behind the opera, or at our office overlooking the Champs Elysees, you might think it was New Year's Eve or perhaps that a movie company was shooting some scenes of a picture recalling the liberation of Paris. But no one would believe that this is a capital teetering on the brink of revolution. Nor would you suspect that the man of destiny who's being called to save his country had just a few minutes ago driven into town and gone to his hotel just off the Champs Elysees. Yet, Charles de Gaulle did just enter Paris and he drove right past the Champs Elysees, and as of this moment there's no demonstration either for or against him at his hotel. It might come later when the crowd hears that the great man has arrived. A pro-de Gaulle claque has been touring around town all day, in expensive sports cars blowing their horns to the rhythm of the phrase: "De Gaulle au pouvoir" - de Gaulle to power. They've been blowing their horns, in New Year's style, ever since dawn this morning. It has been more or less a good natured kind of musical comedy performance, with many bejeweled ladies and elegantly tailored gentlemen standing in front of chic supper clubs shouting "The police are with us. Long live de Gaulle," as they waved ebony canes and diamond bracelets as a standard of the Republic. There were a few, but very few, fights as rude workers lost their temper at the sight of the noisy, well-heeled claque, but as of this moment nothing serious yet.

The only place that symbolizes danger in Paris tonight is the famous Concorde Bridge leading to the National Assembly, where the Socialist party met this evening trying to decide whether to hand over power to the general or fight against him. There must be some 2,000 riot troops massed around the bridge and the Assembly. Leading the fight for de Gaulle inside that party is the Secretary General, Guy Mollet, who consulted with de Gaulle earlier today at Colombey. Monsieur Mollet, one of the chief figures of the Fourth Republic, has decided that only de Gaulle can save this country from civil war and he's trying to win his own party over to that view. Mollet has already swung more than half the Socialists over to de Gaulle, but the General wants more than just a bare majority. He wants an overwhelming majority of the democratic deputies. For de Gaulle does not want to be the candidate of a faction. He feels that he can only save the day and be true to his concept of history by getting a huge majority, symbolizing his position as the national savior over and above political parties. He is very close to winning that - but he has not yet overcome Socialist and some Radical opposition, notably the opposition of Mendes-France and some of his followers.

Meanwhile, the General and his spokesmen are showing signs of impatience. The very fact that de Gaulle has returned to this capital tonight, for the fourth time in five days, accompanied with his wife and with their car piled high with valises indicates that the climax may be at hand. The General's spokesmen are also saying that he will not be trapped into the parliamentary game of endless negotiations. They say he means to get agreement by tomorrow morning, and to go to Parliament in the afternoon or to call off his attempt to form a government and - as he said yesterday - retire into his grief until his death. In other words, de Gaulle means to force the issue to a decision within 24-hrs. But the parliamentarians are still resisting. The Socialists have just adjourned their meeting inconclusively and have scheduled a new parley for tomorrow morning. This story is something like an old fashioned serial's thriller, one of the longest political cliff hangers in history. That's the situation here in Paris as of this minute. David Schoenbrun reporting and returning you to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Inthe past few days there has been increasing evidence that both Russia and the United States want to keep their hands free to deal with General de Gaulle if and when he comes to power. What is not known is how General de Gaulle would deal with us. My colleague Daniel Schorr has some information on this. So we switch to him now in Washington.

SCHORR: President Eisenhower said Wednesday that he liked General de Gaulle. Last night Marshal Voroshilov, the figurehead President of the Soviet Union, was quoted telling a French reporter, at a Moscow reception, that he did not like de Gaulle, that he thought de Gaulle's rise to power would do more harm than good. It was a surprising remark considering how gingerly Russia has been in comment on de Gaulle. But it soon became evident that the aging, almost senile Voroshilov had goofed. The Moscow censor, caught napping at first, passed the remark in first dispatches filed. But this morning he cut off CBS News correspondent Paul Niven when he tried to repeat it in a broadcast - and later the Soviet Foreign Ministry angrily denounced the Voroshilov quotation as a complete fabrication intended to harm Franco-Soviet relations. This is not the first time the Soviets, on sober second thought, have disclaimed the casual remarks of their leaders. Twice in the past two years, Khrushchev has made slighting remarks about France, once about prostitutes on the streets of Paris, another time about France's ineffectualness because of her weak political system, both of which were subsequently denied. But this time, the denial was on an important issue, at a critical time. And Moscow must have known that by denying its disapproval of de Gaulle, it would leave the impression that it in fact approved him.

The Kremlin frequently chooses roundabout negative means to state something positive. Thus, the United States, by what its President said, and Russia by denying what its President supposedly said, have held out olive branches to de Gaulle, have left themselves free to deal with him if he comes to power. But what does de Gaulle think of the two great powers? There are a few who are privy to the General's real thoughts. But one Frenchman, close to him, who had a long talk with de Gaulle recently and who has been in Washington in the last few days, has said that de Gaulle spoke bitterly of both Russia and the United States. He showed thr same disdain for the way the big powers rule world affairs as he feels for the way successive governments have run French affairs. De Gaulle was quoted as saying that Khrushchev and Eisenhower handled themselves like cows, that is to say, in a fumbling, unimaginative manner. De Gaulle gave the impression he felt it his destiny not only to guide France but the world. If this is true, and we have every reason to believe it is, then both the United States and Russia may find their courtship of de Gaulle falling on reluctant ears. And the Third Force, a conception that runs deep in France, may be revived to complicate the affairs of the world. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: ...

Ed. trans. - P. O.

Edward R. Murrow: May 30, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

2

The dead we honor today were the defenders of the freedom, unity and safety of their country. / We remain free and united, but nobody would say we are very safe. / Our civilization could end almost in a flash. / Our safety from these awesome weapons does not lie in our defense against them, but solely in the fact that we have them. / If they are used against us or our allies, we shall use them too. We are not protected; we can only annihilate. Our safety is small. The threat of mutual annihilation produces the present uneasiness. / And that uneasiness brings the great powers to talk about disarmament.

Two institutions, the League of Nations and the United Nations, were not able to make us safe. Safety to a degree comes when law takes the place of uncontrolled power. If there is not to be mutual destruction, there must be mutual dismantling of the destructive power. / This can only be done by gradual step-by-step disarmament, under international inspection, based upon agreements and machinery of enforcement, having the effect of law. Such an agreement will be terribly hard to come by, but it would be the real start of world law, and it might be all the world law we need to be safe. It may well be impossible of achievement. / Those who died, bought with their lives the opportunity to try.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 30, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The French crisis continues. For a direct report of what is happening, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris - a capital amazingly calm for a country threatened with an imminent change of regime and the menace of civil war. If you were here with us at this moment, at the CBS News studios just behind the opera, or at our office overlooking the Champs Elysees, you might think it was New Year's Eve or perhaps that a movie company was shooting some scenes of a picture recalling the liberation of Paris. But no one would believe that this is a capital teetering on the brink of revolution. Nor would you suspect that the man of destiny who's being called to save his country had just a few minutes ago driven into town and gone to his hotel just off the Champs Elysees. Yet, Charles de Gaulle did just enter Paris and he drove right past the Champs Elysees, and as of this moment there's no demonstration either for or against him at his hotel. It might come later when the crowd hears that the great man has arrived. A pro de Gaulle claque has been touring around town all day, in expensive sports cars blowing their horns to the rhythm of the phrase: "De Gaulle au pouvoir"-de Gaulle to power. They've been blowing their horns, in New Year's style, ever since dawn this morning. It has been more or less a good natured kind of musical comedy performance, with many bejeweled ladies and elegantly tailored gentlemen standing in front of chic supper clubs shouting, "The police are with us. Long live de Gaulle," as they waved ebony canes and diamond bracelets as a standard of the Republic. There were a few, but very few, fights as rude workers lost their temper at the sight of the noisy well-heeled claque, but as of this moment nothing serious yet.

The only place that symbolizes danger in Paris tonight is the famous Concord Bridge leading to the National Assembly, where the Socialist Party met this evening trying to decide whether to hand over power to the General or fight against him. There must be some 2,000riot troops massed around the bridge and the Assembly. Leading the fight for de Gaulle inside that party is the Secretary General, Guy Mollet, who consulted with de Gaulle earlier today at Colombey. Monsieur Mollet, one of the chief figures of the Fourth Republic has decided that only de Gaulle can save this country from civil war and he's trying to win his own party over to that view. Mollet has already swung more than half the Socialists over to de Gaulle, but the General wants more than just a bare majority, He wants an overwhelming majority of the democratic deputies. For de Gaulle does not want to be the candidate of a faction. He feels that he can only save the day and be true to his concept of history by getting a huge majority, symbolizing his position as the national savior over and above political parties. He is very close to winning that - but he has not yet overcome Socialist and some Radical opposition, notably the opposition of Mendes-France and some of his followers.

Meanwhile, the General and his spokesmen are showing signs of impatience. The very fact that de Gaulle has returned to this capital tonight,for the fourth time in five days, accompanied with his wife and with their car piled high with valises indicates that the climax may be at hand. The General's spokesmen are also saying that he will not be trapped into the parliamentary game of endless negotiations. They say he means to get agreement by tomorrow morning, and to go to Parliament in the afternoon or to call off his attempt to form a government and - as he said yesterday - retire into his grief until his death. In other words, de Gaulle means to force the issue to a decision within 24 hours. But the parliamentarians are still resisting. The Socialists have just adjourned their meeting inconclusively and have scheduled a new parley for tomorrow morning. This story is something like an old fashioned serials thriller, one of the longest political cliff hangers in history. That's the situation here in Paris as of this minute. David Schoenbrun reporting and returning you to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In the past few days there has been increasing evidence that both Russia and the United States want to keep their hands free to deal with General de Gaulle if and when he comes to power. What is not known is how General de Gaulle would deal with us. My colleague Daniel Schorr has some information on this. So we switch to him now in Washington.

SCHORR: President Eisenhower said Wednesday that he liked General de Gaulle. Last night Marshal Voroshilov, the figurehead President of the Soviet Union, was quoted telling a French reporter at a Moscow reception, that he did not like de Gaulle, that he thought de Gaulle's rise to power would do more harm than good. It was a surprising remark considering how gingerly Russia has been in comment on de Gaulle. But it soon became evident that the aging, almost senile Voroshilov had goofed. The Moscow censor, caught napping at first, passed the remark in first dispatches filed. But this morning he cut off CBS News correspondent Paul Niven when he tried to repeat it in a broadcast - and later theSoviet Foreign Ministry angrily denounced the Voroshilov quotation as a complete fabrication intended to harm Franco-Soviet relations. This is not the first time the Soviets on sober second thought, have disclaimed the casual remarks of their leaders. Twice in the past two years, Khrushchev has made slighting remarks about France, once about prostitutes on the streets of Paris, another time abut France's ineffectualness because of her weak political system, both of which were subsequently denied. But this time, the denial was on an important issue, at a critical time. And Moscow must have known that by denying its disapproval of de Gaulle, it would leave the impression that it in fact approved him.

The Kremlin frequently chooses roundabout negative means to state something positive. Thus, the United States, by what its President said, and Russia by denying what its President supposedly said, have held out olive branches to de Gaulle, have left themselves free to deal with him if he comes to power. But what does de Gaulle think of the two great powers? There are a few who are privy to the General's real thoughts. But one Frenchman, close to him, who had a long talk with de Gaulle recently and who has been in Washington in the last few days, has said that de Gaulle spoke bitterly of both Russia and the United States. He showed the same disdain for the way the big powers rule world affairs as he feels for the way successive governments have run French affairs. De Gaulle was quoted as saying that Khrushchev and Eisenhower handled themselves like cows, that is to say, in a fumbling, unimaginative manner. De Gaulle gave the impression he felt it in his destiny not only to guide France but the world. If this is true, and we have every reason to believe it is, then both the United States and Russia may find their courtship of de Gaulle falling on reluctant ears. And the Third Force, a conception that runs deep in France, may be revived to complicate the affairs of the world. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Algiers tonight saw its biggest demonstration since the De Gaulle movement started on May 13th. A crowd...estimated at 100-thousand...cheered the name of de Gaulle and kept shouting, "Algeria is French."

A new exchange of gunfire is reported between French and Tunisian forces at Remada, in Southern Tunisia. And Tunisian officials call the situation "highly dangerous." Tunisia has lodged a complaint against France in the United Nations Security Council, charging "armed aggression." France in a counter-complaint...accuses Tunisia of helping the Algerian rebels and of breaching agreements looking toward a settlement of the French-Tunisian problem. The Security Council will meet Monday.

Lebanon reports new sporadic fighting in the port city of Tripoli. It also reports continuing "mop-up" operations against rebel forces in Southern Lebanon.

In Moscow, the Army newspaper Red Star says "imperialist interference" is threatening "to develop into open aggression against Lebanon." It claims "imperialist plotters" are making ready for a new war in the Middle East.

Yugoslavia today announced that President Nasser will visit Belgrade in July. Nasser recently returned to Egypt after a 17 day visit in the Soviet Union. A yugoslav government spokesman said that a meeting between President Tito and Prime Minister Nehru of India also would be "very useful."

The government spokesman denounced Russia's suspension of economic credits to Yugoslavia. He said the action...postponing a 285-million dollar aid program for five years....amounted to the unilateral cancellation of a valid agreement.

The London dock strike has gone through its second day...idling 97 ships. And the London bus strike is in its fourth week.

General Motors was operating today without a contract after the expiration last midnight...of its old contract with the United Auto Workers Union. There is no threat of a strike. The union's contracts with Ford and Chrysler are due to expire at midnight Sunday. Negotiations held on that front today are said to have resulted in "no progress."

The body of Samuel Cardinal Stritch...who died last Tuesday in Rome... was brought back today to the Chicago archdiosese, which he had served for 18 years. The body rests tonight in a casket before the altar in Holy Name Cathedral. The burial will be next Tuesday.

Today, at Arlington National Cemetery, the bodies of two servicemen---one who died in World War Two, the other in the Korean War---were laid to rest beside the unknown soldier who died in World War One. No one knew their names, rank, service, color, or how they died. Two black caissons...each drawn by six gray horses..has brought them down Constitution Avenue from the Capitol, where they had lain in state in the great rotunda for two days. At the Arlington amphi-theatre, President Eisenhower bestowed on them the Medal of Honor, "on behalf," he said, "of a grateful people."

This was the high service this Memorial Day. Throughout most of the country, there were parades and graves were decorated. Cars filled the highways. Ned Dearborn, president of the National Safety Council...noting the occurrence of nearly 60 traffic deaths...said the holiday death count is "tragically on schedule."

At the Indianapolis Speedway...Jimmy Bryan, of Phoenix, Arizona, won the 500 mile Memorial Day auto race with an average speed of almost 134 miles an hour. The veteran driver, Pat O'Connor, was killed in a 12 car pile-up at the start.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Unknown Soldier of World War One was joined today by the unknown servicemen of Korea and World War Two. And a newspaperman, Dud Chamberlain, Jr. would have the first Unknown Soldier ask them:

"Tell me, friends, how came you here? How did you die?
If you fell as I, alone, unknown upon some bloody field,
then tell me this:
How came the wars in which you fought? Whither went eternal peace for which I died?"

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow | Mon., June 2, 1958

This is the news:

The French National Assembly today voted General DeGaulle power to rule by decree for six months. But a key committee in the assembly refused to approve his program for constitutional reform. DeGaulle then demanded that the reform bill be voted on as an issue of confidence. DeGaulle said if he lost the vote, he would resign. For a direct report, we switch to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

(Tape runs 3:40
(Returns on cue: "--to Edw R. Murrow in N.Y."

The Committee of Public Safety in Algiers has issued a statement on the pending arrival there of General DeGaulle. Here is that story from Lou Cioffi in Algiers. (TAPE runs 1:37, ends on cue "--to Edw R. Murrow in N.Y."

(2)

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the United States expects to have "close and cordial relations" with the new government headed by General DeGaulle. / He would assume, on the basis of what DeGaulle has said, that France will be faithful to its treaty obligations.

Mr. Dulles talked to reporters after meeting for an hour with the President. / He said that he and Mr. Eisenhower are "reasonably optimistic" that technical talks with Russia, on how to enforce a ban on nuclear weapons tests, can begin this month. / Last Saturday, Premier Khrushchev sent a letter, agreeing to the talks...but suggesting that qualified Czech and Polish experts be included. / Dulles indicated that the United States would have no objection to this. He said Mr. Eisenhower has approved a reply to the Khrushchev letter, "subject to coordination with our allies."

~~The United States told Russia today that it is conducting "routine surveillance" of a small fleet of Russian fishing boats, a hundred miles off Nova Scotia. / Russia has complained that American aircraft [illegible] recently buzzed one of these vessels. / A State Department~~ spokesman ~~said today that freedom of navigation is "not violated in any manner by such reconnaissance." In conducting this reconnaissance, he said, it is sometimes necessary to~~

→

—INSERT—

David Schoenbrun has just told us...over the short-wave channel...

that General DeGaulle's constitutional reform bill has been approved by the National Assembly in Paris by a vote of 350 to 163.

(3) 8

~~come within visual identification range."~~

~~President Eisenhower received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree today at Mount St. Marys College, in Maryland. He told the graduating class that never before were there "more frontiers to explore, more crusades to be waged." He said he would like America's youth to crusade especially for two things---justice at home and abroad and world peace.~~

—INSERT—

The United Nations Security Council met today to hear statements in the French-Tunisian dispute. Tunisia asked the council to take all steps necessary to compel French soldiers to quit Tunisian soil. It accused French troops of aggression in the recent fighting at Remada, in Southern Tunisia. France denied the charge...and asked Tunisia to put its trust in General DeGaulle...who, it said, wanted to resume private talks, aimed at a peaceful settlement. The Security Council will Meet again Wed.

Tonight, DeGaulle sent a message to President Bourguiba of Tunisia. DeGaulle said, "I wish promptly to express my intention of settling with you the present difficulties between our two countries, and the conditions for good relations in the future." "Until we are able to do this," he said, "I trust our two governments may avoid anything which might aggravate the situation." DeGaulle also sent a message to King Mohammed of Morocco, urging a joint policy "in keeping with the friendship of ~~such~~ our two peoples." The ~~Security Council will meet again on Wednesday~~.

→

(4)

In Congress today, the House voted to set up a powerful civilian space agency. The administrator of the agency would have an advisory committee of 17 members---eight from outside the government and nine from government agencies, including at least three from the Defense Department. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The House also approved a 10 percent pay raise for a million civil service workers. And that measure now goes to a Senate-House conference committee. The Senate had voted for a raise of seven and a half percent. ~~The House favored the 10 percent figure because of the raise...in that amount...recently granted postal employes.~~

A House subcommittee today voted down the measure authorizing federal construction of a high dam in Hell's Canyon, on the Snake River. The vote was 15 to 13. And the legislation apparently is now dead. The Idaho Power Company...a private utility...has been licensed by the Federal Power Commission to build three dams in Hell's Canyon. Construction of two of these dams already is under way.

(5) a

The United States Supreme Court today barred the deportation of Frank Bonetti, of Los Angeles...an alien who came to this country from Italy in 1922 and who belonged to the Communist Party in the early 1930's. He was being deported under the McCarran Act. The court ruled...in a 6 to 3 decision...that the deportation order should be dismissed. It cited the fact that Bonetti had left the country to fight in the Spanish Civil War and...although freely acknowledging his past Communist affiliation...had been re-admitted for permanent residence in this country in 1938.

The "Big Three" auto companies----Ford, General Motors and Chrysler---- continued operations today without a union contract. The U.A.W. contracts with Ford and Chrysler expired last night without a new agreement. The union's contract with G.M. expired [redacted] at midnight Thursday. Negotiations will continue.

Edward R. Murrow: June 2, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The case of Dr. Jesus de Galindez, Spanish scholar and instructor at Columbia University, who disappeared more than two years ago, remains unsolved. Morris Ernst, well-known liberal lawyer, was engaged by General Trujillo, dictator of the Dominican Republic, to investigate accusations that Galindez had been kidnapped and killed by Dominican agents. Mr. Ernst investigated for ten months — concluded that there is no evidence connecting the Dominican Republic, or any of its agents, with the disappearance of Galindez.

The Ernst report produces documents that cast some doubt on the theory that a young American flyer, Gerald Murphy, flew Galindez to the Dominican Republic. Murphy later disappeared in the Dominican Republic, and the man accused of killing him is alleged to have committed suicide. Ernst contends that on the day in question, Murphy flew not to the Dominican Republic but to Cuba. However, the evidence supporting this contention is not considerable. Mr. Ernst merely quotes "Responsible officials of the Cuban Government", who had "reliable reports from their own confidential sources" that Murphy's plane landed in Cuba.

The investigators could not find Galindez, dead or alive. They do nothing to explain his disappearance. Galindez is alleged to have raised more than one million dollars for the anti-Franco Basque government in exile. The report does not question Galindez' financial integrity, but the implied question is: "Where did the money come from?" The report concludes that "Federal governmental agencies may be able to answer that question." That cryptic comment could be meant to imply that Galindez received part at least of the financing for his anti-Franco activities, from a AGENCY of the United States Government.

Meanwhile Dr. Galindez remains on the New York Police files listed as a missing person".

Back in a moment —

George Bryan.

Word for Today

Josh Billings once gave some advice. "Never take the bull bi the horns," he said, "but take him by the tale. / Then you kan let go when you want to." General DeGaulle has taken the French crisis "by the horns". / This does not mean he will not let go...and resign...if parliament refuses to give him what he wants. / ~~He did that once before.~~ But this time he got what he wanted.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, June 2, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: The French National Assembly today voted General de Gaulle power to rule by decree for six months. But a key committee in the Assembly refused to approve his program for a constitutional reform. De Gaulle then demanded that the reform bill be voted on as an issue of confidence. De Gaulle said that if he lost the vote he would resign. For a direct report we switch to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: After a last gasp of independence that almost brought down the new government of Charles de Gaulle, the die-hard deputies of the Fourth Republic surrendered to the General shortly after midnight here in Paris tonight. The action reflected the Byzantine mysteries of French politics when the Assembly voted by 336-to-196 against its own bill which had been put forward earlier today. What happened was this: Prime Minister de Gaulle put forward today a series of specific measures to write into law the principles of the platform on which he was elected yesterday. Two of his bills, calling for a state of emergency powers in Algeria and special powers for six months to reform the institutions of France, were approved, although by narrow margins. Then, towards the end of the day, there was a sudden surprise revolt by the deputies. Just as a dying man sometimes rises from his pillow in a last burst of energy, the Assembly Committee of Universal Suffrage threw out the de Gaulle bill on constitutional revision and substituted one of its own. Charles de Gaulle came storming into the chamber, a chamber in which twelve years ago he had sworn never again to set foot, and he marched up to the government bench. De Gaulle - in a terse blunt 8-minute speech - told the deputies that he would draw the necessary conclusions from their action if they did not immediately withdraw their substitute bill. In other words, he was ready to resign.

Meanwhile, in Algiers, a spokesman for General Salan

immediately announced that the Army and the people would rise with vigor if the deputies blocked de Gaulle at this point. The debate raged on for three tense hours, and then shortly after midnight - Paris Time - the climax came and the deputies of France lifted the white flag of surrender by voting down their own bill, clearing the way to vote in de Gaulle's project. They're still going through the motions; they're voting now. And if we get the flash, the bulletin while this program is still on the air, we'll try to bring it to you. But for all practical purposes, it's all over now. de Gaulle has won. He has the powers he wants. But in the process he's made some important concessions of his own that will shape the future of his regime. These concessions came when he stood before the Assembly to defend himself from Communist charges of dictatorship and said "My government is a legal government of the Fourth Republic. My constitutional reform bill preserves the parliamentary system. I have rejected the Presidential system." As de Gaulle said this there was a thunderous roar of applause from all the benches except the Communists. De Gaulle had won the day. But the deputies, although defeated, had not surrendered unconditionally. They had won ... they had won an important concession from the General, who until now had always favored the American-style Presidential system of direct elections. Such a system in divided France could, with the uncertain loyalty of the Army, open the path to dictatorship, to one-man rule. But de Gaulle has rejected it. It therefore might be fair to say tonight that although the Fourth Republic is dead, long live the Republic of de Gaulle. The Republic of a man who rode into power under the military guns but has refused to be a military dictator so far. The next step on the fast-moving agenda of events will come when de Gaulle leaves for Algiers tomorrow or the next day. His entourage says he's going to crack down hard on the settlers there and offer the hand of friendship to Algeria. Thus, a new era begins tonight. Anything may happen. It usually does here in France. This is Paris. David Schoenbrun reporting - and returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in N. Y.

MURROW: The Committee of Public Safety in Algiers, has issued a statement on the pending arrival there of General de Gaulle. Here is that story from Lou Cioffi in Algiers.

CIOFFI: The Committee of Public Safety here today warned that it will remain on guard until it finds out what General de Gaulle plans for Algeria. A spokesman said flatly tonight that the answer to that question will come Wednesday, June 4th, G-Day, as he called it, when de Gaulle will visit Algiers. He said all questions relative to Algeria will be answered that day and by De Gaulle himself, and he predicted that the new Prime Minister of France will confirm what the revolutionary leaders here have done. A spokesman said June 4th will be at least as important as May 13th, the day the peaceful revolution broke out here. He also said that confirmation has been received here that de Gaulle is coming on Wednesday. And he again pointed out that while ministers have been named, they have not been given definite jobs. There was considerable surprise and disappointment here that none of the leaders of this movement were named to de Gaulle's Cabinet. But there's confidence that changes will be made after de Gaulle is in full power.

In a speech before a small crowd gathered in the forum this evening, Jacques Soustelle, the man considered the most likely to succeed in getting on that cabinet, called yesterday's events a first step and that the government is not yet definitely installed. Soustelle told the crowd that there is a time to move quickly and a time for patience and discipline. "This is the time for patience and discipline" he said. "Have confidence in your chiefs and in General de Gaulle." And they shouted "Vive le France - Vive de Gaulle." A man standing next to him then shouted into the microphone "Vive Soustelle." Now, back to Edward

R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: ...

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 2, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The French National Assembly today voted General de Gaulle power to rule by decree for six months. But a key committee in the assembly refused to approve his program for constitutional reform. De Gaulle then demanded that the reform bill be voted on as an issue of confidence. De Gaulle said if he lost the vote, he would resign. For a direct report, we switch to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: After a last gasp of independence that almost brought down the new government of Charles de Gaulle, the die-hard deputies of the Fourth Republic surrendered to the General shortly after midnight here in Paris tonight. The action reflected the Byzantine mysteries of French politics when the Assembly voted by 336 to 196 against its own bill which had been put forward earlier today. What happened was this: Prime Minister de Gaulle put forward today a series of specific measures to write into law the principles of the platform on which he was elected yesterday. Two of his bills, calling for a state of emergency powers in Algeria and special powers for six months to reform the institutions of France, were approved, although by narrow margins. Then towards the end of the day, there was a sudden surprise revolt by the deputies. Just as a dying man sometimes rises from his pillow in a last burst of energy, the Assembly Committee of Universal Suffrage threw out the de Gaulle bill on constitutional revision and substituted one of its own. Charles de Gaulle came storming into the chamber, a chamber in which twelve years ago he had sworn never again to set foot, and he marched up to the government bench. De Gaulle - in a terse blunt 8 minute speech - told the deputies that he would draw the necessary conclusions from their actions if they did not immediately withdraw their substitute bill. In other words, he was ready to resign.

Meanwhile, in Algiers, a spokesman for General Salan immediately announced that the Army and the people would rise with vigor if the deputies blocked de Gaulle at this point. The debate raged on for three tense hours, and then shortly after midnight - Paris Time - the climax came and the deputies of France lifted the white flag of surrender by voting down their own bill, clearing the way to vote in de Gaulle's project. They're still going through the motions; they're voting now. And if we get the flash, the bulletin while this program is still on the air, we'll try to bring it to you. But for all practical purposes, it's all over now. De Gaulle has won. He has the powers he wants. But in the process he's made some important concessions of his own that will shape the future of his regime. These concessions came when he stood before the Assembly to defend himself from Communist charges of dictatorship and said, "My government is a legal government of the French Republic. My constitutional reform bill preserves the parliamentary system. I have rejected the presidential system" As de Gaulle said this there was a thunderous roar of applause from all the benches except the Communists. De Gaulle had won the day. But the deputies, although defeated, had not surrendered unconditionally. They had won...they had won an important concession from the General, who until now had always favored the American-style presidential system of direct elections. Such a system in divided France could, with the uncertain loyalty of the Army, open the path to dictatorship, to one-man rule. But de Gaulle has rejected it. It therefore might be fair to say tonight that although the Fourth Republic is dead, long live the Republic of de Gaulle. The Republic of a man who rode into power under the military guns but has refused to be a military dictator so far. The next step on the fast-moving agenda of events will come when de Gaulle leaves for Algiers tomorrow or the next day. His entourage says he's going to crack down hard on the settlers there and offer the hand of friendship to Algeria. Thus, a new era begins tonight. Anything may happen. It usually does here in France. This is Paris, David Schoenbrun reporting - and returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The Committee of Public Safety in Algiers, has issued a statement on the pending arrival there of General de Gaulle. Here is that story from Lou Cioffi in Algiers.

CIOFFI: The Committee of Public Safety here today warned that it will remain on guard until it finds out what General de Gaulle plans for Algeria. A spokesman said flatly tonight that the answer to that question will come Wednesday, June 4th, G-Day, as he called it, when de Gaulle will visit Algiers. He said all questions relative to Algeria will be answered that day and by de Gaulle himself, and he predicted that the new Prime Minister of France will confirm what the revolutionary leaders here have done. A spokesman said June 4th will be at least as important as May 13th, the day the peaceful revolution broke out here. He also said that confirmation has been received here that de Gaulle is coming on Wednesday. And he again pointed out that while ministers have been named, they have not been given definite jobs. There was considerable surprise and disappointment here that none of the leaders of this movement were named to de Gaulle's Cabinet. But there's confidence that changes will be made after de Gaulle is in full power.

In a speech before a small crowd gathered in the forum this evening, Jacques Soustelle, the man considered the most likely to succeed in getting on that cabinet, called yesterday's events a first step and that that the government is not yet definitely installed. Soustelle told the crowd that there is a time to move quickly and a time for patience and discipline. "This is the time for patience and discipline" he said, "Have confidence in your chiefs and in General de Gaulle." And they shouted "Vive la France - Vive de Gaulle." A man standing next to him then shouted into the microphone "Vive Soustelle." Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles said today that the United States expects to have "close and cordial relations" with the new government headed by General de Gaulle. He would assume on the basis of what de Gaulle has said that France will be faithful to its treaty obligations.

Mr. Dulles talked to reporters after meeting for an hour with the President. He said that he and Mr. Eisenhower are "reasonably optimistic" that technical talks with Russia on how to enforce a ban on nuclear weapons tests can begin this month. Last Saturday, Premier Khrushchev sent a letter, agreeing to the talks... but suggesting that qualified Czech and Polish experts be included. Dulles indicated that the United States would have no objection to this. He said Mr. Eisenhower has approved a reply to the Khrushchev letter, "subject to coordination with our allies."

David Schoenbrun has just told us...over the short-wave channel...that General De Gaulle's constitutional reform bill has been approved by the National Assembly in Paris by a vote of 350 to 163.

The United Nations Security Council met today to hear statements in the French-Tunisian dispute. Tunisia asked the council to take all steps necessary to compel French soldiers to quit Tunisian soil. It accused French troops of aggression in the recent fighting at Remada, in Southern Tunisia. France denied the charge...and asked Tunisia to put its trust in General de Gaulle...who, it said, wanted to resume private talks aimed at a peaceful settlement. The Security Council will meet again Wednesday.

Tonight, de Gaulle sent a message to President Bourguiba of Tunisia. De Gaulle said, "I wish promptly to express my intention of settling with you the present difficulties between our two countries and the conditions for good relations in the future." "Until we are able to do this," he said, "I trust our two governments may avoid anything which might aggravate the situation." De Gaulle also sent a message to King Mohammed of Morocco, urging a joint policy "in keeping with the friendship of our two peoples."

In Congress today, the House voted to set up a powerful civilian space agency. The administrator of the agency would have an advisory committee of 17 members---eight from outside the government and nine from government agencies, including at least three from the Defense Department. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The House also approved a 10 percent pay raise for a million civil service workers. And that measure now goes to a Senate-House conference committee. The Senate has voted for a raise of seven a a half percent.

A House subcommittee today voted down the measure authorizing federal construction of a high dam in Hell's Canyon, on the Snake River. The vote was 15 to 13. And the legislation apparently is now dead. The Idaho Power Company... a private utility...has been licensed by the Federal Power Commission to build three dams in Hell's Canyon. Construction of two of these dams already is under way.

The "Big Three" auto companies---Ford, General Motors and Chrysler---continued operations today without a union contract. The U.A.W. contracts with Ford and Chrysler expired last night without a new agreement. The union's contract with G.M. expired at midnight Thursday. Negotiations will continue.

The case of Dr. Jesus de Galindez, Spanish scholar and instructor at Columbia University, who disappeared more than two years ago, remains unsolved. Morris Ernst, well-known liberal lawyer, was engaged by General Trujillo, dictator of the Dominican Republic, to investigate accusations that Galindez had been kidnapped and killed by Dominican agents. Mr. Ernst investigated for ten months - concluded that there is no evidence connecting the Dominican Republic, or any of its agents with the disappearance of Galindez.

The Ernst report produces documents that cast some doubt on the theory that a young American flyer, Gerald Murphy, flew Galindez to the Dominican Republic. Murphy later disappeared in the Dominican Republic and the man accused of killing him is alleged to have committed suicide. Ernst contends that on the day in question, Murphy flew not to the Dominican Republic but to Cuba. However, the evidence supporting this contention is not considerable. Mr. Ernst merely quotes "Responsible officials of the Cuban Government," who had "reliable reports from their own confidential sources" that Murphy's plane landed in Cuba.

The investigators could not find Galindez, dead or alive. They do nothing to explain his disappearance. Galindez is alleged to have raised more than one million dollars for the anti-Franco Basque government in exile. The report does not question Galindez' financial integrity, but the implied question is: "Where did the money come from?" The report concludes that "Federal governmental agencies may be able to answer that question." That cryptic comment could be meant to imply that Galindez received part at least of the financing for his anti-Franco activities from an agency of the United States Government.

Meanwhile Dr. Galindez remains on the New York Police files listed as a "missing person."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Josh Billings once gave some advice. "Never take the bull bi the horns," he said, "but take him by the tale. Then you kan let go when you want to." General De Gaulle has taken the French crisis "by the horns." This does not mean he will not let go...and resign...if parliament refuses to give him what he wants. But tonight he got what he wanted.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 3, 1958

This is the news:

The French National Assembly has adjourned until October...leaving General DeGaulle empowered, in the meantime, to rule the country by decree. Adjournment came after the Senate approved the constitutional reform bill passed last night by the Chamber of Deputies after ~~in the wake of~~ DeGaulle's threat to resign.

DeGaulle summoned General Salan, the supreme military commander in Algeria, to Paris today...and they talked for an hour and fifteen minutes. No announcement was made of what they discussed, but leaders of the insurgent movement in Algiers think that DeGaulle did not go far enough in reforming the government. They feel disappointment that some of their number have not been included so far in the DeGaulle cabinet./ Tomorrow morning, General DeGaulle will fly to Algiers and talk to these people directly.

→

DeGaulle made two appointments today. He restored General Ely to the position of chief of staff of the French armed forces./ Ely had resigned when Pflimlin was still premier...apparently as a gesture in support of DeGaulle./ The Pflimlin appointee, General Lorillot, served as chief of staff less than two weeks. In his second appointment today, DeGaulle named Max Lejeune, a secretary of state in his new cabinet, to be Minister of the Sahara.

DeGaulle let it be known that when he returns from Algeria...in three or four days...he wants to sit down and talk with French labor leaders./ The Communist-dominated General Confederation of Labor has served notice it will not attend the talks.

Antoine Pinay...who is finance minister in the DeGaulle government... said today that the French economic system must be overhauled, if France is to fulfill its obligations in the European Common Market.

President Bourguiba today asked General DeGaulle to "clarify" his policy toward Tunisia. This was in reply to the message DeGaulle sent Bourguiba yesterday...expressing a desire for peaceful settlement of the French-Tunisian → dispute. Bourguiba said, "I share entirely your desire to avoid anything which might aggravate the situation."

Last night, Tunisia reported a new outbreak of fighting between French and Tunisian forces in the Remada region. French sources today denied the report...insisting that there has been no shooting in the area since last week.

The White House says President Eisenhower sent a personal message to General DeGaulle yesterday. Mr. Eisenhower told DeGualle, "You can be assured of my sympathy and my understanding for the great tasks you are on the point of undertaking. Please accept, Mr. Prime Minister, my best wishes for the success of your mission."

Democratic Senator Humphrey said today that Mr. Eisenhower should invite DeGaulle to Washington for consultation at an early date. (British Prime Minister Macmillan is due in Washington next week, and President Heuss of West Germany arrives tomorrow).

President Eisenhower met for an hour and a half today with the National Security Council. The White House announces that Mr. Eisenhower will not hold a news conference tomorrow. He will be at the naval academy, delivering the commencement address.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev has sent President Eisenhower a new eight-page letter...concerning trade relations between Russia and the United States. So far, details of the message have not been divulged.

The Moscow radio says that in another letter...to the State Department... Russia has declared its readiness to continue all possible assistance in developing international scientific cooperation in the Antarctic. The United States recently proposed that the Antarctic be used by all countries for peaceful purposes only and that they enjoy equal opportunity for research. Moscow says it would go along with an international treaty to this effect.

Khrushchev delivered a new attack today on Yugoslavia, declaring its policy of ideological independence "harmful to the international working class movement." Khrushchev was speaking in Sofia, at the Bulgarian party congress. He said, "We shall not put up with distortions of ideological issues; we shall guard the unity of the Marxist-Leninist parties. Experience, he said, has shown Yugoslavia's leaders "unable to discard their fallacious positions."

The Yugoslav Foreign Office sent a note to Moscow today...formally protesting Russia's "suspension" of a 285-million-dollar credit to Yugoslavia. The note demands that the credit agreement...signed by Russia two years ago... be fulfilled. / Otherwise, it says, Yugoslavia will be "obliged to seek compensation for the damage incurred." / The note does not say how Yugoslavia would go about getting the compensation, if Russia refuses to comply.

At Cape Canaveral, the Air Force today test-fired an Atlas intercontinental missile for the eighth time. / The launching appeared to be a success.

The United Auto Workers Union and American Motors, agreed today to an indefinite extension of their contract due to expire on June 15. Ford, General Motors and Chrysler are continuing operations without a union contract. And negotiations on a new agreement are at a standstill.

The polls are still open in the California primary...and returns will not be available until later tonight. The main INTEREST CENTERS ON Republican Senator Knowland and California's Democratic attorney general, Edmund Brown, SEEKING nomination for governor. / Candidates can seek the nomination on either ticket, under the state's cross-filing system. / Here in New York, James A. Farley says he will seek the Democratic nomination for United States senator.

Edward R. Murrow: June 3, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The effect on France and the world of DeGaulle's coming to power is still too early to appraise. / But already some estimates seem to be in order, some of them promising, some not so promising. / What is most reassuring at this moment / is General DeGaulle's program. Though he has asked dictatorial powers for six months, with the Assembly shut down for that period, he says he is confining his efforts to two problems, Algeria and the constitution. He did not even mention foreign policy in his principal address to the Assembly.

What had frightened France's allies / was the possible effect of DeGaulle on NATO and the work to strengthen the European community. / Now DeGaulle has specifically promised to keep France in NATO, there to fulfil the duties of an ally. / He also specifically disavowed any objections to the plans for a European community. / His hands will be full for six months / if he confines himself to Algeria and a new constitution. And if he does limit himself to these / and is successful in them, the effect on France and the world could be unexpectedly wholesome.

Some other factors are on the hopeful side of the ledger. / DeGaulle's cabinet includes many outstanding parliamentary veterans, with Mollet and Pflimlin prominent among them. The appointment of Couve de Mourville as Foreign Minister was a surprising reassurance to France's allies. / De Mourville believes in NATO and the European community, and is favorably known in Washington, where he served as Ambassador, and the United Nations, where he represented France.

Another factor is the outline of the new constitution, which DeGaulle will lay before the French people in a referendum. / It will recognize the people as the source of power, will call for a separation of legislative, executive and judicial powers, and make the government responsible to the Assembly. This is not fascism, autocracy or authoritarianism. / Nor is it the introduction of the American presidential system. ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ It is a tightened up Fourth Republic. It suggests that DeGaulle might retire after putting through the constitution and settling the Algerian issue. Some associates of his say he intends to.

Another favorable factor is a statement attributed to DeGaulle that he now is convinced of the necessity of close Franco-German co-operation. / This goes to allay fears that he would seek to build up friendship with Moscow to curb German power, which would play havoc with the existing balance of power in Europe.

On the other side of the ledger is the way DeGaulle has come into power. President Coty went beyond the constitution to insist that he must be accepted as the only way to avert civil war. The fact is that the civil war already had begun. DeGaulle simply kept it from spreading. To call DeGaulle's accession legal under these circumstances is an exercise in semantics. In terms of power, the army overwhelmed the Pflimlin government. The army still has great power. It remains to be tested whether DeGaulle has more.

Since the Algerian insurrection was conducted with the ostensible purpose of bringing DeGaulle in, nothing could be more illogical than for the rebels to reject him and launch on the very civil war he was appointed to prevent. But if they accept him, it still will have to be proved that DeGaulle has the more power. If the army still has it, DeGaulle himself may be safe, but his successors will hardly feel secure. The ease and effectiveness of an army-inspired mass revolt has been demonstrated. It would appear that the only true test of legality would be the punishment of men who brewed the Algerian revolt. But DeGaulle has thanked the army in Algeria for all it has done, so that this test does not appear to be likely.

But nothing is yet certain. The conspirators in Algeria are already frightened that DeGaulle has a program for Africa still more liberal than that of the hated Pflimlin. [They may be so frightened that they lose their heads. But that will not come to the test until DeGaulle develops his program for peace in North Africa.]

DeGaulle has resources beyond calculation. He has the power of personal magnetism, and can call on the faith that responds to his remarkable and mystical self-appreciation. / If he sticks to a limited program, puts it through and retires, he would be pretty sure to win the place in history he so ardently covets. / Otherwise he may be like Napoleon, who, as Artemus Ward remarked, tried to do too much - and did it. /

Back in a moment —

George Bryan. -

It would be too much to expect nothing but good to come out of a situation such as that which has developed in France. John Milton said, "Good and evil grow up together almost inseparably...and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil that it is in many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 3, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The French National Assembly has adjourned until October...leaving General De Gaulle empowered, in the meantime, to rule the country by decree. Adjournment came after the Senate approved the constitutional reform bill passed last night by the Chamber of Deputies after DeGaulle's threat to resign.

De Gaulle summoned General Salan, the supreme military commander in Algeria, to Paris today...and they talked for an hour and fifteen minutes. No announcement was made of what they discussed, but leaders of the insurgent movement in Algiers think that De Gaulle did not go far enough in reforming the government. They feel disappointment that some of their number have not been included so far in the De Gaulle cabinet. Tomorrow morning, General De Gaulle will fly to Algiers and talk to these people directly.

De Gaulle made two appointments today. He restored General Ely to the position of chief of staff of the French armed forces. Ely had resigned when Pflimlin was still premier...apparently as a gesture in support of De Gaulle. The Pflimlin appointee, General Lorillot, served as chief of staff less than two weeks. In his second appointment today, De Gaulle named Max Lejeune, a secretary of state in his new cabinet, to be Minister of the Sahara.

De Gaulle let it be known that when he returns from Algeria...in three or four days...he wants to sit down and talk with French labor leaders. The Communist-dominated General Confederation of Labor has served notice it will not attend the talks.

Antoine Pinay...who is finance minister in the De Gaulle government... said today that the French economic system must be overhauled, if France is to fulfilll its obligations in the European Common Market.

President Bourguiba today asked General De Gaulle to "clarify" his policy toward Tunisia.. This was in reply to the message De Gaulle sent Bourguiba yesterday...expressing a desire for peaceful settlement of the French-Tunisian dispute. Bourguiba said, "I share entirely your desire to avoid anything which might aggravate the situation."

Last night, Tunisia reported a new outbreak of fighting between French and Tunisian forces in the Remada region. French sources today denied the report... insisting that there has been no shooting in the area since last week.

The White House says President Eisenhower sent a personal message to General De Gaulle yesterday. Mr. Eisenhower told De Gaulle, "You can be assured of my sympathy and my understanding for the great tasks you are on the point of undertaking. Please accept, Mr. Prime Minister, my best wishes for the success of your mission."

Democratic Senator Humphrey said today that Mr. Eisenhower should invite De Gaulle to Washington for consultation "at an early date." (British Prime Minister Macmillan is due in Washington next week, and President Heuss of West Germany arrives tomorrow.)

President Eisenhower met for an hour and a half today with the National Security Council. The White House announces that Mr. Eisenhower will not hold a news conference tomorrow. He will be at the naval academy, delivering the commencement address.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev has sent President Eisenhower a new eight-page letter....concerning trade relations between Russia and the United States. So far, details of the message have not been divulged.

The Moscow radio says that in another letter...to the State Department.... Russia has declared its readiness to continue "all possible assistance" in developing international scientific cooperation in the Antarctic. The United States recently proposed that the Antarctic be used by all countries for peaceful purposes only and that they enjoy equal opportunity for research. Moscow says it would go along with an international treaty to this effect.

Khrushchev delivered a new attack today on Yugoslavia, declaring its policy of ideological independence "harmful to the international working class movement." Khrushchev was speaking in Sofia, at the Bulgarian party congress. He said, "We shall not put up with distortions of ideological issues; we shall guard the unity of the Marxist-Leninist parties. Experience, he said, has shown Yugoslavia's leaders "unable to discard their fallacious positions."

The Yugoslav Foreign Office sent a note to Moscow today...formally protesting Russia's "suspension" of a 285 million dollar credit to Yugoslavia. The note demands that the credit agreement...signed by Russia two years ago... be fulfilled. Otherwise, it says, Yugoslavia will be "obliged to seek compensation for the damage incurred." The note does not say how Yugoslavia would go about getting the compensation, if Russia refuses to comply.

At Cape Canaveral the Air Force today test-fired an Atlas intercontinental missile for the eighth time. The launching appeared to be a success.

The United Auto Workers Union and American Motors agreed today to an indefinite extension of their contract due to expire on June 15th. Ford, General Motors and Chrysler are continuing operations without a union contract. And negotiations on a new agreement are at a standstill.

The polls are still open in the California primary...and returns will not be available until later tonight. The main interest centers on Republican Senator Knowland and California's Democratic attorney general, Edmund Brown seeking nomination for governor. Candidates can seek the nomination on either ticket, under the state's cross-filing system. Here in New York, James A. Farley says he will seek the Democratic nomination for United States senator.

The effect on France and the world of De Gaulle's coming to power is still too early to appraise. But already some estimates seem to be in order, some of them promising, some not so promising. What is most reassuring at this moment is General De Gaulle's program. Though he has asked dictatorial powers for six months, with the Assembly shut down for that period, he says he is confining his efforts to two problems, Algeria and the constitution. He did not even mention foreign policy in his principal address to the Assembly.

What had frightened France's allies was the possible effect of De Gaulle on NATO and the work to strengthen the European community. Now De Gaulle has specifically promised to keep France in NATO, there to fulfill the duties of an ally. He also specifically disavowed any objections to the plans for a European community. His hands will be full for six months if he confines himself to Algeria and a new constitution. And if he does limit himself to these and is successful in them, the effect on France and the world could be unexpectedly wholesome.

Some other factors are on the hopeful side of the ledger. De Gaulle's cabinet includes many outstanding parliamentary veterans, with Mollet and Pflimlin prominent among them. The appointment of Couve de Mourville as Foreign Minister was a surprising reassurance to France's allies. De Mourville believes in NATO and the European community, and is favorably known in Washington, where he served as Ambassador, and the United Nations, where he represented France.

Another factor is the outline of the new constitution, which De Gaulle will lay before the French people in a referendum. It will recognize the people as the source of power, will call for a separation of legislative, executive and judicial powers, and make the government responsible fo the Assembly. This is not fascism, autocracy or authoritarianism. Nor is it the introduction of the American presidential system. It is a tightened up Fourth Republic. It suggests that De Gaulle might retire after putting through the constitution and settling the Algerian issue. Some associates of his say he intends to.

Another favorable factor is a statement attributed to De Gaulle that he now is convinced of the necessity of close Franco-German co-operation. This goes to allay fears that he would seek to build up friendship with Moscow to curb German power, which would play havoc with the existing balance of power in Europe.

On the other side of the ledger is the way De Gaulle has come into power. President Coty went beyond the constitution to insist that he must be accepted as the only way to avert civil war. The fact is that the civil war already had begun, De Gaulle simply kept it from spreading. To call De Gaulle's accession legal under these circumstances is an exercise in semantics. In terms of power, the army overwhelmed the Pflimlin government. The army still has great power. It remains to be tested whether De Gaulle has more.

Since the Algerian insurrection was conducted with the ostensible purpose of bringing De Gaulle in, nothing could be more illogical than for the rebels to reject him and launch on the very civil war he was appointed to prevent. But if they accept him, it still will have to be proved that De Gaulle has the more power. If the army still has it, De Gaulle himself may be safe, but his successors will hardly feel secure. The ease and effectiveness of any army-inspired mass revolt has been demonstrated. It would appear that the only true test of legality would be the punishment of men who brewed the Algerian revolt. But De Gaulle has thanked the army in Algeria for all it has done, so that this test does not appear to be likely.

But nothing is yet certain. The conspirators in Algeria are already frightened that De Gaulle has a program for Africa still more liberal than that of the hated Pflimlin. They may be so frightened that they lose their heads. But that will not come to the test until De Gaulle develops his program for peace in North Africa.

De Gaulle has resources beyond calculation. He has the power of personal magnetism, and can call on the faith that responds to his remarkable and mystical self-appreciation. If he sticks to a limited program, puts it through and retires, he would be pretty sure to win the place in history he so ardently covets.

Otherwise he may be like Napoleon, who, as Artemus Ward remarked, tried to do too much - and did it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would be too much to expect nothing but good to come out of a situation such as that which has developed in France. John Milton said, "Good and evil grow up together almost inseparably...and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil that it is in many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 4, 1958

This is the news:

General DeGaulle flew to Algeria today...and told the Moslem population that he would make them full citizens of France. / He told a crowd of 250-thousand, "I am opening the door to reconciliation. / I declare that from today onward, France considers that in all Algeria, there is only one category of inhabitants." ~~There are only Frenchmen, each with the same privileges and rights.~~ / DeGaulle promised a general election within three months...presumably for a consultative assembly. / Europeans and Moslems would be voting together for the same candidates, for the first time. / ~~DeGaulle also met with the Committee of Public Safety...which has been ruling~~

→

~~Algeria independent of Paris...since May 13. A committee official said afterward "DeGaulle approved all our leaders."~~

For a direct report on what happened today, here is my colleague David Schoenbrun speaking from Algiers.

(Tape runs: 4:05
(Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

A French government spokesman...in Paris...says that France has asked the United States for permission to delay payment on its postwar loan. / The annual payment...of 54-million dollars...was due tomorrow.

Yesterday, the State Department received a long letter from Soviet Premier Khrushchev, dealing with East-West trade. / For a follow-up on that story, here is my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting from Washington.

(Tape runs 2:13
(Ends on cue: "---to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

A six-hour battle took place today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. The Associated Press calls it the worst outbreak since insurgent forces began trying to overthrow the pro-Western government four weeks ago. / An "undertermined" number of persons were killed.

President Eisenhower told the graduating class at Annapolis today that peace "is imperative in our age." He urged each midshipman to be a "crusader for peace"...to learn to speak a foreign language fluently, and to strive for better understanding. But a just peace, the President said, can be secured only from a position of strength. He advised the graduates to keep up to date on military science. And then he said, "Obsolescence in military management and organization can be as dangerous as obsolescence in weaponry." This was a plug for his program for reorganizing the Defense Department.

The defense reorganization bill is due to reach the House floor next week. House Republican Leader Martin said today that he will submit amendments at that time, to make the measure conform more to what the President wants. Some Republican strategists have advocated putting off a showdown fight over amendments until the bill reaches the Senate.

The House today tentatively approved 38 and a half billion dollars in new money for running the Defense Department in the next fiscal year. The House added 99-million dollars in a move to keep the Administration from cutting back Army strength.

President Eisenhower today signed the measure extending unemployment benefits by 50 percent. / Federal money advanced to the states for this purpose must be repaid. / The law becomes effective in 15 days...and expires automatically next April first. / The President asked Congress for a supplemental appropriation of 665-million dollars to finance the program.

[redacted] next week. House Republican Leader Martin said [redacted] amendments, at that time, to [redacted] President Eisenhower [redacted] putting off [redacted] Senate.

The House Interior Committee voted today to take up the Hawaii statehood bill next Wednesday. The House already has passed an Alaska statehood measure, which is awaiting Senate action.

And the House Banking Committee today approved legislation authorizing a 2-billion-dollar local public works program. / The money would be loaned to municipalities for a wide variety of projects---such as construction of airports, hospitals, sewage systems, streets, sidewalks and parking lots. But the legislation would bar use of the federal money for schools. A similar billion-dollar measure passed by the Senate includes school construction.

→

A Senate subcommittee today approved a "moderate" labor reform bill. The only opposition came from Republican Senator Goldwater, who said he will try to "tighten" the measure in the full labor committee or...if necessary...on the Senate floor. The bill was written for the most part by Democratic Senator Kennedy. It would require unions to elect officers by secret ballot and to make public financial reports. Union officials would not have to take non-Communist oaths.

The full Senate today approved...with only minor changes... a House bill to grant a 10 percent pay raise to more than a million federal workers.

In the California primary, more than half the votes have been counted and they show Senator Knowland winning the Republican nomination for governor...but losing heavily to the Democratic gubernatorial candidate in the "popular" vote. [redacted] State Attorney General Brown is polling about 60 percent of the combined vote. [Democratic National Chairman Butler calls the results "a repudiation of the reactionary policies of the Republican Party." Knowland says yesterday's election was "only a skirmish," that the real ~~monument~~ battle will be in November.]

→

And Los Angeles ~~voted~~ APPEARS TO HAVE voted to let the Dodgers build a new stadium in Chavez Ravine.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan

Word for Today

General DeGaulle is losing no time, trying to solve the grave problems that beset France. / He prodded the National Assembly into giving him...without delay...the powers he demanded. And today he flew to Algiers. / DeGaulle is of a mind with Publilius Syrus, who said, "Deliberate with slowness, but execute with speed. All things come too late for those who wait."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

~~Thursday, June 5~~ Wed. 4 1958

7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... For a direct report on what happened today, here's my colleague David Schoenbrun speaking from Algiers.

SCHOENBRUN: ... midnight here in Algiers, but it's something like 4:00 o'clock in the morning back home on New Year's Day. The lights are still on in the city, flags are up saying: "Salute our saviour, Charles de Gaulle." A few die-hards who won't go to bed are going around the streets chanting, singing, blowing on automobile horns. It has been a fantastic day, a day of glory for Charles de Gaulle - almost exactly fifteen years and one day after he had come here to Algiers as the head of the Free French movement in the war, on June 3rd, 1943. This was the day in which de Gaulle returned to the scene of his triumph - and on that scene was a CBS reporter, Lou Cioffi, with his report now on Algiers today.

CIOFFI: The soldiers lined up on the apron of the landing field outside Algiers looked hot standing in the bright sun. Every once in a while, several of them would glance up at the blue sky. And, suddenly, the familiar whoosh of jet aeroplanes filled the sky. An Air France jet airliner, a Caravelle, came streaking across the field, at the head of a V-formation formed by eight Air Force jets. As the formation reached the end of the field the jets peeled off leaving the Caravelle alone to make its approach and land. An officer stepped out. And then Prime Minister de Gaulle, dressed in the uniform of a two-star general, a general of brigade. He was greeted first by General Salan, then by politician Jacques Soustelle. De Gaulle then saluted the flag and stood at attention saluting while the national anthem was being played. He reviewed the troops, the Honor Guard, lined up on the field, and then greeted the personalities, one of whom was General Massu, the paratroop commander. He stepped into an open convertible for the 15-mi.

ride into Algiers itself, and along every foot of that road were people, mostly Europeans, come to cheer General de Gaulle. There were some Moslems there but not too many.

The greatest reception, of course, was in the city itself, where de Gaulle received a Broadway-like reception with confetti floating down from the buildings. His first official act was to go to the war memorial, where he placed a wreath. And at the memorial a curious thing happened - there were shouts of "Long live Soustelle - Long live Soustelle," Jacques Soustelle. De Gaulle then went to visit the battleship de Grasse and tonight showed up at a forum where 250,000 people waited to hear what he was going to say. For that story here again is David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The first words out of de Gaulle's mouth were "I have understood you" and the crowd went wild. De Gaulle's theme of understanding was that the people here have demanded two things, really, renovation and brotherhood. By renovation de Gaulle meant a complete reform of the institutions to make France strong and healthy again. And he said "If that is where you wanted me to begin then we are in agreement. That is why I am here." And then he said "I've come to you to speak of fraternity." It was at this point that de Gaulle began to lose the crowd. A very noticeable chill was in the air when de Gaulle said "From this day on France considers that in all Algeria there is only one category of inhabitant, they are all Frenchmen, with equal shares. Frenchmen with the same rights, the same duties." De Gaulle therefore was offering his hand to the people here, offering them the end of the feudal regime, the same feudal regime for which the supporters of de Gaulle have been fighting. This is the basic contradiction of Algeria. The people who've been shouting 'de Gaulle to power' will not buy the open hand of fraternity and equality that de Gaulle is offering the Moslem people. Thus, there is still a big question mark hanging over Algeria and France tonight. They have the man they want but not the policy. How will de Gaulle overcome this? The days ahead will tell this dramatic story.

You've heard a special report from Lou Cioffi and David Schoenbrun, returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: ... Yesterday the State Department received a long letter from Soviet Premier Khrushchev dealing with East-West trade. For a followup on that story here is my colleague Daniel Schorr reporting from Washington.

SCHORR: Russia's Nikita Khrushchev has made a shrewd move calculated to present us with another foreign policy controversy. His letter to President Eisenhower yesterday, it's now learned, offers large scale purchases to a recession-plagued American industry but at the price of revising our policy on dealing with Russia. It's a cordially worded letter that goes back to Cordell Hull to argue the advantages of peaceful commerce. After several pages of generalities, Khrushchev gets down to his shopping list. He wants to buy machinery to make synthetic fibres and plastics, refrigeration equipment, air conditioners, equipment to process paper and wood, to make textiles, to prepare food, chemical products, medical supplies, even vending machines. There's litte on the list that could conceivably be regarded as strategic, material we could easily sell to Russia, especially since President Eisenhower said - in his latter to ex-Premier Bulganin in January - that we welcomed trade that carries no political or warlike implications. Khrushchev states no quantities but in a recent speech he recalled that in 1931 Russia bought from the United States goods that today would be valued at $600-million. A tempting offer. But then comes the hitch. Khrushchev notes that American purchases of raw materials from Russia would not match his orders, and so he proposes that we extend long-term credits to finance our exports to Russia. But, as Khrushchev surely knows, American law - the Battle Act - forbids trade credits to Russia. So now the question whether to relax our restrictions. Already the Administration is in trouble in Congress on its proposal to permit foreign aid to Soviet satellites, caught between an amendment it favored and a stern opposition of Republican Senate leader Knowland.

Today in Vienna, Austrian Chancellor Raab criticized American restrictions on trade with Iron Curtain countries as narrow-minded. Now Khrushchev's offer - "we'll buy lots of peaceful goods from you - on credit." State Department spokesman Lincoln White said tersely today "Mr. Khrushchev's letter has been translated and is under study."

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: A six-hour battle took place today in Beirut ...

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

General DeGaulle flew to Algeria today..and told the Moslem population that he would make them full citizens of France. He told a crowd of 250 thousand "I am opening the door to reconciliation. I declare that from today onward, France considers that in all Algeria there is only one category of inhabitants." DeGaulle promised a general election within three months...presumably for a consultative assembly. Europeans and Moslems would be voting together for the same candidates for the first time.

For a direct report on what happened today, here is my colleague David Schoenbrun speaking from Algiers.

SCHOENBRUN: Midnight here in Algiers, but it's something like 4:00 o'clock in the morning back home on New Year's Day. The lights are still on in the city, flags are up saying: "Salute our saviour, Charles DeGaulle." A few die-hards who won't go go bed are going around the streets chanting, singing, blowing on automobile horns. It has been a fantastic day, a day of glory for Charles DeGaulle almost exactly fifteen years and one day after he had come here to Algiers as the head of the Free French movement in the war, on June 3rd, 1943. This was the day in which DeGaulle returned to the scene of his triumph - and on that scene was a CBS reporter, Lou Cioffi with his report now on Algiers today.

CIOFFI: The soldiers lined up on the apron of the landing field outside Algiers looked hot standing in the bright sun. Every once in a while, several of them would glance up at the blue sky. And, suddenly, the familar whoosh of jet aeroplanes filled the sky. An Air France jet airliner, a Caravelle, came streaking across the field, at the head of a V-formation formed by eight Air Force jets. As the formation reached the end of the field the jets peeled off leaving the Caravelle alone to make its approach and land. An officer stepped out. And then Prime Minister DeGaulle dressed in the uniform of a two-star general, a general of brigade. He was greeted first by General Salan, then by politician Jacques Soustelle. DeGaulle then saluted the flag and stood at attention saluting while the national anthem was being played. He reviewed the troops, the Honor Guard, lined up on the field and then greeted the personalities, one of whom was General Massu, the paratroop commander. He stepped into an open convertible for the 15 mile ride into Algiers itself, and along every foot of that road were people, mostly Europeans come to cheer General DeGaulle. There were some Moslems there but not too many.

The greatest reception, of course was in the city itself, where DeGaulle received a Broadway-like reception with confetti floating down from the buildings. His first official act was to go to the war memorial, where he placed a wreath. And at the memorial a curious thing happened - there were shouts of "Long live Soustelle-- Long live Soustelle," Jacques Soustelle. De Gaulle then went to visit the battleship de Grasse and tonight showed up at a forum where 250,000 people waited to hear what he was going to say. For that story here again is David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The first words out of DeGaulle's mouth were "I have understood you" and the crowd went wild. DeGaulle's theme of understanding was that the people here have demanded two things really, renovation and brotherhood. By renovation DeGaulle meant a complete reform of the institutions to make France strong and healthy again. And he said, "If that is where you wanted me to begin then we are in agreement. That is why I am here." And then he said "I've come to you to speak of fraternity." It was at this point that DeGaulle began to lose the crowd. A very noticeable chill was in the air when DeGaulle said "From this day on France considers that in all Algeria there is only one category of inhabitant, they are all Frenchmen, with equal shares. Frenchmen with the same rights, the same duties." DeGaulle therefore was offering his hand to the people here, offering them the end of the feudal regime, the same feudal regime for which the supporters of DeGaulle have been fighting. This is the basic contradiction of Algeria. The people who've been shouting 'DeGaulle to power' will not buy the open hand of fraternity and equality that deGaulle is offering the Moslem people. Thus, there is still a big question mark hanging over Algeria and France tonight. They have the man they want but not the policy. How will DeGaulle overcome this? The days ahead will tell this dramatic story.

You've heard a special report from Lou Cioffi and David Schoenbrun, returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: A French government spokesman...in Paris...says that France has asked the United States for permission to delay payment on its postwar loan. The annual payment...of 54 million dollars...was due tomorrow.

Yesterday, the State Department received a long letter from Soviet Premier Khrushchev, dealing with East-West trade. For a follow-up on that story, here is my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting from Washington.

SCHORR: Russia's Nikita Khrushchev has made a shrewd move calculated to present us with another foreign policy controversy. His letter to President Eisenhower yesterday, it's now learned, offers large scale purchases to a recession-plagued American industry but at the price of revising our policy on dealing with Russia. It's a cordially worded letter that goes back to Cordell Hull to argue the advantages of peaceful commerce. After several pages of generalities, Khrushchev gets down to his shopping list. He wants to buy machinery to make synthetic fibres and plastics, refrigeration equipment, air conditioners, equipment to process paper and wood, to make textiles, to prepare food, chemical products, medical supplies, even vending machines. There's little on the list that could conceivably be regarded as strategic material we could easily sell to Russia, especially since President Eisenhower said - in his letter to ex-Premier Bulganin in January that we welcomed trade that carries no political or warlike implications.

Khrushchev states no quantities but in a recent speech he recalled that in 1931 Russia bought from the United States goods that today would be valued at $600 million, a tempting offer. But then comes the hitch. Khrushchev notes that American purchases of raw materials from Russia would not match his orders, and so he proposes that we extend long-term credits to finance our exports to Russia. But, as Khrushchev surely knows, American law - the Battle Act - forbids trade credits to Russia. So now the question whether to relax our restrictions. Already the Administration is in trouble in Congress on its proposal to permit foreign aid to Soviet satellites, caught between an amendment it favored and a stern opposition of Republican Senate leader Knowland.

Today in Vienna, Austrian Chancellor Raab criticized American restrictions on trade with Iron Curtain countries as narrow-minded. Now Khrushchev's offer - "We'll buy lots of peaceful goods from you - on credit." State Department spokesman Lincoln White said tersely today, "Mr. Khrushchev's letter has been translated and is under study."

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: A sixhour battle took place today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. The Associated Press calls it the worst outbreak since insurgent forces began trying to overthrow the pro-Western government four weeks ago. An "undetermined" number of persons were killed.

President Eisenhower told the graduating class at Annapolis today that peace "is imperative in our age." He urged each midshipman to be a "crusader for peace"...to learn to speak a foreign language fluently and to strive for better understanding. But a just paace, the president said, can be secured only from a position of strength. He advised the graduates to keep up to date on military science. And then he said, "Obsolescence in military management and organization can be as dangerous as obsolescence in weaponry." This was a plug for his program for reorganizing the Defense Department.

The House today tentatively approved 38 and a half billion dollars in new money for running the Defense Department in the next fiscal yaar. The House added 99 million dollars in a move to keep the Administration from cutting back Army strength.

President Eisenhower today signed the measure extending unemployment benefits by 50 percent. Federal money advanced to the states for this purpose must be repaid. The law becomes effective in 15 days...and expires automatically next April first. The President asked Congress for a supplemental appropriation of 665 million dollars to finance the program.

The House Interior Committee voted today to take up the Hawaii statehood bill next Wednesday. The House already has passed an Alaska statehood measure, which is awaiting Senate action.

And the House Banking Committee today approved legislation authorizing a 2-billion dollar local public works program. The moneywould be loaned to municipalities for a wide variety of projects---such as construction of airports, hospitals, sewage systems, streets, sidewalks and parking lots. But the legislation would bar use of the federal money for schools. A similar billion-dollar measure passed by the Senate includes school construction.

A Senate subcommittee today approved a "moderate" labor reform bill. The only opposition came from Republican Senator Goldwater, who said he will try to tighten the measure in the full labor committee or...if necessary...on the Senate floor. The bill was written for the most part by Democratic Senator Kennedy. It would require unions to elect officers by secret ballot and to make public financial reports. Union officials would not have to take non-Communist oaths.

The full Senate today approved...with only minor changes...a House bill to grant a 10 percent pay raise to more than a million federal workers.

In theCalifornia primary, more than half the votes have been counted and they show Senator Knowland winning the Republican nomination for governor...but losing heavily to the Democratic gubernatorial candidate in the "popular" vote. State Attorney General Brown is polling about 60 percent of the combined vote. Democratic National Chairman Butler calls the results "a repudiation of the reactionary policies of the Republican Party." Knowland says yesterday's election was "only a skirmish," that the real battle will be in November.

And Los Angeles appears to have voted to let the Dodgers build a new stadium in Chavez Ravine.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General DeGaulle is losing no time trying to solve the grave problems that beset France. He prodded the National Assembly into giving him...without delay...the powers he demanded. And today he flew to Algiers. DeGaulle is of a mind with Publilius Syrus, who said, "Deliberate with slowness, but execute with speed. All things come too late for those who wait."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 5, 1958

This is the news:

Moslem rebel leaders today rejected General DeGaulle's plan for solving the Algerian problem. / The coordinating committee of the National Liberation Front, with headquarters in Cairo, referred to DeGaulle's promise of political equality...and the full integration of Algeria with France. The National Liberation Front...otherwise known as the F.L.N....said in a communique that it insists on independence from France. / "DeGaulle," it said, "carries full responsibility for continuation of the war and its eventual extension to all of North Africa." / In Tunis today, the newspaper belonging to President Bourguiba's party, commented that "DeGaulle does not seem to understand that times have changed...and that it is no longer possible to diminish a people which, for four years, has been fighting for its independence."

General DeGaulle made balcony speeches today in two of the principal cities of Eastern Algeria---Constantine and Bone. And in Algiers, there was the first public statement, indicating resistance to his policies from the French Right. For a direct report, we switch to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Algiers.

(Tape runs 3:02
(Ends on cue: "---to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

General DeGaulle will visit Western Algeria tomorrow, then fly back to Paris tomorrow night.

Here in New York, the United Nations Security Council today postponed, for 24 hours, the complaint of "massive interference" brought by Lebanon, against the United Arab Republic. The delay was requested by the Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik, to give the Arab League more time to settle the dispute.

The Lebanese parliament has been summoned to meet on July 24th, to elect a new president, succeeding Camille Chamoun.

In Washington, Admiral Strauss resigned today as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, effective the end of the month. That is when his five-year term was due to expire, but President Eisenhower had offered to reappoint him for another five years. Strauss told the president in his letter of resignation that he believed "circumstances beyond the control of either of us make a change in the chairmanship of the commission advisable." News Secretary Hagerty told reporters he was unable to elaborate on this statement. He said a successor to Strauss will be named "in a day or two." Hagerty said that although Strauss will no longer be a member of the A.E.C., he will serve as a special assistant to the President in charge of promoting the atoms-for-peace program.

President Heuss of West Germany told a joint session of Congress today that his country will "never again depart from the path of democracy and freedom." The history of the German people, he said, their intellectual and religious tradition, have made them "an integral part of what is called the Western World." The German president cited his country's membership and cooperation in NATO. "Never again," he said, "shall German and American soldiers fight each other." President Heuss spoke mostly in German. He said his English was "somewhat rusty".

The State Department said today that the United States agrees with West Germany that the question of German unification should not be excluded from any possible summit talks.

The subject of foreign aid to Iron Curtain countries came up today at President Eisenhower's weekly meeting with Republican congressional leaders. The views reportedly expressed by Mr. Eisenhower have incensed Democratic members of Congress. And for this story, we switch to my colleague Bob Pierpoint in Washington.

(Spot runs approx 2:00
(Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

President Eisenhower told the Republican leaders that he still hopes Congress will grant statehood to both Alaska and Hawaii at this session.

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...a record peacetime defense budget of 38-billion, 409-million dollars. The money bill [redacted] provides an extra 99-million dollars in order to hold Army strength at 900-thousand men. (The President had recommended that Army manpower be cut by 30-thousand men). The measure also provides more money than Mr. Eisenhower requested for missiles and submarines.

The House also voted today to extend corporation and excise taxes at their present level for another year. The consumer taxes involved are those on liquor, cigarettes, auto parts and accessories and new cars. The measure...which was passed on a voice vote...now goes to the Senate.

It was disclosed today that the President's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, decided to postpone his fact-finding trip to Central America after talking with Mr. Eisenhower. News Secretary Hagerty said the President and Dr. Eisenhower conferred on the matter...but that he did not know whether the attacks on Vice President Nixon during his recent Latin American tour were a factor in the postponement. He referred to the postponement as "merely a delay to work out the dates."

Two thousand auto workers were idled today by a strike at the Fisher body stamping plant at West Mifflin, Pennsylvania...near Pittsburgh. Fisher is a division of General Motors, which is operating

Back in a moment —
George Bryan.

Two thousand auto workers were idled today by a strike at the Fisher body stamping plant at West Mifflin, Pennsylvania...near Pittsburgh. Fisher Body is a division of General Motors, which is operating...along with Ford and Chrysler...without a contract with the United Auto Workers Union. (The U.A.W. says the labor dispute concerns local grievances.)

FILL

The death toll in that tornado which struck northwestern Wisconsin late last night is now placed at at least 29 dead and perhaps as many as 300 injured. Of the 119 persons who have been hospitalized, 20 are believed to be in critical condition.

Word for Today

General DeGaulle is going to have to declare himself head of his own house. He cannot long endure in subordination---however politely expressed. And he will have to act soon. As the American rabbi, Leon Harrison, once said, "Lot's wife hesitated, though angels led the way. Naturally she was petrified where she stood, a monument of vacillation."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, June 5, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: For a direct report we switch to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Algers.

SCHOENBRUN: This is a day of glory but the outline also of trouble for Charles de Gaulle hefe in Algeria. For while the General was touring the eastern provinces to the acclamations of the crowd, here in Algers the first signs of resistance to the General showed up. Actually, the first signs came yesterday but they were not made public. At yesterday's meeting General Massu, head of the paratroopers - the man who led the insurrection introduced the Committee of Public Safety to General de Gaulle and said to the General, "these men are fine patriots and we want you to listen to them and this is what we would like to hear you say." It was tantamount to General Massu giving orders to General de Gaulle. And among these things that he said he would like de Gaulle to say was the elimination of the rotten politicians of the discredited regime - in other words, a direct attack on the men of the 4th Republic who de Gaulle has taken into his Cabinet. This private attack at luncheon yesterday became public today. When the Vice President of the committee of Public Safety Leon Delbeck - one of the men who betrayed the 4th Republic made an address over this radio station here in Algers in which he said, "yes, we want de Gaulle but not at any price. We want a new and clean and pure France - a break with the rotten old regime and we want our place in the government." So far, de Gaulle has refused to give any position of importance to delBeck, he has refused to give any authority to the Commitee of Public Safety and as yet he has not given a major post to Jacques Soustelle. Thus, the first signs of Right Wing reaction to the General has set in. But, while this was happening, the General was having a personal triumph in the eastern provinces. He wore his uniform of a general the war time savior of France and he was acclaimed by cheering thousands in Constantine and in the port city of Bone. Arab women in hooded caps sat by and listened with their men as General de Gaulle promised them in a ~~h~~ vibrant voice "liberty, equality and fraternity." He promised them a fair share in all of the benifits of French civilization. Promised that in 3-months time there would be a referendum and following that referendum there would be elections and that their votes - the vote of 8-million Moslems here would count just as heavily man for man as the vote of their French brothers. They cheered, they listened, they hoped. Meanwhile, the French crowd listened with something that was like dismay. For although they're talking of fraternity, they don't mean to give up their feudal privilages and they are beginning to suspect that de Gaulle does mean to give these people a fair break and that perhaps is the reason for both the glory, the triumph and the tragedy of General de Gaulle. For he means to give a new deal to Algeria he ~~has~~the man who has been selected to do this and yet the people who have broughthim into office by insurrection don't really want a new deal for this country. This is the shape of the future - the first crisis for Charles de Gaulle.

This is Algers. David Schoenbrun reporting and returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: General de Gaulle will visit ....

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: 6/5/58

MURROW: For this story, we switch to my colleague Bob Pierpoin in Washington.

PIERPOINT: Recently the Senate Foreign Relations committee passed an amendment to the 3.7 billion dollar foreign aid bill to enable the President to grant economic aid to any communist nation except Russia, North Korea or Communist China. The committee thought its amendment originally proposed by Mass., Democratic Senator Kennedy had the blessings of the administration. State Department officials had pointed out to the committee that giving the President this flexability would enable him to grant aid to a struggling satellite nation such as Poland, which with this help might eventually be able to tear itself from the tight grip of mother Russia. Secretary of State Dulles told the committee that he feels such flexability would be very helpful to America's foreign policy. The Kennedy amendment looked safe, but apparently no one counted on the persuasive powers of California Republican Senator Knowland who opposes any type of aid to countries behind the Iron Curtain. This morning, Senator Knowland reportedly warned the President in the weekly legislative leaders meeting that if the Kennedy amendment were not killed, the foreign aid bill itself might be in danger. In any case, when the Republican minority leader emerged from the conference at the White House, he told correspondents that the President now agrees with Knowland's viewpoint that the foreign aid bill should not be amended. Instead, Knowland explained, the President now favors amending the original battle act which outlaws economic aid to Communist countries - an amendment action which most Congressmen consider very difficult. Asked later if President Eisenhower intended to try to push a battle act amendment through Congress this session, White House News Secretary James Hagerty commented "we'll just have to wait and see." Senator Mike Mansfield, Montana's Democratic member of the Foreign Relations committee said this afternoon that the President's agreement to go along with Senator Knowland is at least a 180 degree turn from what the Committee had understood to be the President's position. Mansfield added that if the President believes in anything and advocates anything he should stick to his guns. Debate on the Kennedy amendment continues on Capital Hill tonight without Presidential support.

Back now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: President Eisenhower told the Republican leaders ...

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Moslem rebel leaders today rejected General DeGaulle's plan for solving the Algerian problem. The coordinating committee of the National Liberation Front, with headquarters in Cairo, referred to DeGaulle's promise of political equality...and the full integration of Algeria with France. The National Liberation Front...otherwise known as the F.L.N....said in a communique that it insists on independence from France. "DeGaulle," it said, "carries full responsibility for continuation of the war and its eventual extension to all of North Africa." In Tunis today, the newspaper belonging to President Bourguiba's party, commented that "DeGaulle does not seem to understand that times have changed...and that it is no longer possible to diminish a people which for four years has been fighting for its independence."

General DeGaulle made balcony sppeches today in two of the principal cities of Eastern Algeria---Constantine and Bone. And in Algiers, there was the first public statement indicating resistance to his policies from the French Right. For a direct report, we switch to my colleague David Schoenbrun in Algiers.

SCHOENBRUN: This is a day of glory but the outline also of trouble for Charles DeGaulle here in Algeria. For while the General was touring the eastern provinces to the acclamations of the crowd, here in Algiers the first signs of resistance to the General showed up. Actually, the first signs came yesterday but they were not made public. At yesterday's meeting General Massu, head of the paratroopers, the man who led the insurrection introduced the Committee of Public Safety to General DeGaulle and said to the General, "These men are fine patriots and we want you to listen to them and this is what we would like to hear you say." It was tantamount to General Massu giving orders to General DeGaulle. And among those things that he said he would like DeGaulle to say was the elimination of the rotten politicians of the discredited regime - in other words, a direct attack on the men of the 4th Republic who DeGaulle has taken into his Cabinet. This private attack at luncheon yesterday became public today. When the Vice President of the Committee of Public Safety Leon Delbeck - one of the men who betrayed the 4th Republic made an address over this radio station here in Algiers in which he said, "Yes, we want DeGaulle, but not an any price. We want a new and clean and pure France - a break with the rotten old regime and we want our place in the government." So far, DeGaulle has refused to give any position of importance to Delbeck, he has refused to give any authority to the Committee of Public Safety and as yet he has not given a major post to Jacques Soustelle. Thus, the first signs of Right Wing reaction to the General has set in. But, while this was happening, the General was having a personal triumph in the eastern provinces. He wore his uniform of a general, the war-time savior of France and he was acclaimed by cheering thousands in Constantine and in the port city of Bone. Arab women in hooded caps sat by and listened with their men as General DeGaulle promised them in a vibrant voice, "Liberty, equality and fraternity." He promised them a fair share in all of the benefits of French civilization. Promised that in 3-months time there would be a referendum and following that referendum there would be elections and that their votes - the vote of 8-million Moslems here would count just as heavily man for man as the vote of their French brothers. They cheered, they listened, they hoped. Meanwhile, the French crowd listened with something that was like dismay. For although they're talking of fraternity, they don't mean to give up their feudal privileges and they are beginning to suspect that DeGaulle does mean to give these people a fair break and that perhaps is the reason for both the glory, the triumph and the tragedy of General DeGaulle. For he means to give a new deal to Algeria. He is the man who has been selected to do this and yet the people who have brought him into office by insurrection don't really want a new deal for this country. This is the shape of the future - the first crisis for Charles DeGaulle.

This is Algiers. David Schoenbrun reporting and returning you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: General DeGaulle will visit Western Algeria tomorrow, then fly back to Paris tomorrow night.

Here in New York, the United Nations Security Council today postponed for 24 hours the complaint of "massive interference" brought by Lebanon against the United Arab Republic. The delay was requested by the Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik to give the Arab League more time to settle the dispute.

The Lebanese parliament has been summoned to meet on July 24 to elect a new president, succeeding Camille Chamoun.

In Washington, Admiral Strauss resigned today as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, effective the end of the month. That is when his five-year term was due to expire, but President Eisenhower had offered to reappoint him for another five years. Strauss told the president in his letter of resignation that he believed "circumstances beyond the control of either of us make a change in the chairmanship of the commission advisable." News Secretary Hagerty told reporters he was unable to elaborate on this statement. He said a successor to Strauss will be named "in a day or two." Hagerty said that although Strauss will no longer bea member of the A.E.C , he will serve as a special assistant to the President in charge of promoting the atoms-for-peace program.

President Heuss of West Germany told a joint session of Congress today that his country will "never again depart from the path of democracy and freedom." The history of the German people, he said, their intellectual and religious tradition, have made them "an integral part of what is called the Western World." The German president cited his country's membership and cooperation in NATO. "Never again," he said, "shall German and American soldiers fight each othere." President Heuss spoke mostly in German. He said his English was "somewhat rusty."

The State Department said today that the United States agrees with West Germany that the question of German unification should not be excluded from any possible summit talks.

The subject of foreign aid to Iron Curtain countries came up today at President Eisenhower's weekly meeting with Republican congressional leaders. The views reportedly expressed by Mr. Eisenhower have incensed Democratic members of Congress. And for this story, we switch to my colleague Bob Pierpoint in Washington.

PIERPOINT: Recently the Senate Foreign Relations Commmttee passed an amendment to the 3.7 billion dollar foreign aid bill to enable the President to grant economic aid to any communist nation except Russia, North Korea or Communist China. The committee thought its amendment originally proposed by Mass. Democratic Senator Kennedy had the blessings of the administration. State Department officials had pointed out to the committee that giving the President this flexibility would enable him to grant aid to a struggling satellite nation such as Poland, which with this help might eventually be able to tear itself from the tight grip of mother Russia. Secretary of State Dulles told the committee that he feels such flexability would be very helpful to America's foreign policy. The Kennedy amendment looked safe, but apparently no one counted on the persuasive powers of California Republican Senator Knowland who opposes any type of aid to countries behind the Iron Curtain. This morning, Senator Knowland reportedly warned the President in the weekly legislative leaders meeting that if the Kennedy amendment were not killed, the foreign aid bill itself might be in danger. In any case, when the Republican minority leader emerged from the conference at the White House, he told correspondents that the President now agrees with Knowland's viewpoint that the foreign aid bill should not be amended. Instead, Knowland explained, the President now favors amending the original battle act which outlaws economic aid to Communist countries - an amendment action which most Congressmen consider very difficult. Asked later if President Eisenhower intended to try to push a battle act amendment through Congress this session, White House News Secretary James Hagerty commented "We'll just have to wait and see." Senator Mike Mansfield Montana's Democratic member of the Foreign Relations committee said this afternoon that the President's agreement to go along with Senator Knowland is at least a 180 degree turn from what the Committee had understood to be the President's position. Mansfield added that if the President believes in anything and advocates anything he should stick to his guns. Debate on the Kennedy amendment continues on Capitol Hill tonight without Presidential support.

Back now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: President Eisenhowrr told the Republican leaders that he still hopes Congress will grant statehood to both Alaska and Hawaii at this session.

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate..a record peacetime defense budget of 38 billion, 409 million dollars. The money bill provides an extra 99 million dollars in order to hold Army strength at 900 thousand men. (The President had recommended that Army manpower be cut by 30 thousand men.) The measure also provides more money than Mr. Eisenhower requested for missiles and submarines.

The House also voted today to extend corporation and excise taxes at their present level for another year. The consumer taxes involved are those on liquor, cigarettes, auto parts and accessories and new cars. The measure...which was passed on a voice vote...now goes to the Senate.

It was disclosed today that the President's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, decided to postpone his fact-finding trip to Central America after talking with Mr. Eisenhower. News Secretary Hagerty said the President and Dr. Eisenhower conferred on the matter...but that he did not know whether the attacks on Vice President Nixon during his recent Latin American tour were a factor in the postponement. He referred to the postponement as "merely a delay to work out the dates."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General DeGaulle is going to have to declare himself head of his own house. He cannot long endure insubordination---however politely expressed. And he will have to act soon. As the American rabbi, Leon Harrison once said, "Lot's wife hesitated, though angels led the way. Naturally she was petrified where she stood, a monument of vacillation."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 6, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today named John McCone, of Los Angeles, to the Atomic Energy Commission to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Admiral Strauss. McCone is a businessman, who was formerly a construction engineer and a defense official in the Truman Administration. He served as deputy to the Secretary of Defense in 1948 and was under-secretary of the Air Force in 1950 and 51. Senate Republican Leader Knowland says he "understands" that McCone will be named chairman of the commission, if his appointment as a member is confirmed. And Knowland adds that he has heard nothing to indicate that Senate confirmation might be withheld.

→

Both Republican and Democratic members of the joint atomic energy committee have reacted favorably. Chairman Durham says McCone always impressed him as "a very good man." / The resignation of Admiral Strauss is effective the end of this month.

General DeGaulle flew back to Paris tonight after touring Algeria for three days. In his speeches today in Western Algeria, DeGaulle again promised "equal rights and duties" to all inhabitants, European and Moslem alike. / There were the usual cheers, both for himself and for the right-wing leader, Jacques Soustelle. / What distinguished his last day in Algeria was DeGaulle's declaration, aimed at putting the all-Algeria Committee of Public Safety in its place. / He said in his policy statement that the [redacted] safety committees were no longer to trespass or substitute themselves for "the legal administrative authority". / DeGaulle said bluntly that henceforth he alone would "assume the task of Algerian affairs." He announced that General Salan, the military commander in Algeria, would stay on the scene as his administrative officer. And he gave Salan the new title of "delegate general". / The authority of Salan, he said, "is not to be contested." / General DeGaulle made this policy statement this morning in Oran, in Northwestern Algeria. Tonight, a spokesman for the Committee of Public Safety made reply. / For a direct report on that, here is my colleague Lou Cioffi, reporting from Algiers.

→

(Tape runs 2:00
(Ends on cue: "---to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

Lebanon today asked the United Nations Security Council to take action, aimed at stopping the "massive interference" of the United Arab Republic in its internal affairs. / The Security Council began hearing the Lebanese complaint, after the Arab League conceded its inability to settle the dispute. The Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik, said that in the eyes of the United Arab Republic (Egypt and Syria), Lebanon's "sin" is that it follows a policy of friendship and cooperation with the western world. / He accused Egypt and Syria of smuggling arms into Lebanon to aid in the overthrow of its government, and of making "inflamatory broadcasts". ~~He did not suggest any specific action the Security Council might take.~~ The representative of the United Arab Republic denied the Lebanese charges. And the council adjourned until next Tuesday, when the debate will be resumed.

Yugoslavia today accused Russia's Nikita Khrushchev of "lack of principle" in trying to get a credit agreement with the United States. / A Yugoslav government spokesman cited Khrushchev's past claim that America grants credit "only with political conditions."

The Reuters news agency reports that in the past two nights, Yugoslav security police have arrested about 40 persons, suspected ~~im to be~~ Peking-pro-Russian sympathizers. / Reuters quotes "informed sources" in Belgrade.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles gave Congress a detailed appraisal of how the United States stands with Russia today. / My colleague, Daniel Schorr, covered that story. We switch now to Washington.

Tape runs 2:55
Ends on cue: "---to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

The Senate is still debating the foreign aid measure. / Late today, it rejected an amendment...offered by Republican Senator Bridges...to strip the bill of a provision pledging continued dollar support for India's five-year economic development program. / The vote on this was 47 to 35.

President Eisenhower today listed foreign aid, extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act and defense reorganization as the three most important matters now before Congress. He told 15 Republican congressmen...at a White House breakfast...that it is also important for Congress to have a "reasonable" attitude toward anti-recession measures "and not go overboard."

The government reports that in May total unemployment dropped to 4-million, 900-thousand..(.the lowest unemployment figure in four months.) Two hundred and sixteen thousand fewer persons were unemployed in May than in April. In the same period, employment rose by 1-million, 154-thousand. This was due primarily to the seasonal expansion in agriculture, along with a larger than usual increase in outdoor construction. / The weak spot continues to be in the manufacturing industry. / Factory employment in May was down another 67-thousand with most of the loss registered in plants turning out automobiles, all types of heavy machinery, and steel.

The Senate Labor Committee today approved legislation designed to improve union procedures and keep racketeers out of the labor movement. / The only vote against the measure was cast by Republican Senator Goldwater, who favored stronger legislation. / Democratic Senator Kennedy wrote the original bill, in collaboration with Republican Senator Ives. / The measure...in its present amended form...says unions must hold regular secret elections and that they must file detailed financial reports. / The non-Communist affidavit provision of the Taft-Hartley Act would be repealed. The measure will be sent to the Senate floor next week, along with a committee report.

→

At Cape Canaveral, the Navy today fired an experimental version of the Polaris missile, designed for launching from nuclear-powered submarines. The Polaris uses solid rather than liquid fuel...and has a 15-hundred-mile range. / The Navy said it was testing "certain components of the Polaris missile system under more difficult conditions than on previous launchings." It did not elaborate.

The 60-thousand-ton aircraft carrier Independence was christened today at the naval shipyard, here in New York. When commissioned, it will be the Navy's fourth carrier of the Forrestal class. /

Back in a moment—

Ted—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

There was presented in Algeria the strange spectacle of two insurrections occurring at the same time. DeGaulle was forced to act. Wendell Phillips observed, "Revolutions are not made; they come. A revolution is as natural a growth as an oak." And it was an American president, Millard Fillmore, who said, "Let us remember revolutions do not always establish freedom."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: 6/6/58

MURROW: My colleague Danial Schorr covered that story. We switch now to Washington.

SCHORR: Secretary of State Dulles spent two hours today striking a balance sheet of where we stand in the Cold War with Russia. He was winding up a foreign policy review by the Senate Foreign Relations committee. And while he struck some pessimistic notes the balance was on the optimistic side. Dulles noted some encouraging trends behind the Iron Curtain More education, more consumer pressure, a growing demand for personal security outbreaks in the satellite states, the flight of people from Communist ruled areas and a recognition by Moscow that brute force no longer brings results.

He saw the danger of war receeding, expressed belief that Russia does not want war and does want to reduce the economic burden of arms. And he looked to a day when our relations may be dominated by good will and friendship. That was a long range view. In the short term, Dulles said, that free summit talks in Moscow have so far produced nothing to justify the holding of a summit conference. He said, Russia was arbitrary and unreasonable to begin with for insisting on a parley of top leaders, though he was willing to acquiesce in it, if there was no other way of doing business. But right now, he saw no liklihood that even a summit meeting would bring any significant agreement.

On the other hand, there were two little rays of hope from Russia. A willingness to negotiate a treaty guaranteeing peaceful use of Antarctica and Khrushchev's acceptance of a proposal to join in studying techniques of policing a nuclear testing ban. This said Dulles may provide a vital clue. But, then, Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana asked, "if we are prepared in fact to agree to the testing ban?" This was a tough one for Dulles and he proceeded with care. Right now, he said, our position is that the whole disarmament package presented by the West last August is inseperable. But much thought has been given to changing that position, we're talking to our allies and it's an open question. What Dulles could not say was the American administration is almost ready to agree to suspend nuclear testing but Britain is not ready. Not until she is sure she can replace testing by sharing the information we have. And, that presumably will be discussed with Prime Minister MacMillan who arrives here tomorrow.

The Free World said Dulles seems dominated more by differences then by harmony. And, he said, all this is infinitely perplexing and exhausting. Toc add to his perplexity and exhaustion, Democratic Senator Sparkman of Alabama called to his attention the spectacle of confusion as he put it created on the Senate floor last night because the administration withdrew support from a measure it had previously endorsed to permit aid to satellite countries. Then Sparkman asked if Dulles would submit it in some other form, Dulles said, "the usefullness of this measure was marginal."

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The Senate is still debating the foreign aid measure.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS:

Friday, June 6, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: For a direct report on that, here is my colleague Lou Cioffi reporting from Algers.

CIOFFI: The Committee of Public Safety today tried to dispel any rumors of a possible split with the government of General de Gaulle. Any official spokesman tonight told a news conference that the Committee's answer to de Gaulle's call for cooperation is this. "My general, you have our cooperation without condition and without reserve." It was obviously an answer to a statement made yesterday by Commitee Vice President Leon Delbeck. Delbeck had said that the Committee supported de Gaulle but not at any price. And he warned that the leaders of the revolution would not allow its purposes to be altered. A source close to the committee said today that Delbeck was unimportant and that he was just blowing off steam. The source went even further. Saying, that everyone must now work to make integration a reality. But, that if there are too many difficulties it's possible to work out some form of federation. This new softer tone, taken by officials here is a sign that de Gaulle is establishing himself firmly in control, but there is still some unanswered questions. Delbeck's speech of yesterday was supposed to be broadcast over Algers radio, but it was stopped at the last minute. And yet, the text was allowed to be distributed to correspondents here. And, supposing Delbeck is notthe official spokesman for the commitee? If he feels that way, possibly others feel the same. The key to the puzzle appears to be the Army. If the Army pledges its support to de Gaulle, then man like Leon Delbeck will remain without influence. Because the Army was the main support of the revolutionary movement here. A constant threat which forced the politicians in Paris to call de Gaulle. Delbeck now could only stir up the people, but that would result only in violence. For the time being at least, the revolutionary leaders here are giving de Gaulle their complete support to do whatever he wants, and reserve action until later. But, as de Gaulle gets stronger, this will be more difficult.

This is Lou Cioffi in Algers. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Lebanon today asked the United Nations Security Council to take action aimed at stopping the massive interference of the United Arab Republic in its internal affairs.

EDWARD R, MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 6, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today named John McCone, of Los Angeles to the Atomic Energy Commission to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Admiral Strauss. McCone is a businessman, who was formerly a construction engineer and a defense official in the Truman Administration. He served as deputy to the Secretary of Defense in 1948 and was under-secretary of the Air Force in 1950 and 51. Senate Republican Leader Knowland says he "understands" that McCone will be named chairman of the commission, if his appointment as a member is confirmed. And Knowland adds that he has heard nothing to indicate that Senate confirmation might be withheld. Both Republican and Democratic members of the joint atomic energy committee have reacted favorably. Chairman Durham says McCone always impressed him as "a very good man." The resignation of Admiral Strauss is effective the end of this month.

General DeGaulle flew back to Paris tonight after touring Algeria for three days. In his speeches today in Western Algeria, DeGaulle again promised "equal rights and duties" to all inhabitants, European and Moslem alike. There were the usual cheers, both for himself and for the right-wing leader, Jacques Soustelle. What distinguished his last day in Algeria was De Gaulle's declaration aimed at putting the all-Algeria Committee of Public Safety in its place. He said in his policy statement that the safety committees were no longer to trespass or substitute themselves for "the legal administrative authority." De Gaulle said bluntly that henceforth he alone would "assume the task of Algerian affairs." He announced that General Salan, the military commander in Algeria, would stay on the scene as his administrative officer. And he gave Salan the new title of "delegate general." The authority of Salan, he said, "is not to be contested." General DeGaulle made this policy statement this morning in Oran in Northern Algeria. Tonight, a spokesman for the Committee of Public Safety made reply. For a direct report on that, here is my colleague Lou Cioffi, reporting from Algiers.

CIOFFI: The Committee of Public Safety today tried to dispel any rumors of a possible split with the government of General DeGaulle. An official spokesman tonight told a news conference that the Committee's answer to De Gaulle's call for cooperation is this. "My general, you have our cooperation without condition and without reserve." It was obviously an answer to a statement made yesterday by Committee Vice President Leon Delbeck. Delbeck had said that the Committee supported DeGaulle but not at any price. And he warned that the leaders of the revolution would not allow its purposes to be altered. A source close to the committee said today that Delbeck was unimportant and that he was just blowing off steam. The source went even further. Saying, that everyone must now work to make integration a reality. But, that if there are too many difficulties it's possible to work out some form of federation. This new softer tone, taken by officials here is a sign that DeGaulle is establishing himself firmly in control, but there is still some unanswered questions. Delbeck's speech of yesterday was supposed to be broadcast over Algiers radio, but it was stopped at the last minute. And yet, the text was allowed to be distributed to correspondents here. And, supposing Delbeck is not the official spokesman for the committee? If he feels that way, possibly others feel the same. The key to the puzzle appears to be the Army. If the Army pledges its support to De Gaulle, then men like Leon Delbeck will remain without influence. Because the Army was the main support of the revolutionary movement here. A constant threat which forced the politicians in Paris to call DeGaulle. Delbeck now could only stir up the people, but that would result only in violence. For the time being at least, the revolutionary leaders here are giving DeGaulle their complete support to do whatever he wants, and reserve action until later. But, as DeGaulle gets stronger, this will be more difficult.

This is Lou Cioffi in Algiers. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Lebanon today asked the United Nations Security Council to take action aimed at stopping the "massive interference" of the United Arab Republic in its internal affairs. The Security Council began hearing the Lebanese complaint after the Arab League conceded its inability to settle the dispute. The Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik said that in the eyes of the United Arab Republic (Egypt and Syria) Lebanon's "sin" is that it follows a policy of friendship and cooperation with the western world. He accused Egypt and Syria of smuggling arms into Lebanon to aid in the overthrow of its government and of making "inflamatory broadcasts." The representative of the United Arab Republic denied the Lebanese charges. And the council adjourned until next Tuesday when the debate will be resumed.

Yugoslavia today accused Russia's Nikita Khrushchev of "lack of principle" in trying to get a credit agreement with the United States. A Yugoslav government spokesman cited Khrushchev's past claim that America grants credit "only with political conditions."

The Reuters news agency reports that in the past two nights, Yugoslav security police have arrested about 40 persons, suspected of being pro-Russian sympathizers. Reuters quotes "informed sources" in Belgrade.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles gave Congress a detailed appraisal of how the United States stands with Russia today. My colleague, Daniel Schorr covered that story. We switch now to Washington.

SCHOOR: Secretary of State Dulles spent two hours today striking a balance sheet of where we stand in the Cold War with Russia. He was winding up a foreign policy review by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. And while he struck some pessimistic notes the balance was on the optimistic side. Dulles noted some encouraging trends behind the Iron Curtain. More education, more consumer pressure, a growing demand for personal security outbreaks in the satellite states, the flight of people from Communist ruled areas and a recongition by Moscow, that brute force no longer brings results.

He saw the danger of war receding, expressed belief that Russia does not want war and does want to reduce the economic burden of arms. And he looked to a day when our relations may be dominated by good will and friendship. That was a long-range view. In the short term, Dulles said, the pre-summit talks in Moscow have so far produced nothing to justify the holding of a summit conference. He said, Russia was arbitrary and unreasonable to begin with for insisting on a parley of top leaders, though he was willing to acquiesce in it, if there was no other way of doing business. But right now, he saw no likelihood that even a summit meeting would bring any significant agreement.

On the other hand, there were two little rays of hope from Russia. A willingness to negotiate a treaty gurranteeing peaceful use of Antarctica and Khrushchev's acceptance of a proposal to join in studying techniques of policing a nuclear testing ban. This said Dulles may provide a vital clue. But, then, Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana asked,"if we are prepared in fact to agree to the testing ban?" This was a tough one for Dulles and he proceeded with care. Right now, he said, our position is that the whole disarmament package presented by the West last August is inseparable. But much thought has been given to changing that position, we're talking to our allies and it's an open question. What Dulles could not say was the American administration is almost ready to agree to suspend nuclear testing but Britain is not ready. Not until she is sure she can replace testing by sharing the information we have. And, that presumably will be discussed with Prime Minister MacMillan who arrives here tomorrow.

The Free World said Dulles seems dominated more by differences than by harmony. And, he said, all this is infinitely perplexing and exhausting. To add to his perplexity and exhaustion, Democratic Senator Sparkman of Alabama called to his attention the spectacle of confusion as he put it, created on the Senate floor last night because the administration withdrew support from a measure it had previously endorsed to permit aid to satellite countries. Then Sparkman asked if Dulles would submit it in some other form, Dulles said, "The usefulness of this measure was marginal."

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The Senate is still debating the foreign aid measure. Late today, it rejected an amendment...offered by Republican Senator Bridges...to strip the bill of a provision pledging continued dollar support for India's five-year economic development program. The vote on this was 47 to 35.

President Eisenhower today listed foreign aid, extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act and defense reorganization as the three most important matters now before Congress. He told 15 Republican congressmen...at a White House breakfast...that it is also important for Congress to have a "reasonable" attitude toward anti-recession measures "and not go overboard."

The government reports that in May total unemployment dropped to 4-million 900-thousand...the lowest unemployment figure in four months. Two hundred and sixteen thousand fewer persons were unemployed in May than in April. In the same period, employment rose by 1-million, 154-thousand. This was due primarily to the seasonal expansion in agriculture along with a larger than usual increase in outdoor construction. The weak spot continues to be in the manufacturing industry. Factory employment in May was down another 67-thousand with most of the loss registered in plants turning out automobiles, all types of heavy machinery, and steel.

The Senate Labor Committee today approved legislation designed to improve union procedures and keep racketeers out of the labor movement. The only vote against the measure was cast by Republican Senator Goldwater, who favored stronger legislation. Democratic Senator Kennedy wrote the original bill, in collaboration with Republican Senator Ives. The measure...in its present amended form...says unions must hold regular secret elections and that they must file detailed financial reports. The non-Communist affidavit provision of the Taft-Hartley Act would be repealed. The measure will be sent to the Senate floor next week, along with a committee report.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There was presented in Algeria the strange spectacle of two insurrections occurring at the same time. DeGaulle was forced to act. Wendell Phillips observed, "Revolutions are not made; they come. A revolution is as natural a growth as an oak." And it was an American president, Millard Fillmore, who said, "Let us remember revolutions do not always establish freedom."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., June 9, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan began a series of informal talks today in Washington. The talks will continue for three days. The first session this afternoon lasted two and a half hours, and Mr. Macmillan said afterward, "We had a very nice talk about every subject under the sun." Secretary of State Dulles and Lewis Strauss, retiring chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, sat in on the meeting. Mr. Macmillan also was accompanied by several aides, including Sir Harold Caccia, the British ambassador. Tomorrow, the President and Prime Minister will fly by helicopter to Johns Hopkins University, where Mr. Macmillan will make the commencement address.

In Paris, General DeGaulle is reported laying plans for a possible meeting with Prime Minister Macmillan, after Mr. Macmillan's visit in Washington. DeGaulle conferred for 20 minutes today with United States Ambassador Houghton, who flies to Washington tomorrow for consultations.

General DeGaulle today named a new governor of Corsica (REPORTEDLY) with orders to re-establish the authority of the Paris government. /The former governor... who let insurgent forces seize control of the island...has been transferred to a minor post, in a remote department of France.

DeGaulle also named five more cabinet ministers. None of them is regarded as a controversial figure---four are middle-road politicians, the other a career civil servant. /But still missing from the list of cabinet appointments, was the name of the insurgent leader, Jacques Soustelle. (The appointments today were for the ministries of agriculture, construction, communications, veteran' affairs, and public works. A sixth appointment, for minister of public health, reportedly will go to a Moslem.

DeGaulle's meeting with his cabinet today, lasted only 45 minutes. A spokesman said, "There was no discussion, no debate. It was," he said,

"a session similar to those known in Napoleon's time as a meeting of the great formalities." A formal meeting to give routine approval to what already has been done.

A Moslem rebel spokesman said today...at the United Nations...that Algerian nationalists will boycott any election called by the French government. / He discounted DeGaulle's promise of political and economic equality. "We Algerians," he said, "did not start a revolution just to get a pay raise, but to get independence."

President Eisenhower today sent a letter to Soviet Premier Khrushchev, dealing with a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests. Khrushchev recently suggested that Polish and Czech experts also take part in technical talks on how to enforce a test ban, and Mr. Eisenhower's message is in reply. News Secretary Hagerty says the text will be released tomorrow forenoon.

Russia asked the United Nations today to stop America's current series of nuclear tests. The Soviet request was made in the Trusteeship Council, which has jurisdiction over Pacific islands administered by the United States, including the Eniwetok proving grounds. / The United States called the Russian action a propaganda move...but indicated willingness to have the question taken up in the trusteeship council next week.

→

So far, the Communist government of East Germany has balked at releasing the nine American servicemen whose helicopter landed inside the East German frontier on Saturday. A United States Army spokesman says the helicopter apparently became lost in a thunderstorm on a routine training flight. A Soviet Embassy spokesman...in East Berlin...says the men are all well and that the United States must seek their release...and the return of the helicopter...by negotiating directly with the East German government. The United States does not recognize East Germany, and it has taken up such matters in the past with Soviet authorities. The State Department expresses hope that the Russians will honor this precedent and release the helicopter and its occupants without further delay.

Anti-Greek rioting continued today in many Turkish communities on the island of Cyprus. And a Turkish policeman was killed by unidentified gunmen tonight in the capital city of Nicosia, despite a curfew imposed by the British governor. Greece has asked for an extraordinary meeting of the NATO permanent council to consider the riots, now in their third day. And Archbishop Makarios, the exiled leader of the Greek Orthodox Church in Cyprus, says that if the British authorities cannot maintain order, then the Greeks on the island will have to organize "in self-defense."

→

In Washington, the Navy announces that it is scrapping plans for the construction of six new warships and the modernization of three others under its building program. Secretary of the Navy Gates says the ships have been eliminated to compensate for rising construction costs. ~~Not only are labor and material costs going up, he explains, but it is more expensive to build nuclear-powered vessels and buy the guided missiles required in the Atomic Age.~~ The projects eliminated include two new destroyer-escorts, four new guided missile frigates, and the conversion of present craft to one amphibious assault carrier and two guided missile cruisers. It is estimated that the decision will save 490-million dollars.

The House opened debate today on the Reciprocal Trade Bill, with a showdown vote due on Wednesday. Both Republican and Democratic leaders predict that the House will vote to extend President Eisenhower's authority to make reciprical trade agreements...as he has requested...for five years. Republican Representative Simpson of Pennsylvania...who is sponsoring a two-year extension of the program...told a reporter today, "Our chances don't look good."

Edward R. Murrow: June 9, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The visit of foreign statesmen to Washington is often made with an eye on the newspaper clippings it will produce, and on the stimulus it will give to American generosity and foreign policy. / This is normal and legitimate. But it is not the way to size up the present visit of Prime Minister Macmillan. According to his idea, he is more like a relative dropping in for an informal call. / If this seems to play down the importance of the occasion, the truth is that Mr. Macmillan thinks that only a British Prime Minister can make this kind of visit. / For he comes without an agenda, and with no group of experts. He considers Anglo-American relations to be so basic and unshakable, that the occasional informal visit is a vital, if routine, family event.

Obviously there is plenty to talk about, and the reports from Washington about the subjects to be discussed are sure to be right. All of them will be. But by far the most urgent topic is one that hadn't been foreseen when the visit was [redacted] scheduled. It is how to deal with DeGaulle. Both the President and the Prime Minister appreciate the highly explosive possibilities of DeGaulle's accession of power. They know the peril that would follow if he does not make peace with the Algerian Moslems, or keep the friendship of Tunisia and Morocco. They also know that the future of the European community is at stake, not to mention the effectiveness of the NATO alliance. First thing to be decided is Mr. Macmillan's proposed visit to Paris, what to say and whether to go alone or with Mr. Dulles as associate.

Reports say that Mr. Macmillan will discuss in Washington a common policy on the suspension of nuclear tests. Actually there isn't much to discuss at this time. The British are willing to go along with us in giving up testing, under acceptable international controls, but only if the McMahon act is amended to let them share some of our nuclear secrets. Since Congress hasn't got around to the revision of the McMahon act, little is to be gained by discussing it now.

But a good deal of talk about the summit conference is certain. Mr. Macmillan does not go along with Secretary Dulles in saying the conference will hardly be held this year. He has a far more sensitive home opinion on this subject than Mr. Dulles, and needs to affirm that he wants a conference, as soon as it can be prepared, the sooner the better.

No doubt he is being filled in on what the Germans had to say about discussing German unification when President Heuss and Foreign Minister Brentano were here last week. For the Germans were found to be less stand-offish than had been realized. The West German Republic is willing to deal with the East German Government as such, when the time for re-unification comes. It is prepared to set up a kind of federation with East Germany, and while it will insist on free elections, it is willing that these be held separately in East Germmy, with a joint election to come only later on. And West Germany will not try to turn back the clock on the social changes the communist regime has put through, such as the re-distribution of land, and the state ownership of industries. This seems to anticipate some kind of communist survival in East Germany, even after unification has begun. And it is going more than halfway to meet Moscow's demands for proceeding toward unification. On this basis the possibility of dealing with unification at the summit cannot be excluded.

The President and Prime Minister also are sure to tell each other about their commencement ~~addresses~~ speeches. Mr. Eisenhower exhorted the midshipmen at Annapolis to be apostles of peace. And Mr. Macmillan, at DePauw University, became the prophet for the ultimate economic federation of the whole free world. "Just as the economies of the states of the Union grew together two hundred years ago" said the Prime Minister, "so, in some measure at least, must the economies of the free world."

It is a sign of the times, that other political leaders in other commencement addresses also stressed closer economic co-operation.

(Sic!)
President Diefenbaker of Canada, speaking at Wesleyan, urged it between the United States and Canada. Adlai Stevenson, at Michigan State, proposed the immediate appointment of a group of international experts to plan measures to meet what he called "the creeping crisis" of the free world economies. They should, he said, work out joint measures for sustained growth, for tariff negotiations, for long-term aid and investment, and for adequate working capital for world trade and convertability. "Make no mistake about it" he warned. "The drift is all the other way."

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

Many speakers, in this commencement season, are stressing the need for new ideas, for closer economic cooperation of the Free World. The economic expansion of Russia compels us to explore new possibilities. Franklin Roosevelt said, "It is common sense to take a method and try it. If it fails, admit it frankly and try another. But above all, try something."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan began a series of informal talks today in Washington. The talks will continue for three days. The first session this afternoon lasted two and a half hours and Mr. Macmillan said afterward, "We had a very nice talk about every subject under the sun." Secretary of State Dulles and Lewis Strauss, retiring chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, sat in on the meeting. Mr. Macmillan also was accompanied by several aides, including Sir Harold Caccia, the British ambassador. Tomorrow, the President and Prime Minister will fly by helicopter to Johns Hopkins University, where Mr. Macmillan will make the commencement address.

In Paris, General De Gaulle is reported laying plans for a possible meeting with Prime Minister Macmillan after Mr. Macmillan's visit to Washington. De Gaulle conferred for 20 minutes today with United States Ambassador Houghton, who flies to Washington tomorrow for consultations.

General De Gaulle today named a new governor of Corsica reportedly with orders to re-establish the authority of the Paris government. The former governor who let insurgent forces seize control of the island...has been transferred to a minor post in a remote department of France.

De Gaulle also named five more cabinet ministers. None of them is regarded as a controversial figure---four are middleroad politicians, the other a career civil servant. But still missing from the list of cabinet appointments was the name of the insurgent leader, Jacques Soustelle. The appointments today were for the ministries of agriculture, construction, communications, veteran affairs, and public works. A sixth appointment for minister of public health reportedly will go to a Moslem.

De Gaulle's meeting with his cabinet today lasted only 45 minutes. A spokesman said, "There was no discussion, no debate. It was," he said, "a session similar to those known in Napoleon's time as a meeting of the great formalities." A formal meeting to give routine approval to what already has been done.

A Moslem rebel spokesman said today..at the United Nations...that Algerian nationalists will boycott any election called by the French government. He discounted De Gaulle's promise of political and economic equality. "We Algerians" he said, "did not start a revolution just to get a pay raise but to get independence."

President Eisenhower today sent a letter to Soviet Premier Khrushchev dealing with a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests. Khrushchev recently suggested that Polish and Czech experts also take part in technical talks on how to enforce a test ban, and Mr. Eisenhower's messageis in reply. News Secretary Hagerty says the text will be released tomorrow forenoon.

Russia asked the United Nations today to stop America's current series of nuclear tests. The Soviet request was made in the Trusteeship Council, which has jurisdiction over Pacific islands administered by the United States, including the Eniwetok proving grounds. The United States called the Russian action a propaganda move...but indicated willingness to have the question taken up in the trusteeship council next week.

So far, the Communist government of East Germany has balked at releasing the nine American servicemen whose helicopter landed inside the East German frontier on Saturday. A United States Army spokesman says the helicopter apparently became lost in a thunderstorm on a routine training flight. A Soviet Embassy spokesman...in East Berlin...says the men are all well and that the United States must seek their release...and the return of the helicopter...by negotiating directly with the East German government. The United States does not recognize East Germany, and it has taken up such matters in the past with Soviet authorities. The State Department expresses hope that the Russians will honor this precedent and release the helicopter and its occupants without further delay.

Anti-Greek rioting continued today in many Turkish communities on the island of Cyprus. And a Turkish policeman was killed by unidentified gunmen tonight in the capital city of Nicosia, despite a curfew imposed by the British governor. Greece has asked for an extraordinary meeting of the NATO permanent council to consider the riots now in their third day. And Archbishop Makarios, the exiled leader of the Greek Orthodox Church in Cyprus, says that if the British authorities cannot maintain order, then the Greeks on the island will have to organize "in self-defense."

In Washington, the Navy announces that it is scrapping plans for the construction of six new warships and the modernization of three others under its building program. Secretary of the Navy Gates says the ships have been eliminated to compensate for rising construction costs. The projects eliminated include two new destroyer-escorts, four new guided missile frigates, and the conversion of present craft to one amphibious assault carrier and two guided missile cruisers. It is estimated that the decision will save 490 million dollars.

The House opened debate today on the Reciprocal Trade Bill, with a showdown vote due on Wednesday. Both Republican and Democratic leaders predict that the House will vote to extend President Eisenhower's authority to make reciprocal trade agreements...as he has requested...for five years. Republican Representative Simpson of Pennsylvania...who is sponsoring a two-year extension of the program...told a reporter today, "Our chances don't look good."

The visit of foreign statemen to Washington is often made with an eye on the newspaper clippings it will produce, and on the stimulus it will give to American generosity and foreign policy. This is normal and legitimate. But it is not the way to size up the present visit of Prime Minister Macmillan. According to his idea, he is more like a relative dropping in for an informal call. If this seems to play down the importance of the occasion, the truth is that Mr. Macmillan thinks that only a British Prime Minister can make this kind of visit. For he comes without an agenda, and with no group of experts. He considers Anglo-American relations to be so basic and unshakable, that the occasional informal visit is a vital, if routine, family event.

Obviously there is plenty to talk about, and the reports from Washington about the subjects to be discussed are sure to be right. All of them will be. But by far the most urgent topic is one that hadn't been foreseen when the visit was scheduled. It is how to deal with De Gaulle. Both the President and the Prime Minister appreciate the highly explosive possibilities of De Gaulle's accession of power. They know the peril that would follow if he does not make peace with the Algerian Moslems, or keep the friendship of Tunisia and Morocco. They also know that the future of the European community is at stake, not to mention the effectiveness of the NATO alliance. First thing to be decided is Mr. Macmillan's proposed visit to Paris, what to say and whether to go alone or with Mr. Dulles as associate.

Reports say that Mr. Macmillan will discuss in Washington a common policy on the suspension of nuclear tests. Actually there isn't much to discuss at this time. The British are willing to go along with us in giving up testing, under acceptable international controls, but only if the McMahon Act is amended to let them share some of our nuclear secrets. Since Congress hasn't got around to the revision of the McMahon Act, little is to be gained by discussing it now.

But a good deal of talk about the summit conference is certain. Mr. Macmillan does not go along with Secretary Dulles in saying the conference will hardly be held this year. He has a far more sensitive home opinion on this subject than Mr. Dulles, and needs to affirm that he wants a conference, as soon as it can be prepared, the sooner the better.

No doubt he is being filled in on what the Germans had to say about discussing German unification when President Heuss and Foreign Minister Brentano were here last week. For the Germans were found to be less stand-offiish than had been realized. The West German Republic is willing to deal with the East German Government as such, when the time for re-unification comes. It is prepared to set up a kind of federation with East Germany, and while it will insist on free elections, it is willing that these be held separately in East Germany, with a joint election to come only later on. And West Germany will not try to turn back the clock on the social changes the communist regime has put through, such as the re-distribution of land, and the state ownership of industries. This seems to anticipate some kind of communist survival in East Germany even after unification has begun. And it is going more than halfway to meet Moscow's demands for proceeding toward unification. On this basis, the possibility of dealing with unification at the summit cannot be excluded.

The President and Prime Minister also are sure to tell each other about their commencement speeches. Mr. Eisenhower exhorted the midshipmen at Annapolis to be apostles of peace. And Mr. Macmillan, at De Pauw University, became the prophet for the ultimate economic federation of the whole free world. "Just as the economies of the states of the Union grew together two hundred years ago" said the Prime Minister, "so, in some measure at least, must the economies of the free world."

It is a sign of the times, that other political leaders in other commencement addresses also stressed closer economic co-operation. President Diefenbaker of Canada, speaking at Wesleyan, urged it between the United States and Canada. Adlai Stevenson, at Michigan State, proposed the immediate appointment of a group of international experts to plan measures to meet what he called "the creeping crisis" of the free world economies. They should, he said, work out joint measures for sustained growth, for tariff negotiations, for long-term aid a and investment, and for adequate working capital for world trade and convertability. "Make no mistake about it" he warned. "The drift is all the other way."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Many speakers in this commencement season are stressing the need for new ideas for closer economic cooperation of the Free World. The economic expansion of Russia compels us to explore new possibilities. Franklin Roosevelt said, "It is common sense to take a method and try it. If it fails, admit it frankly and try another. But above all, try something."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 10, 1958

This is the news:

The Committee of Public Safety in Algeria today defied General DeGaulle's instructions to "stay out of politics." The committee approved a resolution reaffirming its claim to be the "repository of popular sovereignty" in Algeria. It declared DeGaulle's plan to hold municipal elections in Algeria (before the constitutional referendum in October) to be "both difficult and dangerous." It demanded the suppression of French political parties, called them "the instruments of private interests," and urged the abolition of the Algerian constitution, so that Algeria may be integrated completely with France. It complained that DeGaulle had not declared the Sahara to be a province of France. The resolution was passed by the committee unanimously, with General Massu presiding./ A report went out that the resolution also had the approval of General Salan, DeGaulle's own "delegate general" in Algeria./ A committee spokesman admitted later that this was a mistake.

In Paris, a spokesman for General DeGaulle said that municipal elections will be held in Algeria this summer./ The spokesman is quoted as saying that DeGaulle will "steadfastly pursue" his declared policy.

The resolution ended with an appeal for "the support of all patriots." And the committee immediately received the support of the French Army's veterans' organization in Algiers, known as the Veterans and Reserve Officers' Association./ The association put out a statement saying that the struggle had not ended with DeGaulle's return to power./ It said: "The struggle has only begun. In close collaboration with the Army and its leaders, we will fight unflinchingly to destroy the last roots of the system." (By "system", it meant the Fourth Republic of France).

The mayor of Algiers, Jacques Chevallier, resigned yesterday in protest against the activities of the right-wing insurgent group. Today, 14 of the 50 members of Algiers city council also resigned in sympathy./ Only six councilmen have announced that they will stay on the job.

The United Nations Security Council today resumed its consideration of Lebanon's charge, that the United Arab Republic has interferred "massively" in its internal affairs. / Lebanon charges...specifically...that Egypt and Syria have sought to overthrow its pro-Western government, by making incendiary broadcasts, and smuggling in arms. The Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik, told the Security Council today that the situation in his country has deteriorated "considerably" in the last 24 hours. / Reports from Beirut speak of heavy fighting in both North and South Lebanon, and Malik urged the Security Council to stay in continuous session until it comes to some conclusion. The situation, he said, is serious. The Egyptian delegate denied the Lebanese charges, declaring that they cannot be supported by any official documentation. The United Arab Republic, he said, does not want Lebabon to be torn apart by civil war; it wants a stable government in Lebanon, which will be a steadying influence in the Middle East. / The Swedish delegate suggested, that the United Nations send a team of investigators to Lebanon for an on-the-spot inquiry. / And this proposal has the support of both Britain and the United States. The Russian dlegate said he would need 24 hours to consult Moscow

President Eisenhower has proposed to Soviet Premier Khrushchev that technical talks on how to enforce a nuclear test ban start in Geneva "on or about July first." The United States thus rejects Khrushchev's alternate suggestion that the meeting be held in Moscow. Mr. Eisenhower agrees to the Soviet proposal that experts from Poland and Czechoslovakia be included in the talks. And the United States, he says, has "no objection in principle" to letting a neutral country...like India...join the meeting later, "if it is agreed during the course of the talks that this might be useful."

Secretary of State Dulles told his weekly news conference today that under an agreement for suspending nuclear tests, it probably would be necessary to have detection centers in Red China as well as in Australia and the Sahara Desert. The United States does not recognize the Communist government of China, and Mr. Dulles conceded that a political problem is involved. He said the United States is prepared to negotiate with East Germany for the release of the nine American servicemen, whose helicopter landed inside the East German frontier. But that, he said, does not imply recognition of East Germany. He said the United States deals with whomever it is necessary, when it comes to securing the release of Americans who have been virtually kidnaped.

→

Dulles took a dim view of Russia's effort to obtain long-term credit from the United States, in order to buy American machinery. He noted that Russia has provided credit to other countries, so they can buy from Russia. Now, he said, it looks as though Russia wants credit from the United States, in order to step up its economic offensive against the United States. The United States does not go for this.

Mr. Dulles told reporters that he and British Prime Minister Macmillan are exchanging views on "how to improve the economic health of the free world." He said part of the problem is the stimulation of investment in the less-developed countries. And according to the Associated Press, a sort of multi-nation Marshall Plan to help needy countries develop their economies, is under examination in Washington. Mr. Dulles and Mr. Macmillan conferred this afternoon.

In a commencement address this morning...at Johns Hopkins University... Mr. Macmillan called for closer economic ties between the United States and the rest of the Free World. "Only in this way," he said, "shall we prevent our military defense from being outflanked on the economic front." He pointed out that Great Britain and the other Western European countries no longer have the wealth necessary to be the "main props" of world trade. And he suggested that their role as world bankers be assumed by the United States. ~~He said, "Even from a selfish point of view, creditor nations cannot afford to immobilize money. If one player gets all the chips, the game comes to an end."~~ Mr. Macmillan was introduced to the commencement addience by President Eisenhower as "a great Free World leader." They both received honorary degrees.

In London today, the British defense secretary...Duncan Sandys... submitted the idea of trying to achieve comprehensive world disarmament in a single step. Sandys described the possible new approach in speaking before the House of Commons. The "starting point", he said, would be a general agreement for the prevention of war, under which countries would reduce their armed forces to the level where they could no longer pose a threat to any other country. To carry out the agreement, a "world security authority" would be set up under the United Nations...along with a strong international police force to see that decisions of the authority are carried out. Sandys told the House of Commons that he was not advancing the plan formally. He said, "I am merely examining what such an approach might involve."

20

Investigators for the House Commerce sub-committee today produced records indicating that Bernard Goldfine - a Boston industrialist - paid two thousand dollars' worth of hotel bills for presidential assistant Sherman Adams. These payments were made between 1954 and 1958. The House Committee is looking into alleged political pressures on Federal regulatory agencies. / It has been trying to get hold of Mr. Goldfine's financial records. Counsel for the sub-committee said that allegations had been received that Goldfine had been accorded preferential treatment by the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Federal Trade Commission - because of his close friendship with Sherman Adams. / Committee counsel gave a long list of Adams' visits to the Sheraton-Plaza Hotel in Boston, with the bill going to Goldfine.

Roger Robb, the attorney representing Goldfine, said that Adams and Goldfine have been friends for many years - that instead of staying at the Goldfine home, Adams went to the hotel and the bill was paid by Goldfine. Mr. Robb said the testimony was a "smear." He requested that the hearings be closed to the public, because the enquiry might tend to "defame and degrade" his client, Mr. Goldfine. The request for a closed hearing was denied.

The White House declined to comment. News Secretary Haggerty said was

Sherman Adams/out of town, he didn't know just where, but he'd try to get hold of Adams and let reporters know whether he had any comment.

President Eisenhower told the House today that it would be a "tragic blunder", if Congress killed his liberal trade proposals in favor of high tariff legislation. Mr. Eisenhower made his appeal in letters to House Republican Leader Martin and Chairman Mills of the House Ways and Means Committee. Two measures are before the House. One would extend the Reciprocal Trade Act for five years, and permit the President to cut tariffs as much as 25 percent. The other bill would extend the legislation for only two years, and give the Federal Tariff Commission---not the President---final authority to raise tariffs. The House will start voting on these measures tomorrow.

The framers of so-called "moderate" legislation, to curb union corruption, today defended their measure against Administration attack. Last night, Secretary of Labor Mitchell issued a statement, denouncing the legislation as "completely ineffective". Democratic Senator Kennedy has replied by calling the detailed criticisms made by Mitchell "completely inaccurate". He points to Mitchell's statement, that more than 60 percent of the labor unions would be excused, under terms of the bill, from filing financial reports. He says that, actually, the measure would cover 93 percent of

→

The NATO permanent council in Paris today considered the situation in Cyprus. Riots between Turkish and Greek Cypriots have been going on for four days. So far, no report from Paris on what decisions---if any--may have been reached.

union members. The other chief sponsor of the legislation---Republican Senator Ives---says that apparently Mitchell was misinformed. Both he and Kennedy point out that the labor secretary is in Switzerland, attending a meeting of the International Labor Organization. [redacted]

[redacted]

Jill

Back in a moment—

How a word from Fred.

. Word for Today

The Committee of Public Safety in Algiers is disgruntled over the fact that General DeGaulle...in forming a government...has not named a single one of its number to his cabinet. Their feeling is akin to that of John Kemble, who allowed, "Perhaps it was right to dissemble your love, but---why did you kick me downstairs?"

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Committee of Public Safety in Algeria today defied General De Gaulle's instructions to stay out of politics. The committee approved a resolution reaffirming its claim to be the "repository of popular sovereignty" in Algeria. It declared De Gaulle's plan to hold municipal elections in Algeria (before the constitutional referendum in October) to be "both difficult and dangerous." It demanded the suppression of French political parties, called them "the instruments of private interests," and urged the abolition of the Algerian constitution, so that Algeria may be integrated completely with France. It complained that De Gaulle had not declared the Sahara to be a province of France. The resolution was passed by the committee unanimously, with General Massu presiding. A report went out that the resolution also had the approval of General Salan, De Gaulle's own "delegate general" in Algeria. A committee spokesman admitted later that this was a mistake.

In Paris, a spokesman for General De Gaulle said that municipal elections will be held in Algeria this summer. The spokesman is quoted as saying that De Gaulle will "steadfastly pursue" his declared policy.

The resolution ended with an appeal for "the support of all patriots." And the committee immediately received the support of the French Army's veterans' organization in Algiers, known as the Veterans and Reserve Officers' Association. The association put out a statement saying that the struggle had not ended with De Gaulle's return to power. It said: "The struggle has only begun. In close collaboration with the Army and its leaders, we will fight unflinchingly to destroy the last roots of the system." (By "system" it meant the Fourth Republic of France.)

The mayor of Algiers, Jacques Chevallier, resigned yesterday in protest against the activities of the right-wing insurgent group. Today, 14 of the 50 members of Algiers city council also resigned in sympathy. Only six councilmen have announced that they will stay on the job.

The United Nations Security Council today resumed its consideration of Lebanon's charge that the United Arab Republic has interferred "massively" in its internal affairs. Lebanon charges...specifically...that Egypt and Syria have sought to overthrow its pro-Western government by making incendiary broadcasts and smuggling in arms. The Lebanese foreign minister, Charles Malik, told the Security Council today that the situation in his country has deteriorated "considerably" in the last 24 hours. Reports from Beirut speak of heavy fighting in both North and South Lebanon, and Malik urged the Security Council to stay in continuous session until it comes to some conclusion. The situation, he said, is serious. The Egyptian delegate denied the Lebanese charges, declaring that they cannot be supported by any official documentation. The United Arab Republic, he said, does not want Lebanon to be torn apart by civil war; it wants a stable government in Lebanon which will be a steadying influence in the Middle East. The Swedish delegate suggested that the United Nations send a team of investigators to Lebanon for an on-the-spot inquiry. And this proposal has the support of both Britain and the United States. The Russian delegate said he would need 24 hours to consult Moscow.

President Eisenhower has proposed to Soviet Premier Khrushchev that technical talks on how to enforce a nuclear test ban start in Geneva "on or about July first." The UnitedStates thus rejects Khrushchev's alternate suggestion that the meeting be held in Moscow. Mr. Eisenhower agrees to the Soviet proposal that experts from Poland and Czechoslovakia be included in the talks. And the United States, he says, has "no objection in principle" to letting a neutral country...like India...join the meeting later, "if it is agreed during the course of the talks that this might be useful."

Secretary of State Dulles told his weekly news conference today that under an agreement for suspending nuclear tests, it probably would be necessary to have detection centers in Red China as well as in Australia and the Sahara Desert. The United States does not recognize the Communist government of China, and Mr. Dulles conceded that a political problem is involved. He said the United States is prepared to negotiate with East Germany for the release of the nine American servicemen whose helicopter landed inside the East German frontier. But, that, he said, does not imply recognition of East Germany. He said the United States deals with whomever it is necessary when it comes to securing the release of Americans who have been virtually kidnaped.

Dulles took a dim view of Russia's effort to obtain long-term credit from the Untted States in order to buy American machinery. He noted that Russia has provided credit to other countries so they can buy from Russia. Now, he said, it looks as though Russia wants credit from the United States in order to step up its economic offensive against the United States. The United States does not go for this.

Mr. Dulles told reporters that he and British Prime Minister Macmillan are exchanging views on "how to improve the economic health of the free world." He said part of the problem is the stimulation of investment in the less developed countries. And according to the Associated Press, a sort of multi-nation Marshall Plan to help needy countries develop their economies is under examination in Washington. Mr. Dulles and Mr. Macmillan conferred this afternoon.

In a commencement address this morning...at Johns Hopkins University Mr. Macmillan called for closer economic ties between the United States and the rest of the Free World. "Only in this way," he said, "shall we prevent our military defense from being outflanked on the economic front." He pointed out that Great Britain and the other Western European countries no longer have the wealth necessary to be the "main props" of world trade. And he suggested that their role as world bankers be assumed by the United States. Mr. Macmillan was introduced to the commencement audience by President Eisenhower as "a great Free World leader." They both received honorary degrees.

In London today, the British defense secretary...Duncan Sandys...submitted the idea of trying to achieve comprehensive world disarmament in a single step. Sandys described the possible new approach in speaking before the House of Commons. The "starting point" he said, would be a general agreement for the prevention of war under which countries would reduce their armed forces to the level where they could no longer pose a threat to any other country. To carry out the agreement, a "world security authority" would be set up under the United Nations...along with a strong international police force to see that decisions of the authority are carried out. Sandys told the House of Commons that he was not advancing the plan formally. He said, "I am merely examining what such an approach might involve."

Investigators for the House Commerce sub-committee today produced records indicating that Bernard Goldfine - a Boston industrialist - paid two thousand dollars' worth of hotel bills for presidential assistant Sherman Adams. These payments were made between 1954 and 1958. The House Committee is looking into alleged political pressures on Federal regulatory agencies. It has been trying to get hold of Mr. Goldfine's fianacial records. Counsel for the sub-committee said that allegations had been received that Goldfine had been accorded preferential treatment by the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Federal Trade commission - because of his close friendship with Sherman Adams. Committee counsel gave a long list of Adam's visits to the Sheraton-Plaza Hotel in Boston, with the bill going to Goldfine.

Roger Robb, the attorney representing Goldfine, said that Adams and Goldfine have been friends for many years - that instead of staying at the Godlfine home, Adams went to the hotel and the bill was paid by Goldfine.

Mr. Robb said the testimony was a "smear." He requested that the hearings be closed to the public, because the enquiry might tend to "defame and degrade" his client, Mr. Goldfine. The request for a closed hearing was denied.

The White House declined to comment. News Secretary Haggerty said Sherman Adams was out of town, he didn't know just where, but he'd try to get hold of Adams and let reporters know whether he had any comment.

President Eisenhower told the House today that it would be a "tragic blunder" if Congress killed his liberal trade proposals in favor of high tariff legislation. Mr. Eisenhower made his appeal in letters to House Republican Leader Martin and Chairman Mills of the House Ways and Means Committee. Two measures are before the House. One would extend the Reciprocal Trade Act for five years and permit the President to cut tariffs as much as 25 percent. The other bill would extend the legislation for only two years and give the Federal Tariff Commission---not the President---final authority to raise tariffs. The House will start voting on these measures tomorrow.

The framers of so-called "moderate" legislation to curb union corruption today defended their measure against Administration attack. Last night, Secretary of Labor Mitchell issued a statement denouncing the legislation as "completely ineffective." Democratic Senator Kennedy has replied by calling the detailed criticisms made by Mitchell "completely inaccurate." He points to Mitchell's statement that more than 60 percent of the labor unions would be excused under terms of the bill, from filing financial reports. He says, that, actually, the measure would cover 93 percent of the union members. The other chief sponsor of the legislation---Republican Senator Ives---says that apparently Mitchell was misinformed. Both he and Kennedy point out that the labor secretary is in Switzerland, attending a meeting of the International Labor Organization.

The NATO permanent council in Paris today considered the situation in Cyprus. Riots between Turkish and Greek Cypriots have been going on for four days. So far, no report from Paris on what decisions---if any---may have been reached.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. Now, a word from Ford.

COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Committee of Public Safety in Algiers is disgruntled over the fact that General De Gaulle...in forming a government...has not named a single one of its number to his cabinet. Their feeling is akin to that of John Kemble, who allowed, "Perhaps it was rightto dissemble your love, but---why did you kick me downstairs?"

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 11, 1958

This is the news:

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...the Administration bill continuing the reciprocal trade program for another five years. The final vote after three days of debate and the personal intercession of the President was 317 to 98. The Administration victory came after two attempts to sidetrack the bill were defeated by narrower margins. Supporters of the President...and these included House Speaker Rayburn as well as Republican Leader Martin...first rejected a substitute measure offered by Republican Representative Simpson of Pennsylvania. This measure would have extended the Reciprocal Trade Act for only two years instead of five, and it would have stripped the President of his authority to → cut tariffs against the recommendation of the Tariff Commission. The Simpson bill was rejected by a vote of 234 to 167. The crucial test came on a motion by Republican Representative Reed to send the Administration measure back to committee, thus killing it...as far as the present session of Congress is concerned. And this motion to pigeon-hole the legislation was defeated, 268 [illegible]. The size of the vote for the President's bill on the final roll-call is believed to have improved its chances of passage in the Senate.

The Senate today passed a bill authorizing the government to guarantee up to 700-million dollars in loans to the nation's railroads. The measure now goes to the House.

The House also began debate today on legislation for reorganizing the Defense Department. Some of the provisions are opposed by President Eisenhower. One provision...which he [illegible] says amounts to "legal insubordination"... would allow the military or civilian head of an individual service to protest directly to Congress if he objects to a decision taken by the Secretary of Defense. Today, Republican Representative Arends of Illinois offered a compromise....which is said to be acceptable to the President. Under the compromise amendment, it would require the protests of [illegible] the heads of two of the armed services---not just one---to appeal a defense decision to Congress.

The Senate will begin voting on the legislation tomorrow.

The White House said today that Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams will prove the charges brought against him by House investigators to be "completely false." / The charges stem FROM the House investigation of alleged pressures brought to bear on federal regulatory agencies. / Evidence was introduced yesterday, showing that a Boston industrialist, Bernard Goldfine, paid hotel bills for Adams totaling nearly 2-thousand dollars. It was alleged that Goldfine had also received preferred treatment at the hands of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission. White House News Secretary Hagerty said today that after Adams' return from a fishing trip in New England, the "insinuations" made yesterday "will be quickly disposed of and proved completely false." Hagerty said Adams has the complete confidence of the President.

The United Nations Security Council has voted to send an observer team to Lebanon "to insure that there is no illegal infiltration of personnel or supply of arms across the Lebanese border." The vote was 10 to nothing, with Russia abstaining. The Security Council acted on the complaint of Lebanon that the United Arab Republic was interferring "massively" in its internal affairs and seeking the overthrow of its pro-Western government. Soviet Delegate Sobolev said that although he regards the Lebanese complaint as "unfounded", he did not veto the measure because the United Arab Republic had not opposed it. The resolution to send an observer team to Lebanon was introduced yesterday by Sweden...and was immediately supported by Britain and the United States. Secretary General Hammarskjold says he already has taken preliminary steps and that some service personnel...recruited from the United Nations truce organization in Jerusalem...can be in Lebanon within 24 hours. The dispatch of the observer group itself will take more time. ~~American Ambassador Lodge calls the Council action "a practical step toward peace."~~ It is understood that a three-man staff...representating Norway, India and Ecuador...will be in charge of the watchdog operation. American Ambassador Lodge calls the council action "a practical step toward peace."

General DeGaulle today cracked down on the leaders of the Algerian public safety committee...telling them, in effect, not to meddle in the policies of his government. Yesterday, the committee approved a motion calling for the suppression of French political parties, and the formation of a "real" government of public safety in Paris./ The motion also criticized DeGaulle's election program and demanded "total integration" of Algeria with Metropolitan France./ This document was sent to DeGaulle by General Salan, his own chief representative in Algeria. There have been reports that it had Salan's approval. The reports have been denied by a spokesman for the committee, but the suspicion persists./ Today, General DeGaulle sent Salan a telegram...which is a classic rebuke. Here is the full text of the telegram as given out in Paris today by the Minister of Information:

"With reference to the annoying and untimely incident caused by the peremptory motion of the Committee of Public Safety, I remind you that this committee has no other rights or role than to express, under your control, the opinion of its members./ The regular authority...and first of all yourself...should not take a position with regard to what this committee or any other political organization may express or demand. In addition, it must be made understood to the persons concerned that the national task which I have undertaken with my government calls for calmness of mind and the frank and reasoned adhesion of all those who wish to help me to save the national unity, integrity, and independence." The telegram ended with the phrase, "very cordially."

→

[redacted]

So far, there has been no public reaction on the part of the Public Safety Committee to this rebuke. But there is said to be growing division within the committee in Algiers on what course to follow---whether to give all-out support to DeGaulle, or press for the fulfillment of its original revolutionary program. / Eight members of the committee flew to Paris today. Word spread that they constituted an official delegation, appointed by the committee for a specific mission. / But a spokesman for the committee denied this. "Anyone who has gone there," he said, "is completely on his own."

Tonight, General DeGaulle summoned Jacques Soustelle to come to Paris from Algiers. / Soustelle was a leader in the Algiers insurrection, and he has been serving as political adviser to the Committee of Public Safety. [redacted] He has also been a staunch supporter of DeGaulle.

→

And members of the committee resent the fact that DeGaulle, up to this time, has found no place for Soustelle in his government. No reason was given today as to why Soustelle was called to Paris.

It was announced after a French cabinet meeting today that Secretary of State Dulles had been invited to confer with General DeGaulle in Paris next month. And the State Department confirms that Mr. Dulles will see the French leader on July 5th.

The Soviet party newspaper Pravda said today that a victory of the "forces of reaction" in France would threaten world peace. It did not make any direct attack on General DeGaulle.

Edward R. Murrow: June 11, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Britain's Prime Minister Macmillan has concluded three days of informal talks with President Eisenhower, and has taken off for Ottawa. He said both he and Eisenhower want a summit conference with Russia, but only if there is "a reasonable chance of some success", and also the Russians must not be allowed to veto the subjects to be discussed. According to Macmillan, the West's military power is so effective that "no armed aggression against us is likely". But he went on to say: "I wonder if we are equally well equipped and organized to meet the challenge of Soviet propaganda, subversion and economic penetration now gaining volume and momentum". That is a typical British way of saying that we are not equipped and organized to meet the challenge. Macmillan did not "pretend to know exactly how we should do this." And, in another refreshingly candid comment, he said: "It is naturally easier to decide where you want to go than just how to get there." And Macmillan added: "Perhaps in the course of this year we may see how we can agree how to do the things we want to do."

Mr. Macmillan is a Tory - a Conservative - calm and cool, and believing in the inevitability of gradualness. A few months ago he was informed that his Chancellor of the Exchequer was resigning, a defection which might have brought down his government. His only comment was: "How interesting!"

Today Mr. Macmillan said that any disarmament agreement, such as the suspension of nuclear tests, must include Red China if it is to work. Britain is willing to go along with the ban on sending strategic materials to the Communist bloc. But Mr. Macmillan believes that any blanket ban on trade with the Communists is bound to fail. He also thinks there can be no ~~rule~~ REAL understanding with the Soviet Union until it is prepared to abandon control and censorship of communications.

Macmillan's primary purpose in coming to Washington was financial and economic. Britain is doing about forty percent of the trade of the free world, with about four percent of the money. No one, including Macmillan, quite sees how this can continue. How much progress he made in this area remains to be seen.

There is another trait that is traditional with British Conservatives: once they have adopted a policy they cling to it in the belief that history, if not their contemporaries, will judge them to have been right. That is why Mr. Macmillan said today that "there was a sound, honorable and justified need for Britain and France to launch their attack against the Suez Canal." He thought its tactical military failure was a tragedy. Macmillan's visit will at least have served to enhance his prestige at home.

The Commerce Department reports that wages and salaries in May went up for the first time since the recession began last summer. The rate of total personal income in May, was up about 1-billion dollars over April. It is still 3-billion dollars below the peak rate of income, registered in August a year ago. / Part of the May increase is due to stepped up government payments, in the form of unemployment benefits and veterans and old age pensions. But economists also point to a 700-million-dollar increase in wages and salaries, apart from other income. / Factory payrolls were down again, but the Commerce Department says the decline in May...as compared to April...was "slight". / The major increase in income during May occurred in the construction industry. Farm income is also up.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

General DeGaule is now in a difficult position. He cannot tolerate rebellion on the part of the Algerian public safety committee. But on the other hand, if he removes the glove and employs the fist, he could find himself in peril. Plautus expressed it very well a long time ago. "To blow and swallow at the same time," he said, "is not easy."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...the Administration bill continuing the reciprocal trade program for another five years. The final vote after three days of debate and the personal intercession of the President was 317 to 98. The Administration victory came after two attempts to sidetrack the bill were defeated by narrower margins. Supporters of the President...and these included House Speaker Rayburn, as well as Republican Leader Martin...first rejected a substitute measure offered by Republican Representative Simpson of Pennsylvania. This measure would have extended the Reciprocal Trade Act for only two years instead of five and it would have stripped the President of his authority to cut tariffs against the recommendation of the Tariff Commission. The size of the vote for the President's bill on the final roll-call is believed to have improved its chances of passage in the Senate.

The Senate today passed a bill authorizing the government to guarantee up to 700 million dollars in loans to the nation's railroads. The measure now goes to the House.

The House also began debate today on legislation for reorganizing the Defense Department. Some of the provisions are opposed by President Eisenhower. One provision...which he says amounts to "legal insubordination"...would allow the military or civilian head of an individual service to protest directly to Congress if he objects to a decision taken by the Secretary of Defense. Today, Republican Representative Arends of Illinois offered a compromise...which is said to be acceptable to the President. Under the compromise amendment, it would require the protests of the heads of two of the armed services---not just one---to appeal a defense decision to Congress. The Senate will begin voting on the legislation tomorrow.

The White House said today that Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams will prove the charges brought against him by House investigators to be "completely false." The charges stem from the House investigation of alleged pressures brought to bear on federal regulatory agencies. Evidence was introduced yesterday, showing that a Boston industrialist, Bernard Goldfine, paid hotel bills for Adams totaling nearly 2-thousand dollars. It was alleged that Goldfine had also received preferred treatment at the hands of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission. White House News Secretary Hagerty said today that after Adams' return from a fishing trip in New England, the "insinuations" made yestdrday "will be quickly disposed of and proved completely false." Hagerty said Adams has the complete confidence of the President.

The United Nations Security Council has voted to send an observer team to Lebanon "to insure that there is no illegal infiltration of personnel or supply of arms across the Lebanese border." The vote was 10 to nothing, with Russia abstaining. The Security Council acted on the complaint of Lebanon that the United Arab Republic was interferring "massively" in its internal affairs and seeking the overthrow of its pro-Western governmmet. Soviet Delegate Sobolev said that although he regards the Lebanese complaint as "unfounded," he did not veto the measure because the United Arab Republic had not opposed it. The resolution to send an observer team to Lebanon was introduced yesterday by Sweden....and was immediately supported by Britain and the United States. Secretary General Hammarskjold says he already has taken preliminary steps and that some service personnel...recruited from the United Nations truce organization in Jerusalem... can be in Lebanon within 24 hours. The dispatch of the observer group itself will take more time. It is understood that a three-man staff...representing Norway, India and Equador...will be in charge of the watchdog operation. American Ambassador Lodge calls the council action "a practical step toward peace."

General De Gaulle today cracked down on the leaders of the Algerian public safety committee...telling them, in effect, not to meddle in the policies of his government. Yesterday, the committee approved a motion calling for the suppression of French political parties and the formation of a "real" government of public safety in Paris. The motion also criticized De Gaulle's election program and demanded "total integration" of Algeria with Metropolitan France. This document was sent to De Gaulle by General Salan, his own chief representative in Algeria. There have been reports that it had Salan's approval. The reports have been denied by a spokesman for the committee, but the suspicion persists. Today, General De Gaulle sent Salan a telegram...which is a classic rebuke. Here is the full text of the telegram as given out in Paris today by the Minister of Information: "With reference to the annoying and untimely incident caused by the peremptory motion of the Committee of Public Safety, I remind you that this committee has no other rights or role than to express, under your control, the opinion of its members. The regular authority...and first of all yourself... should not take a position with regard to what this committee or any other political organization may express or demand. In addition, it must be made understood to the persons concerned that the national task which I have undertaken with my government calls for calmness of mind and the frank and reasoned adhesion of all those who wish to help me to save the national unity, integrity, and independence." The telegram ended with the phrase, "very cordially."

So far, there has been no public reaction on the part of the Public Safety Committee to this rebuke. But there is said to be growing division within the committee in Algiers on what course to follow---whether to give all-out support to De Gaulle, or press for the fulfillment of its original revolutionary program. Eight members of the committee flew to Paris today. Word spread that they constituted an official delegation, appointed by the committee for a specific mission. But a spokesman for the committee denied this. "Anyone who has gone there," he said, "is completely on his own."

Tonight, General De Gaulle summoned Jacques Soustelle to come to Paris from Algiers. Soustelle was a leader in the Algiers insurrection, and he has been serving as political adviser to the Committee of Public Safety. He has also been a staunch supporter of De Gaulle. And members of the committee resent the fact that De Gaulle up to this time has found no place for Soustelle in his government. No reason was given today as to why Soustelle was called to Paris.

It was announced after a French cabinet meeting today that Secretary of State Dulles had been invited to confer with General De Guulle in Paris next month. And the State Department confirms that Mr. Dulles will see the French leader on July 5th.

The Soviet party newspaper Pravda siid today that a victory of the "forces of reaction" in France would threaten world peace. It did not make any direct attack on General De Gaulle.

Britain's Prime Minister Macmillan has concluded three days of informal talks with President Eisenhower and has taken off for Ottawa. He said both he and Eisenhower want a summit conference with Russia, but only if there is "a reasonable chance of some success," and also the Russians must not be allowed to veto the subjects to be discussed. According to Mammillan, the West's military power is so effective that "no armed aggression against us is likely." But he went on to say: "I wonder if we are equally well equipped and organized to meet the challenge of Soviet propaganda, subversion and economic penetration now gaining volume and momentum." That is a typical British way of saying that we are not equipped and organized to meet the challenge. Macmillan did not "pretend to know exactly how we should do this." And, in another refreshingly candid comment, he said: "It is naturally easier to decide where you want to go than just how to get there." And Macmillan added: "Perhaps in the course of this year we may see how we can agree how to do the things we want to do."

Mr. Macmillan is a Tory - a Conservative - calm and cool, and believing in the inevitability of gradualness. A few months ago he was informed that his Chancellor of the Exchequer was resigning, a defection which might have brought down his government. His only comment was: "How interesting!"

Today Mr. Macmillin said that any disarmament agreement, such as the suspension of nuclear tests, must include Red China if it is to work. Britain is willing to go along with the ban on sending strategic materials to the Communist bloc. But Mr. Macmillan believes that any blanket ban on trade with the Communists is bound to fail. He also thinks there can be no real understanding with the Soviet Union until it is prepared to abandon control and censorship of communications.

Macmillan's primary purpose in coming to Washington was financial and economic. Britain is doing about forty percent of the trade of the free world with about four percent of the money. No one, including Macmillan, quite sees how this can continue. How much progress he made in this area remains to be seen.

There is another trait that is traditional with British Conservatives: once they have adopted a policy they cling to it in the belief that history, if not their contemporaries, will judge them to have been right. That is why Mr. Macmillan said today that there was a sound, honorable and justified need for Britain and France to launch their attack against the Suez Canal. He thought its tactical military failure was a tragedy. Macmillan's visit will at least have served to enhance his prestige at home.

The Commerce Department reports that wages and salaries in May went up for the first time since the recession began last summer. The rate of total personal income in May was up about 1-billion dollars over April. It is still 3-billion dollars below the peak rate of income registered in August a year ago. Part of the May increase is due to stepped up government payments in the form of unemployment benefits and veterans and old age pensions. But economists also point to a 700 million dollar increase in wages and salaries, apart from other income. Factory payrolls were down again, but the Commerce Department says the decline in May...as compared to April...was "slight." The major increase in income during May occurred in the construction industry. Farm income is also up.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General De Gaulle is in a difficult position. He cannot tolerate rebellion on the part of the Algerian safety committee. But on the other hand, if he removes the glove and employs the fist, he could find himself in peril. Plautus expressed it very well a long time ago. "To blow and swallow at the same time," he said, "is not easy."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 12, 1958

This is the news:

Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams acknowledged today that he had contacted federal agencies at the request of his friend, Bernard Goldfine, on three occasions. But he denied "categorically" that he ever asked for favored treatment for Goldfine, or that the Boston businessman ever received such treatment. Adams also acknowledged that Goldfine had paid his hotel bills. (According to House testimony, these bills at a Boston hotel totaled nearly 2-thousand dollars). Adams said that in staying at the hotel he accepted the hospitality of an old friend. He said, "Mrs. Adams and I have known Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Goldfine for well over 15 years. We have entertained them in our home, and they have entertained us in theirs." Adams said that when he stayed at the hotel, he "understood" that Goldfine maintained the apartment on "a continuing basis." / Adams made his statement in a letter to Chairman Harris of the House subcommittee investigating federal regulatory agencies. / The Mr Adams said he contacted the Federal Trade Commission in regard to a wool labeling case involving Goldfine in 1953 and 1955. He talked to Edward Howrey, the F.T.C. chairman, in order to obtain information to pass along to Goldfine. That was in 1953. In 1955, he simply arranged an appointment for Goldfine to see the commission chairman. "That was all I did." / Adams said he learned later that the commission eventually issued a "cease and desist order" against the Boston manufacturer. / And Goldfine, he said, never asked him to take any action with respect to that order. / Adams went on to say that sometime in 1956, Goldfine complained to him about an action taken by the Securities and Exchange Commission. "He never asked that I do anything," Adams said, "but I requested the special counsel to the President to find out what this case was all about." / This was done, and Adams added that the President's special counsel (NEVER) let it be known to the

→

→

to the S.E.C. that it was he---Adams---who wanted the information./ The Adams letter was given out to reporters by News Secretary Hagerty./ When asked by a reporter whether President Eisenhower agrees that Adams did nothing improper in the Goldfine case, Hagerty said, "I think that is a fair summary."/ Adams and the President had a talk together before the letter was released. Hearings of the House subcommittee will resume on Monday./

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...a defense reorganization bill that ignores President Eisenhower's request that it be amended to conform more with what he feels the country needs. One after another, amendments were beaten down on votes which followed party lines---the Democrats mostly voting to keep the measure in the same form as that in which it came out of the House Armed Services Committee, and the Republicans mostly voting to make the changes the President wanted./ The final vote...approving the measure as it came out of committee...was 402 to 1. Republican Representative Clevenger of Ohio cast the lone dissenting vote./ The bill as finally passed gives Congress a veto power over any presidential plan to transfer, merge, or abolish traditional service functions. And the military or civilian head of any one of the three services is permitted to protest directly to Congress if he objects to a decision taken by the Secretary of Defense. Administration forces will try to change these provisions when the measure is taken up in the Senate.

The Senate today began debate on the Kennedy-Ives labor bill, and I should like to go into that further in a few minutes.

The Senate Finance Committee today approved legislation continuing corporation and excise tax levies at their present level for another year. The bill already has been passed by the House.

The United Auto Workers Union today called for strike votes among 500-thousand members working for Chrysler, General Motors and Ford. / But a U.A.W. official said, "There is no immediate threat of a strike. / We are just setting up the machinery in case we need it." U.A.W. contracts with the "Big Three" auto manufacturers expired last month. / Negotiations are continuing, but progress toward a new agreement has been slow.

The rightist leader, Jacques Soustelle, flew to Paris today from Algiers. Soustelle was summoned by General DeGaulle, but indications are they will not see each other until tomorrow. / A former French air force officer, General Chassin, announces in Paris that he is starting a "popular movement" to help DeGaulle...and make France a non-party state. / DeGaulle has →

5

GIVEN NO SIGN THAT A "NON-PARTY STATE" IS WHAT HE WANTS.

~~President Bourguiba of Tunisia said today that his country is always ready to cooperate with France but that the French government "must respect our national honor." It was Bourguiba's only reference to his dispute with France in a speech devoted mainly to economic problems.~~

On the island of Cyprus, the British governor has banned all public meetings in an effort to stop the wave of violence between Greek and Turkish Cypriots, now in its sixth day. Even marriages and funerals are prohibited under the new edict. But tonight...near Nicosia...~~two~~ THREE Greeks were killed and ~~three~~ (NINE) wounded in a machine-gun ambush. AND A BATALLION OF BRITISH PARATROOPERS IS BEING SENT TO THE ISLAND, BECAUSE OF THE "DETERIORATING SITUATION."

The advance unit of a United Nations observer team arrived today in Lebanon. The action was authorized by the Security Council on the complaint of Lebanon that the United Arab Republic was interferring in its internal affairs. And it will be the function of the observer team to "insure" against the smuggling of arms or infiltrators into the country. The advance party of five officers had been with the United Nations truce organization in Jerusalem. Secretary General Hammarskjold emphasized today...at a news conference...that the members of this mission will be observers. They will not be a police force empowered to stop border crossings of men or materiel. [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: June 12, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The ruckus raised by Secretary of Labor Mitchell over the Kennedy-Ives labor bill, is now recognized as being the actual beginning of the 1958 election campaign. / That campaign now promises to be a lot hotter than had been thought possible. / Mr. Mitchell's blast, fired from faraway Geneva, where he was attending an I.L.O. conference, at first produced only mystification. / The Secretary, when he testified before the Senate Labor Committee, had said nothing harsh or condemnatory of the bill. / He did express preference for the Administration's own proposals, and stated that there were differences in the Kennedy-Ives bill to which he took exceptions. But his message from Geneva ~~condemned~~ condemned the bill for having "weaknesses and deficiencies of such magnitude, that if enacted into law, would provide only illusory protection to trade union members and the public."

Secretary Mitchell's sudden awakening to dangers in the bill can best be understood as the result of a major political decision. / That is, the Republicans have chosen to campaign this fall on the issue of strong labor reform and expect to charge the Democrats with being "soft on labor".

Senator Kennedy has been prompt to accept some of Mr. Mitchell's criticism, and already the bill has been tightened in the Senate by the unanimous adoption of an amendment giving the Secretary of Labor subpoena power in enforcing the provisions of the bill. But it is not at all sure that the House will vote on a labor bill this session. House Democrats had not expected to get around to it, though now the Republican strategy may compel them to change their minds. But the House will be more reluctant than the Senate to have labor made the big issue in the November election. Every member will have to fight for his seat, and the labor issue can hurt as many as it helps. In the cities and industrial centers it can hurt Republicans a lot. But in the country at large, it can hurt many Democrats.

The Republican strategy is being explained as an attempt to exploit the feelings aroused over the conduct of union affairs. The committee hearings in the Senate, disclosing corruption and abuses, have been the highlight of the session. Because of the news coverage and ~~televising~~ BROADCASTING of the McClelland committee hearings, a wider audience was reached than for anything else going on in the Capital. Obviously the Republicans are banking on gaining more than they lose in demanding strong legislation to regulate the unions. It will lose much of the labor vote, as Senator Knowland discovered in the California primary. But the Republicans are gambling on the public being, on the whole, in favor of strong labor curbs.

The Democratic strategy has been to keep the labor reform legislation bi-partisan, to make sure that genuine reforms are put through, and to avoid anything that smacks of punishing the labor movement as such because of the sins of a few. The Democrats are satisfied by the housecleaning already done by the responsible unions. And they are prepared to meet the accusation that they are soft on labor by accusing the Republicans of representing big business, and trying to set back the union movement in the interest of management.

The Kennedy-Ives bill was voted out of the labor committee with only one dissenting vote, that of Senator Goldwater of Arizona. It seemed assured prompt and easy passage. Then Goldwater and Senator Knowland opened attacks on the bill, and Secretary Mitchell set off his explosion in Geneva. Republican leaders went into a huddle with President Eisenhower, and the three Republican senators who had voted for the bill in committee announced that they wanted something a lot stronger. Senator Goldwater is quoted as having told a reporter that the labor issue is the only one the Republicans have. "We've muffed the ball so far" he said, "and I hope we can get it back."

So the election campaign after all is going to engender some heat, and that, one might say, is in the tradition of this political nation. ~~It might be considered regrettable if politics resulted in no labor reform legislation whatever getting through Congress this session. But it can hardly be harmful to have the subject debated from one end of the land to the other, so long as the truth gets told. It must be healthier to have a lively political campaign than one without color or feeling.~~

Back in a moment. —

~~Jerry Hagan~~ —

Now a word for Ford —

Word for Today

It has become apparent that one of the principal issues in the next election campaign will be labor reform. The Republicans will press their charges against the Democrats, and vice versa. Risks are involved for both sides. But as John Gay observed (very accurately) in the 18th Century, "Politicians drive the nail that goes the best."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams acknowledged today that he had contacted federal agencies at the request of his friend, Bernard Goldfine, on three occasions. But he denied "categorically" that he ever asked for favored treatment for Goldfine, or that the Boston businessman ever received such treatment. Adams also acknowledged that Goldfine had paid his hotel bills. (According to House testimony, these bills at a Boston hotel totaled nearly 2-thousand dollars.) Adams said that in staying at the hotel he accepted the hospitality of an old friend. He said, "Mrs. Adams and I have known Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Goldfine for well over 15 years. We have entertained them in our home, and they have entertained us in theirs." Adams said that when he stayed at the hotel he "understood" that Goldfine maintained the apartment on "a continuing basis." Adams made his statement in a letter to Chairman Harris of the House sub-committee investigating federal regulatory agencies. Mr. Adams said he contacted the Federal Trade Commission in regard to a wool labeling case involving Goldfine in 1953 and 1955. He talked to Edward Howrey, the F.T.C. chairman, in order to obtain information to pass along to Goldfine. That was in 1953. In 1955, he simply arranged an appointment for Goldfine to see the commission chairman. "That was all I did." Adams said he learned later that the commission eventually issued a cease and desist order against the Boston manufacturer. And Goldfine, he said, never asked him to take any action with respect to that order. Adams went on to say that sometime in 1956, Goldfine complained to him about an action taken by the Securities and Exchange Commission. "He never asked that I do anything," Adams said, "but I requested the special counsel to the President to find out what this case was all about." This was done, and Adams added that the President's special counsel never let it be known to the S.E.C. that it was he---Adams---who wanted the information. The Adams letter was given out to reporters by News Secretary Hagerty. When asked by a reporter whether President Eisenhower agrees that Adams did nothing improper in the Goldfine case, Hagerty,said, "I think that is a fair summary." Adams and the President had a talk together before the letter was released. Hearings of the House subcommittee will resume on Monday.

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...a defense reorganization bill that ignores President Eisenhower's request that it be amended to conform more with what he feels the country needs. One after another, amendments were beaten down on votes which followed party lines---the Democrats mostly voting to keep the measure in the same form as that in which it came out of the House Armed Services Committee, and the Republicans mostly voting to make the changes the President wanted. The final vote...approving the measure as it came out of committee...was 402 to 1. Republican Representative Clevenger of Ohio cast the lone dissenting vote. The bill as finally passed gives Congress a veto power over any presidential plan to transfer, merge, or abolish traditional service functions. And the military or civilian head of any one of the three services is permitted to protest directly to Congress if he objects to a decision taken by the Secretary of Defense. Administration forces will try to change these provisions when the measure is taken up in the Senate.

The Senate today began debate on the Kennedy-Ives labor bill, and I should like to go into that further in a few minutes.

The Senate Finance Committee today approved legislation continuing corporation and excise tax levies at their present level for another year. The bill already has been passed by the House.

The United Auto Workers Union today called for strike votes among 500 thousand members working for Chrysler, General Motors and Ford. But a U.A.W. official said, "There is no immediate threat of a strike. We are just setting up the machinery in case we need it." U.A.W. contracts with the "Big Three" auto manufacturers expired last month. Negotiations are continuing, but progress toward a new agreement has been slow.

The rightist leader, Jacques Soustelle, flew to Paris today from Algiers. Soustelle was summoned by General De Gaulle, but indications are they will not see each other until tomorrow. A former French air force officer, General Chassin, announces in Paris that he is starting a "popular movement" to help De Gaulle.... and make France a non-party state. De Gaulle has given no sign that a "non-party state" is what he wants.

On the island of Cyprus, the British governor has banned all public meetings in an effort to stop the wave of violence between Greek and Turkish Cypriots now in its sixth day. Even marriages and funerals are prohibited under the new edict. But tonight....near Nicosia...three Greeks were killed and nine wounded in a machine-gun ambush. And a batallion of British paratroopers is being sent to the island, because of the "deteriorating situation."

The advance unit of a United Nations observer team arrived today in Lebanon. The action was authorized by the Security Council on the complaint of Lebanon that the United Arab Republic was interferring in its internal affairs. And it will be the function of the observer team to "insure" against the smuggling of arms or infiltrators into the country. The advance party of five officers had been with the United Nations truce organization in Jerusalem. Secretary General Hammarskjold emphasized today...at a news conference...that the members of this mission will be observers. They will not be a police force empowered to stop border crossings of men or material.

The ruckus raised by Secretary of Labor Mitchell over the Kennedy-Ives labor bill, is now recognized as being the actual beginning of the 1958 election campaign. That campaign now promises to be a lot hotter than had been thought possible. Mr. Mitchell's blast, fired from faraway Geneva, where he was attending an I.L.O. conference, at first produced only mystification. The Secretary, when he testified before the Senate Labor Committee, had said nothing harsh or condemnatory of the bill. He did express preference for the Administration's own proposals, and stated that there were differences in the Kennedy-Ives bill to which he took exceptions. But his message from Geneva condemned the bill for having "weaknesses and deficiencies of such magnitude, that if enacted into law, would provide only illusory protection to trade union members and the public."

Secretary Mitchell's sudden awakening to dangers in the bill can best be understood as the result of a major political decision. That is, the Republicans have chosen to campaign this fall on the issue of strong labor reform and expect to charge the Democrats with being "soft on labor."

Senator Kennedy has been prompt to accept some of Mr. Mitchell's criticism, and already the bill has been tightened in the Senate by the unanimous adoption of an amendment giving the Secretary of Labor subpoena power in enforcing the provisions of the bill. But it is not at all sure that the House will vote on a labor bill this session. House Democrats had not expected to get around to it, though now the Republican strategy may compel them to change their minds. But the House will be more reluctant than the Senate to have labor made the big issue in the November election. Every member will have to fight for his seat, and the labor issue can hurt as many as it helps. In the cities and industrial centers it can hurt Republicans a lot. But in the country at large, it can hurt many Democrats.

The Republican strategy is being explained as an attempt to exploit the feelings aroused over the conduct of union affairs. The committee hearings in the Senate disclosing corruption and abuses have been the highlight of the session. Because of the news coverage and broadcasting of the McClelland committee hearings, a wider audience was reached than for anything else going on in the Capital. Obviously the Republicans are banking on gaining more than they lose in demanding strong legislation to regulate the unions. It will lose much of the labor vote, as Senator Knowland discovered in the California primary. But the Republicans are gambling on the public being, on the whole, in favor of strong labor curbs.

The Democratic strategy has been to keep the labor reform legislation bi-partisan, to make sure that genuine reforms are put through, and to avoid anything that smacks of punishing the labor movement as such because of the sins of a few. The Democrats are satisfied by the housecleaning already done by the responsible unions. And they are prepared to meet the accusation that they are soft on labor by acuusing the Republicans of representing big business, and trying to set back the union movement in the interest of management.

The Kennedy-Ives bill was voted out of the labor committee with only one dissenting vote, that of Senator Goldwater of Arizona. It seemed assured prompt and easy passage. Then Goldwater and Senator Knowland opened attacks on the bill, and Secretary Mitchell set off his explosion in Geneva. Republican leaders went into a huddle with President Eisenhower, and the three Republican senators who had voted for the bill in committee announced that they wanted something a lot stronger. Senator Goldwater is quoted as having told a reporter that the labor issue is the only one the Republicans have. "We've muffed the ball so far" he said, "and I hope we can get it back."

So the election campaign after all is gonng to engender some heat, and that one might say, is in the tradition of this political nation.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It has become apparent that one of the principal issues in the next election campaign will be labor reform. The Republicans will press their charges against the Democrats and vice versa. Risks are involved for both sides. But as John Gay observed (very accurately) in the 18th century, "Politicians drive the nail that goes the best."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 13, 1958

This is the news:

General DeGaulle made a direct appeal today to the French people, asking their support for his reform program. Speaking by radio and television, DeGaulle said, "It is time to demonstrate our unity behind the Chief of Government. It is you who will decide, by your votes, the fate of France." A reference to the (constitutional) referendum scheduled for next fall. In his broadcast, DeGaulle did not outline his constitutional reform (program) in any detail. He said his aim was to "pacify Algeria in such a way that it will always be body and soul with France;" to organize a federal organization with the associated peoples of Africa and Madagascar. In the Western world, "to take action to serve both peace and security." DeGaulle said that France "belongs" to the Western world. Regarding domestic problems, he called for the "very hard but necessary effort" to stabilize France's economy. He urged the French people to support the bond drive to be launched on June 17.

→

In Algeria tonight, the Committee of Public Safety voted unanimously to support General DeGaulle. It praised his speech, and a committee spokesman said, "This is no time for quarrels or polemics." It is noted that in his broadcast, DeGaulle had no harsh words for the Algerian insurgents.

The United States...after long negotiation...has signed an agreement with Euratom, the six-nation atomic pool in Western Europe. For this story, we switch to Washington and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

Tape runs 2:00
Ends on cue: "--to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a special message asking for the creation of a new Federal Aviation Agency. The President said that recent air collisions emphasize the need for a system of traffic management which "within the limits of human ingenuity" will prevent such accidents. Mr. Eisenhower proposed that the Civil Aeronautics Administration be absorbed by the new agency and that civil and military personnel work together in the safety program as "active partners". He said ~~The agency would be part of the Executive Branch of government, with an Administrator appointed by the President and subject to confirmation by the Senate. It would have "paramount authority" over flights over the United States and its territories, "except in circumstances of military emergency." Mr. Eisenhower said~~ legislation creating the new agency should be ~~passed~~ enacted at this session of Congress. Democratic Senator Monroney already has introduced a bill following the general lines of Mr. Eisenhower's proposal. And Chairman Magnuson of the Senate Commerce Committee says is he "confident" the Senate will act quickly ~~thereon~~ in light of the President's request.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a compromise bill raising the pay of a million government workers by 10 percent. The House is expected to approve the measure next week.

~~The House Agriculture Committee today approved an omnibus farm bill with features almost certain to draw a presidential veto, if passed by Congress in its present form. The measure would place rigid controls on the production of major crops in an effort to raise prices. Most phases of the program would have to be approved by growers in a referendum before going in effect.~~

The Federal Reserve Board reports that industrial production went up in May for the first time in 11 months. / The board suggested that last month's improvement in business activity is continuing.

The United States Commissioner of Education, Dr. Lawrence Derthick, warned today that this country as a nation cannot safely disregard Russia's "race for knowledge." / Dr. Derthick recently returned to Washington after a first-hand study of the Russian school system. / He told the National Press Club that the Russians are convinced that time is on their side, and that they can win world supremacy through education and hard work. / "This conviction," he said, "is basic to all of their efforts and all of their plans for the future. It is a kind of grand passion---this conviction that children, schools, and hard work will win them their place in the sun and on the moon."

→

Soviet Premier Khrushchev's new letter to President Eisenhower has been translated by the State Department and is now on the President's desk. Mr. Dulles says the letter "appears to be an effort to push us rapidly and more certainly toward a summit conference." A similar message has been delivered in London.

The Moscow radio said tonight that Russia has agreed to hold technical talks...dealing with a possible suspension of nuclear tests...in Geneva on July first. These talks are to be limited to technical problems involved in enforcing a nuclear test ban.

The United States today sent a new note to the Soviet military authorities in East Berlin, demanding the release of the nine American servicemen held in East Germany since last Saturday. The Americans were taken into custody when their helicopter came down inside the East German frontier during a thunderstorm.

5

The White House said today that President Eisenhower has "no intention" of removing Sherman Adams as his top assistant, because of Mr. Adams' contacts with federal agencies on behalf of a Boston manufacturer. Mr. Adams denied yesterday that he ever brought "pressure" on bear on the agencies to take action favorable to Bernard Goldfine, the manufacturer involved. Evidence had been introduced by House investigators that Goldfine paid hotel bills for [redacted] Adams, totaling nearly 2-thousand dollars. Adams said he had believed that the [redacted] Boston hotel suite was rented by Goldfine on a permanent basis. He explained that he and the Boston manufacturer had been friends for 15 years. Today, the New York Post said that...two years ago...Goldfine gave Adams a 24-hundred-dollar oriental rug. And a Democratic congressman (who declined the use of his name but who is a member of the House investigating committee) said the committee "has evidence" that the Boston businessman once gave Adams a coat valued at about 700 dollars. When White House reporters asked News Secretary Hagerty about these allegations today, he declined comment. (~~I should like to review~~ this [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: June 13, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

One can look at the Sherman Adams case in two ways, simply as a problem in ethics, and as an event in highly partisan politics. / Probably one has to see it from both angles to understand it.

When Mr. Adams let his friend pay his hotel bills, and then did him some small favors, he was not corrupt. / But what he did, is going to have an incalculable impact on Mr. Adams, on President Eisenhower, and on the esteem in which the Eisenhower Administration is held in the country. / The impact is going to be a lot greater, than the case, taken by itself, seems to justify. That is because some sections of our political life are intensely partisan, and Mr. Adams has been one of the intense partisans. On occasion he has lashed out against the Democrats with much the same kind of intemperance shown by Vice President Nixon in his earlier days. Bias breeds bias. And Mr. Adams, who now could benefit from some tolerance, is not going to get it from those he has most deeply offended. He has magnified the faults of the Democrats. They will magnify his. (Magnification is one of the arts of Politics)

But that is not saying there is nothing to magnify. As a problem in ethics his action can be called on the borderline. It was only a mistake, and a little mistake. But in ethics even a little mistake may be unethical.

So long as he was not in office, the gifts Mr. Adams received from Bernard Goldfine, and the favors he did for him, were above reproach. They were clearly acts of friendship. But when he became Assistant to the President of the United States, he was probably the second most powerful political person in Washington, and he lost his freedom to receive gifts and do favors for the giver, no matter how honest and uncorrupt the relationship. A President cannot have that kind of friendships. An acting assistant president is in the same position. When the President's Assistant called a government agency on behalf of Mr. Goldfine the weight of the call was changed. Mr. Adams says he asked only for information, but the call was telling the agency that Mr. Goldfine was Mr. Adams' friend, and Mr. Adams was helping Mr. Goldfine. At the same time Mr. Goldfine was helping Mr. Adams. He helped him all told to the tune of nearly two thousand dollars' worth of hospitality.

Suppose Mr. Adams had asked information for Mr. Goldfine and had not accepted gifts from him. That also would have been helping him and using his influence to that end. Still, nobody would find fault with it. That is quite the accepted thing in politics. Or, suppose he had accepted the hospitality and Mr. Goldfine had never asked him to do the little favors. That would be put down to Mr. Goldfine's restraint and credit. But the two put together are different. They do not constitute an action becoming to a President or ~~an unofficial ruling president.~~ the man closest to the President.

The higher up a man gets in public life the more careful he has to be. And it is part of Mr. Adams' fate that he was too high to be less than completely careful. He is no newcomer in politics who didn't know that a line has to be drawn and where to draw it. Had he drawn it, the very considerable damage now done to the President and the Administration would have been avoided.

But the extent of that damage is due to the intemperance of the Republican campaign against the Democrats in 1952 and 1954. Mr. Adams doesn't speak often, but when he does the sparks fly, and one can tell that his mind is seething with emotion over the catastrophes he attributes to the Democrats. The Republicans came in to "clean up the mess in Washington", which they had mercilessly exaggerated. The Democrats will hardly be more merciful now. In Politics the quality of Mercy isn't strained at all- If-just isn't there.

Barkin a moment

George Bryan -

Word for Today

ESCULUS

The ancient Greek dramatist Aeschylus once wrote:

"So, in the Libyan fable it is told,
That once an eagle, stricken with a dart,
Said when he saw the fashion of the shaft,
'With our own feathers, not by others' hand,
Are we now smitten."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, June 13, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M. EDT

MURROW: For this story we switch to Washington and my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: The United States is embarking on a concrete adventure in inter-dependence with Western Europe. We understand that AEC Chairman Lewis Strauss and Secretary of State Dulles have just signed an agreement with URATOM - the six nation Western European Atomic pool for a joint program to provide Europe with a million kilowats of nuclear power in the next 3-years, enough power to supply a city the size of Washington. We'll provide reactor designs, technicians, 30-tons of enriched uranium and a 135-million dollars in export-import bank loans. President Eisenhower is expected to ask Congress for the necessary legislation at this session.

American officials say the program has a great advantage to us aside from our policy of promoting European unity. West Europe - where electric power is costlier then here is in a better position then we are to use atomic power now. And, we can learn from its experience how to get cheaper atomic power for the future. URATOM officials have their eye ever since the closing of the Suez Canal on freeing themselves from dependence on Middle Eastern oil. URATOM - as Western Europe's AEC signed the agreement in Brussels two weeks ago. Our signature delayed by a last minute dispute. The AEC at first wanted American inspection to make sure fissionable materials are not diverted to the making of weapons. Then, suggested inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency whose head - former Representative Sterling Cole came to Washington to argue his case. URATOM rejected outside inspection - it has its own plans for inspection, say, any outside inspection would be humiliating to a sovereign community.

More alarming - word came from Paris that Premier de Gaulle might pull France out of URATOM if it was subjected to such outside inspection. Yesterday, a compromise in an exchange of letters. "URATOM inspection in American scientific verification." And, now America is ready to help Western Europe start on the road to atomic power.

Now, back to ED Murrow in New York.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 13, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

General De Gaulle made a direct appeal today to the French people asking their support for his reform program. Speaking by radio and television De Gaulle said, "It is time to demonstrate our unity behind the Chief of Government. It is you who will decide by your votes the fate of France." A reference to the constitutional referendum scheduled for next fall. In his broadcast, De Gaulle did not outline his constitutional reform program in any detail. He said his aim was to "pacify Algeria in such a way that it will always be body and soul with France;" to organize a federal organization with the associated peoples of Africa and Madagascar. In the Western world "to take action to serve both peace and security." De Gaulle said that France "belongs" to the Western world. Regarding domestic problems, he called for the "very hard but necessary effort" to stabilize France's economy. He urged the French people to support the bond drive to be launched on June 17th.

In Algeria tonight, the Committee of Public Safety voted unanimously to support General De Gaulle. It praised his speech, and a committee spokesman said, "This is no time for quarrels or polemics." It is noted that in his broadcast, De Gaulle had no harsh words for the Algerian unsurgents.

The United States...after long negotiation...has signed an agreement with Euratom, the six-nation atomic pool in Western Europe. For this story, we switch to Washington and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: The United States is embarking on a concrete adventure in inter-dependence with Western Europe. We understand that AEC Chairman Louis Straws and Secretary of State Dulles have just signed an agreement with URATOM - the six nation Western European Atomic pool for a joint program to provide Europe with a million kilowatts of nuclear power in the next three years, enough power to supply a city the size of Washington. We'll provide reactor design, technicians, 30-tons of enriched uranium and a 135 million dollars in export-import bank loans. President Eisenhowrr is expected to ask Congress for the necessary legislation at this session.

American officials say the program has a great advantage to us aside from our policy of promoting European unity. West Europe - where electric power is costlier than here is in a better position than we are to use atomic power now. And, we can learn from its experience how to get cheaper atomic power for the future. URATOM officials have their eye ever since the closing of the Suez Canal on freeing themselves from dependence on Middle Eastern oil. URATOM - as Western Europe's AEC signed the agreement in Brussels two weeks ago. Our signature delayed by a last minute dispute. The AEC at first wanted American inspection to make sure fissionable materials are not diverted to the making of weapons. Then suggested inspection by the international Atomic Energy Agency whose head - fommer Representative Sterling Cole came to Washington to argue his case. URATOM rejected outside inspection - it has its own plans for inspection, say, any outside inspection would be humiliating to a sovereign community.

More alarming - word came from Paris that Premier de Gaulle might pull France out of URATOM if it was subjected to such outside inspection. Yesterday, a compromise in an exchange of letters. "URATOM inspection and American scientific verification." And now, America is ready to help Western Europe start on the road to atomic power.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: President Eisenhower today sent Congress a special message asking for the creation of a new Federal Aviation Agency. The President said that recent air collisions emphasize the need for a system of traffic management which "within the limits of human ingenuity" will prevent such accidents. Mr. Eisenhower proposed that the Civil Aeronautics Administration be absorbed by the new agency and that civil and military personnel work together in the safety program as "active partners." He said legislation creating the new agency should be enacted at this session of Congress.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a compromise bill raising the pay of a million government workers by 10 percent. The House is expected to approve the measure next week.

The Federal Reserve Board reports that industrial production went up in May for the first time in 11 months. The board suggested that last month's improvement in business activity is continuing.

The United States Commissioner of Education, Dr. Lawrence Derthick, warned today that this country as a nation cannot safely disregard Russia's "race for knowledge." Dr. Derthick recently returned to Washington after a first-hand study of the Russian school system. He told the National Press Club that the Russians are convinced that time is on their side, and that they can win world supremacy through education and hard work. "This conviction," he said, "is basic to all of their efforts and all of their plans for the future. It is a kind of grand passion---this conviction that children, schools and hard work will win them their place in the sun and on the moon."

Soviet Premier Khrushchev's new letter to President Eisenhower has been translated by the State Department and is now on the President's desk. Mr. Dulles says the letter "appears to be an effort to push us rapidly and more certainly toward a summit conference." A similar message has been delivered in London.

The Moscow radio said tonight that Russia has agreed to hold technical talks...dealing with a possible suspension of nuclear tests...in Geneva on July first. These talks are to be limited to technical problems involved in enforcing a nuclear test ban.

The White House said today that President Eisenhower has "no intention" of removing Sherman Adams as his top assistant because of Mr. Adams' contacts with federal agencies on behalf of a Boston manufacturer. Mr. Adams denied yesterday that he ever brought "pressure" to bear on the agencies to take action favorable to Bernard Goldfine, the manufacturer involved. Evidence had been introduced by House investigators that Goldfine paid hotel bills for Adams, totaling nearly 2-thousand dollars. Adams said he had believed that the Boston hotel suite was rented by Goldfine on a permanent basis. He explained that he and the Boston manufacturer had been friends for 15 years. Today, the New York Post said that... two years ago...Goldfine gave Adams a 24 hundred-dollar oriental rug. And a Democratic congressman (who declined the use of his name, but who is a member of the House investigating committee) said the committee "has evidence" that the Boston businessman once gave Adams a coat valued at about 700 dollars. When White House reporters asked News Secretary Hagerty about these allegations today, he declined comment.

One can look at the Sherman Adams case in two ways, simply as a problem in ethics, and as an event in highly partisan politics. Probably one has to see it from both angles to understand it.

When Mr. Adams let his friend pay his hotel bills, and then did him some small favors, he was not corrupt. But what he did is going to have an incalcuable impact on Mr. Adams, on President Eisenhower, and on the esteem in which the Eisenhower Administration is held in the country. The impact is going to be a lot greater than the case, taken by itself, seems to justify. That is because some sections of our political life are intensely partisan and Mr. Adams has been one of the intense partisans. On occasion he has lashed out against the Democrats with much the same kind of intemperance shown by Vice President Nixon in his earlier days. Bias breeds bias. And Mr. Adams, who now could benefit from some tolerance, is not going to get it from those he has most deeply offended. He has magnified the faults of the Democrats. They will magnify his. Magnification is one of the arts of politics.

But that is not saying there is nothing to magnify. As a problem in ethics his action can be called on the borderline. It was only a mistake, and a little mistake. But in ethics even a little mistake may be unethical.

So long as he was not in office, the gifts Mr. Adams received from Bernard Goldfine, and the favors he did for him, were above reproach. They were clearly acts of friendship. But when he became Assistant to the President of the United States, he was probably the second most powerful political person in Washington, and he lost his freedom to receive gifts and do favors for the giver, no matter how honest and uncorrupt the relationship. A President cannot have that kind of friendships. An acting assistant president is in the same position. When the President's Assistant called a government agency on behalf of Mr. Goldfine, the weight of the call was changed. Mr. Adams says he asked only for information, but the call was telling the agency that Mr. Goldfine was Mr. Adams' friend, and Mr. Adams was helping Mr. Goldfine. At the same time Mr. Goldfine was helping Mr. Adams. He helped him all told to the tune of nearly two thousand dollars' worth of hospitality.

Suppose Mr. Adams had asked information for Mr. Goldfine and had not accepted gifts from him. That also would have been helping him and using his influence to that end, Still nobody would find fault with it. That is quite the accepted thing in politics. Or, suppose he had accepted the hospitality and Mr. Goldfine had never asked him to do the little favors. That would be put down to Mr. Goldfine's restraint and credit. But the two put together are different. They do not constitute an action becoming to a President or the man closest to the President.

The higher up a man gets in public life the more careful he has to be. And it is part of Mr. Adams' fate that he was too high to be less than completely careful. He is no newcomer in politics who didn't know that a line has to be drawn and where to draw it. Had he drawn it, the very considerable damage now done to the President and the Administration would have been avoided.

But the extent of the damage is due to the intemperance of the Republican campaign against the Democrats in 1952 and 1954. Mr. Adams doesn't speak often, but when he does the sparks fly, and one can tell that his mind is seething with emotion over the catastrophes he attributes to the Democrats. The Republicans came in to "clean up the mess in Washington," which they had mercilessly exaggerated. The Democrats will hardly be more merciful now. In politics the quality of mercy isn't strained at all. It just isn't there.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The ancient Greek dramatist Aeschylus once wrote:

"So, in the Libyan fable it is told
That once an eagle, stricken with a dart,
Said when he saw the fashion of the shaft
'With our own feathers, not by others' hand,
Are we now smitten."

Goodnight and good luck!

(Via Western Union)

June 26, 1958

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

This is the news:

Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams will appear tomorrow before the House subcommittee investigating his relationship with Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine. Mr. Adams says he asked for permission to appear, and that permission was immediately granted. Subcommittee Chairman Harris said earlier today that there was an open invitation to anyone involved in the hearings to testify. He did not mention Mr. Adams by name. The investigation was going to be pressed, he said, "without fear or favor." The subcommittee heard testimony today that "higher ups" in the Federal Trade Commission once overruled a recommendation (by a commission expert) that Goldfine be prosecuted for the mislabeling of fabrics. (This reportedly occurred in 1955.) Adams has acknowledged that he set up an appointment in 1955 for Goldfine to see Edward Howrey, who was then commission chairman. Both Adams and Howrey deny, however, that any pressure was exerted on Goldfine's behalf at that or any other time. The present acting chairman of the commission, Robert Secrest, testified today that (according to the record) the commission and every staff member has acted "properly and in good faith." (It is a matter of record) that Goldfine paid hotel bills for Adams in Boston and Plymouth, Massachusetts. Adams said he accepted this hospitality from an old friend, believing that the hotel rooms had been rented by the Boston manufacturer on a permanent basis. (Both Adams and the White House have (thus far) refused to comment on reports that Goldfine gave Adams an oriental rug and a vicuna coat.) The subcommittee produced evidence today that Goldfine also paid two hotel bills for Adams in New York. A staff investigator, Francis McLaughlin, introduced photostatic copies of records...showing that twice in 1954, Adams stayed at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel as Goldfine's guest. [redacted] President Eisenhower reiterated today---through News Secretary Hagerty---that there is "no individual, in or out of government, that he has more confidence in ~~single~~ them ~~Sherman~~ Adams." Hagerty said the President will hold a news conference tomorrow.

(more)

(more)

The State Department today advised American citizens not to go to Lebanon "unless there are imperative reasons for such travel." There was stepped-up fighting between government and rebel forces in Lebanon over the week-end. ~~But~~ But CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen reports from Beirut that, so far, only a few Americans have decided to evacuate their ~~families~~ families because of the worsening situation. United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold is flying to Lebanon tomorrow night.

In Paris, the permanent NATO council met today in emergency session to discuss the crisis in Greek-Turkish relations over the future of Cyprus. Greece has broken off ~~the~~ military cooperation with Turkey as a result of the dispute. Both are members of NATO. Tomorrow, Prime Minister Macmillan will announce a new British ~~offer~~ offer on Cyprus in the House of Commons.

Seventeen hundred Marine engineers went on strike today on the Atlantic and Gulf ~~coasts, to back up a demand for increased pensions and higher pay.~~ coasts, to back up a contract demand for increased pensions and higher pay. The strike of tanker seamen has been settled, less than 24 hours after it began.

(4)

The Supreme Court (said today) that the State Department...in determining whether to issue a passport...does not have authority to inquire into the beliefs and associations of the applicant. The court ruled on the refusal of the State Department to grant passports to two scientists, Walden Bruce Dayton and Walter Briehl, and the artist, Rockwell Kent. Kent and Briehl refused to sign non-Communist affidavits. Dayton did sign. But the State Department held...partly on the basis of confidential information...that he wanted to go abroad to engage in activities beneficial to the Communist cause. (The decision of the court) was split, 5 to 4. In speaking for the majority, Justice Douglas said the court will not "readily infer" that Congress gave the Secretary of State "unbridled discretion" to withhold passports.

"We must remember," (he said, "that we are dealing here with citizens who have neither been accused of crimes or found guilty. They are being denied their freedom of movement solely because of their refusal to be subjected to inquiry into their beliefs and associations."

5-8

(5)

The Supreme Court also ruled that "hot cargo" labor contracts are permissible, if they are adhered to voluntarily. But such contracts, it said in a split 6-to-3 decision, cannot be legally enforced. Under a "hot cargo" clause, workers cannot be required to handle non-union goods, or goods coming from plants where workers are on strike.

The Senate tonight moved toward passage of a "moderate" labor bill ~~to curb labor abuses~~---despite Secretary of Labor Mitchell's demand for stronger legislation. New stiff requirements were voted down during the day. But tonight also The measure...~~as it presently stands~~...says unions must elect officers secretly and file detailed financial reports. Last week, a provision exempting small unions from these requirements was stricken, in order to meet one of Mitchell's principal criticisms. The measure also was amended to give the Secretary of Labor ~~subpoena~~ power to subpoena union officials and records.

The Senate voted ~~today~~ to retain the non-Communist oath requirement (more) for labor leaders and to extend it to employers as well.

10

61 - 20

5:35

5:40

(6)

¶ The Rockefeller Brothers' Fund, which has two previous radical reports to its name, came up with a third one today that is even more radical. The first had urged far larger defense spending than now planned, and a single chief of the staff. The second recommended an early tax cut to turn the recession around. The one published today proposes that the United States set out to achieve economic integration of the whole free world, starting on a regional basis, with the ultimate aim of permitting the free movement of men, capital and goods. It urges that a start be made with a common market in the Western Hemisphere, and proposes the calling of a conference of the United States, Canada and all Pan-American states.

¶ It is no exaggeration to call this a radical proposal. It also can be called revolutionary, if it is understood that it is not radical or revolutionary in the sense of being "pink". On the contrary, like the two previous reports, it is inspired by the necessity of meeting the greatly dreaded extension of Soviet power. But what it advocates is nothing less than the replacement of the old economic order, with its reliance on automatic, self-regulatory forces that don't work. It wants instead a worldwide adoption of the concept in Europe of a common market, plush regional agreements like the coal and steel community and Euratom. It wants the Pan-American conference to aim at a common market for the hemisphere, something it believes can be achieved in ten or fifteen years. Other regional groupins, it says, should follow, but the groupings when fully developed should go much further than the market and commodity agreements now in effect in Western Europe. They would imply a common currency, and the free movement of capital and labor.

(7)

The program outlined calls for governmental leadership and participation beyond anything seen in the free world so far, But this is not to be at the expense of private capital. The report believes that not enough attention is being paid by governments to the role of private investment in the foreign field. It is greater than appreciated, it says, and needs more encouragement to play an even larger role.

Economic interdependence has been much underdiscussion lately. It was one of the topics of the MacMillan-Eisenhower talks)

(8)

Adlai Stevenson in his last two speeches urged the appointment of a committee of experts, such as made the preliminary studies of the Marshall Plan, to ~~survey possible~~ study the overhaul of the international economic structure ~~action to meet the rising economic crisis~~. The Rockefeller panel does not attempt a blue print of an integrated free world, but it states its the basic problem in two drastic phrases. It ~~speaks of~~ starts with the disintegration of the 19th century political system, and ~~then of a~~ goes on to the worldwide social revolution. It points out how population is growing, at a rate that in the next generation will make it a third more, or a billion people more, than it is today. This population is becoming ~~more restless~~ increasingly restless, partly because it is more dominated by youth. Thus in Algeria, the ~~age~~ age-group under 25 comprises 61 percent of the population; in Burma it is 55 percent. In the United States it is only 45 percent, in France only 38 percent.

The appeal of the Soviet Union to ~~these~~ the young and underdeveloped countries is rising, and how much it is rising is emphasized today in the publication of an 111-page documentation by the State Department of the expanding foreign economic program of the Soviet Union. The Rockefeller panel does not believe the Soviet threat is unanswerable. "It is impressive" it says, "primarily because the free wold has failed to develop a workable structure within which the industrialized and the newly developed countries can cooperate."

(9)

The chairman of the Rockefeller panel is Milton Katz, now of Harvard Law School, who was European director of Marshall Plan aid. His associates were Adolph Berle, Chester Bowles, Harlan Cleveland, John Cowles, Prof. Frederick Harbison, Stacy May, David Rockefeller, Max Thornburg and Forest Murden. The panel does not believe its report will have the impact in Washington of the two previously issued. The reason given is that there are no pressure groups in this country for economic foreign policy. The chief pressures felt here are what of special interests defending a protective tariff. No special interest pressures are pushing for bold American leadership. Adlai Stevenson, in a recent speech, said it was his impression that what would relieve the American public most would be the disappearance of the Soviet Union from the face of the earth, and after that, the disappearance of America's allies. He and the Rockefeller panel agree that nothing can be hoped for from American leadership without an alerted and informed public opinion.

(10)

Word for Today....

The new Rockefeller report offers us a plan for going the Russians one better. As Leon Keyserling said recently, "Our problem is not to ape their methods, and thus lose what we value most, but rather to prove that under our free institutions we can none the less exhibit the economic self-discipline to put first things first." Goodnight and good luck!

Lead to come.

Bliss

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK
MONDAY
~~TUESDAY~~, JUNE 16, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams will appear tomorrow before the House subcommittee investigating his relationship with Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine. Mr. Adams says he asked for permission to appear, and that permission was immediately granted. Subcommittee Chairman Harris said earlier today that there was an open invitation to anyone involved in the hearings to testify. He did not mention Mr. Adams by name. The investigation was going to be pressed, he said, "without fear or favor." The subcommittee heard testimony today that "higher ups" in the Federal Trade Commission once overruled a recommendation by a commission expert that Goldfine be prosecuted for the mislabeling of fabrics. This reportedly occurred in 1955. Adams has acknowledged that he set up an appointment in 1955 for Goldfine to see Edward Howrey, who was then commission chairman. Both Adams and Howrey deny, however, that any pressure was exerted on Goldfine's behalf at that or any other time. The present acting chairman of the commission, Robert Secrest, testified today that according to the record, the commission and every staff member has acted "properly and in good faith." It is a matter of record that Goldfine paid hotel bills for Adams in Boston and Plymouth, Massachusetts. Adams said he accepted this hospitality from an old friend, believing that the hotel rooms had been rented by the Boston manufacturer on a permanent basis. (Both Adams and the White House have refused thus far to comment on reports that Goldfine gave Adams an oriental rug and a vicuna coat.) The subcommittee produced evidence today that Goldfine also paid two hotel bills for Adams in New York. A staff investigator, Francis McLaughlin, introduced photostatic copies of records...showing that twice in 1954, Adams stayed at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel as Goldfine's guest. President Eisenhower reiterated today through News Secretary Hagerty---that there is "no individual, in or out of government, that he has more confidence in than Sherman Adams." Hagerty said the President will hold a news conference tomorrow.

The State Department today advised American citizens not to go to Lebanon "unless there are imperative reasons for such travel." There was stepped-up fighting between government and rebel forces in Lebanon over the week-end. But CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen reports from Beirut that, so far, only a few Americans have decided to evacuate their families because of the worsening situation. United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold is flying to Lebanon tomorrow night.

In Paris, the permanent NATO council met today in emergency session to discuss the crisis in Greek-Turkish relations over the future of Cyprus. Greece has broken off military cooperation with Turkey as a result of the dispute. Both are members of NATO. Tomorrow, Prime Minister Macmillan will announce a new British offer on Cyprus in the House of Commons.

Seventeen hundred Marine engineers went on strike today on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, to back up a contract demand for increased pensions and higher pay. The strike of tanker seamen has been settled, less than 24 hours after it began.

The Supreme Court said today that the State Department...in determining whether to issue a passport...does not have authority to inquire into the beliefs and associations of the applicant. The court ruled on the refusal of the State Department to grant passports to two scientists, Weldon Bruce Dayton and Walter Briehl, and the artist, Rockwell Kent. Kent and Briehl refused to sign non-Communist affidavits. Dayton did sign. But the State Department held...partly on the basis of confidential information...that he wanted to go abroad to engage in activities beneficial to the Communist cause. The decision of the court was split, 5 to 4. In speaking for the majority, Justice Douglas said the court will not "readily infer" that Congress gave the Secretary of State "unbridled discretion" to withhold passports. "We must remember," he said, "that we are dealing here with citizens who have neither been accused of crimes or found guilty. They are being denied their freedom of movement solely because of their refusal to be subjected to inquiry into their beliefs and associations."

The Supreme Court also ruled that "hot cargo" labor contracts are permissable if they are adhered to voluntarily. But such contracts, it said in a split 6 to 3 decision, cannot be legally enforced. Under a "hot cargo" clause, workers cannot be required to handle non-union goods, or goods coming from plants where workers are on strike.

The Senate tonight moved toward passage of a "moderate" labor bill---despite Secretary of Labor Mitchell's demand for stronger legislation. New stiff requirements were voted down during the day." But tonight the Senate voted to retain the non-Communist oath requirement for labor leaders and to extend it to employers as well. The measure also says unions must elect officers secretly and file detailed financial reports. Last week, a provision exempting small unions from these requirementswas stricken, in order to meet one of Mitchell's principal criticisms. The measure also was amended to give the Secretary of Labor power to subpoena union officials and records.

The Rockefeller Brothers' Fund, which has two previous radical reports to its name, came up with a third today that is even more radical. The first had urged for larger defense spending than now planned, and a single chief of the staff. The second recommended an early tax cut to turn the recession around. The one published today proposes that the United States set out to achieve economic integration of the whole free world, starting on a regional basis, with the ultimate aim of permitting the free movement of men, cppital and goods. It urges that a start be made with a common market in the Western Hemisphere, and proposes the calling of a conference of the United States, Canada, and all Pan-American states.

It is no exaggeration to call this a radical proposal. It also can be called revolutionary, if it is understood that it is not radical or revolutionary in the sense of being "pink." On the contrary, like the two previous reports, it is inspired by the necessity of meeting the greatly dreaded extension of Soviet power. But what it advocates is nothing less than the replacement of the old economic order, with its reliance on automatic, self-regulatory forces that don't work. It wants instead a worldwide adoption of the concept in Europe of a common market, plush regional agreements like the coal and steel community and Euratom. It wants the Pan-American conference to aim at a common market for the hemisphere, something it believes can be achieved in ten or fifteen years. Other regional groupings, it says, should follow, but the groupings when fully developed should go much further than the market and commodity agreements now in effect in Western Europe. They would imply a common currency, and the free movement of capital and labor.

The program calls for governmental leadership and participation beyond anything seen in the free world so far, but this is not to be at the expense of private capital. The report believes that not enough attention is being paid by governments to the role of private investment in the foreign field. It is greater than appreciated, it says, and needs more encouragement to play an even larger role.

Economic interdependence has been much under discussion lately. It was one of the topics of the MacMillan-Eisenhower talks. Adlai Stevenson in his last two speeches urged the appointment of a committee of experts, such as made the preliminary studies of the Marshall Plan, to study the overhaul of the international economic structure. The Rockefeller panel does not attempt a blue print of an integrated free world, but it states its the basic problem in two drastic phrases. It starts with the disintegration of the 19th century political system, and goes on th the worldwide social revolution. It points out how population is growing at a rate that in the next generation will make it a third more, or a billion people more,than it is today. This population is becoming increasingly more restless, partly because it is more dominatedly youth. Thus in Algeria, the age-group under 25 comprises 61 percent of the population; in Burma it is 55 percent. Tn the United States it is only 45 percent, in France only 38 percent.

The appeal of the Soviet Union to the young and underdeveloped countries is rising, and how much it is rising is emphasized today in the publication of an 111 page documentation by the State Department of the expanding foreign economic program of the Soviet Union. The Rockefeller panel does not believe the Soviet threat is unanswerable. "It is impressive" it says, "primarily because the free world has failed to develop a workable structure within which the industrialized and the newly developed countries can cooperate."

The chairman of the Rockefeller panel is Milton Katz, now of Harvard Law School, who was European director of Marshall Plan aid. His associates were Adolph Berle, Chester Bowles, Harlan Cleveland, John Cowles, Prof. Frederick Harbison, Stacy May, David Rockefeller, Max Thornburg and Forest Murden. The panel does not believe its report will have the impact in Washington of the two previously issued. The reason is that there are no pressure groups in this country for economic foreign policy. The chief pressure felt here is that of special interest defending a protective tariff. No special interest pressures are pushing for bold American leadership.

Adlai Stevenson, in a recent speech, said it was his impression that what would relieve the American public most would be the disappearance of the Soviet Union from the face of the earth, and after that, the disappearance of America's allies. He and the Rockefeller panel agree that nothing can be hoped for from American leadership without an alerted and informed public opinion.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The new Rockefeller report offers us a plan for going the Russsans one better. As Leon Keyserling said recently, "Our problem is not to ape their methods, and thus lose what we value most, but rather to prove that under our free institutions we can non the less exhibit the economic self-discipline to put first thing first."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow

(Via Western Union)

June 17, 1958

This is the news:

Sherman Adams testified for two hours today...and conceded that in acting on behalf of Bernard Goldfine, he might have shown "a greater measure of prudence." For a direct report, we switch to Charles Von Fremd in Washington. / and end on cue "to Edward R. Murrow in New York."

(2)

In the Republican primary in Maine, Senator Payne had no trouble winning his party's nomination for a second term. Payne acknowledged before yesterday's voting that Bernard Goldfine once gave him a vicuna coat. His opponent, Norman Scragian, said in a campaign speech over the week-end, "When I need a coat, I buy my own." But final results show Payne winning by a margin of five to one. In next fall's election, Payne will face Governor Muskie, who was unopposed yesterday for the Democratic senatorial nomination.

(o)

(3)

(Via Western Union)

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

There was more fighting in Lebanon today, and a government spokesman says Lebanon has decided to call for United Nations troops. He says if THESE are not forthcoming, Lebanon will be compelled to seek armed forces from Britain and the United States. Secretary General Hammarskjold is due in Beirut on Thursday to confer with government leaders and inspect the United Nations observation team already in Lebanon.

16

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters today that the United States Sixth Fleet is in the Eastern Mediterranean and, if necessary, could take appropriate action. Dulles said the Lebanese crisis falls within the jurisdiction of the United Nations, since it is a threat to peace in the Middle East. Dulles said that if Hammarskjold decides that there is a need for troops...in the form of an international police force... the United States would be disposed to contribute military personnel.

(more) 23

(4)

But Dulles added...in response to a question...that there are contingencies which might require the United States to take military action on its own. Commenting on the Dulles statement, Democratic Senator Morse said he doubts that such action could be taken under the Eisenhower Doctrine....which refers to overt aggression by International Communism. Democratic Senator Mansfield noted that the United States, Britain and France have pledged themselves to help Middle Eastern countries defend their borders. Mansfield suggested this tripartite agreement might apply.

The British government today postponed for 48 hours the announcement of its new plan for Cyprus. Prime Minister Macmillan said that the NATO council would seek, in that time, to conciliate the opposing Greek and Turkish views.

It was announced in Paris today that General DeGaulle will return to Algeria in two weeks. DeGaulle will take with him the Socialist leader, Guy Mollet. And later Mollet...who is not liked by French Rightists... will visit Britain and the United States.

(5)

Following ~~story~~ to be inserted after DeGaulle....

France and Tunisia announced tonight that 7-thousand French troops stationed in Tunisia will be withdrawn in the next four months. French forces at the naval base at Bizerte are not affected. The Tunisian government order...restricting French troops in their barracks...is to be lifted at once.

(6)

~~Hold for release...~~

The Senate tonight passed the Kennedy-Ives labor bill. The vote, after five days of debate, was 88 to 1. ~~BLANK to BLANK.~~ The measure requires unions to make detailed financial reports and elect officers by secret ballot. As amended, union leaders and employers both have to sign non-Communist affidavits. The measure now goes to the House.

42

~~End [illegible] hold for release.~~

The House today passed and sent to President Eisenhower for his signature the bill giving a 10 percent pay raise to a million government workers. The raise will be retroactive to January first.

45

(7)

Governor Handley of Indiana today asked Secretary of Agriculture Benson to declare all of Indiana a flood disaster area. The xx appeal was made as the Wabash River flood crest moved downstream into Southern Indiana. But 400 homes in West Terre Haute are still inundated, and damage to Indiana farm crops is estimated at 35 to 40-million dollars.

570

(8)

Tomorrow, U.S. Army authorities will again try to negotiate the release of the nine American servicemen held in East Germany. The Americans were taken into custody on June 7, when their helicopter strayed over the East German frontier. As of yesterday, the East Germans were still insisting that the case be handled on a governmental level. The United States does not recognize the East German regime.

56

Two events have cut short any hopes that the cold war is abating or is likely to abate in the near future. One is the announcement of the execution of former Premier Nagy and three associates. The other is the publication by the Kremlin of the secret communications between the Soviet foreign office and the American, British and French ambassadors., looking toward a summit meeting. The Soviet initiative CAUSED the State Department, for its part, to publish all the Western documents. The British foreign office accused the Kremlin of breaking faith in publishing the secret papers. Secretary Dulles, at his news conference today, said that apparently Russia wants to break off the diplomatic talks. The Soviet and the West, he remarked, are as far apart as ever on what kind of heads-of-government meeting there should be, and he could not predict that a summit meeting be held this year.

But even more chilling was the disclosure of the martyrdom of Nagy and other Hungarian freedom fighters. It was made to coincide--hardly unintentionally--with the fifth anniversary of the East German uprising, and was read generally as a warning of the fate that will befall anyone who tries to throw off the

(10)

Soviet yoke.

The last heard of Nady had been when he left the Jugoslav embassy in Budapest under a pledge of safe-conduct from Premier Kadar. General Maleter, who was executed with him, had been arrested in the act of negotiating with the Russians for the withdrawal of their forces fro m Bduapest. Both men refused to confess guilt at their trial, ~~as did Joseph Szilagy~~. The account of the trial, as broadcast from Budapest, flatly accused the Jugoslav embassy of complicity in Nady's uprising. The publication of the trial consequently interpreted as a warning to Tito what can happen to him. News of the executions sounded much like the deathknell for any hopes in satellite countries, Poland in particular, for greater independence from tight Kremlin control. ~~There is no information as to the time of the trial. Several Nady followers were given prison sentences of various lengths. The omission of names of other leaders suggests that the trials are still going on.~~ Freedom

Word for Today.....

(11)

Sherman Adams says if he had it all to do over again, he would do some things differently. If he had been a little more prudent, some questions brought up by the subcommittee would not have had to be raised. Mr. Adams denies any wrong-doing. But there is an old Chinese proverb which says, "If you would avoid suspicion, do not lace your shoes in a melon field."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, June 17, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M. EDT

MURROW: ... he might have shown a greater measure of prudence. For a direct report we switch to Charles von Fremd in Washington.

VON FREMD: Frustrated Congressional Democrats have tried for almost 6-years without success to question one of the most powerful but least seen figure in Washington. Today, Sherman Adams not only appeared, he talked about some most intimate personal matters. Which must have wrenched his traditional New England beliefs. But he was still proud and defiant. Even as he told of expensive gifts accepted from Bernard Goldfine the Boston industrialist who has had several brushes with Federal regulatory agencies. "Yes," said Adams, he had made several phone calls to these agencies asking for information on Goldfine's business problems with the government, but he insisted, "this was just a routine courtesy." He had never attempted to win his friend of 18-years preferential treatment. "Yes," he admitted under questioning, Goldfine had picked up hotel tabs for Adams and occasionally Mrs. Adams in Boston, Plymouth, Mass., and New York. "Yes," he'd accepted suits of clothes, an overcoat and other gifts including a $2400. rug. But, explained Adams, "the rug wasn't really a gift."

ADAMS: When Bernard Goldfine first visited Mrs. Adams and me in the house that we now occupy in Washington, he commented on the shabbiness of the rug which then covered a rather large living room floor. He said he would like to get a better one. Although I told him, that such a rug would be of no use to me when we moved from our present house or returned to New Hampshire. He replied that when that time came and I had no further use for it I should return it. It is his property and he so regards it.

VON FREMD: Adams insisted there was nothing wrong with gifts between friends. It's a custom he said as old as civilization. The man often referred to as "the assistant President," pleaded ignorance when the committee counsel told him that both the securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission violated Federal regulations when they responded to his inquiries about Goldfine's affairs. While he acknowledged that he had been in politics for a long time Adams said he was perhaps inexperienced when it came to dealing with regulatory agencies. The short but rugged Adams told the legislators he came beofore their committee with no excuses to offer no apologies to make. But, he concluded in his abrupt manner, that if knowing what he knows now and given the opportunity to do it over again, he would act a little more prudently. But he insisted any errors he had made were in judge ment not intent.

The Congressmen - even the Democratic Representatives treated Adams with respect. Only Representative Morse of Calif., displayed a flash of anger when he said that as a Democratic candidate in 1952, he had felt the whiplash of critical judgement that Adams and other GOP spokesmen applied in talking about the mess in Washington, about deep freezes and mink coats. Snapped Morse, "I think you must employ the same rules at all times." Many observers here are still debating whether Adams will eventually resign. The White House late today announced that President Eisenhowerhas no intention of firing Adams and that the top Presidential aid has no plans to resign. Whether Adams at some future date does resign may depend on whether the special subcommittee continues to investigate matters that touch on or were touched by the Presidential assistant. While the probers insist they are investigating Goldfine - not Adams, the political blows are landing oh Adams. Aside bar to the Adams affair today was another chapter in the long time vendetta between White House News Secretary James Hagerty and columnist Drew Pearson. Hagerty called Pearson's claim that President Eisenhower had received a coat from Goldfine plus other items linking the industralist to the White House a pack of lies. Pearson fired back a stinging salvo with the comment "A hit dog howls." And, stood by his story.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 17, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Sherman Adams testified for two hours today...and conceded that in acting on behalf of Bernard Goldfine, he might have shown "a greater measure of prudence." For a direct report, we switch to Charles Von Fremd in Washington.

VON FREMD: Frustrated Congressional Democrats have tried for almost 6 years without success to question one of the most powerful but least seen figures in Washington. Today, Sherman Adams not only appeared, he talked about some most intimate personal matters which must have wrenched his traditional New England beliefs. But he was still proud and defiant. Even as he told of expensive gifts accepted from Bernard Goldfine the Boston industrialist who has had several brushes with Federal regulatory agencies. "Yes," said Adams, he had made several phone calls to these agencies asking for information on Goldfine's business problems with the government, but he insisted, "this was just a routine courtesy." He had never attempted to win his friend of 18 years preferential treatment. "Yes," he admitted under questioning, Goldfine had picked up hotel tabs for Adams and occasionally Mrs. Adams in Boston, Plymouth, Mass., and New York. "Yes" he'd accepted suits of clothes, an overcoat and other gifts including a $2,400 rug. But, explained Adams, "the rug wasn't really a gift."

ADAMS: When Bernard Goldfine first visited Mrs. Adams and me in the house that we now occupy in Washington, he commented on the shabbiness of the rug which then covered a rather large living room floor. He said he would like to get a better one. Although I told him, that such a rug would be of no use to me when we moved from our present house or returned to New Hampshire. He replied that when that time came and I had no further use for it I should return it. It is his property and he so regards it.

VON FREMD: Adams insisted there was nothing wrong with gifts between friends. "It's a custom" he said "as old as civilization." The man often referred to as "the Assistant President, "pleaded ignorance when the committee counsel told him that both the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission violated federal regulations when they responded to his inquiries about Goldfine's affairs. While he acknowledged that he had been in politics for a long time, Adams said he was perhaps inexperienced when it came to dealing with regulatory agencies. The short but rugged Adams told the legislators he came before their committee with no excuses to offer, no apologies to make. But, he concluded in his abrupt manner, that if knowing what he knows now and given the opportunity to do it over again, he would act a little more prudently. But he insisted any errors he had made were in judgment not intent.

The Congressmen - even the Democratic Representatives treated Adams with respect. Only Representative Morse of California displayed a flash of anger when he said that as a Democratic candidate in 1952, he had felt the whiplash of critical judgment that Adams and other GOP spokesmen applied in talking about the mess in Washington, about deep freezers and mink coats. Snapped Morse, "I think you must employ the same rules at all times." Many observers here are still debating whether Adams will eventually resign. The White House late today announced that President Eisenhower has no intention of firing Adams and that the top Presidential aide has no plans to resign. Whether Adams at some future date does resign may depend on whether the special subcommittee continues to investigate matters that touch on or were touched by the Presidential Assistant. While the probers insist they are half investigating Goldfine - not Adams, the political blows are landing on Adams. A side bar to the Adams affair today was another chapter in the long time vendetta between White House News Secretary James Hagerty and columnist Drew Pearson. Hagerty called Pearson's claim that President Eisenhower had received a coat from Goldfine plus other items linking the industrialist to the White House a pack of lies. Pearson fired back a stinging salvo with the comment, "A hit dog howls." And, stood by his story.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In the Republican primary in Maine, Senator Payne has had no trouble winning his party's nomination for a second term. Payne acknowledged before yesterday's voting that Bernard Goldfine once gave him a vicuna coat. His opponent, Herman Sahagian, said in a campaign speech over the weekend, "When I need a coat, I buy my own." But final results show Payne winning by a margin of five to one. In next fall's election, Payne will face Governor Muskie, who was unopposed yesterday for the Democratic senatorial nomination.

There was more fighting in Lebanon today, and a government spokesman says Lebanon has decided to call for United Nations troops. He says if these are not forthcoming, Lebanon will be compelled to seek armed forces from Britain and the United States. Secretary General Hammarskjold is due in Beirut on Thursday to confer with government leaders and inspect the United Nations observation team already in Lebanon.

Secretary of State Dulles told reporters today that the United States Sixth Fleet is in the Eastern Mediterranean and, if necessary, could take appropriate action. Dulles said the Lebanese crisis falls within the jurisdiction of the United Nations, since it is a threat to peace in the Middle East. Dulles said that if Hammarskjold decided that there is a need for troops...in the form of an international police force... the United States would be disposed to contribute military personnel. But Dulles added...in response to a question...that there are contingencies which might require the United States to take military action on its own. Commenting on the Dulles statement, Democratic Senator Morse said he doubts that such action could be taken under the Eisenhower Doctrine...which refers to overt aggression by International Communism. Democratic Senator Mansfield noted that the United States, Britain and France have pledged themselves to help Middle Eastern countries defend their borders. Mansfield suggested this tripartite agreement might apply.

The British government today postponed for 48 hours the announcement of its new plan for Cyprus. Prime Minister Macmillan said that the NATO council would seek, in that time, to conciliate the opposing Greek and Turkish views.

It was announced in Paris today that General De Gaulle will return to Algeria in two weeks. De Gaulle will take with him the Socialist leader, Guy Mollet. And later Mollet...who is not liked by French Rightists... will visit Britain and the United States.

France and Tunisia announced tonight that 7 thousand French troops stationed in Tunisia will be withdrawn in the next four months. French forces at the naval base at Bizerte are not affected. The Tunssian government order... restricting French troops in their barracks...is to be lifted at once.

The Senate tonight passed the Kennedy-Ives labor bill. The vote, after five days of debate, was 88 to 1. The measure requires unions to make detailed financial reports and elect officers by secret ballot. As amended, union leaders and employers both have to sign non-Communist affidavits. The measure now goes to the House.

The House today passed and sent to President Eisenhower for his signature the bill giving a 10 percent pay raise to a million government workers. The raise will be retroactive to January first.

Governor Handley of Indiana today asked Secretary of Agriculture Benson to declare all of Indiana a flood disaster area. The appeal was made as the Wabash River flood crest moved downstream into Southern Indiana. But 400 homes in West Terra Haute are still inundated, and damage to Indiana farm crops is estimated at 35 to 40 million dollars.

Tomorrow, U. S. Army authorities will again try to negotiate the release of the nine American servicemen held in East Germany. The Americans were taken into custody on June 7th, when their helicopter strayed over the East German frontier. As of yesterday, the East Germans were still insisting that the case be handled on a governmental level. The United States does not recognize the East German regime.

Two events have cut short any hopes that the cold war is abating or is likely to abate in the near future. One is the announcement of the execution of former President Nagy and three associates. The other is the publication by the Kremlin of the secret communications between the Soviet foreign office and the American, British and French ambassadors, looking toward a summit meeting. The Soviet initiative caused the State Department, for its part, to publish all the Western documents. The British foreign office accused the Kremlin of breaking faith in publishing the secret papers. Secretary Dulles, at his news conference today, said that apparently Russia wants to break off the diplomatic talks. The Soviet and the West, he remarked, are as far apart as ever on what kind of heads-of-government meeting there should be, and he could not predict that a summit meeting would be held this year.

But even more chilling was the disclosure of the martyrdom of Nagy and other Hungarian freedom fighters. It was made to coincide---hardly uiintentionally with the fifth anniversary of the East German uprising, and was read generally as a warning of the fate that will befall anyone who tries to throw off the Soviet yoke.

The last heard of Nagy had been when he left the Yugoslav embassy in Budapest under a pledge of safe-conduct from Premier Kadar. General Maleter, who was executed with him, had been arrested in the act of negotiating with the Russians for the withdrawal of their forces from Budapest. Both men refused to confess guilt at their trial. The account of the trial, as broadcast from Budapest, flatly accused the Yugoslav embassy of complicity in Nagy's uprising. The publicition consequently is interpreted as a warning to Tito what can happen to him. News of the executions sounded much like the death knell for any hopes in satellite countries, Poland in particular for greater independence from tight Kremlin control.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Sherman Adams says if he had it all to do over again, he would do some things differently. If he had been a little more prudent, some questions brought up by the subcommittee would not have had to be raised. Mr. Adams denies any wrong-doing. But there is an old Chinese proverb which says, "If you would avoid suspicion, do not lace your shoes in a melon field."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 18, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today "stood by" Sherman Adams. / He opened his news conference by reading a statement, running about 400 words.

(Tape runs 3:35
Ends on cue: "--to Mr. Hagerty and not to me."

Despite the President's statement that he would say no more about Mr. Adams, the reporters kept asking questions about the Adams case. / Most of the questions he turned aside. / He would not comment, for example, on whether the Adams controversy had made it harder for Republicans running for re-election. / When a reporter asked about the charge that Mr. Adams violated the law in passing along to Bernard Goldfine certain information supplied by the Federal Trade Commission the President said Hagerty had some pertinent facts regarding that. The reporters saw Hagerty later, and he said he did not think there had been any violation. Hagerty said the information was known publicly before Adams gave it to Goldfine "and hence was not confidential." Hagerty said the complainant in the labeling case had "openly declared" that he was the complainant and had even had his lawyer give the information to Goldfine's company.

→

A reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower at his news conference if the procedures followed in the Adams case applied to all government officials. The President said in reply:

Tape runs 25 seconds
Ends on cue: "---not only of conduct, but of appearance of conduct."

The reporter pressed the question. Could any other official in the government do what Mr. Adams did and get the President's approval?

Tape runs 35 seconds
Ends on cue: "---they would themselves have that responsibility."

Republican state chairmen discussed the Adams incident at a closed meeting today in Washington---they were convening in Washington anyway to talk over election strategy. / No formal action was taken. / But Robert Humphreys, who is campaign director of the Republican National Committee, says, "There certainly was comment that this has hurt." A number of state chairmen took the attitude that "Adams must go." / James Short, Republican chairman from Oregon, said, "I wish Adams were booted out. If he was only indiscreet, he shouldn't have been." William Treat, state chairman from New Hampshire, said the House subcommittee investigating Adams' relationship with Goldfine had "abused its functions." / Treat said, "The confidence and esteem of his New Hampshire neighbors has not diminished."

The Democratic national chairman, Paul Butler, said that Mr. Eisenhower by his statement had placed "a stamp of approval" on Adams' conduct. Butler called this a shocking thing for the American people to see.

Bernard Goldfine called a news conference today in Brookline, Massachusetts and then suddenly cancelled it on the advice of his attorney.

President Eisenhower also made a statement at his news conference, denouncing the Communist execution of former Premier Nagy and General Maleter for their part in the Hungarian revolt. / Choosing his words carefully, the President said:

(Tape runs 1:50
(Ends on cue: "---and actions of these Communist imperialists."

Mr. Eisenhower was asked whether this "negates" the chances of a summit conference. / The President said, "Anything of this kind that shocks the whole free world is detrimental to fruitful negotiations."

Italy today recalled its minister to Hungary in protest against the Communist executions. And here in New York, the United States reportedly is calling for a meeting of the special United Nations committee on Hungary at the earliest possible date.

Yugoslavia today formally denied the charge made by the puppet Hungarian government that Imre Nagy continued to "direct counter-revolutionary activity" from his refuge in the Yugoslav Embassy. Yugoslavia said, "This untruthful assertion constitutes a new, disturbing and premeditated sharpening in the campaign which is being waged against our country."

The Communist Party central committee is reported meeting tonight in Moscow. The central committee is Russia's top policy-making body. Khrushchev is first secretary of the committee. And the Soviet ambassadors to the United States, Britain and France (who were suddenly called home last week) are also members or candidate members. The purpose of the meeting has not been announced, but a communique could come tomorrow.

Two Soviet newspapers...Pravda and Izvestia...insisted today that Russia wants a summit conference. Both expressed impatience over the delay. And Izvestia said, "The Western powers continue to submit proposals which make the possibility of agreement more remote."

In Berlin today, U.S. Army authorities made a third and unsuccessful attempt to obtain the release of the nine American servicemen held in East Germany. The meeting with East German officials lasted 53 minutes, with the East Germans apparently again insisting that negotiations be held on a diplomatic level. An American spokesman said, "Both sides agreed to report to their governments. No date for a further meeting was fixed."

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred in London today with British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd regarding the crisis in Lebanon. Hammarskjold is flying on to Lebanon tonight. Lebanese rebels seized a prison today in Beirut, but were driven out...a few hours later...by pro-government forces. President Eisenhower declined at his news conference to say under what circumstances the United States might be prepared to take military action in Lebanon in support of the pro-Western government. Secretary of State Dulles said yesterday that there are "contingencies" under which the United States might resort to armed force. He did not elucidate.

The House today passed a one and a half billion dollar rivers and harbors bill. The Senate approved a similar measure last night, and the two bills now go to a conference committee.

House Speaker Rayburn said today that he will work for House passage of a "moderate" labor reform bill along the lines of that approved yesterday by the Senate. He declined, however, to predict that the House would pass such a measure.

Back in a moment -

[redacted]

From a word from Ford -

Word for Today

The problem created by the presentation of gifts to men in public life is not a new one ~~by any means~~. George Washington once received a piece of silk goods, woven by a lady admirer. Washington told her ~~that~~ it was his policy not to accept presents. "But," he said, "as evidence of what our climate,..aided by industry...is capable of yielding, I receive and thank you for this effort of your skill."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, June 18, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: RUNNING about 400 words.

PRES. EISENHOWER: The intense publicity lately surrounding the name of Sherman Adams makes it desirable - even necessary that I start this conference with an expression of my own views about the matter.

First, as a result of this entire incident, all of us in America should have been made aware of one truth: This is, that a gift is not necessarily a bribe. One is evil, the other is a tangible expression of friendship. Almost without exception, everybody seeking public office accepts political contributions. These are gifts to further a political career. Yet, we do not make a generality that these gifts are intended to color the later official votes, recommendations and actions of the recipients. In the general case, this whole activity is understood, accepted and approved. The circumstances surrounding the innocent receipt by a public official of any gift are therefore important so that the public may clearly distinguish between innocent and guilty action. Among these circumstances are the character and reputation of the individual, the record of his subsequent actions and evidence of intent or lack of intent to exert undue influence. Anyone who knows Sherman Adams has never had any doubt of his personal integrity and honesty. No one has believed that he could be bought. But, there is a feeling or belief that he was not sufficiently alert in making certain that the gifts of which he was the recipient could be so misinterpreted as to be considered as attempts to influence his political actions. To that extent, he has been - as he stated yesterday imprudent. Now, the utmost imprudence must necessarily be observed by everyone attached to the White House because of the possible effect of any slightest inquiry suggestion or observation emanating from this office and reaching any other part of the government. Carelessness must be avoided. My own conclusions of this entire episode are as follows: I believe that the presentation made by Governor Adams to the Congressional committee yesterday truthfully represents the pertinent facts. I personally like Governor Adams. I admire his abilities. I respect him because of his person and official integrities. I need him. Admitting the lack of that careful prudence in this incident, that Govenor Adams yesterday referred to, I believe with my whole heart that he is an invaluable public servant doing a difficult job efficiently, honestly and tirelessly. Now, ladies and gentlemen, so far as I am concerned, this is all that I can, all that I shall say. If there are any questions from any part of this body, they will go to Mr. Hagerty and not to me.

MURROW: Despite the President's statement ... the President said in reply ...

PRES. EISENHOWER: I don't ... I don't know what you say ... mean by ... I haven't approved any prodedures. I'm saying that I believe that my conclusions and convictions are as a result of an incident or a series of incidents - I have not said ... never said anything except that I expect the highest possible standards not only of conduct but of appearance of conduct.

MURROW: But, the reporter pressed the question ....
... and get the President's approval.

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, I'd say this; in the Executive Departments and I suppose -that is what you are talking about -- I would believe that the standard of conduct in the White House should be impeccable. I would expect the same thing in all other departments, but I am not quite so close to their many individuals, except for the Cabinet officers themselves, that I could act directly. They would, themselves, have that responsibility.

MURROW: Republican State Chairman ...
... choosing his words carefully, the President said.

PRES. EISENHOWER: I cannot think of any incident that could have and has mxm shocked the civilized world. The ... these two men were not guilty of evil doing. They were freightened for their own country to eliminate or to reduce the domination by force of their country on the part of the Soviets. Good faith was violated in the story ... in their execution, the story of which has just come to our attention in this country. It is clear that a ... intent of the Soviets is to persue their own policies of terror and intimidation x in any way they choose to bring about complete subservience to their will. I think there is no incident that should have more alerted the Free World to the lack of confidence that we are compelled to feel in in the words and actions of these Communist imperialists.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower was asked ...

Ptn.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today "stood by" Sherman Adams. He opened his news conference by reading a statement, running about 400 words.

PRES. EISENHOWER: The intense publicity lately surrounding the name of Sherman Adams makes it desirable - even necessary that I start this conference with an expression of my own views about the matter.

First, as a result of this entire incident, all of us in America should have been made aware of one truth: this is, that a gift is not necessarily a bribe, one is evil, the other is a tangible expression of friendship. Almost without exception, everybody seeking public office accepts political contributions. These are gifts to further a political career. Yet, we do not make a generality that these gifts are intended to color the later official votes, recommendations and actions of the recipients. In the general case, this whole activity is understood, accepted and approved. The circumstances surrounding the innocent receipt by a public official of any gift are therefore important so that the public may clearly distinguish between innocent and guilty action. Among these circumstances are the character and reputation of the individual, the record of his subsequent actions and evidence of intent or lack of intent to exert undue influence. Anyone who knows Sherman Adams has never had any doubt of his personal integrity and honesty. No one has believed that he could be bought. But, there is a feeling or belief that he was not sufficiently alert in making certain that the gifts of which he was the recipient could be so misinterpreted as to be considered as attempts to influence his political actions. To that extent, he has been - as he stated yesterday imprudent. Now, the utmost prudence must necessarily be observed by everyone attached to the White House because of the possible effect of any slightest inquiry or suggestion, or observation eminating from this office and reaching any other part of the government. Carelessness must be avoided. My own conclusions of this entire episode are as follows: I believe that this presentation made by Governor Adams to the Congressional committee yesterday truthfully represents the pertinent facts. I personally like Govennor Adams. I admire his abilities. I respect him because of his person and official integrities. I need him. Admitting the lack of that careful prudence in this incident, that Governor Adams yesterday referred to, I believe with my whole heart that he is an invaluable public servant doing a difficult job efficiently, honestly, and tirelessly. Now, ladies and gentlemen, so far as I am concerned, this is all that I can, all that I shall say. If there are any questions from any part of this body, they will go to Mr. Hagerty and not to me.

MURROW: Despite the President's statement that he would say no more about Mr. Adams, the reporters kept asking questions about the Adams case. Most of the questions he turned aside. He would not comment,for example, on whether the Adams controversy had made it harder for Republicans running for re-election. When a reporter asked about the charge that Mr. Adams violated the law in passing along to Bernard Goldfine certain information supplied by the Federal Trade Commission, the President said Hagerty had some pertinent facts regarding that. The reporters saw Hagerty later, and he said he did not think there had been any violation. Hagerty said the information was known publicly before Adams gave it to Goldfine "and hence was not confidential." Hagerty said the complainant in the labeling case had "openly declared" that he was the complainant and had even had has lawyer give the information to Goldfine's company.

A reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower at his news conference if the procedures followed in the Adams case applied to all government officials. The President said in reply:

PRES. EISENHOWER: I don't now what you say...mean by....I haven't approved any procedures. I'm saying that I believe that my conclusions and convictions are as a result of an incident or a series of incidents - I have not said...never said anything except that I expect the highest possible standards not only of conduct but of appearance of conduct.

MURROW:The reporter pressed the question. Could any other official in the government do what Mr. Adams did and get the President's approval?

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, I'd say this; in the Executive Departments and I suppose that is what you are talking about -- I would believe that the standard of conduct in the White House should be impeccable. I would expect the same thing in all other departments, but I am not quite so close to their many individuals, except for the Cabinet officers themselves, that I could act directly. They would themselves, have that responsibility.

MURROW: Republican state chairmen discussed the Adams incident at a closed meeting today in Washington---they were convening in Washington anyway to talk over election strategy. No formal action was taken. But Robert Humphreys, who is campaign director of the Republican National Committee, says, "There certainly was comment that this has hurt." A number of state chairmen took the attitude that "Adams must go." James Short, Republican chairman from Oregon, said, "I wish Adams were booted out. If he was only indiscreet, he shouldn't have been." William Treat, state chairman from New Hampshire, said theHouse subcommittee investigating Adams' relationship with Goldfine had "abused its functions." Treat said, "The confidence and esteem of his New Hampshire neighbors has not dimished."

The Democratic national chairman, Paul Butler, said that Mr. Eisenhower by his statement had placed "a stamp of approval" on Adams' conduct. Butler called this a shocking thing for the American people to see.

Bernard Goldfine called a news conference today in Brookline, Massachusetts and then suddenly cancelled it on the advice of his attorney.

President Eisenhower also made a statement at his news conference, denouncing the Communist execution of former Premier Nagy and General Maleter for their part in the Hungarian revolt. Choosing his words carefully, the President said:

PRES. EISENHOWER: I cannot think of any incident that could have and has more shocked the civilized world. The...these two men were not guilty of evil doing. They were frightened for their own country to eliminate or to reduce the domination by force of their country on the part of the Soviets. Good faith was violated in the story...in their execution, the story of which has just come to our attention in this country. It is clear that a...intent of the Soviets is to pursue their own policies of terror and intimidation in any way they choose to bring about complete subservience to their will. I think there is no incident that should have more alerted the Free World to the lack of confidence that we are compelled to feel in the words and actions of these Communist imperialists.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower was asked whether this "negates" the chances of a summit conference. The President said, "Anything of this kind that shocks the whole free world is detrimental to fruitful negotiations."

Yugoslavia today formally denied the charge made by the puppet Hungarian government that Imre Nagy continued to "direct counter-revolutionary activity" from his refuge in the Yugoslav Embassy. Yugoslavia said, "This untruthful assertion constitutes a new, disturbing and premeditated sharpening in the campaign which is being waged against our country."

The Communist Party central committee is reported meeting tonight in Moscow. The central committee is Russia's top policy-making body. Khrushchev is first secretary of the committee. And the Soviet ambassadors to the United States, Britain, and France (who were suddenly called home last week) are also members or candidate members. The purpose of the meeting has not been announced, but a communique could come tomorrow.

In Berlin today, U.S. Army authorities made a third and unsuccessful attempt to obtain the release of the nine American servicemen held in East Germany. An American spokesman said, "Both sides agreed to report to their governments. No date for a further meeting was fixed."

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred in London today with British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd regarding the crisis in Lebanon. Hammarskjold is flying on to Lebanon tonight. Lebanese rebels seized a prison today in Beirut, but were driven out...a few hours later...by pro-government forces. President Eisenhower declined at his news conference to say under what circumstances the United States might be prepared to take military action in Lebanon in support of the pro-Western government. Secretary of State Dulles said yesterday that there are "contingencies" under which the United States might resort to armed force. He did not elucidate.

The House today passed a one and a half billion dollar rivers and harbors bill. The Senate approved a similar measure last night, and the two bills now go to a conference committee.

House Speaker Rayburn said today that he will work for House passage of a "moderate" labor reform bill along the lines of that approved yesterday by the Senate. He declined, however, to predict that the House would pass such a measure.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The problem created by the presentation of gifts to men in public life is not a new one. George Washington once received a piece of silk goods, woven by a lady admirer. Washington told her it was his policy not to accept presents. "But," he said, "as evidence of what our climate...aided by industry...is capable of yielding, I receive and thank you for this effort of your skill."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 19, 1958

This is the news:

Senate Republican Leader Knowland suggested today that Sherman Adams may have impaired his usefulness by his acceptance of gifts from Bernard Goldfine. / Knowland told a news conference that President Eisenhower must now carefully weigh the question---"whether Governor Adams has so hurt his usefulness in his position that it will be harmful to the broad policies the President will have to carry out in the remaining two years of his administration." / Knowland made this comment when asked whether in his opinion Adams ought to resign. / Knowland said he had "no way of knowing" what effect the incident would have on the Republican Party in November. / "But," he added, "I doubt if it will help any." / Four other Republican senators came to Adams' defense. They issued a statement saying that Mr. Adams may have made "a mistake in judgment" but that the President was right "in not permitting himself to be stampeded in this situation." The statement was put out by Carlson of Kansas, Javits of New York, and Flanders and Aiken of Vermont.

→

Democratic Representative Christopher of Missouri said that the President should either have Adams prosecuted, or pardon Matthew Connelly. Connelly, a former Truman aide, was sentenced to two years in prison in an income tax case. His attorney appealed today for a new trial.

Republican Senator Payne of Maine says he once arranged for one of Goldfine's attorneys to get certain information from the Securities and Exchange Commission. This, he says, was early in 1956. Payne acknowledges that G[illegible] also has stayed at Boston hotels at Goldfine's expense.

The Defense Department has ordered the erection of a new radar "fence" "to insure that silent satellites which pose a military threat will not be able to orbit over the United States without being tracked." The new radar facilities will be able to detect a satellite traveling as high as 1-thousand miles. The detection system will stretch across the southern part of the country from San Diego to Blossom Point, Maryland. According to present plans, it will be in operation by the end of the year. And the tracking of scientific as well as military satellites will be involved.

The House of Representatives today passed legislation granting President Eisenhower's request that he be allowed to exchange nuclear information with our NATO allies. The vote was 345 to 12. Under terms of the bill, Britain could receive nuclear material for the manufacture of weapons, but in no case would actual atomic weapons be transferred. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The House today also approved...and sent to the Senate...legislation appropriating 1-billion, 78-million dollars for public works. Almost half of the money would go for flood control, navigation, and beach erosion work by the Army Engineers.

The Senate tonight voted to repeal the 3 percent railroad freight tax and the 10 percent excise tax on railroad passenger fares. The action was on the House-passed bill which would have extended most excise tax rates at their present level for another year. The Senate thus upset the Administration effort to hold the line against any major tax cuts this year.

The special United Nations committee on Hungary will meet ~~tomorrow~~ Saturday, to inquire into the secret trial and execution of leaders of the Hungarian revolt. The same committee...last year...found Russia guilty of "massive repression" in Hungary.

In Washington, the State Department voiced gratification that the committee was being reconvened. It said in a formal statement that the executions were "an affront to all members of the United Nations and to the conscience of the world."

And the Senate today...by unanimous vote...adopted a resolution expressing indignation over the "barbarism and perfidy" of Russia in connection with the executions.

In Moscow, the central committee of the Communist Party has concluded its two-day meeting. ~~is still meeting behind closed doors.~~ The committee is Russia's most important policy-making body. ~~It convened yesterday, and aside from the fact that the meeting must concern Soviet policy and leadership, nothing is known.~~ According to rumors in Warsaw, Molotov has been replaced as ambassador to Outer Mongolia and is now in Moscow, under surveillance. Khrushchev himself is reported under fire for some of his policies. The Moscow radio says the meeting ~~There will be no definite word until the official communique~~ "pertained to the further development of Soviet agriculture."

Prime Minister Macmillan today outlined his program for Cyprus in a speech before the House of Commons. / Cyprus would stay under British sovereignty for at least seven years. / The inhabitants would keep their British citizenship...but could, if they chose, also become citizens of Greece or Turkey. / Each of the two communities---Greek and Turkish---would have a separate legislature, and these would be given "final legislative authority in communal affairs." Exiled Cypriots...like Archbishop Makarios... would be permitted to return. / Internal security and defense would remain in the hands of the British governor, who would consult with representatives of the Greek and Turkish governments.

Macmillan said he had appealed personally to the prime ministers of Greece and Turkey, "to approach this policy in a spirit of cooperation." It would be, he said, "an adventure in partnership." / Efforts of the NATO council this week to win Turkish and Greek support for the plan failed. A Greek government spokesman in Athens tonight called the program "fundamentally unacceptable." / Greece wants all of the island. / Turkey wants the island partitioned between the 400-thousand inhabitants of Greek orgin, and the Turkish Cypriots, who are outnumbered 4 to 1. More British troops arrived on Cyprus today to maintain order. Another 2-thousand grenadiers are due tomorrow, in what may also be part of a buildup for possible intervention in Lebanon.

→

Grant

Insert

Secretary of Defense McElroy told a news conference this afternoon that he "would not hesitate" to use B-47 bombers carrying "limited and hopefully clean" atomic bombs in the Middle East, should American forces have to intervene in Lebanon. However, he said, such employment of the Strategic Air Force is "very unlikely."

Edward R. Murrow: June 19, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Not the least serious consequence of the Sherman Adams incident is that it has distracted public attention from the Lebanon crisis. / We appear to be nearer military involvement than at any time since the events in Quemoy and Matsu in 1954. / Maybe it can be avoided, but also maybe not.

Secretary General Hammarskjold is in Beirut today and the rebels have promised a truce during his visit. He will do his utmost to settle the conflict on a political level, possibly even going to Cairo to see President Nasser. But failing this, he must decide whether to recommend that a United Nations force be sent in large enough to seal off the Syrian border. / Both the United States and Britain are ready to supply additional U.N. forces on short notice.

If the United Nations does not decide to send in a pacifying force, two other possibilities remain, both of them involving the United States in military action. One is that the United States, Britain and France revive the commitments under the tri-partite declaration of 1950. / This both the British and French governments appear to be ready to do. / The relevant passage in that declaration promises "immediate action against Middle Eastern states preparing to violate frontiers or armistice lines." /

The other possibility is single-handed intervention by the United States. / Secretary Dulles talked openly about this earlier in the Lebanon crisis. In his news conference this week he did not re-emphasize it. / But when asked if American military action in Lebanon would be limited to a call from the United Nations, he said: "No, there are other contingencies." He could have been referring both to a tri-partite action, and intervention by the United States alone.

The gravity of Mr. Dulles's carefully chosen words has had little effect in this country, and a great deal abroad. / In Lebanon, government supporters think President Chamoun has a blank check on the Sixth Fleet and American ground forces. In Moscow, it was stated flatly that Washington already has decided on military intervention. / Other capitals are not so sure. Observers seemed to think that Mr. Dulles has been talking belligerently, hoping not to have to act belligerently. But it is clearly recognized that if the Lebanon government is brought down for being pro-Western, and the West does little to save it, the life-expectancy of any other pro-Western state in the Middle East would be short.

Single-handed intervention by the United States would have a serious drawback. The only explicit authority in the Eisenhower doctrine is for the President to send forces to help a Middle Eastern state to "defend itself against aggression from a country under communist control." That does not apply to Lebanon. The United Arab Republic is abetting the rebels, but it is not under communist control, nor is there actual aggression. If the United States applied the Eisenhower Doctrine in Lebanon, it would be implementing the sentence in the congressional resolution that says simply: "The United States regards as vital to the national interest and world peace, the preservation of the independence and integrity of the nations of the Middle East." This, Congress did say, but Congress did not go on to authorize action on it. The action it authorized was limited to aggression from a communist-controlled country.

Nor is there explicit authorization anywhere for the United States by itself to save a state endangered by infiltration. The U.N. has passed a resolution condemning infiltration which could be used to justify U.N. action. But if the U.N. fails to act, the tri-partite pact now seems to be the least objectionable method to save Lebanon.

What may be unfolding is a new phase in the development of international action against aggression and its related forms of conquest. It began in Korea. Much later, the U.N. stopped the Suez attack and posted its forces between Israel and some of its neighbors. / Now the free world may have to square away to the problem of infiltration for the first time.

If this job falls to the Big Three, as it well may, nothing could be more ironical. For this would be a kind of post-Suez Suez, this time having legal sanction and the support of the United States. / No one can foresee such a development without apprehensions. / If the West sends troops to Lebanon, Moscow may flood the country with volunteers. Such fires could spread beyond control.

But no one knows this better than Dag Hammarskjold, and indeed Nasser and the Kremlin. The very threat of peril may help to avert peril, by inducing an acceptable solution by negotiations. / That is one hopeful thing to say about the intensification of the crisis.

Back in a moment,
George Bryan

Word for Today

The actions of nations....as well as individuals...are not always dignified. This is continually showing up in history---the history we read in books, and the history that is now being made in many parts of the world. The British historian Maccaulay said, "There is a vile phrase of which bad historians are exceedingly fond---"the dignity of history."

Goodnight and good luck!

This is Ed Murrow ... sending greetings to his old friend & colleague Hans Kaltenborn — Hans tells me his sight is fine & he's an accurate man, but I just can't believe it. I expect to send him opportunity birthday greetings for many years to come.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Senate Republican Leader Knowland suggested today that Sherman Adams may heve impaired his usefulness by his acceptance of gifts from Bernard Goldfine. Knowland told a news conference that President Eisenhower must now carefully weigh the question---"whether Governor Adams has so hurt his usefulness in his position that it will be harmful to the broad policies the President will have to carry out in the remaining two years of his administration." Knowland made this comment when asked whether in his opinion Adams ought to resign. Knowland said he had "no way of knowing" what effect the incident would have on the Republican Party in November. "But," he added, "I doubt if it will help any." Four other Republican senators came to Adams' defense. They issued a statement saying that Mr. Adams may have made "a mistake in judgment" but that the President was right "in not permitting himself to be stampeded in this situation." The statement was put out by Carlson of Kansas, Javits of New York, and Flanders and Aiken of Vermont.

Republican Senator Payne of Maine says he once arranged for one of Goldfine's attorneys to get certain information from the Securities and Exchange Commission. This, he says, was early in 1956. Payne acknowledges that he also has stayed at Boston hotels at Goldfine's expense.

The Defense Department has ordered the erection of a new radar "fence" "to insure that silent satelliites which pose a military threat will not be able to orbit over the United Saates without being tracked." The new radar facilities will be able to detect a satellite traveling as high as 1-thousand miles. The detection system will stretch across the southern part of the country from San Diego to Blossom Point, Maryland. According to present plans, it will be in operation by the end of the year. And the tracking of scientific as well as military satellites will be involved.

The House of Representatives today passed legislation granting President Eisenhower's request that he be allowed to exchange nuclear information with our NATO allies. The vote was 345 to 12. Under terms of the bill, Britain could receive nuclear material for the manufacture of weapons, but in no case would actual atomic weapons be transferred. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The Senate tonight voted to repeal the 3 percent railroad freight tax and the 10 percent excise tax on railroad passenger fares. The action was on the House-passed bill which would have extended most excise tax rates at their present level for another year. The Senate thus upset the administration effort to hold the line against any major tax cuts this year.

The special United Nations committee on Hungary will meet Saturday to inquire into the secret trial and execution of leaders of the Hungarian revolt. The same committee...last year..found Russia guilty of "massive repression" in Hungary.

In Washington, the State Department voiced gratification that the committee was being reconvened. It said in a formal statement that the executions were "an affront to all members of the United Nations and to the conscience of the world."

And the Senate today...by unanimous vote...adopted a resolution expressing indignation over the "barbarism and perfidy" of Russia in connection with the executions.

In Moscow, the central committee of the Communist Party has concluded its two-day meeting. The committee is Russia's most important policy-making body. According to rumors in Warsaw, Molotov has been replaced as ambassador to Outer Mongolia and is now in Moscow, under surveillance. Khrushchev himself is reported under fire for some of his policies. The Moscow radio says the meeting "pertained to the further development of Soviet agriculture."

Prime Minister Macmillan today outlined his program for Cyprus in a speech before the House of Commons. Cyprus would stay under British sovereignty for at least seven years. The inhabitants would keep their British citizenship... but could if they chose also become citizens of Greece or Turkey. Each of the two communities---Greek and Turkish---would have a separate legislature and these would be given "final legislative authority in communal affairs." Exiled Cypriots like Archbishop Makarios... would be permitted to return. Internal security and defense would remain in the hands of the British governor, who would consult with representatives of the Greek and Turkish governments.

Macmillan said he had appealed personally to the prime ministers of Greece and Turkey "to approach this policy in a spirit of cooperation." It would be, he said, "an adventure in partnership." Efforts of the NATO council this week to win Turkish and Greek support for the plan failed. A Greek government spokesman in Athens tonight called the program "fundamentally unacceptable." Greece wants all of the island. Turkey wants the island partitioned between the 400 thousand inhabitants of Greek origin and the Turkish Cypriots, who are outnumbered 4 to 1. More British troops arrived on Cyprus today to maintain order. Another 2 thousand grenadiers are due tomorrow in what may also be part of a buildup for possible intervention in Lebanon.

Secretary of Defense McElroy told a news conference this afternoon that he "would not hesitate" to use B-47 bombers carrying "limited and hopefully clean" atomic bombs in the Middle East, should American forces have to intervene in Lebanon. However, he said, such employment of the Strategic Air Force is "very unlikely."

Not the least serious consequence of the Sherman Adams incident is that it has distracted public attention form the Lebanon crisis. We appear to be nearer military involvement than at any time since the events in Quemoy and Matsu in 1954. Maybe it can be avoided, but also maybe not.

Secretary General Hammarskjold is in Beirut today and the rebels have promised a truce during his visit. He will do his utmost to settle the conflict on a political level, possibly even going to Cairo to see President Nasser. But failing this, he must decide whether to recommend that a United Nations force be sent in large enough to seal off the Syrian border. Both the United States and Britain are ready to supply additional U.N. forces on short notice.

If the United Nations does not decide to sendin a pacifying force, two other possibilities remain, both of them involving the United States in military action. One is that the United States, Britain and France revive the commitments under the tri-partite declaration of 1950. This both the British and French governments appear to be ready to do. The relevant passage in that declaration promises "immediate action against Middle Eastern states preparing to violate frontiers or armistice lines."

The other possibility is single-handed intervention by the United States. Secretary Dulles talked openly about this earlier in the Lebanon crisis. In his news conference this week he did not re-emphasize it. But when asked if American military action in Lebanon would be limited to a call from the United Nations, he said: "No, there are other contingencies." He could have been referring both to a tri-partite action, and intervention by the United States alone.

The gravity of Mr. Dulles's carefully chosen words has had little effect in this country, and a great deal abroad. In Lebanon, government supporters think President Chamoun has a blank check on the Sixth Fleet and American ground forces. In Moscow, it was stated flatly that Washington already has decided on military intervention. Other capitals are not so sure. Observers seemed to think that Mr. Dulles has been talking belligerently, hoping not to have to act belligerently. But it is clearly recognized that if the Lebanon government is brought down for being pro-Western, and the West does little to save it, the life-expectancy of any other pro-Western state in the Middle East would be short.

Single-handed intervention by the United States would have a serious drawback. The only explicit authority in the Eisenhower doctrine is for the President to send forces to help a Middle Eastern state to "defend itself against aggression from a country under communist control." That does not apply to Lebanon. The United Arab Republic is abetting the rebels, but it is not under communist control, nor is there actual aggression. If the United States applied the Eisenhower Doctrine in Lebanon, it would be implementing the sentence in the congressional resolution that says simply: "The United States regards as vital to the national interest and world peace, the preservation of the independence and integrity of the nations of the Middle East." This, Congress did say, but Congress did not go on to authorize action on it. The action it authorized was limited to aggression from a communist-controlled country.

Nor is there explicit authorization anywhere for the United States by itself to save a state endangered by infiltration. The U.N. has passed a resolution condemning infiltration which could be used to justify U.N. action. But if the U.N. fails to act, the tri-partite pact now seems to be the least objectionable method to save Lebanon.

What may be unfolding is a new phase in the development of international action against aggression and its related forms of conquest. It began in Korea. Much later, the U.N. stopped the Suez attack and posted its forces between Israel and some of its neighbors. Now the free world may have to square away to the problem of infiltration for the first time.

If this job falls to the Big Three, as it well may, nothing could be more ironical. For this would be a kind of post-Suez Suez, this time having legal sanction and the support of the United States. No one can foresee such a development without apprehensions. If the West sends troops to Lebanon, Moscow may flood the country with volunteers. Such fires could spread beyond control.

But no one knows this better than Dag Hammarskjold, and indeed Nasser and the Kremlin. The very threat of peril may help to avert peril, by inducing an acceptable solution by negotiations. That is one hopeful thing to say about the intentification of the crisis.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The actions of nations...as well as individuals...are not always dignified. This is continually showing up in history---the history we read in books, and the history that is now being made in many parts of the world. The British historian MacCaulay said; "There is a vilephrase of which bad historians are exceedingly fond---'the dignity of history.'"

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 20, 1958

This is the news:

Bernard Goldfine has agreed to testify on July first before the House subcommittee investigating federal regulatory agencies. / The subcommittee had sent Goldfine a telegram...asking him to appear and to bring with him certain financial records. / These records, the telegram said, should be "those pertaining to outstanding certified checks purchased by companies controlled by you, and records of your stock ownership in companies registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission." / More than 700-thousand dollars in checks, issued on behalf of various Goldfine interests, reportedly have never been cashed. / When reporters asked Subcommittee Chairman Harris today whether he planned to ask Goldfine for his tax records, he said, "We will cross that bridge when we get to it." There is some interest in finding out whether Goldfine wrote off as business expenses the gifts he bestowed on [redacted] Sherman Adams.

Republican Senator Watkins of Utah said today that Sherman Adams should resign. Watkins said the usefulness of Adams in the White House had been "seriously impaired, if not completely destroyed."

Republican Representative Bennett of Michigan said today that an inquiry should be made into all of Goldfine's contacts with federal officials over the past 10 years. This, of course, would include four years of the Truman Administration. Bennett is a member of the House investigating subcommittee, and he was one of the first Republicans to call for Adams' resignation.

Secretary of State Dulles told the Senate Finance Committee today that it would be "reckless" to take lightly Khrushchev's declaration of war in the peaceful field of trade. Dulles said, "The strategy of Communist imperialism involves the subversion of country after country until the United States is isolated and subject to economic strangulation. The Soviet Union," he warned, "is rapidly developing its weapons for waging economic warfare against the United States." Mr. Dulles' testimony opened the Administration drive for Senate approval of a five-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act, as passed by the House. Senate Democratic leaders are supporting the Administration in this. But Republican Leader Knowland wants the extension limited to three years.

→

The Senate today completed action on a bill extending corporate and excise taxes for one year. The measure would keep the excise levies on cigarettes, liquor, new automobiles, and auto accessories at their present level. But the Senate bill, unlike the measure passed by the House, would reduce taxes on transportation by more than 700-million dollars a year. The cut would apply not only to passenger travel, but to the movement of all classes of freight---whether shipped by land, water, or air. President Eisenhower had warned against a tax cut on grounds that it would be inflationary. The measure now goes to a Senate-House conference committee.

The Labor Department reports that the number of persons drawing unemployment compensation, dropped in the week ending June 7th for the eighth straight week. / However, the decline in that seven-day period was less than in previous weeks.

The five-day strike by marine engineers on the East and Gulf coasts was settled this afternoon. Terms of the settlement were not immediately announced.

In London today, bus drivers and conductors voted to go back to work tomorrow, after being on strike for seven weeks. / They accepted the government offer of an additional dollar and 18 cents a week. Other strikers on the London docks, and at the Smithfield meat market, also agreed to go back to work.

The United States agreed today to give the Philippines a new 75-million dollar credit, through the Export-Import Bank, and to provide an additional 50-million-dollar development loan. / The loan is subject to approval by Congress.

President Eisenhower drove to Quantico, Virginia, today...to attend the annual Defense Department conference. News Secretary Hagerty says the President spoke for half an hour...and expressed his views on →

"many subjects." Other unofficial reports say that Mr. Eisenhower discussed his defense reorganization program, and America's "global commitments" in the atomic age. Before going to Quantico this morning, he signed legislation giving a 10 percent pay raise to a million classified government workers. The raise is retroactive to January first.

The United States asked Russia tonight [redacted] "to take immediate action" to effect the release of the nine American servicemen held in East Germany. [redacted] Russia's top embassy representative in Washington (Ambassador Menshikov is out of the country) was summoned to the State Department. He was told by Deputy Undersecretary Murphy...in a meeting lasting half an hour... that Soviet military authorities in East Germany [redacted] should act at once, under prevailing agreements, to obtain the release of the nine men, who have now been held by the East Germans for 13 days. The United States does not recognize the East German regime, and the East Germans have been trying to get the United States to negotiate their release on the diplomatic level.

The Communist government of Hungary today sent a note to Washington.... protesting the statements made by President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles regarding the execution of Hungarian patriot leaders. The note claimed the statements...denouncing the action...to constitute interference in Hungary 's internal affairs.

In Moscow today, a crowd of several hundred students stoned the Danish Embassy...smashing several windows. Last Tuesday night, Danish students demonstrated in front of the Soviet embassy in Copenhagen...protesting the Hungarian executions. Today's demonstration in Moscow would have been impossible without the permission of the Soviet authorities.

In Beirut today, United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold continued his talks with Lebanese leaders. Lebanon reportedly asked him to recommend the establishment of a United Nations patrol along the Syrian frontier. It was announced tonight...at United Nations headquarters here in New York... that Hammarskjold will go to Cairo this weekend.

When the British moved out of Suez, they transferred their major eastern Mediterranean base to Cyprus. / The trouble on that island then was with the local Greeks. They saw their chances of union with Greece fading, and they put on a remarkable demonstration of an underground harassing a powerful government. / The British had to bring in heavy forces to cope with the terrorism. They also had to depend on local Turks to do most of the police work, since Greek police were ineffective against Greek terrorists.

The Turks were more than sympathetic with the British at the time. For local Turks it meant they would not come under Greek rule. For the Turkish Government it meant that Cyprus would remain British, and never become a hostile island, possibly a Communist island, off the coast, pointing a pistol at the heart of Turkey.

Then things changed. The importance of Cyprus as a base for British power went down drastically. / The Greeks felt they were closer to self-determination, and the Greek underground slackened its campaign. / Then it was that the Turks turned to violence, not against the British, but against the Greek Cypriots. / This time the Turkish police were ineffective against Turkish rioters, which is why the British are flying in troop reinforcements. The Turkish Government announced that it would accept nothing less than partition in Cyprus.

The British have met this new situation with a new formula. It is their fifth since the troubles started, and by all means the most imaginative. For it proposes a partnership in which the Greeks and Turks have separate communities with separate legislatures and separate citizenships, while both retain British citizenship. There also would be an island council of four Greek and two Turkish ministers, who would join the British in governing the island as a whole. The British alone would have control of foreign policy and security. This is a seven-year plan, during which time the Greeks would stop insisting on self-determination, and the Turks on partition. At the end of the period, Greece, Turkey and Britain, would share sovereignty over Cyprus formally, the British remaining responsible for foreign affairs and security.

To discuss this problem in terms of what happens to the local population is, however, to miss the full importance of Cyprus. It is not only a laboratory for experiments in governing a community. It is a vital factor in the security of the Western world. Greece and Turkey are full members of the NATO alliance, and form the eastern bastion of this defense organization. The safety of the West, the United States included, is affected by what happens in Cyprus. Not only is the island a NATO base affecting the alliance in that area. It is, at present, the cause of a rift between Greece and Turkey, and the structure of the alliance is in danger. / The rift can only be closed if Greece and Turkey decide to give the British plan a trial, and it works.

That is why Prime Minister Macmillan put off his announcement on Cyprus for two days to enable Secretary-General Spaak of NATO to consult the Greek and Turkish governments about it. / Both allies had let it be known the plan was not acceptable, and Mr. Spaak hoped to persuade them not to reject it, and at least give it a chance. / He did not convert them, but at least they have been restrained so far in voicing their disapproval.

There is enough real colonialism in the issue to complicate it. But the reason the British have not been able to satisfy the population has not been old-fashioned imperialism. It has been the fact that Cyprus is a military base, has a twenty percent Turkish minority, and lies close to the Turkish mainland.

Its local problems are not insoluble. Yet Cyprus threatens to have far-reaching consequences to the safety of the free world. It is regrettable that NATO has no power, or organism, to rule the island on behalf of the Western Alliance, for that would be a solution without any taint of imperialism. Still the problem can be dealt with if the Greeks and Turks, not on the island, but in their home countries, feel themselves part of the West, and feel that Western security is paramount to them. If they do, the British plan takes care of the local populations generously. If they do not, there will have to be another agonizing re-appraisal, this time of the position of NATO in Eastern Europe.

Back in a moment -

George Bryan

Word for Today

The Greeks and Turks are wary of each other. But Marie de Sévigné (SAY-VEEN-YEA) said, "There is nobody who is not dangerous for someone." And because Greece and Turkey have need of eachother (and we of them), it is to be hoped that they will recall the observation of Machiavelli, who said, "A man's wisdom is most conspicuous where he is able to distinguish among dangers and make choice of the least."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 20, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Bernard Goldfine has agreed to testify on July first before the House subcommittee investigating federal regulatory agencies. The subcommittee had sent Goldfine a telegram...asking him to appear and to bring with him certain financial records. These records, the telegram said, should be "those pertaining to outstanding certified checks purchased by companies controlled by you and records of your stock ownership in companies registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission." More than 700 thousand dollars in checks, issued on behalf of various Goldfine interests, reportedly have never been cashed. When reporters asked Subcommittee Chairman Harris today whether he planned to ask Goldfine for his tax records, he said, "We will cross that bridge when we get to it." There is some interest in finding outwhether Goldfine wrote off as business expenses the gifts he bestowed on Adams.

Republican Senator Watkins of Utah said today that Sherman Adams should resign. Watkins said the usefulness of Adams in the White House had been "seriously impaired, if not completely destroyed."

Republican Representative Bennett of Michigan said today that an inquiry should be made into all of Goldfine's contacts with federal officials over the past 10 years. This, of course, would include four years of the Truman Administration. Bennett is a member of the House investigating subcommittee, and he was one of the first Republicans to call for Adams' resignation.

Secretary of State Dulles told the Senate Finance Committee today that it would be "reckless" to take lightly Khrushchev's declaration of war in the peaceful field of trade. Dulles said, "The strategy of Communist imperialism involves the subversion of country after country until the United States is isolated and subject to economic strangulation. The Soviet Union," he warned,

"is rapidly developing its weapons for waging economic warfare against the United States." Mr. Dulles' testimony opened the Administration drive for Senate approval of a five year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act as passed by the House. Senate Democratic leaders are supporting the Administration in this. But Republican Leader Knowland wants the extension limited to three years.

The Senate today completed action on a bill extending corporate and excise taxes for one year. The measure would keep the excise levies on cigarettes, liquor, new automobiles, and auto accessories at their present level. But the Senate bill unlike the measure passed by the House would reduce taxes on transportation by more than 700 million dollars a year. The cut would apply not only to passenger travel but to the movement of all classes of freight---whether shipped by land, water, or air. President Eisenhower had warned against a tax cut on grounds that it would be inflationary. The measure now goes to a Senate House conference committee.

The Labor Department reports that the number of persons drawing unemployment compensation dropped in the week ending June 7th for the eighth straight week. However, the decline in that seven-day period was less than in previous weeks.

The five-day strike by marine engineers on the East and Gulf coasts was settled this afternoon. Terms of the settlement were not immediately announced.

In London today, bus drivers and conductors voted to go back to work tomorrow after being on strike for seven weeks. They accepted the government offer of an additonal dollar and 18 cents a week. Other strikers on the London docks and at the Smithfield meat market also agreed to go back to work.

The United States agreed today to give the Philippines a new 75 million dollar credit through the Export-Import Bank and to provide an additional 50-million-dollar development loan. The loan is subject to approval by Congress.

President Eisenhower drove to Quantico, Virginia today...to attend the annual Defense Department conference. News Secretary Hagerty says the President spoke for half an hour....and expressed his views on "many subjects." Other unofficial reports say that Mr. Eisenhower discussed his defense reorganization program and America's "global commitments" in the atomic age. Before going to Quantico this morning, he signed legislation giving a 10 percent pay raise to a million classified government workers. The raise is retroactive to January first.

The United States asked Russia tonight "to take immediate action" to effect the release of the nine American servicemen held in East Germany. Russia's top embassy representative in Washington (Ambassador Menshikov is out of the country) was summoned to the State Department. He was told by Deputy Undersecretary Murphy...in a meeting lasting half an hour...that Soviet military authorities in East Germnyy should act at once, under prevailing agreements, to obtain the release of the nine men, who have now been held by the East Germans for 13 days. The United States does not recognize the East German regime, and the East Germans have been trying to get the United States to negotiate their release on the diplomatic level.

The Communist government of Hungary today sent a note to Washington... protesting the statements made by President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles regarding the execution of Hungarian patriot leaders. The note claimed the statements...denouncing the action...to constitute interference in Hungary's internal affairs.

In Moscow today, a crowd of several hundred students stoned the Danish Embassy...smashing several windows. Last Tuesday night, Danish students demonstrated in front of the Soviet embassy in Copenhagen...protesting the Hungarian executions. Today's demonstration in Moscow would have been impossible without the permission of Soviet authorities.

In Beirut today, the United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold continued his talks with Lebanese leaders. Lebanon reportedly asked him to recommend the establishment of a United Nations patrol along the Syrian frontier. It was announced tonight...at United Nations headquarters here in New York... that Hammarskjold will go to Cairo this week-end.

When the British moved out of Suez, they transferred their major eastern Mediterranean base to Cyprus. The trouble on that island then was with the local Greeks. They saw their chances of union with Greece fading, and they put on a remarkable demonstration of an underground harassing a powerful government. The British had to bring in heavy forces to cope with the terrorism. They also had to depend on local Turks to do most of the police work, since Greek police were ineffective against Greek terrorists.

The Turks were more than sympathetic with the British at the time. For local Turks it meant they would not come under Greek rule. For the Turkish government it meant that Cyprus would remain British and never become a hostile island, possibly a Communist island, off the coast, pointing a pistol at the heart of Turkey.

Then things changed. The importance of Cyprus as a base for British power went down drastically. The Greeks felt they were closer to self-determination, and the Greek underground slackened its campaign. Then it was that the Turks turned to violence, not against the British, but against the Greek Cypriots. This time the Turkish police were ineffective against Turkish rioters, which is why the British are flying in troop reinforcements. The Turkish Government announced that it would accept nothing less than partition in Cyprus.

The British have met this new situation with a new formula. It is their fifth since the troubles started, and by all means the most imaginative. For it proposes a partnership in which the Greeks and Turks have separate communities with separate legislatures and separate citizenships, while both retain British citizenship. There also would be an island council of four Greek and two Turkish ministers, who would join the British in governing the island as a whole. The British alone would have control of foreign policy and security. This is a seven-year plan, during which time the Greeks would stop insisting on self-determination and the Turks on partition. At the end of the period, Greece, Turkey and Britain would share sovereignty over Cyprus formally, the British remaining responsible for foreign affairs and security.

To discuss this problem in terms of what happens to the local population is, however, to miss the full importance of Cyprus. It is not only a laboratory for experiments in governing a community. It is a vital factor in the security of the Western world. Greece and Turkey are full members of the NATO alliance, and form the eastern bastion of this defense organization. The safety of the West, the United States included, is affected by what happens in Cyprus. Not only is the island a NATO base affecting the alliance in that area. It is, at present, the cause of a rift between Greece and Turkey, and the structure of the alliance is in danger. This can only be closed if Greece and Turkey decide to give the British plan a trial, and it works.

That is why Prime Minister Macmillan put off his announcement on Cyprus for two days to enable Secretary-General Spaak of NATO to consult the Greek and Turkish governments about it. Both allies had let it be known the plan was not acceptable, and Mr. Spaak hoped to persuade them not to reject it, and at least give it a chance. He did not convert them, but at least they have been restrained so far in voicing their disapproval.

There is enough real colonialism in the issue to complicate it. But the reason the British have not been able to satisfy the population has not been old-fashioned imperialism. It has been the fact that Cyprus is a military base, has a twenty percent Turkish minority, and lies close to the Turkish mainland.

Its local problems are not insoluble. Yet Cyprus threatens to have far-reaching consequences to the safety of the free world. It is regrettable that NATO has no power, or organism to rule the island on behalf of the Western Alliance, for that would be a solution without any taint of imperialism. Still the problem can be dealt with if the Greeks and Turks not on the islands but in their home countries, feel themselves part of the West, and feel that Western security is paramount to them. If they do, the British plan takes care of the local populations generously. If they do not, there will have to be another agonizing re-appraisal, this time of the position of NATO in Eastern Europe.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Greeks and Turks are wary of each other. But Marie de Sevigne said, "There is nobody who is not dangerous for someone." And because Greece and Turkey have need of each other (and we of them) it is to be hoped that they will recall the observation of Machiavelli, who said, "A man's wisdom is most conspicuous where he is able to distinguish among dangers and make choice of the least."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., June 23, 1958

This is the news:

United States District Judge Lemley...in Little Rock...today refused to stay his order, suspending integration at Central High School, for two and a half years. / Judge Lemley had ordered the integration delay on Saturday, at the request of the Little Rock school board. / He said...in granting the request...that while troops can keep Negro students in school, "they cannot create a climate conducive to education." / The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People immediately protested the order, and asked for a stay of execution. / Today, Judge Lemley heard arguments on the motion...filed by the N.A.A.C.P....and turned it down. / He ruled, that to grant the motion would, to a large extent, nullify his order of Saturday...since, he said, "it will in all probability take months to carry the case through the Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court." He said, "In the meantime, the situation at Central High School, which we have found to be intolerable from an educational standpoint, would continue." Wiley Branton, attorney for the N.A.A.C.P., prepared to take the motion to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. Branton said if it also denies a stay, he would present the motion to a justice of the Supreme Court.

→

Four Negro leaders told President Eisenhower today...at a White House meeting...that the court order suspending school integration in Little Rock "is being construed, rightly or wrongly, as a green light to lawless elements in their defiance of federal authority." The meeting with Mr. Eisenhower was arranged last week before Judge Lemley's ruling, and the Negro leaders submitted a nine-point program for improving the status of the American Negro. One suggestion was that the President issue a proclamation...prior to the reopening of schools in September...declaring that the law will be "vigorously upheld with the total resources at his command." They also suggested stronger civil rights legislation and a White House conference of Southern Negro and white leaders. Mr. Eisenhower listened sympathetically...but made no comment.

Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee said today that there is little use calling members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to testify, if they "find it difficult to give their honest views." Russell referred to the case of Admiral Burke, chief of naval operations. Burke told the committee last week that he was opposed to some features of President Eisenhower's plan for reorganizing the Defense Department. Secretary McElroy told reporters on Saturday that he was disappointed in Burke and regarded his testimony as "regrettable". McElroy said yesterday that this was not a rebuke. Senator Russell says the "clear implication" is that the joint chiefs "must conform or be purged." And he has cancelled the appearances scheduled for tomorrow of General Taylor, Army chief of staff, and General Pate, commandant of the Marine Corps.

Republican Senator Goldwater said today that "the people who get out the votes for Republican candidates" in his home state of Arizona are convinced that Sherman Adams should resign. Goldwater said if Adams does not resign voluntarily, "the President ought to ask for his resignation." Democratic Representative Moulder of Missouri said today that House investigators ought to question special White House assistant Gerald Morgan. Moulder said, "From what I hear, Mr. Morgan is more of a front man than Mr. Adams." He did not elaborate on the charge, and Morgan declined comment...other than to say that he had heard nothing from the House investigating subcommittee, indicating that he might be called.

—>

The Senate today...by a voice vote...approved legislation giving the President more authority to share atomic information with members of NATO. Because the measure is slightly more restrictive than the version passed last week by the House, the bill now goes to a conference committee.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress to approve last week's agreement with Euratom for the construction of nuclear power plants in Western Europe. The United States would make available up to 135-million dollars in the form of long-term credits, as well as considerable quantities of enriched Uranium-235 for fuel purposes.

The situation in Lebanon is described as "deteriorating." For a direct report on that, we switch to CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut.

(Tape runs 2:05
Ends on cue: "---to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

In Moscow today, a crowd of demonstrators stoned the West German Embassy. Nearly every window in the embassy building was smashed, and several Western correspondents...covering the incident...were roughed up. / One newsman's camera was smashed. Soviet police did not arrive on the scene in force until half an hour after the disturbance began. / The violence was in retaliation for the German demonstration...three days ago...in front of the Russian ambassy in Bonn. / That demonstration was a reaction to the Communist announcement of the execution of former Premier Imre Nagy and other leaders of the Hungarian revolt.

Yugoslavia today formally protested the execution of Nagy. / The protest note...delivered in Budapest...said the Yugoslav government and its people received the news of the execution "with profound indignation." / It called the Hungarian charge that Nagy directed revolutionary activities from the sanctuary of the Yugoslav Embassy "untrue from beginning to end."

In Poland, party leader Gomulka reportedly has sent a message to Moscow "disassociating" himself from the executions. Gomulka is not expected, however, to criticize the Soviet action publicly.

The New York Times said today that the Justice Department has written evidence, connecting the American flier, Gerald Murphy, with the disappearance of Professor Jesus de Galindez. / Galindez disappeared in New York City in March, 1956, after writing a paper denouncing Rafael Trujillo, dictator of the Dominican Republic. / It has been charged that Galindez was kidnaped on orders from Trujillo...and that Murphy flew him to the Dominican Republic. Murphy himself disappeared later, under mysterious circumstances. / Last year, Trujillo engaged attorney Morris Ernst to investigate the Galindez case, and make a report. / The report absolved Trujillo, and said, "We find "not a scintilla of evidence" connecting Galindez with Murphy's plane." The documents...reported today by the New York Times...include two references to Galindez in what, the Times says, has been verified as Murphy's own handwriting. / Ernst says this material was "carefully examined and appraised" by him, in the course of his 10-month investigation, and he stands by his report. / Democratic Representative Porter of Oregon today showed the documents---including a notebook and a flight log---to reporters in his office. He said they back up a connection between Galandez and Murphy "to the hilt."

. Edward R. Murrow: June 23, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The ruling of Federal Judge Lemley, postponing School integration in Little Rock for two-and-a-half years, will have effects far beyond the borders of Arkansas. As part of the Little Rock story it adds to the ~~incalculable~~ considerable injury this country has suffered abroad. At home, it will tend to slow down the progress of integration throughout the South. [States which have decided to fight every inch of the way to integration, now have a guiding light from a federal judge. ~~They can duplicate the tactics of Governor Faubus, use the National Guard to forbid the entry of negro students into white schools, no matter what a federal court rules, call it, as Faubus did, the maintenance of peace, and hope that a legal way will be found to postpone integration, perhaps indefinitely.~~]

The fact that Judge Lemley is a Federal judge appears to remove the main hope for President Eisenhower to give more active support to the integration program. The President sent troops to Little Rock only because a Federal court order had been defied. He never said publicly that he was doing anything else, or would do anything else. And until that action he had missed few opportunities to urge the need of great patience in applying the Supreme Court ruling, more often than not addressing himself to American negroes.

When four negro leaders conferred with Mr. Eisenhower today he made no comment whatever on Judge Lemley's ruling, though they told him it had shocked and outraged millions of negro citizens, and their fellow-Americans. When they laid their nine-point program before him for the improvement of race relationships, he made no commitment to fulfil any part of it.

Judge Lemley is the target today of criticism, much of which belongs to those responsible for the conditions that he used to justify his ruling. He found them intolerable, and this view is not confined to opponents of integration. It is admitted freely by the integrationists. But they blame the failure of government leadership to build up sentiment at the local level for law enforcement.

For one thing, no prosecutions followed the rioting. This may have been due to the difficulty, or the expected difficulty, in obtaining evidence. It may have been feared the local courts would not convict, and that more harm would be done to the cause of law and order by the collapse of prosecutions, than from doing nothing. ~~If so, the do-nothing policy has now produced a situation in which a Federal Judge appears to have put a premium on defying the Supreme Court. This can hardly be what the~~

~~Administration wanted.~~

But the omissions of Washington leadership went further than the failure to prosecute. / Little was done openly to encourage and foster the local movement for law enforcement. / Some start was reported inside Central High School, where many students were ready to make integration work. / The formula in Arkansas, and indeed everywhere in the South, is not that integration has to be liked, but that law enforcement has to be liked, more than integration is disliked. / The local activities on behalf of this preference, needed help above all from the President and his representatives. / They got little of it.

Since the Administration confined itself to the one drastic move, of sending troops after the trouble started, it helped produce the situation, which produced Judge Lemley's postponement. / This was not courageous, and certainly was not inevitable, but at least it was reasonable. And in consequence, the clock of integration has been set back, and no one knows for how long.

Back in moment -

~~Mrs~~ Jonas Bryan.

Word for Today

The Negro leaders...who saw Mr. Eisenhower today...called on the President, in effect, to use the prestige of his high office in "educating" people in racial segregation./ Wendell Phillips said, "Law is nothing unless behind it stands a warm, living public opinion."/ And it was Cicero...two thousand years ago...who observed, "No law is entirely convenient for everyone."

Good night and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

Mr. Murrow

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, June 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

..... for a direct report on that we switch to CBS NEWS correspondent Richard Carlson in Beirut.

CARLSON: Premier Sami es-Solh said today that Lebanon's trouble with the United Arab Republic has gone beyond infiltration and intervention into what can be considered a state of actual war. He warns that the situation is deteriorating very rapidly. He said the government will call for Anglo-American assistance if it feels the United Nations can't come to Lebanon's aid rapidly enough. The Premier said, the least that Lebanon might ask of the UN is the creation of a cordon sanitaire along the Syrian border. He indicated that this question might be raised shortly in another Security Council meeting. The Premier is a vigorous man in his seventies. A Moslem who has been excommunicated in effect because of his pro-Western policies. He is scheduled to have lunch tomorrow with Mr. Hammarskjold shortly after the UN Secretary General returns from Cairo. Unless Mr. Hammarskjold returns with some definite committments from President Nasser, the tone of his luncheon with Premier Solh already is apparent. Mr. Solh says he will raise a cry of alarm once again. He probably will point out - as it did to a Lebanese reporter today, that the United States especially is bound to come to Lebanon's aid because of the Eisenhower Doctrine. He may point out that Lebanon is prepared to take its case to the General Assembly where the Soviet veto cannot apply. The Premier's strong statements came amid reports - still unconfirmed that the Council of Internal Security in Lebanon has decided to declare martial law. The action reportedly has been delayed briefly at the request of the Army Chief of Staff. Here in Beirut, there was the usual Monday morning bombs in effort to close down the shops. Two bombs were thrown and two persons were killed and six seriously wounded. Most of the shops that were opened stayed open. UN observer teams were out in the field again today, but no report on their activities. An American Globemaster flew in two helicopters today for UN aerial reconnaissance. Five American technicians came along for training purposes, but the copters will be flown by Norwegian pilots.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Moscow today a crowd of demonstrators ...

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

United States District Judge Lemley...in Little Rock...today refused to stay his order suspending integration at Central High School for two and a half years. Judge Lemley had ordered the integration delay on Saturday at the request of the Little Rock school board. He said...in granting the request...that while troops can keep Negro students in school, "they cannot create a climate conducive to education." The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People immediately protested the order and asked for a stay of execution. Today, Judge Lemley heard arguments on the motion...filed by the N.A.A.C.P....and turned it down. He ruled that to grant the motion would to a large extent nullify his order of Saturday...since, he said, "it will in all probability take months to carry the case through the Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court." He said, "In the meantime, the situation at Central High School which we have found to be intolerable from an educational standpoint would continue." Wiley Branton, attorney for the N.A.A.C.P. prepared to take the motion to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. Branton said if it also denies a stay, he would present the motion to a justice of the Supreme Court.

Four Negro leaders told President Eisenhower today...at a White House meeting...that the court order suspending school integration in Little Rock "is being construed rightly or wrongly as a green light to lawless elements in their defiance of federal authority." The meeting with Mr. Eisenhower was arranged last week before Judge Lemley's ruling and the Negro leaders submitted a nine-point progrom for improving the status of the American Negro. One suggestion was that the President issue a proclamation...prior to the reopening of schools on September...declaring that the law will be "vigorously upheld with the total resources at his command." They also suggested stronger civil rights legislation and a White House conference of Southern Negro and white leaders. Mr. Eisenhower listened sympathetically...but made no comment.

Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee said today that there is little use calling members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to testify if they "find it difficult to give their honest views." Russell referred to the case of Admiral Burke, chief of naval operations. Burke told the committee last week that he was opposed to some features of President Eisenhower's plan for reorganizing the Defense Department. Secretary McElroy told reporters on Saturday that he was disappointed in Burke and regarded his testimony as "regrettable." McElroy said yesterday that this was not a rebuke. Senator Russell says the "clear implication" is that the joint chiefs "must conform or be purged." And he has cancelled the appearances scheduled for tomorrow of General Taylor, Army chief of staff, and General Pate, commandant of the Marine Corps.

The Senate today...by a voice vote...approved legislation giving the President more authority to share atomic information with members of NATO. Because the measure is slightly more restrictive than the version passed last week by the House, the bill now goes to a conference committee.

The situation in Lebanon is described as "deteriorating." for a direct report on that, we switch to CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut.

KALLSEN: Premier Sami es-Solh said today that Lebanon's trouble with the United Arab Republic has gone beyond infiltration and intervention into what can be considered a state of actual war. He warns that the situation is deteriorating very rapidly. He said the government will call for Anglo-American assistance if it feels the United Nations can't come to Lebanon's aid rapidly enough. The Premier siid, the least that Lebanon might ask of the U.N. is the creation of a cordon sanitaire along the Syrian border. He indicated that this question might be raised shortly in another Security Council meeting. The Premier is a vigorous man in his seventies. A Moslem who has been excommunicated in effect because of his pro-Western policies. He is scheduled to have lunch tomorrow with Mr. Hammarskjold shortly after the U.N. Secretary General returns from Cairo. Unless Mr. Hammarskjold returns with some definite committments from President Nasser, the tone of his luncheon with Premier Solh already is apparent. Mr. Solh says he will raise a cry of alarm once again. He probably will point out - as it did to a Lebanese reporter today, that the United States especially is bound to come to Lebanon's aid because of the Eisenhower Doctrine. He may point out that Lebanon is prepared to take its case to the General Assembly where the Soviet veto cannot apply. The Premier's strong statements came amid reports - still unconfirmed that the Council of Internal Security in Lebanon had decided to declare martial law. The action reportedly has been delayed briefly at the request of the Army Chief of Staff. Here in Beirut, there was the usual Monday morning bombs in effort to close down the shops. Two bombs were thrown and two persons were killed and six seriously wounded. Most of the shops that were opened stayed open. U.N. observer teams were out in the field again today, but no report on their activities. An American Globemaster flew in two helicopters today for U.N. aerial reconnaissance. Five American technicians came along for training purposes, but the copters will be flown by Norwegian pilots.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROWIn Moscow today, a crowd of demonstrators stoned the Western German Embassy. Nearly every window in the embassy building was smashed, and several Western correspondents...covering the incident...wereroughed up. One newsman's camera was smashed. Soviet police did not arrive on the scene in force until half an hour after the disturbance began. The violence was in retaliation for the German demonstration...three days ago...in front of the Russian embassy in Bonn. That demonstration was a reaction to the Communist announcement of the execution of former Premier Imre Nagy and other leaders of the Hungarian revolt.

Yugoslavia today formally protested the execution of Nagy. The protest note delivered in Budapest...said the Yugoslav government and its people received the news of the execution "with profound indignation." It called the Hungarian charge that Nagy directed revolutionary activities from the sanctuary of the Yugoslav Embassy "untrue from beginning to end."

In Poland, party leader Gomulka reportedly has sent a message to Moscow "disassociating" himself from the executions. Gomulka is not expected, however, to criticize the Soviet action publicly.

The New York Times said today that the Justice Department has written evidence connecting the American flier, Gerald Murphy with the disappearance of Professor Jesus de Galindez. Galindez disappeared in New York City in March, 1956 after writing a paper denouncing Rafael Trujillo, dictator of the Dominican Republic. It has been charged that Galindez was kidnaped on orders from Trujillo... and that Murphy flew him to the Dominican Republic. Murphy himself disappeared later, under mysterious circumstances. Last year, Trujillo engaged attorney Morris Ernst to investigate the Galindez case and make a report. The report absolved Trujillo and said, "We find not a scintilla of evidence connecting Galindez with Murphy's plane." The documents...reported today by the New York Times...include two references to Galindez in what, the Times says, has been verified as Murphy's own handwriting. Ernst says this material was "carefully examined and appraised" by him in the course of his 10-month investigation and he stands by his report. Democratic Representative Porter of Oregon today showed the documents---including a notebook and a flight log---to reporters in his office. He said they back up a connection between Galindez and Murphy "to the hilt."

The ruling of Federal Judge Lemley, postponing school integration in Little Rock for two-and-a-half years, will have effects far beyond the borders of Arkansas. As part of the Little Rock story it adds to the considerable injury this country has suffered abroad. At home, it will tend to slow down the progress of integration throughout the South. States which have decided to fight every inch of the way to integration, now have a guiding light from a federal judge.

The fact that Judge Lemley is a Federal judge appears to remove the main hope for President Eisenhower to give more active support to the integration program. The President sent troops to Little Rock only because a Federal court order had been defied. He never said publicly that he was doing anything else, or would do anything else. And until that action he had missed few opportunities to urge the need of great patience in applying the Supreme Court ruling, more often than not addressing himself to American negroes.

Judge Lemley is the target today of criticism, much of which belongs to those responsible for the conditions that he used to justify his ruling. He found them intolerable, and this view is not confined to opponents of integration. It is admitted freely by the integrationists. But they blame the failure of government leadership to build up sentiment at the local level for law enforcement.

For one thing no prosecutions followed the rioting. This may have been due to the difficulty, or the expected difficulty, in obtaining evidence. It may have been feared the local courts would not convict, and that more harm would be done to the cause of law and order by the collapse of prosecutions, than from doing nothing.

But the omissions of Washington leadership went further than the failure to prosecute. Little was done openly to encourage and foster the local movement for law enforcement. Some start was reported inside Central High School, where many students were ready to make integration work. The formula in Arkansas, and indeed everywhere in the South, is not that integration has to be liked, but that law enforcement has to be liked, more than integration is disliked. The local activities on behalf of this preference needed help above all from the President and his representatives. They got little of it.

Since the Administration confined itself to the one drastic move, of sending troops after the touuble started, it helped produce the situation which produced Judge Lemley's postponement. This was not courageous, and certainly was not inevitable, but at least it was reasonable. And in consequence the clock of integration has been set back, and no one knows for how long.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Negro leaders..who saw Mr. Eidenhower today...called on the President in effect, to use the prestige of his high office in "educating" people in racial segregation. Wendell Phillips said, "Law is nothing unless behind it stands a warm, living public opinion." And it was Cicero...two thousand years ago...who observed, "No law is entirely convenient for everyone."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 24, 1958

This is the news:

Russia today accused the United States and Britain of preparing "armed interference in the internal affairs of Lebanon." / The news agency Tass cited the statement by Secratery of State Dulles that the United States would be "disposed" to support a larger U.N. force in Lebanon, if this is what Secretary General Hammarskjold recommends. / Tass said the United States planned to send troops to Lebanon as part of an expanded international police force. / But the Soviet Union, it said, "cannot remain indifferent to the preparation of a foreign intervention, however it may be disguised." Tass claimed that the main purpose of the recent talks between President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan was "to coordinate plans of aggression against Lebanon."

—7

The Lebanese government has accused the United Arab Republic, headed by President Nasser, of "massive interference" in Lebanon. /That is why a United Nations observer team was sent./ President Chamoun of Lebanon said today that the decision, whether to ask for United Nations troops, will will depend on how things go "in the very near future."/ He predicted a heavy rebel attack soon, perhaps within 48 hours.

(Secretary ~~Dumbarton~~ General Hammarskjold returned to Lebanon today, after two days of talks with Egyptian leaders in Cairo. /All that Hammarskjold would say publicly, was that he had had a pleasant trip./ Tomorrow, after another meeting with President Chamoun, he will fly back to New York. (I should like to discuss the Lebanon question further, in a few minutes).

Today...at the United Nations...Russia again called for an end to the current series of American nuclear tests. It made the demand in the Trusteeship Council, since the islands...where the tests are being held... are administered by the United States, under U.N. supervision.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda said today, that the technical talks, due to start next week in Geneva, will fail...unless the United States and Britain suspend nuclear weapons tests./ Experts from both sides of the Iron Curtain are scheduled to meet in Geneva next Tuesday to explore the means of enforcing a possible test ban.

→

President Eisenhower...and Secretary of Defense McElroy...told Republican congressional leaders today that no threat of reprisal against Admiral Burke was ever intended./ Last week, in testifying before the Senate Armed Services Committee, the chief of naval operations opposed some features of Mr. Eisenhower's defense reorganization program. McElroy called Admiral Burke's testimony "regrettable"...but said later this was not meant as a rebuke.

Despite today's assurance from the White House, Chairman Russell of the Armed Services Committee...for the present, at least...is still not calling other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to testify.

Republican Leader Knowland told President Eisenhower today that he expects the Senate to pass the Alaska statehood bill this week---without amendment. But on the Senate floor, Democratic Senator Eastland of Mississippi challenged the constitutionality of the measure./ Eastland threatened to try to have the bill sent back to the Judiciary Committee, of which he is chairman.

The House subcommittee investigating the federal regulatory agencies resumed public hearings today in the case of New England manufacturer Bernard Goldfine. As the first witness, the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission...Edward Gadsby...denied that Goldfine ever received preferred treatment from the agency because of a call it received from the White House in 1956. The call had been made by White House counsel, at the request of Sherman Adams...who wanted to know the status of [redacted] the government's case against the East Boston Company, which is owned by Goldfine. Mr. Adams has denied that he ever sought favors for Goldfine, and Gadsby testified today that the Securities and Exchange Commission took "aggressive" action against the Goldfine firm. He said, "The commission could hardly have done more if Mr. Adams [redacted] were Mr. Goldfine's worst enemy." The company eventually agreed to pay a 3-thousand-dollar fine for not filing required financial reports.

[redacted]

Hoeg

President Eisenhower today appointed Leo Hoegh to head the new Office of Defense and Civilian Mobilization. The new agency is being formed by the merger of the Office of Defense Mobilization and the Federal Civil Defense Administration. Mr. Hoegh has been acting as civil defense administrator. Gordon Gray, who has been serving as head of the O.D.M., has been named as Mr. Eisenhower's special assistant in charge of national security affairs. Gray succeeds Robert Cutler, who is retiring the end of next month.

→

The government reports that in May living costs went up one-tenth of one percent. This is smallest rise in the cost-of-living index in one month since last December.

The Commerce Department said today that the slump in sales and production "has been arrested." But it noted as an adverse factor a further reduction in business capital investment.

The government today announced that so far, twelve states have signed up under the federal program of extended unemployment benefits. Four other states---Illinois, Wisconsin, Colorado and Connecticut---have decided to use reserve funds of their own for the same purpose. The government says that, all told, nearly 25-million workers are now afforded additional protection should they exhaust their benefits under the regular unemployment insurance program.

A motion to stay the district court order...suspending racial integration in the Central High School in Little Rock for two and a half years was received today by the federal circuit court of appeals in St. Louis.

The motion will be forwarded to [redacted] chief Judge Archibald Gardner in Huron, South Dakota...since the court is in recess for the summer.

Edward R. Murrow: June 24, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The United States is rarely confronted with a decision in which arguments for and against action are so evenly balanced as on intervention in Lebanon. Only if intervention is at the behest of the United Nations is there no problem, for then we would contribute whatever assistance is asked. What is hard to decide is what to do if the United Nations does not protect and defend the Lebanese Government.

Here are some of the arguments pro and con for American action. The United States is already publicly committed by Secretary Dulles' announcement that the Eisenhower doctrine applies to the present situation in Lebanon. Unless Secretary General Hammarskjold produces a compromise, or the U.N. itself intervenes, the United States cannot draw back without loss of prestige. This loss could be enormous, for our inaction would appear to doom all the pro-Western countries in the Middle East to similar abandonment. It would dig the ground from under the Bagdad pact.

The greatest pressure for United States intervention is not being brought by President Chamoun of Lebanon, but from the galaxy of pro-Western states in the Middle East. Nuri Pasha of Iraq is said to have been most insistent, and strong views have come from Western diplomats in Jordan, also by Turks and even Greeks. The argument is similar from all these quarters. If Nasser is able to subvert a pro-Western government in Lebanon, the Iraq government will be next to go, and if Nasser triumphs in many more Arab countries Turkey will be weaker, and so will Greece. Washington is being told the time to stop such a chain reaction is now. That is the chief argument for intervention.

The most serious argument against it, is that the Soviet Union might send in volunteers to fight against any Western forces brought into Lebanon, and that would bring the world back to the level and danger of Korean days. A further argument is that by intervention the United States would lose Arab good will, which it has tried so hard to cultivate. If we intervene it would be to save Lebanon from interference by the United Arab Republic. The charge against Nasser is not yet documented enough to convince world opinion. Nasser staunchly denies interference. The Arab world will probably go on believing him.

A further argument is that the Chamoun administration does not fully deserve American intervention. President Chamoun now is ready to renounce re-election. Had he done it a few weeks ago the revolt against him would not have reached its present flood. He now needs to be bailed out of a situation he might have avoided. Another reason for the growth of the rebellion is that the Lebanese army has never been committed against it at full strength. This is understandable; it is a small army, and it might have been beaten, which would have been the end of Chamoun. Also it is an army in a small country where civil war means shooting down friends and neighbors, which is another reason for not having committed it. But if the Lebanese government has not done all it could with its own resources, it is less entitled to help from the outside. Both the American and British Embassies in Beirut have been lukewarm about intervention.

Still another argument is that the majority behind Chamoun is at most small. The Moslems in Lebanon make up about half the population. Most of them are pro-Nasser. So are some small Christian sects. Armed intervention, to have the sanction of world opinion, should clearly be for a government enjoying the support of its own people.

On the question of going it alone, if it comes to intervention outside the U.N., we stand to lose either way. If we act by ourselves we get all the blame. But we do not get as much as if we were associated with Britain, and nothing like as much as if the French were in on it. Then we would share with the French the undying hatred of all Arabs. However, if we are associated with Britain, we make it clear that we are not promoting selfish interests of our own, but are serving the cause of the West.

It is hard to escape the conclusion that if most of the thinking now being done, had been done some time before the Suez crisis, the dilemma in which we now find ourselves might have been avoided altogether.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.—

Word for Today

The hard choice....faced by the United States in Lebanon...is due in large degree to a lack of policy planning before the Suez crisis, two years ago. Planning was required...and foresight. Agrippa the Second, the ancient king of Jerusalem, said, "It were well, my friends...it were well, while the vessel is still in port, to see the approaching storm."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 24, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Russia today accused the United States and Britain of preparing "armed interference in the internal affairs of Lebanon." The news agency Tass cited the statement by Secretary of State Dulles that the United States would be "disposed" to support a larger U.N. force in Lebanon, if this is what Secretary General Hammarskjold recommends. Tass said the United States planned to send troops to Lebanon as part of an expanded international police force. But the Soviet Union, it said, "cannot remain indifferent to the preparation of a foreign intervention, however it may be disguised." Tass claimed that the main purpose of the recent talks between President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan was "to coordinate plans of aggression against Lebanon."

The Lebanese government has accused the United Arab Republic headed by President Nasser, of "massive interference" in Lebanon. That is why a United Nations observer team was sent. President Chamoun of Lebanon said today that the decision whether to ask for United Nations troops will depend on how things go "in the very near future." He predicted a heavy rebel attack soon, perhaps within 48 hours.

Secretary General Hammarskjold returned to Lebanon today after two days of talks with Egyptian leaders in Cairo. All that Hammarskjold would say publicly was that he had a pleasant trip. Tomorrow, after another meeting with President Chamoun, he will fly back to New York. (I should like to discuss the Lebanon question further in a few minutes.)

Today...at the United Nations...Russia again called for an end to the current series of American nuclear tests. It made the demand in the Trusteeship Council since the islands...where the tests are being held...are administered by the United States under U.N. supervision.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda said today that the technical talks due to start next week in Geneva will fail...unless the United States and Britain suspend nuclear weapons tests. Experts from both sides of the Iron Curtain are scheduled to meet in Geneva next Tuesday to explore the means of enforcing a possible test ban.

President Eisenhower...and Secretary of Defense McElroy...told Republican congressional leaders today that no threat of reprisal against Admiral Burke was ever intended. Last week, in testifying before the Senate Armed Services Committee, the chief of naval operations opposed some features of Mr. Eisenhower's defense reorganization program. McElroy called Admiral Burke's testimony "regrettable"...but said later this was not meant as a rebuke. Despite today's assurance from the White House, Chairman Russell of the Armed Services Committee... for the present, at least...is still not calling other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to testify.

Republican Leader Knowland told President Eisenhower today that he expects the Senate to pass the Alaska statehood bill this week---without amendment. But on the Senate floor, Democratic Senator Eastland of Mississippi challenged the constitutionality of the measure. Eastland threatened to try to have the bill sent back to the Judiciary Committee, of which he is chairman.

The House subcommittee investigating the federal regulatory agencies resumed public hearings today in the case of New England manufacturer Bernard Goldfine. As the first witness, the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission...Edward Gadsby...denied that Goldfine ever received preferred treatment from the agency because of a call it received from the White House in 1956. The call had been made by White House counsel, at the request of Sherman Adams... who wanted to know the status of the government's case against the East Boston Company which is owned by Goldfine. Mr. Adams has denied that he ever sought favors for Goldfine, and Gadsby testified today that the Securities and Exchange Commission took "aggressive" action against the Goldfine firm. He said, "The commission could hardly have done more if Mr. Adams were Mr. Goldfine's worst enemy." The company eventually agreed to pay a 3-thousand-dollar fine for not filing required financial reports.

President Eisenhower today appointed Leo Heegh to head the new Office of Defense and Civilian Mobilization. The new agency is being formed by the merger of the Office of Defense Mobili ation and the Federal Civil Defense Administration Mr. Hoegh has been acting as civil defense administrator. Gordon Gray, who has been serving as head of the O.D.M., has been named as Mr. Eisenhower's special assistant in charge of national security affairs. Gray succeeds Robert Cutler who is retiring the end of next month.

The government reports that in May, living costs went up one-tenth of one percent. This is smallest rise in the cost-of-living index in one month since last December.

The Commerce Department said today that the slump in sales and production "has been arrested." But it noted as an adverse factor a further reduction in business capital investment.

The governmenttoday announced that so far, twelve states have signed up under the federal program of extended unemployment benefits. Four other states Illinois, Wisconsin, Colorado and Connecticut., have decided to use reserve funds of their own for the same purpose. The government says that, all told, nearly 25-million workers are now afforded additional protection should they exhaust their benefits under the regular unemployment insurance program.

A motion to stay the district court order...suspending recial integration in the Centaal High School in Little Rock for two and a half years was received today by the federal circuit court of appeals in St. Louis.

The United States is rarely confronted with a decision in which arguments for and against action are so evenly balanced as on intervention in Lebanon.

Only if intervention is at the behest of the United Nations is there no problem, for then we would contribute whatever assistance is asked. What is hard to decide is what to do if the United Nations does not protect and defend the Lebanese Government.

Here are some of the arguments pro and con for American action. The United States is already publicly committed by Secretary Dulles' announcement that the Eisenhower doctrine applies to the present situation in Lebanon. Unless Secretary General Hammarskjold produces a compromise, or the U.N. itself intervenes, the United States cannot draw back without loss of prestige. This loss could be enormous, for our inaction would appear to doom all the pro-Western countries in the Middle East to similar abandonment. It would dig the ground from under the Baghdad Pact.

The greatest pressure for United States intervention is not being brought by President Chamoun of Lebanon, but from the galaxy of pro-Western states in the Middle East. Nuri Pasha of Iraq is said to have been most insistent, and strong views have come frmm Western diplomats in Jordan, also by Turks and even Greeks. The argument is similar from all these quarters. If Nasser is able to subvert a pro-Western government in Lebanon, the Iraq government will be next to go, and if Nasser triumphs in many more Arab countries Turkey will be weaker and so will Greece. Washington is being told the time to stop such a chain reaction is now. That is the chief argument for intervention.

The most serious argument against it, is that the Soviet Union might send in volunteers to fight against any Western forces brought into Lebanon, and that would bring the world back to the level and danger of Korean days. A further argument is that by intervention the United States would lose Arab good will, which it has tried so hard to cultivate. If we intervene it would be to save Lebanon from interference by the United Arab Republic. The charge against Nasser is not yet documented enough to convince world opinion. Nasser staunchly denies interference. The Arab world will probably go on believing him.

A further argument is that the Chamoun administration does not fully deserve American intervention. President Chamoun now is ready to renounce re-election. Had he done it a few weeks ago the revolt against him would not have reached its present flood. He now needs to be bailed out of a situation he might have avoided. Another reason for the growth of the rebellion is that the Lebanese army has never been committed against it at full strength. This is understandable; it is a small army, and it might have been beaten, which would have been the end of Chamoun. Also it is an army in a small country where civil war means shooting down friends and neighbors, which is another reason for not having committed it. But if the Lebanese government has not done all it could with its own resources, it is less entitled to help from the outside. Both the American and British Embassies in Beirut have been lukewarm about intervention.

Still another argument is that the majority behind Chamoun is at most small. The Moslems in Lebanon make up about half the population. Most of them are pro-Nasser. So are some small Christian sects. Armed intervention, to have the sanction of world opinion, should clearly be for a government enjoying the support of its own people.

On the question of going it alone, if it comes to intervention outside the U.N., we stand to lose either way. If we act by ourselves we get all the blame. But we do not get as much as if we were associated with Britain, and nothing like as much as if the French were in on it. Then we would share with the French the undying hatred of all Arabs. However, if we are associated with Britain, we make it clear that we are not promoting selfish interests of our own, but are serving the cause of the West.

It is hard to escape the conclusion that if most of the thinking now being done, had been done some time before the Suez crisis, the dilemma in which we now find ourselves, might have been avoided altogether.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The hard choice...faced by the United States in Lebanon...is due in large degree to a lack of policy planning before the Suez crisis, two years ago. Planning was required...and foresight. Agrippa the Second, the ancient king of Jerusalem said, "It were well, my friends...it were well while the vessel is still in port to see the approaching storm."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 25, 1958

This is the news:

Russia said today that it cannot attend the Geneva talks on how to enforce a nuclear test ban under the conditions laid down by the United States. The United States has insisted that the talks...scheduled to start next Tuesday...be purely technical. Scientists from both East and West were to explore possible procedures for detecting nuclear explosions. The talks, we said, were not to be political. It was thought that Russia had agreed to this. But now Moscow says a meeting under these conditions would be "a fruitless waste of time." It claims that technical talks would be pointless, unless tied in with an agreement to ban nuclear tests. A new Soviet note says, in effect, that the talks are off---unless the

→

United States accepts the Russian point of view.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred with President Eisenhower this afternoon on the Russian note, and then...tonight...told a news conference that the American delegation of experts is going to Geneva as planned. The United States, Mr. Dulles said, had never agreed in advance to a suspension of nuclear tests...but hoped that technical talks might facilitate such an agreement. He did not know the reason for the sudden change in the Soviet attitude. And he acknowledged that now he was "a bit pessimistic" as to the outcome.

In Paris, the French foreign minister said today, "There is no reason why France should be the only power to dispense with nuclear weapons." France will act to obtain these weapons, he said, "unless an agreement for proper control is reached."

A Russian crowd demonstrated in front of the American Embassy in Moscow today...but inflicted no damage. No one was hurt. The demonstration was in retaliation for the picketing last week-end of Russia's U.N. delegation headquarters, here in New York. Three windows in the headquarters building were broken by pickets, protesting the execution of Imre Nagy and other leaders of the Hungarian revolt. Today in Moscow, more than a thousand Russians converged on the American embassy from three directions, in a demonstration that was obviously well planned. The demonstrators shouted epithets, and shook their fists. But only one rock was thrown, and it did no damage. This was Moscow's third demonstration before a Western embassy within a week. But in the case of the Danish and West German embassies, windows were smashed. And the walls of the West German Embassy were splattered with ink. The crowd today was held in control by 150 Soviet police.

In Washington this afternoon, a spokesman for the State Department said that Free World public opinion "certainly will appreciate the difference between spontaneous demonstrations, expressing shock and revulsion at the executions of Imre Nagy and his colleagues, and the obviously staged Moscow 'demonstrations', organized in retaliation." The State Department accused the Russian news agency Tass of "misrepresenting the facts" in reporting the anti-Soviet demonstration in New York. Tass neglected to say that nine of the New York demonstrators were arrested and that seven policemen were injured, trying to maintain order.

→

In Tokyo today, Japanese students demonstrated in front of the Soviet embassy, protesting the execution of Nagy.

And in Geneva, the conference of the International Labor Organization voted---142 to 48---not to accept the credentials of the Hungarian delegation. Hungary remains a member of the I.L.O. but it can take no part in the current meeting. The vote is unprecedented in the 36-year history of the organization. It followed a debate in which the Hungarian executions were roundly denounced.

5

Lebanon appealed today for a United Nations police force...large enough to seal off its frontier "completely", and keep the rebels from getting help from Syria. / The appeal was made to Secretary General Hammarskjold, just before Hammarskjold left for New York, to report back to the Security Council on his fact-finding mission. / The Lebanese prime minister told Hammarskjold, "What exists in Lebanon is not a rebellion, but a state of war." The secretary general made no public comment, but he is expected to lay the request for a United Nations police force---not just observers---before the Security Council. / A Soviet veto in the council could lead to a special meeting of the General Assembly...where Western delegates are confident that the request of the Lebanese government would be granted. This was the procedure followed in the Suez crisis, in 1956.

The State Department said today that it is "proceeding on the assumption" that the United Nations will succeed in preserving the independence of Lebanon. / A department spokesman refused, in talking to reporters, to discuss the possibility that the United States might take action outside the world organization. / He said, "We are not prepared to comment on the hypothesis that the United Nations will not succeed."

There has been a lull in the fighting in Lebanon since the arrival there of Secretary General Hammarskjold a week ago. Today...almost as soon as he left...a barrage of rifle, mortar and machinegun fire opened up in Beirut, on the outskirts of the Moslem quarter. / Other firing...punctuated by dynamite blasts...came from the Christian quarter. Pro-government forces answered the rebel fire. / But the situation, in general, remains confused. President Chamoun said yesterday that a big rebel attack might come within 48 hours.

Secretary of Defense McElroy promised today...in writing...that military leaders shall be free to express their views to Congress without fear of reprisal. Last week...in an appearance before the Senate Armed Services Committee...Admiral Burke, chief of naval operations, opposed certain features of President Eisenhower's defense reorganization program. Mr. McElroy called the admiral's testimony "regrettable". Chairman Russell of the Armed Services Committee interpreted the McElroy statement as a threat... and cancelled the scheduled appearances before his committee, of other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. They would not be called to testify, he said, until there was assurance they could freely speak their minds. McElroy told Russell...in a letter..."There should not, in my opinion, be any question of retaliation or penalty for such testimony." But, he added, once decisions have been taken on matters covered by the testimony of a witness, "I would expect the witness to perform under them without any question or reservation." On receiving the letter, Russell rescheduled for next week the cancelled appearances of General Taylor, Army chief of staff, and General Pate, commandant of the Marine Corps.

Edward R. Murrow: June 25, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

It is now becoming almost fashionable to say that the case of Sherman Adams will, after all, do some good. / It will somehow focus attention on the receiving of gifts and the exercising of influence. This may be true, for a short while. / But there isn't much evidence that publicity produces probity.

It is at least worth noting that most of the members of Mr. Adams' own Party who have been asking for his dismissal, are those who are up for election in the Autumn. / Those who do not face the possibility of being dismissed by the voters appear to take a more charitable view of Mr. Adams' actions. It would be possible to conclude that the definition of ethical conduct - the determination of what is prudent and imprudent — depends to a considerable extent upon whether the politician making the judgment is up for election, or whether he isn't. — a kind of Time Table opinion.

The Democrats, of course, do not have to search their conscience, past speeches or actions. They can pose as the defenders of everything ethical, decent and downright upright - no influence, no hostages, no gifts. [This is particularly true if their memories are sufficiently short.] The Democrats have received a political bonus in the Adams case, although it's probably true to say that they would have preferred to have had it delayed for about a year, so that it would have helped them more in 1960. It is a harsh and unpleasant fact that our political system depends in large measure upon gifts and influence. If there should be removed from Washington all those politicians who have accepted gifts or exerted influence, the political population would be [redacted] decimated. This is true, not because the men are venal, dishonest or unethical. It is true because of the system. Every candidate who accepts a campaign contribution is somehow beholden to the giver, whether it be a labor union, a public utility, a personal friend, or any group, organized or unorganized. These men once elected may show the utmost indifference to the interests of those who contributed to their campaign funds - some do, but they have nevertheless accepted a gift of value.

When a heavy campaign contributor to either Party is named to a Cabinet post, or made Ambassador to a major foreign power, this of course is not a business transaction where a position is purchased for a price, but there is a certain resemblance.

The acceptance of campaign contributions must, to a certain extent, [redacted] influence the politician and his vote. And the attempt by the politician to influence regulatory and other administrative agencies is inevitable - not because he has been bought, but because he knows the local situation and [illegible] his political future may well be involved. / The alternative to the exercise of this type of influence would be [illegible] to have decisions in vast areas of government made exclusively by the burgeoning bureaucracy in Washington, without any influence being brought to bear by the representatives of the people who will be primarily affected by the decision.

Political campaigning becomes increasingly expensive. The demand for campaign gifts increases. The control of regulatory agencies in Washington over the affairs of persons and corporations also increases. / The present system of political gifts can hardly be regarded as satisfactory. / But a workable alternative is hard to come by. Perhaps the size of campaign contributions should be further reduced. Perhaps closer scrutiny of disguised corporation and labor union contributions would help.

It might even be possible to devise a method whereby national elections would be nationally financed, where all private contributions would be banned, and where the taxpayer would pay the whole of the cost. / Theodore Roosevelt once played with this idea. / But it would present enormous difficulties , and not alone in the field of allocation, administration and policing. It would also raise a fundamental question of personal freedom. In some countries voting is compulsory. / We have never done things that way, apparently believing that the individual has the right not to vote. / About forty percent of us generally don't vote in a national election. If political campaigns were to be financed at the public expense, then the forty percent could really claim taxation without representation.

It ought to be possible to devise a better method for handling our affairs.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan

Word for Today

The American humorist, Finley Peter Dunne, was like Will Rogers in that he really knew his politics. Dunne once remarked that "a man who would expect to train lobsters to fly in a year is called a lunatic. "But," he said, "a man that thinks men can be turned into angels by an election is a reformer, and that man remains at large."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Russia said today that it cannot attend the Geneva talks on how to enforce a nuclear test ban under the conditions laid down by the United States. The United States has insisted that the talks...scheduled to start next Tuesday...be purely technical. Scientists from both East and West were to explore possible procedures for detecting nuclear explosions. The talks, we said, were not to be political. It was thought that Russia had agreed to this. But now Moscow says a meeting under these conditions would be "a fruitless waste of time." It claims that technical talks would be pointless, unless tied in with an agreement to ban nuclear tests. A new Soviet note says, in effect, that the talks are off---unless the United States accepts the Russian point of view.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred with President Eisenhower this afternoon on the Russian note, and then...tonight...told a news conference that the American delegation of experts is going to Geneva as planned. The United States, Mr. Dulles said, had never agreed in advance to a suspension of nuclear tests... but hoped that technical talks might facilitate such an agreement. He did not know the reason for the sudden change in the Soviet attitude. And he acknowledged that now he was "a bit pessimistic" as to the outcome.

In Paris, the French foreign minister said today, "There is no reason why France should be the only power to dispense with nuclear weapons." France will act to obtain these weapons, he said, "unless an agreement for proper control is reached."

A Russian crowd demonstrated in front of the American embassy in Moscow today...but inflicted no damage. No one was hurt. More than a thousand Russians converged on the American embassy from three directions in a demonstration that was obviously well-planned. The demonstrators shouted epithets and shook their fists. But only one rock was thrown, and it did no damage. This was Moscow's third demonstration before a Western embassy within a week. The crowd today was held in control by 150 Soviet police.

In Washington this afternoon, a spokesman for the State Department said that Free World public opinion "certainly will appreciate the difference between spontaneous demonstrations expressing shock and revulsion at the executions of Imre Nagy and his colleagues and the obviously staged Moscow 'demonstrations' organized in retaliation." The State Department accused the Russian news agency Tass of "misrepresenting the facts" in reporting the anti-Soviet demonstration in New York. Tass neglected to say that nine of the New York demonstrators were arrested and that seven policemen were injured, trying to maintain order.

In Tokyo today, Japanese students demonstrated in front of the Soviet embassy, protesting the execution of Nagy.

And in Geneva, the conference of the International Labor Organization voted 142 to 48 not to accept the credentials of the Hungarian delegation. Hungary remains a member of the I.L.O., but it can take no part in the current meeting. The vote is unprecedented in the 36 year history of the organization. It followed a debate in which the Hungarian executions were roundly denounced.

Lebanon appealed today for a United Nations police force...large enough to seal off its frontier "completely" and keep the rebels from getting help from Syria. The appeal was made to Secretary General Hammarskjold, just before Hammarskjold left for New York to report back to the Security Council on his fact-finding mission. The Lebanese prime minister told Hammarskjold, "What exists in Lebanon is not a rebellion but a state of war." The secretary general made no public comment, but he is expected to lay the request for a United Nations police force---not just observers---before the Security Council. A Soviet veto in the council could lead to a special meeting of the General Assembly...where Western delegates are confident that the request of the Lebanese government would be granted. This was the procedure followed in the Suez crisis in 1956.

The State Department said today that it is "proceeding on the assumption" that the United Nations will succeed in preserving the independence of Lebanon. A department spokesman refused in talking to reporters to discuss the possibility that the United States might take action outside the world organization. He said, "We are not prepared to comment on the hypothesis that the United Nations will not succeed."

There has been a lull in the fighting in Lebanon since the arrival there of Secretary General Hammarskjold a week ago. Today...almost as soon as he left... a barrage of rifle, mortar and machinegun fire opened up in Beirut, on the outskirts of the Moslem quarter. Other firing...punctuated by dynamite blasts... came from the Christian quarter. Pro-government forces answered the rebel fire. But the situation,in general, remains confused. President Chamoun said yesterday that a big rebel attack might come within 48 hours.

Secretary of Defense McElroy promised today...in writing...that military leaders shall be free to experess their views to Congress whthout fear of reprisal. McElroy told Senator Russell...in a letter..."There should not, in my opinion, be any question of retaliation or penalty for such testimony." But, he added, once decisions have been taken on matters covered by the testimony of a witness, "I would expect the witness to perform under them without any question or reservation." On receiving the letter, Russelll rescheduled for next week the cancelled appearances of General Taylor, Army chief of staff, and General Pate, commandant of the Marine Corps.

It is now becoming almost fashionable to say that the case of Sherman Adams will, after all, do some good. It will somehow focus attention on the receiving of gifts and the exercising of influence. This may be true, for a short while. But there isn't much evidence that publicity produces probity.

It is at least worth noting that most of the members of Mr. Adams' own party who have been asking for his dismissal, are those who are up for election in the Autumn. Those who do not face the possibility of being dismissed by the voters appear to take a more charitable view of Mr. Adams' actions. It would be possible to conclude that the definition of ethical conduct - the determination of what is prudent and imprudent - depends to a considerable extent upon whether the politican making the judgement is up for election or whether he isn't - a kind of time table opinion.

The Democrats, of course, do not have to search their conscience, past speeches or actions. They can pose as the defenders of everything ethical, decent and downright upright - no influence, no hostages, no gifts. This is particularly true if their memories are sufficiently short. The Democrats have received a political bonus in the Adams case, although, it's probably true to say that they would have preferred to have had it delayed for about a year, so that it would have helped them more in 1960. It is a harsh and unpleasant fact that our political system depends in large measure upon gifts and influence. If there should be removed from Washington all those politicians who have accepted gifts or exerted influence, the political population would be decimated. This is true, not because the men are venal, dishonest or unethical. It is true because of the system. Every candidate who accepts a campaign contribution is somehow beholden to the giver, whether it be a labor union, a public utility, a personal friend, or any group, organized or unorganized. These men once elected may show the utmost indifference to the interests of those who contributed to their campaign funds - some do - but they have nevertheless accepted a gift of value.

When a heavy campaign contributor to either Party is named to a Cabinet post, or made Ambassador to a major foreign power, this of course is not a business transaction where a position is purchased for a price, but there is a certain resemblance.

The acceptance of campaign contributions must, to a certain extent, influence the politician and his vote. And the attempt by the politician to influence regulatory and other administrative agencies is inevitable - not because he has been bought, but because he knows the local situation and his political future may well be involved. The alternative to the exercise of this type of influence would be to have decisions in vast areas of government made exclusively by the burgeoning bureaucracy in Washington, without any influence being brought to bear by the representatives of the people who will be primarily affected by the decision.

Political campaigning becomes increasingly expensive. The demand for campaign gifts increases. The control of regulatory agencies in Washington over the affairs of persons and corporations also increases. The present system of political gifts can hardly be regarded as satisfactory. But a workable alternative is hard to come by. Perhaps the size of campaign contributions should be further reduced. Perhaps closer scrutiny of disguised corporation and labor union contributions would help.

It might even be possible to devise a method whereby national elections would be nationally financed, where all private contributions would be banned, and where the taxpayer would pay the whole of the cost. Theodore Roosevelt once played with this idea. But it would present enormous difficulties, and not alone in the field of allocation, administration and policing. It could also raise a fundamental question of personal freedom. In some countries voting is compulsory. We have never done things that way, apparently believing that the individual has the right not to vote. About forty percent of us generally don't vote in a national election. If political campaigns were to be financed at the public expense, then the forty percent could really claim taxation without representation.

It ought to be possible to devise a better method for handling our affairs.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The American humorist, Finley Peter Dunne, was like Will Rogers in that he really knew his politics. Dunne once remarked that "a man who would expect to train lobsters to fly in a year is called a lunatic. But," he said, "a man that thinks men can be turned into angels by an election is a reformer, and that man remains at large."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 26, 1958

This is the news:

The United States told Russia today that, as far as the West is concerned, the Geneva conference on detection of nuclear tests "will proceed as agreed." Yesterday, Russia threatened to boycott the talks, unless the United States agrees that the "goal" of the meeting, is an agreement to suspend nuclear tests. The American note...delivered this morning in Moscow...says we consider the purpose of the meeting to remain "that which was determined in the exchange of correspondence." / Namely, a purely technical study, of how to enforce a possible ban. / The United States has insisted...all along...that neither side will be committed, by its attendance at the meeting, to suspend tests. / Today, Britain and France supported the American position...and said their experts, along with the experts of the United States, will be on hand in Geneva next Tuesday, whether the Russians are there or not.

→

Tonight, the Moscow radio broadcast the appointment of a Roumanian scientist to attend the Geneva meeting. Delegates from Poland and Czechoslovakia, as well as from Russia, also have been appointed.

President Eisenhower told a group of American scientists...leaving for Geneva today...that the question of controlled disarmament is "so vital", that the United States "will persevere in the face of whatever difficulties the Soviets may raise."

Small skirmishes were fought between government and rebel forces today in Lebanon, but the major rebel attack...which President Chamoun said two days ago might be imminent has not materialized. / CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen reports from Beirut that the situation there is "ominous". American citizens in the Lebanese capital have been asked by the United States Embassy, to stay off the streets.

President Chamoun told CBS News today...in an interview...that he does not want direct American or British intervention in Lebanon, except as part of a United Nations force. He said it will take more than a United Nations observer team to stop the infiltration of "rebels" from Syria across the frontier. (The full Chamoun interview will be carried by most of these CBS Radio stations later tonight).

→

In Washington today, the former Boston publisher...John Fox...testified publicly before the House subcommittee investigating the federal regulatory agencies. The testimony concerned the relationship between Sherman Adams and [redacted] New England manufacturer Bernard Goldfine. The attorney for Goldfine had asked that Fox be allowed to appear before a [redacted] session, because, the lawyer said, "John Fox is bent upon maligning and defaming Mr. Goldfine by false and reckless accusations." The subcommittee rejected this request. Fox testified that he once heard Goldfine (in Mr. Adams' presence) boast that Adams had promised "to take care of" Goldfine's troubles with the Federal Trade Commission. The boast was made, Fox said, at a meeting in a Washington hotel on May 10th, 1955. [redacted] Fox said Goldfine told him later that Adams had, indeed, "taken care of the matter." (The subcommittee has brought out, in earlier testimony, that Mr. Adams called the Federal Trade Commission in 1955...with regard to a complaint filed against one of Goldfine's companies. Adams has denied, under oath, that he ever exerted pressure on behalf of Goldfine.

→

Fox testified further that he was once told (by Goldfine) that Adams had "some interest" in his mill properties. Also that Goldfine helped Adams financially..."very materially"...when the Adams children were going to school. Tonight, at the White House, Mr. Adams said, "While I have no way of knowing what someone else is supposed to have said to Mr. Fox, I do know what I myself have said, heard and done." Adams said...in a formal statement to Reporters...that "virtually everything" Fox had said about him was false. It was incredible, he said, that a committee of Congress would...in his words..."permit a completely irresponsible witness to use the committee as a forum for making such vicious accusations."

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a compromise tax bill eliminating the 3 percent excise tax on freight. The 10 percent tax on passenger travel, however, was left in the measure.

The House passed...and sent to President Eisenhower...a bill requiring auto dealers to display the manufacturers' suggested list price for new cars.

The decision...delaying integration at Central High School in Little Rock for two and a half years...was appealed today to the United States Supreme Court. / District Judge Lemley ordered the delay last week, at the request of the Little Rock School Board...which said the community attitude toward racial integration at this time was "unfavorable". / The petition to the Supreme Court was filed by lawyers for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who said that if normal appeal procedure were followed, the case could not be decided before the next school term in September. / The same lawyers filed a motion earlier this week with the Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, but that court is in summer recess. The Supreme Court is scheduled to adjourn for the summer on Monday. / The N.A.A.C.P. asked the high court either to extend its term or meet in special session, so that it might dispose of the case at an early date. The petition said that a suspension of integration at Central High School would encourage non-compliance with the Supreme Court decision of 1954...ordering an end to racial segregation in the public schools. The question to be decided, the N.A.A.C.P. argued, is whether a plan for gradual desegregation...already in operation...can be suspended, and Negro children forced to withdraw to segregated schools, because of "certain hostile incidents."

Edward R. Murrow: June 26, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The only prediction that is being confidently made about the course of the Lebanon crisis in the United Nations, is that the Soviet Union will veto any attempt to increase the responsibilities of the U.N. in that country. It is not even certain that a Lebanese request for a U.N. police force has reached the Security Council. / Premier Sami Es-Sohl announced yesterday, that he had asked Secretary General Hammarskjold for a force large enough to draw a cordon around Lebanon's borders by land and sea. / But for him to say this to Mr. Hammarskjold in Beirut, is not the usual way to bring it before the Council. / That would be by the Lebanese representative at the United Nations taking the step in New York. / But if such a request does reach the council, it will run into a Soviet veto, and beyond this everything else seems uncertain.

It is not known when and what the U.N. observers will report about arms and men reaching the Lebanese rebels from Syria. / It is assumed that Mr. Hammarskjold, if he reports anything at this time, will only report progress, and will want more time for the observation team to function. / Judging from his remarks on arriving in New York today, he thinks the team has made "a very satisfactory start". / So, apparently, he wants it to go on. / It is an operation of observation, he stressed, and emphasized "observation". He has the Lebanese request for a police force in his dispatch case. But he is not expected to lay it before the Security Council. He does not favor an early meeting of the council. If anything were to be changed, in his view, it should be to enlarge the staff of observers.

So if the Secretary General has his way, there will be no immediate climactic crisis in the United Nations, and time would be won to work for some compromise in the conflict in Lebanon.

But if Lebanon does decide to insist on a Security Council meeting, and encounters the expected Soviet veto, the future still remains uncertain. The normal procedure would be to call a special session of the Assembly, which is authorized to take action that has been stopped by a big-power veto in the council. For this it needs a two-thirds majority, and what is in doubt, is that such a majority could be found for extended action in Lebanon. This would be a case in which Arab countries would be lined up on opposite sides. It would be predicated on charges of infiltration by the United Arab Republic, which the Nasser government strenuously denies. Some of the countries that would be expected to send forces would be heartily disinclined to be involved in such a dispute. And even though both the United States and Britain would be ready to supply forces if other countries failed to, that of itself would not make a two-thirds majority any easier to get./ And if such a majority is not in sight, it is possible that the Assembly might not be convened at all.

But these uncertainties about the United Nations are not shared in Moscow. The Soviet propaganda mill is flooding the world with charges that the United States already has decided on intervention in Lebanon, and will have it as soon as what are called the "hotheads of the Pentagon" find a suitable excuse. The only thing not decided, says Izvestia, is whether American forces should be sent in as part of a U.N. force, or go in alone with the British.

The army organ, Red Star, recalls that the Soviet Union raised its voice in defense of peace when Britain, France and Israel attacked Egypt in 1956. "Now", it says, "it is raising its voice in defense of Lebanon". Pravda writes: "The threat to peace and security in the Middle East is growing. The peace-loving people, including those of the Soviet Union, cannot take an indifferent attitude to the preparation of foreign intervention in Lebanon, no matter how this intervention is masked."

So in Moscow there is no uncertainty. The case in Lebanon is judged. No suspicion is felt as to infiltration across the Syrian border. No need is known to hear what Mr. Hammarskjold has to report and recommend. # If, by the efforts of Mr. Hammarskjold and this country, and others involved, a compromise is found that staves off intervention, Moscow will be able to cry to the world: "We did it". If not, Moscow will be able to cry: "We told you so."

Back in a moment.

George Bryan

Word for Today

Once more, it looks as though the United Nations is our best hope for staving off disaster---this time, in the Middle East. The United Nations can't do everything. The outlook for us is most uncertain.

Andre Maurois once said, "The United Nations can't guarantee peace, ANY more than a doctor can guarantee health. But would that be a good reason for doing away with doctors?"

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The United States told Russia today that as far as the West is concerned, the Geneva conference on detection of nuclear tests "will proceed as agreed." Yesterday, Russia threatened to boycott the talks unless the United States agrees that the "goal" of the meeting is an agreement to suspend nuclear tests. The American note...delivered this morning in Moscow...says we consider the purpose of the meeting to remain "that which was determined in the exchange of correspondence." Namely, a purely technical study of how to enforce a possible ban. The United States has insisted...all along...that neither side will be committed by its attendance at the meeting to suspend tests. Today, Britain and France supported the American position....and said their experts along with the experts of the United States will be on hand in Geneva next Tuesday whether the Russians are there or not.

Tonight, the Moscow radio broadcast the appointment of a Roumanian scientist to attend the Geneva meeting. Delegates from Poland and Czechoslovakia as well as from Russia, also have been appointed.

President Eisenhower told a group of American scientists...leaving for Geneva today...that the question of controlled disarmament is "so vital" that the United States "will persevere in the face of whatever difficulties the Soviets may raise."

Small skirmishes were fought between government and rebel forces today in Lebanon, but the major rebel attack...which President Chamoun said two days ago might be imminent has not materialized. CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen reports from Beirut that the situation there is "ominous." American citizens in the Lebanese capital have been asked by the United States Embassy to stay off the streets.

President Chamoun told CBS News today...in an interview..that he does not want direct American or British intervention in Lebanon except as part of a United Nations force. He said it will take more than a United Nations observer team to stop the infiltration of "rebels" from Syria across the frontier. The full Chamoun interview will be carried by most of these CBS Radio stations later tonight.

In Washington today, the former Boston publisher....John Fox...testified publicly before the House subcommittee investigating the federal regulatory agencies. The testimony concerned the relationship between Sherman Adams and New England manufacturer Bernard Goldfine. The attorney for Goldfine had asked that Fox be allowed to appear before a secret session because, the lawyer said, "John Fox is bent upon maligning and defaming Mr. Goldfine by false and reckless accusations." The subcommittee rejected this request. Fox testified that he once heard Goldfine (in Mr. Adams' presence) boast that Adams had promised "to take care of" Goldfine's troubles with the Federal Trade Commission. The boast was made, Fox said, at a meeting in a Washington hotel on May 10th, 1955. Fox said Goldfine told him later that Adams had, indeed, "taken care of the matter." (The subcommittee has brought out, in earlier testimony, that Mr. Adams called the Federal Trade Commission in 1955...with regard to a complaint filed against one of Goldfine's companies. Adams has denied, under oath, that he ever exerted pressure on behalf of Goldfine. Fox testified further that he was once told (by Goldfine) that Adams had "some interest" in his mill properties. Also that Goldfine helped Adams financially..."very materially"...when the Adams' children were going to school. Tonight, at the White House, Mr. Adams said, "While I have no way of knowing what someone else is supposed to have said to Mr. Fox, I do know what I myself have said, heard, and done. Admas said...in a formal statement to reporters that "virtually everything" Fox had said about him was false. It was incredible, he said, that a committee of Congress would...in his words..."permit a completely irresponsible witness to use the committee as a forum for making such vicious accusations."

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a compromise tax bill eliminating the 3 percent excise tax on freight. The 10 percent tax on passenger travel, however, was left in the measure.

The House passed...and sent to President Eisenhower...a bill requiring auto dealers to display the manufacturers' suggested list price for new cars.

The decision...delaying integration at Central High School in Little Rock for two and a half years...was appealed today to the United States Supreme Court. District Judge Lemley ordered the delay last week at the request of the Little Rock School Board....which said the community attitude toward racial integration at this time was "unfavorable." The petition to the Supreme Court was filed by lawyers for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who said that if normal appeal procedure were followed, the case could not be decided before the next school term in September. The same lawyers filed a motion earlier this week with the Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, but that court is in summer recess. The Supreme Court is scheduled to adjourn for the summer on Monday. The N.A.A.C.P. asked the high court either to extend its term or meet in special session so that it might dispose of the case at an early date. The petition said that a suspension of integration at Central High School would encourage non-compliance with the Supreme Court decision of 1954...ordering an end to racial segration in the public schools. The question to be decided, the N.A.A.C.P. argued, is whether a plan for graudal desegration...already in operation...can be suspended and Negro children forced to withdraw to segregated schools because of "certain hostile incidents."

The only prediction that is being confidently made about the course of the Lebanon crisis in the United Nations, is that the Soviet Union will veto any attempt to increase the responsibilities of the U.N. in that country. It is not even certain that a Lebanese request for a U.N. police force has reached the Security Council. Premier Sami Es-Sohl announced yesterday, that he had asked Secretary General Hammarskjold for a force large enough to draw a cordon around Lebanon's borders by land and sea. But for him to say this to Mr. Hammarskjold in Beirut, is not the usual way to bring it before the Council. That would be by the Lebanese representative at the United Nations taking the step in New York. But if such a request does reach the council, it will run into a Soviet veto, and beyond this everything else seems uncertain.

It is not known when and what the U.N. observers will report about arms and men reaching the Lebanese rebels from Syria. It is assumed that Mr. Hammarskjold, if he reports anything at this time, will only report progress, and will want more time for the observation team to function. Judging from his remarks on arriving in New York today, he thinks the team has made "a very satisfactory start." So, apparently, he wants it to go on. It is an operation of observation, he stressed, and emphasized "observation." He has the Lebanese request for a police force in his dispatch case. But he is not expected to lay it before the Security Council. He does not favor an early meeting of the council. If anything were to be changed, in his view, it should be to enlarge the staff of observers.

So if the Secretary General has his way, there will be no immediate climactic crisis in the United Nations, and time would be won to work for some compromise in the conflict in Lebanon.

But if Lebanon does decide to insist on a Security Council meeting, and encounters the expected Soviet veto, the future still remains uncertain. The normal procedure would be to call a special session of the Assembly, which is authorized to take action that has been stopped by a big-power veto in the council. For this it needs a two-thirds majority, and what is in doubt, is that such a majority could be found for extended action in Lebanon. This would be a case in which Arab countries would be lined up on opposite sides. It would be predicted on charges of infiltration by the United Arab Republic, which the Nasser government strenuously denies. Some of the countries that would be expected to send forces would be heartily disinclined to be involved in such a dispute. And even though both the United States and Britain would be ready to supply forces if other countries failed to, that of itself would not make a two-thirds majority any easier to get. And if such a majority is not in sight, it is possible that the Assembly might not be convened at all.

But these uncertainties about the United Nations are not shared in Moscow. The Soviet propaganda mill is flooding the world with charges that the United States already has decided on intervention in Lebanon, and will have it as soon as what are called the "hotheads of the Pentagon" find a suitable excuse. The only thing not decided, says Izvestia, is whether American forces should be sent in as part of a U.N. force, or go in alone with the British.

The army organ, Red Star, recalls that the Soviet Union raised its voice in defense of peace when Britain, France and Israel attacked Egypt in 1956. "Now," it says, "it is raising its voice in defense of Lebanon." Pravda writes: "The threat to peace and security in the Middle East is growing. The peace-loving people, including those of the Soviet Union, cannot take an indifferent attitude to the preparation of foreign intervention in Lebanon, no matter how this intervention is masked."

So in Moscow there is no uncertainty. The case in Lebanon is judged. No suspicion is felt as to infiltration across the Syrian border. No need is known to hear what Mr. Hammarskjold has to report and recommend. If by the efforts of Mr. Hammarskjold and this country, and others involved a compromise is found that staves off intervention, Moscow will be able to cry to the world: "We did it." If not, Moscow will be able to cry." "We told you so."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Once more, it looks as though the United Nations is our best hope for staving off disaster---this time, in the Middle East. The outlook for us is most uncertain. The United Nations can't do everything. Andre Maurois once said, "The United Nations can't guarantee peace, any more than a doctor can guarantee health. But would that be a good reason for doing away with doctors?"

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 27, 1958

This is the news:

Congress today heard more testimony of favors, allegedly received by Sherman Adams, from New England manufacturer Bernard Goldfine. The charges were levelled by former Boston publisher John Fox, testifying for the second day before the House subcommittee investigating the federal regulatory agencies. And immediately the charges were labeled by Mr. Adams, as "absolutely false." Fox testified that Goldfine once told him of buying a house in Washington "for Mr. Adams to live in." Adams replied in a letter to the subcommittee, "Mr. Goldfine has never, either directly or indirectly, purchased or helped finance the purchase of any house of mine. I have never owned a house in Washington...and the house in which I now live, I rent."

Fox further testified that Goldfine had spoken of sending checks "at regular intervals to Mr. Adams." /At the White House, News Secretary Hagerty called this "Falsehood No. 2." /"No such thing," he said, "ever occurred at any time."

A statement...involving testimony given by Mr. Fox...also came from the New York office of Joseph P. Kennedy, father of United States Senator John Kennedy. /Fox formerly published the Boston Post, a paper which is now defunct. /He testified today, that he obtained a 500-thousand-dollar loan from the elder Kennedy, for his newspaper, after the paper came out in support of John Kennedy in the 1952 campaign. /"It should be clear from Mr. Fox's testimony," the statement said, "that no loan was ever discussed or contemplated", at the time the Post endorsed Senator Kennedy. /It said the loan was made after the election "as a purely commercial transaction---for 60 days only with full collateral, and was fully repaid, on time."

The carpenters union president, Maurice Hutcheson, refused today to answer questions put to him by the Senate rackets committee. Hutcheson would not reply when asked whether he had used union money to try to "fix" a grand jury investigating the Indiana highway scandal. He presently is under indictment...by another grand jury...on charges of making an illegal profit in lands sold to the state for a highway right-of-way.

→

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...a bill authorizing 3-billion, 675-million dollars for foreign aid in the next fiscal year. At the same time, the House Appropriations Committee voted only 3-billion, 78-million dollars to finance the program. That is, it voted to appropriate, at this time, 600-million dollars less than the House authorized...and 870-million dollars less than President Eisenhower requested. Mr. Eisenhower said tonight that he was "deeply distressed" by the action taken by the committee.

The House today also approved legislation repealing the 3 percent freight tax. The measure...which already has Senate approval...continues the excise taxes on cigarettes, liquor, auto accessories, new cars, and passenger fares at their present level for another year. Corporation taxes...increased at the time of the Korean War...also continue at their present rate.

The Senate is in late session...debating the Alaska statehood measure. A substitute bill to make Alaska a commonwealth instead of a state, was rejected by a vote of 50 to 29. Senator Eastland of Mississippi then introduced a motion declaring a section of the statehood bill to be unconstitutional. And that motion was defeated, 53 to 28. A final vote is not expected until next week.

The government reports tonight that...in June...the prices received by farmers for their products, dropped by about three and a half percent. This is the first time farm prices have declined, instead of going up, in six months.

Fighting between government and rebel forces in Lebanon today, was stepped up. / Again, the principal action in Beirut centered in the Moslem quarters. To the north...in Tripoli...the rebels stormed a government position, which, the Army says, finally drove the attackers off. / Another Army position, outside of Tripoli, was defended by artillery and planes.

At the United Nations, Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred today with Sir Leslie Munro of New Zealand, the current president of the General Assembly. Mr. Hammarskjold still has made no public report on his recent fact-finding mission in the Middle East.

The United States announced today that is is sending 65-thousand tons of wheat to Lebanon.

In Cuba, rebel forces...under Fidel Castro...are reported to have kidnapped nine Americans, and two Canadians, employed by the Freeport Sulphur Company of New York...and various sub-contractors. / All ~~twelve~~ ELEVEN are engineers, working on the construction of a nickel and cobalt plant at Moa, in Oriente Province. / Three Cuban soldiers were killed in the attack. / The purpose of the abduction is not clear. The United States Embassy in Havana, says it has made no contact with the rebels so far.

An investigation has been ordered into the crash early today of an Air Force jet tanker at Westover Field, in Massachusetts. All fifteen persons aboard the aircraft...including six newsmen...were killed. The jet crashed only seconds after take-off for England, in an attempt to set a new distance speed record. / Two other strato-tankers...that took off minutes earlier...made the crossing without mishap, and did establish new speed records for the distance.

Edward R. Murrow: June 27, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The death of Stalin, followed by the de-Stalinization of Soviet policy under Khrushchev, opened a new epoch in world affairs. / Tensions did not disappear, but they eased. / The Soviet objective was amended; les emphasis was placed on world domination, more on peaceful co-existence. / Tensions were relaxed within the Soviet empire, too. / Khrushchev took his journey of penitence to Tito in Belgrade. Gomulka displaced the Stalinist leadership in Poland, and was allowed to govern. A meeting at the summit, though it failed to settle a single outstanding difference between East and West, brought comfortable assurance to the world, that the danger of all-out war was receding. With the flowering of Soviet technology and education, hopes rose for the loosening of the grip of Soviet tyranny. / Naturally all this made history. / Now, however, this epoch has come to an abrupt close, and that, certainly, is of equal historic importance.

A number of startling Soviet actions has signalized the end of the epoch. / The Kremlin rudely broke off preparations for a summit meeting, by publishing the secret negotiations between Western diplomats and the Soviet Foreign Office. It followed this by ~~repudiating its agreement~~ threatening not to attend a conference of scientists at Geneva, to study controls over a suspension of nuclear tests. The Kremlin put into reverse the whole effort to harmonize relations with Yugoslavia. Then, the most sensational event of all, the leaders of the Hungarian freedom fight were executed, which served notice on all satellites, that the iron rule of Stalin's day had been imposed again. In effect, Tito was told his turn could come next. All Poles understood that Gomulka's days at the helm were numbered.

Two questions stand out about the new epoch now opening, and neither can yet be answered. One, is where Khrushchev is heading. The other is why he changed his course. The possibility now being feared and weighed in the foreign offices of the West, is that he has decided to risk a showdown over Lebanon, that he will prevent a compromise, and meet Western intervention by sending armed aid, and by organizing a volunteer force capable of conducting protracted warfare. This would then turn into a struggle for power over the Arab world. It is not possible to predict with assurance that the West would win a local war of this character. Nor can it be promised that the West would not lose it.

Obviously it would be easier to predict where Khrushchev is heading, if one could identify the forces and conditions that have made him reverse his course. But conditions inside the Soviet empire are obscure. We know the Soviet economy is under a strain from Khrushchev's policy of decentralizing industry, and probably more so, from his new agricultural policy, which has laid a heavier burden on the Soviet treasury to feed the population. How great this strain is can only be guessed. But it produces criticism. And Khrushchev also has critics for other reasons, one being that he brought on the catastrophe in Hungary, by easing up on the satellites.

A factor in the present about-face of Soviet policy appears to be communist China. It was China who insisted on a stern line toward Tito, at the last international meeting of communists. It may have been China who demanded and obtained the execution of the Hungarian leaders. It is being said that China vetoed a summit meeting, believing that a relaxation of world tensions can only hurt China by diverting Soviet economic activity to the West.

China now stands on the threshhold of industrialization, and its leaders believe such an era requires the iron rule of a Stalin. Chinese communist leaders also have a dread of liberalism, since the fiasco of Mao Tse-tung's "hundred flowers" speech. They may well believe the future of communism depends on there being another long period of Stalinism.

A further hypothesis may explain what is happening. This is a crisis in which the West, under Secretary Dulles, has virtually committed the United States to intervene in Lebanon under certain conditions. / Now this threat of the West, is being met head-on by a threat by the East. / Maybe neither threat will be carried out. / The test of nerves is now near its height, and we do not know how it will end. / But if Khrushchev is only trying us out, he has at any rate cleared the deck for action. / He has reversed all his easy-going policies and is taking the tough line. The next days in Lebanon should disclose how tough he is willing to be.

Back in a moment—

George Bergan—

Word for Today

John Milton said, "In those vernal seasons of the year...when the air is calm and pleasant...it were an injury and sullenness against Nature not to go out and see her riches.. and partake of her rejoicing with heaven and earth." While this reporter is doing just that, my old colleague Larry Lesueur will be sitting at this microphone...bringing you the news.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 27, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Congress today heard more testimony of favors allegedly received by Sherman Adams from New England manufacturer Bernard Goldfine. The charges were levelled by former Boston publisher John Fox, testifying for the second day before the House subcommittee investigating the federal regulatory agencies. And immediately the charges were labeled by Mr. Adams as"absolutely false." Fox testified that Goldfine once told him of buying a house in Washington "for Mr. Adams to live in." Adams replied in a letter to the subcommittee, "Mr. Goldfine has never, either directly or indirectly, purchased or helped finance the purchase of any house of mine. I have never owned a house in Washington...and the house in which I now live, I rent." Fox further testified that Goldfine had spoken of sending checks "at regular intervals to Mr. Adams." At the White House, News Secretary Hagerty called this "Falsehood No. 2." "No such thing," he said, "ever occurred at any time."

A statement...involving testimony given by Mr. Fox...also came from the New York office of Joseph P. Kennedy, father of United States Senator John Kennedy. Fox formerly published the Boston Post, a paper which is now defunct. He testified today that he obtained a 500 thousand dollar loan from the elder Kennedy for his newspaper after the paper came out in support of John Kennedy in the 1952 campaign. "It should be clear from Mr. Fox's testimony," the statement said, "that no loan was ever discussed or contemplated" at the time the Post endorsed Senator Kennedy. It said the loan was made after the election "as a purely commercial transaction, for 60 days only with full collateral and was fully repaid on time."

The carpenters union president, Maurice Hutcheson, refused today to answer questions put to him by the Senate rackets committee. Hutcheson would not reply when asked whether he had used union money to try to"fix" a grand jury investigating the Indiana highway scandal. He presently is under indictment... by another grand jury...on charges of making an illegal profit in lands sold to the state for a highway right-of-way.

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...a bill authorizing 3-billion, 675-million dollars for foreign aid in the next fiscal year. At the same time, the House Appropriations Committee voted only 3-billion, 78-million dollars to finance the program. That is, it voted to appropriate at this time, 600-million dollars less than the House authorized and 870 million dollars less than President Eisenhower requested. Mr. Eisenhower said tonight that he was "deeply distressed" by the action taken by the committee.

The House today also approved legislation repealing the 3 percent freight tax. The measure...which already has Senate approval..continues the excise taxes on cigarettes, liquor, auto accessories, new cars, and passenger fares at their present level for another year. Corporation taxes...increased at the time of the Korean War...also continue at their present rate.

The Senate is in late session...debating the Alaska statehood measure. A substitute bill to make Alaska a commonwealth instead of a state was rejected by a vote of 50 to 29. Senator Eastland of Mississippi then introduced a motion declaring a section of the statehood bill to be unconstitutional. And that motion was defeated, 53 to 28. A final vote is not expected until next week.

The government reports tonight that...in June...the prices received by farmers for their products dropped by about three and ahalf percent. This is the first time farm prices have declined instead of going up in six months.

Fighting between government and rebel forces in Lebanon today was stepped up. Again, the principal action in Beirut centered in the Moslem quarters. To the north...in Tripoli...the rebels stormed a government position, which the Army says finally drove the attackers off. Another Army position, outside of Tripoli, was defended by artillery and planes.

At the United Nations, Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred today with Sir Leslie Munro of New Zealand, the current president of the General Assembly. Mr. Hammarskjold still has made no public report on his recent fact-finding mission in the Middle East.

The United States announced today that it is sending 65 thousand tons of wheat to Lebanon.

In Cuba, rebel forces...under Fidel Castro...are reported to have kidnaped nine Americans and two Canadians employed by the Freeport Sulphur Company of New York...and various sub-contractors. All eleven are engineers working on the construction of a nickel and cobalt plant at Moa, in Oriente Province. Three Cuban soldiers were killed in the attack. The purpose of the abduction is not clear. The United States Embassy in Havana says it has made no contact with the rebels so far.

An investigation has been ordered into the crash early today of an Air Force jet tanker at Westover Field in Massachusetts. All fifteen persons aboard the aircraft...including six newsmen...were killed. The jet crashed only seconds after take-off for England in an attempt to set a new distance speed record. Two other strato-tankers...that took off minutes earlier...made the crossing without mishap and did establish new speed records for the distance.

The death of Stalin, followed by the de-Stalinization of Soviet policy under Khrushchev, opened a new epoch in world affairs. Tensions did not disappear, but they eased. The Soviet objective was amended; less emphasis was placed on world domination, more on peaceful co-existence. Tensions were relaxed within the Soviet empire, too. Khrushchev took his journey of penitence to Tito in Belgrade. Gomulka displaced the Stalinist leadership in Poland and was allowed to govern. A meeting at the summit, though it failed to settle a single outstanding difference between East and West, brought comfortable assurance to the world that the danger of all-out war was receding. With the flowering of Soviet technology and education, hopes rose for the loosening of the grip of Soviet tyranny. Naturally all this made history. Now, however, this epoch has come to an abrupt close, and that, certainly, is of equal historic importance.

A number of startling Soviet actions has signalized the end of the epoch. The Kremlin rudely broke off preparations for a summit meeting, by publishing the secret negotiations between Western diplomats and the Soviet Foreign Office. It followed this by threatening not to attend a conference of scientists at Geneva to study controls over a suspension of nuclear tests. The Kremlin put into reverse the whole effort to harmonize relations with Yugoslavia. Then the most sensational event of all, the leaders of the Hungarian freedom fight were executed, which served notice on all satellites, that the iron rule of Stalin's day had been imposed again. In effect, Tito was told his turn could come next. All Poles understood that Gomulka's days at the helm were numbered.

Two questions stand out about the new epoch now opening, and neither can yet be answered. One, is where Khrushchev is heading. The other is why he changed his course. The possibility now being feared and weighed in the foreign offices of the West, is that he has decided to risk a showdown over Lebanon, that he will prevent a compromise and meet Western intervention by sending armed aid, and by organizing a volunteer force capable of conducting protracted warfare. This would then turn into a struggle for power over the Arab world. It is not possible to predict with assurance that the West would win a local war of this character. Nor can it be promised that the West would not lose it.

Obviously it would be easier to predict where Khrushchev is heading if one could identify the forces and conditions that have made him reverse his course. But conditions inside theSoviet empire are obscure. We know the Soviet economy is under a strain from Khrushchev's policy of decentralizing industry, and probably more so, from his new agricultural policy, which has laid a heavier burden on the Soviet treasury to feed the population. How great this strain is can only be guessed. But it produces criticism. And Khrushchev also has critics for other reasons, one being that he brought on the catastrophe in Hungary, by easing up on the satellites.

A factor in the present about-face of Soviet policy appears to be communist China. It was China who insisted on a stern line toward Tito, at the last international meeting of communists. It may have been China who demanded and obtained the execution of the Hungarian leaders. It is being said that China vetoed a summit meeting, believing a relaxation of world tensions can only hurt China by diverting Soviet economic activity to the West.

China now stands on the threshhold of industrialization, and its leaders believe such an era requires the iron rule of a Stalin. Chinese communist leaders also have a dread of liberalism, since the fiasco of Mao Tse-tung's "hundred flowers" speech. They may well believe the future of communism depends on there being another long period of Stalinism.

A further hypothesis may explain what is happening. This is a crisis in which the West, under Secretary Dulles, has virtually committed the United States to intervene in Lebanon under certain conditions. Now this threat of the West, is being met head-on by a threat by the East. Maybe neither threat will be carried out. The test of nerves is now near its height, and we do not know how it will end. But if Khrushchev is only trying us out, he has at any rate cleared the deck for action. He has reversed all his easy-going policies and is taking the tough line. The next days in Lebanon should disclose how tough he is willing to be.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: John Milton said, "In those vernal seasons of the year...when the air is calm and pleasant...it were an injury and sullenness against Nature not to go out and see her riches...and partake of her rejoicing with heaven and earth." While this reporter is doing just that, my old colleague Larry Lesueur will be sitting at this microphone bringing you the news.

Goodnight and good luck!

Lesueur for Murrow Tues., July 1, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The Administration expressed alarm | over the cut | of 872-million dollars | voted by the House Appropriations Committee in the foreign aid program. President | Eisenhower | told Republican congressional leaders | meeting at the White House | that American foreign policy is jeopardized. And News Secretary Hagerty announced | that tomorrow...at the start of his news conference... the President will make a strong statement | explaining WHY foreign aid is essential. | For the White House to announce | in advance | what Mr. Eisenhower plans to do at a news conference is unprecedented. But Hagerty said | the President considers the matter "urgent"...and wants the public to be informed. || Secretary of State Dulles told a news conference TODAY | that the President may take the issue directly to the American people in a nationwide broadcast.

Mr. Dulles said the cut---if allowed to stand---would pose "a grave threat to the security of the United States."

These warnings...from President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles...came as the House opened debate on the foreign aid measure. Two Republican representatives, Taber of New York and Wigglesworth of Massachusetts, agreed with the Administration that the slash voted by the appropriations committee was too drastic. Said Wigglesworth, "I am opposed to cutting just for the sake of cutting in a field involving the freedom, if not the existence, of America and the Free World." But the floor manager of the bill...Democratic Representative Passman of Louisiana...appealed to the House NOT to yield to Administration pressure. The money voted by the committee, he said, IS adequate...because of previous appropriations which have not YET been spent.

Mr. Dulles said...at his news conference...that the United States [redacted] is taking the "strongest, most effective measures possible" to secure the release of Americans who are being held prisoner by other countries. But the United States, he said, will never pay blackmail---whether it be in East Germany, Cuba, or ELSEWHERE..

In Cuba today, the rebels abducted four MORE Americans...making a total of 47 (48) who have been seized and carried off as hostages since last Thursday night. Secretary Dulles said that rebel leader Fidel Castro seems to be trying to force the United States to intervene in Cuba. But the United States, he said, will NOT intervene. Dulles denied that the United States is using its base [on Guantanamo Bay] to help the government forces opposed to Castro. In a speech in the Senate, Republican Leader Knowland proposed that Castro be given 48 hours to let the Americans go. "We should tell him," he said, "that unless these Americans are released within 48 hours, we will [furnish] the Cuban government with sufficient arms so that it can enforce the peace."

The United States demanded again today that Russia secure the release of the nine American servicemen held by East Germany since early last month. These are the nine Army men whose helicopter landed inside East Germany ~~in~~ DURING a thunderstorm. "It is requested," the United States memorandum said, "that arrangements for the release of the men AND the aircraft be made at once." But again, the Soviet Embassy in Washington [said the American] representation should be directed---not to Moscow--but to the East German regime.

Nothing definite on the release of those OTHER nine servicemen...whose cargo plane landed in Russia last week, near the Turkish border. The French Foreign Ministry...in Paris..."hears" that the men have been well treated, are in good health, and will be released soon.

Well, those East-West talks on the technical problem of enforcing a nuclear ~~test-ban~~ WEAPONS finally opened today in Geneva. CBS News Correspondent Alex Kendrick is covering that story. And so we switch to Geneva for his first-hand report.

(Tape runs 3:55
Returns on cue: "to CBS News in N.Y."

Secretary Dulles noted...at his news conference...~~that~~ TO DENY the Russians had sent political officers to Geneva, not ~~just~~ ONLY scientists. And this, he said, MAY mean they will try to change the purely "scientific" nature of the talks. If they DO try to do this, he said, the talks are bound to fail.

Mr. Dulles commented on the refusal of Russia to allow CBS News Correspondent Dan Schorr to return to his post in Moscow. It demonstrates, he said, how the leaders of Russia do not want [redacted] a true picture of conditions there to get out.

On the subject of Lebanon, Mr. Dulles said that American troops would intervene only as a last resort. It would be better, he said, that the Lebanese work out their own solution to the problem. Dulles questioned the practicality of trying to seal off Lebanon's frontier with Syria with a United Nations police force...although some of the rebel infiltration, he said, HAS been stopped because of the presence of U.N. observers.

Lebanese forces...loyal to the Chamoun government...counter-attacked outside of Beirut today and lifted the immediate threat to the international airport. One report says the rebel tribesmen were driven back three miles.

No NUCLEAR explosion...but the detonation of [redacted] 30 tons of dynamite...marked the opening today of the new St. Lawrence RIVER Seaway and Power Project. The blast...at Massena, New York...ripped a [redacted] hole in a temporary earthen dam, releasing [redacted] 200-BILLION gallons of pent-up water which by next year will convert the St. Lawrence Rapids into a navigable lake covering ONE A hundred square miles. By that time...through a system of locks...deep-draft ocean vessels will be able to sail from the mouth of the St. Lawrence 2-thousand miles, inland to Minnesota...and TO all the Great Lakes ports in BETWEEN [redacted]. The giant river will be harnassed to provide new electric power for Ontario and much of New York State and Vermont. Just ONE of the new power plants, the Barnhart Island operation at Massena, will produce 2-billion horsepower, an output exceeded in the whole world only by the Grand Coulee Dam in Washington State. This is a joint project of the United States and Canada, costing a billion dollars. IT'S one of the great PHYSICAL achievements of Man comparable to the Panama Canal.

General DeGaulle flew to Algeria today...from Paris...for a "tour" of French military bases. DeGaulle made no speech on his arrival. He did not even go to Algiers.//.but confined himself to inspecting military installations in Eastern Algeria and conferring with local commanders. Tomorrow, he will follow the same kind of schedule in WESTERN Algeria, Then go to the Algerian capital [illegible] on Thursday. He will be in Algieria for just three days.

President Eisenhower is expected...tomorrow or Thursday.//.to sign into law the measure TO MAKE Alaska the 49th state.// Mr. Eisenhower agreed at his meeting with Republican congressional leaders today that the job is only half-done. The G.O.P. leaders indicated...after talking with the President.//.that they will try to get House approval of an Hawaii statehood bill at this session. The chances of the House voting statehood for Hawaii at this time are doubtful, But Secretary of the Interior Seaton says he will invite Governor Quinn of Hawaii to Washington to join in the statehood fight.

Former President Truman made his first public comment today on the Sherman Adams case. The congressional investigation, he said, has shown "a lack of ethics in the White House and other high places." But, IN HIS WORDS:- [redacted], "it should not divert public attention from the much more important failures and bunglings of the Administration." [redacted]

Mr. Truman made this comment as he boarded the liner Constitution, which [redacted] sailed today from Cannes...in Southern France.

This is L.L

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to The NEWS— Now A word from Ford -

Statehood for Alaska, means bringing into the union, a territory about two-and-a-half times the size of Texas, but with a population of little more than 2 hundred thousand, [redacted].

That means giving TWO United States Senators, to a population about the size of South Bend, Indiana. Now since many functions of the Senate require a two-thirds majority, like over-riding a Presidential veto, that means Alaska's two Senatorial votes, could conceivably balance-off the four votes of say, densely populated California and New York. [redacted]

But most americans think the political cost is worth the price of Alaska's admission. //

This is Larry LeSueur--- Good nite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Tuesday, July 1, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Well, those East-West talks on the technical problem of enforcing a nuclear weapons test ban finally opened today in Geneva. CBS News correspondent Alex Kendrick is covering that story. And so we switch to Geneva for his first-hand report.

KENDRICK: In a third-floor window of the UN's Palace of Nations, on the shore of Lake Geneva, a faint candle light is tonight, figuratively speaking, flickering. It is all that is left of East-West rapprochement at the present time. For while the Communists have hardened their position everywhere else, in the Hungarian executions betokening a new crack-down among their satellites, in forcing down an American transport plane in Armenia, in freezing up on summit talks in the sharp tone of their latest anti-Western propaganda, in the Chinese threat to break off the Geneva negotiations with the United States for the return of American prisoners, nevertheless, they have - for reasons of their own - decided to go ahead with the conference of atomic experts, who will discuss means of detecting atomic explosions against the day if, as and when an East-West agreement on the suspension of nuclear testing is ever concluded. The technical conference got underway on schedule, at 3:00 o'clock this afternoon, in Hall No. 8 of the palace, a medium-sized room in which, in Geneva's sultry weather, one hundred persons will undergo travail for the next three-to-four weeks barring unexpected developments. The first session lasted an hour and a half, and the conference will resume tomorrow afternoon. It opened today with expressions of esteem on each side: Dr. James Brown Fiske, of the President's Science Advisory Committee, speaking for the combined American-British-French-Canadian team, and Dr. Eugene Federov, for the Russian-Polish-Czech-Rumanian side. But although this is a conbined effort, the impression given in the meeting room is of purely bilateral talks between the U.S. and U.S.S.R. And tonight's communique emphasizes that the conference is being held pursuant to an agreement between President Eisenhower and Soviet leader Khrushchev. The American and Russian scientists sit facing each other directly, and their friends and allies are strung along both sides of the table, with two rows of advisers behind each group. But, actually, there is imbalance. The Communists have a nine-man delegation against the West's seven, and one of the nine is not a technical expert at all, but the veteran Foreign Ministry trouble-shooter and long-time UN representative, Semyon Tsarapkin. A Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, Alexander Zakharov, is also in the panel of advisers, and every satellite delegation has its Foreign Office man along.

The meeting opened with both Dr. Fisk and Dr. Fedorov stressing that their functions are technical, concerned with the means of setting up a control system if there should ever be an agreement on the cessation of nuclear testing. Both made it plain that any suspension agreement would be a high level matter for their respective governments, and this acceptance of the limited nature of the meeting is a reversal of the Soviet official line of only a few days ago. But how long the light in the window will continue to burn is a matter of speculation here tonight. For even in the technical area the Soviet Union has thus far - in the protracted disarmament talks in London last year - refused to accept the American concept of a chain of inspection stations and has held the view that nuclear tests are already detectible by present methods. The Soviet line is still to press for a suspension of tests rather than bother with the means to detect them. Some diplomats here believe the Russians may have come to this meeting only to see how far they could carry it into the area of political decision, despite today's disavowal, and to learn if there is any loophole in the American position that a suspension of testing should be part of a broader disarmament agreement. As of tonight, nevertheless, the light in the window, third floor front, is burning however faintly.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: That was Alex Kendrick.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

Lesueur for Murrow Wed., July 2, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Bernard Goldfine testified and lived up to his advance billing as a colorful witness. CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr covered the story. And so we switch to Washington for his direct report.

(Schorr to run approx 3 minutes,
(returns on cue, "to CBS News in N.Y."

The first question put to President Eisenhower at his news conference TODAY ~~today~~ was whether he had reconsidered his decision to "stand by" Sherman Adams. The questioner noted that in the opinion of "some" Republicans the usefulness of Mr. Adams had been seriously impaired. Mr. Eisenhower replied...

(Tape runs 35 seconds, ends on cue:
("---any questions about that matter."

I'm sorry about Ness mechanical malfunction - But Mr Eisenhower said that he "needed" Sherman Adams, two weeks ago

White House correspondents were quick to notice Mr. Eisenhower's use of the phrase "at that time"...in referring to his convictions about Mr. Adams expressed two weeks ago. It seemed to suggest that he was reserving judgement...that perhaps his feeling had changed. After the news conference, they asked News Secretary Hagerty for clarification. Hagerty talked to EISENHOWER, then told reporters, "The President told me to tell you gentlemen not to look for evil where evil is not intended."

Mr. Eisenhower was asked at his news conference whether he had caused any inquiry to be made of the Internal Revenue Service...as to whether Goldfine had been allowed to deduct his gifts to Adams as legitimate business EXPENSES on his corporate tax returns. This was something new to the President.

(Tape runs 25 seconds
Ends on cue: "---when they are ready to report."

Mr. Eisenhower appears to have suffered a lapse of memory. The question of Goldfine's income tax...and a possible business deduction...had been raised at the President's news conference on June 18. He suggested, at that time, that the questioner consult the Attorney General.

Mr. Eisenhower opened his news conference today with a prepared statement on the importance of the mutual security program. It was an appeal to the House of Representatives NOT to go along with the House Appropriations Committee...and slash more than 800-million dollars in foreign aid funds.

Tape runs 1:55
Ends on cue: "---will demand nothing less."

Late this afternoon, the House concurred with its appropriations committee and chopped 872-million dollars out of the foreign aid program.

[redacted] The vote was 253 to 126. The measure...appropriating 3-billion, 78-million dollars for foreign aid in the next fiscal year...now goes to the Senate. [redacted]

A reporter at the presidential news conference said there had been complaints...by some congressmen...that the government [redacted] was not doing enough to secure the release of those Americans held hostage in Cuba [redacted] The President said this is a "delicate " problem.

Tape runs 2:35
Ends on cue: "---and a few Canadians, by the way."

Two of the american hostages and one canadian were released tonite by the cuban rebels. They arrived by helicopter at the U.S. Naval base at Guantanamo BAY...The two americans were identified as Coster and Sammonson, and the Canadian as Edward Cannon.

That leaves 44 U.S. citizens and two canadians still presumed held in rebel hands..

The Nine american servicemen held prisoner by the East Germans, [redacted] were permitted to appear at a news conference today in Dresden, Germany. Eight communist newsmen and only one american reporter, from the A.P. interviewed them. [redacted] During the tense news conference, some of the american soldiers yelled "kidnapers" at the East German officials.

And their senior officer, Major George Kemper of Escondido, California, told a battery of communist news reel cameras: "They are holding us as political hostages. We are being used as tools.." Said they weren't being informed about the negotiations for their release, that he couldn't imagine why they were being held, and that they got into East Germany accidently, when their helicopter got lost in a thunderstorm and ran out of gas.

Major Kemper said his group surrendered voluntarily to the East German Police, who promptly turned them over to the Russian army. They stayed one night in a soviet camp, and then the Russians TURNED THEM BACK ~~returned them~~ to the East Germans. This is the first evidence of direct Russian involvement in the case.

The United States says the Russians are responsible for these men. The Russians say this county must deal directly with East Germans.. This the United States refuses to do, if it involves official recognition of the East German Communist regime.

Heavy fighting ~~resumed~~ in Lebanon today, with the rebels reported weakening. The Moslem tribesmen negotiated a "gentleman's truce," in the port city of Tripoli, after arguing that the use of heavy weapons endangered the civilian population. Both sides in this strange war, agreed to restrict the firing to rifles and machine-guns. Near Bayrouth, the government forces appear to have blunted the rebal drive on the international airport. Its now reported that heavy units of the U.S. Sixth Fleet have withdrawn from the waters off Lebanon, but smaller units with U.S. Marines aboard, ~~remain~~ there.

President Eisenhower accused Russia today of wrecking the preparations for a summit conference...by its apparent unwillingness to negotiate on the ambassadorial level. Mr. Eisenhower made the charge in a new letter to Khrushchev...answering the Soviet leader's message of June 11. It was then, you recall, that Khrushchev broke his word and published all the memoranda dealing with the ambassadorial talks. Mr. Eisenhower went on to say (in his new letter) that the United States has not abandoned hope. Prime Minister Macmillan of Britain and Premier DeGaulle of France sent messages to Khrushchev today...along the same line. But DeGaulle used language that was not quite so strong. He did not...for example... [redacted] question whether Russia wants a PRODUCTIVE meeting at the summit...the kind of meeting at which real agreements may be reached.

Just as President Eisenhower was getting HIS letter off, the Soviet charge d'affaires in Washington was delivering still another one from Khrushchev. The contents of this new Khrushchev letter have not been published...but according to the charge d'affaires, [redacted] it concerns a new question...one, which he says, [redacted]h is "an initiative for reducing international tension." We have no details.

Technical talks...on how to police a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests... went through their second day in Geneva---apparently without a hitch. Today's meeting of experts (from both sides of the Iron Curtain) lasted three hours.// One of the Western scientists said, "We have been getting down to discussing an agenda.// But we are still sparring for position."

This is C1.

Will be back in moment with a footnote

B The news - But now a WORD from Belgrade Bryan

Political scandals may not be anything new to Washington, but some of the public relations ~~gambits~~ TECHNIQUES in the Adams-Goldfine case, are carving a niche of their own. When Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams made his prepared statement to the House investigating sub-committee, he got the early headines to himself, by releasing it just before the committee met. And Bernard Goldfine went Adams one better today, by making his formal committee statement, the nite before he WAS DUE TO TESTIFY. If this keeps up, the public may be getting the answers before they hear the questions...

This is L.L. Goodwin

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Wednesday, July 2, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

LESUEUR: CBS NEWS correspondent Daniel Schoor covered the story and as we switch to Washington for his direct report.

SCHORR: It started as Goldfine's day but ended with an offer to refund to the government the money deducted from his income tax for listing gifts to Sherman Adams as business expenses. This morning Goldfine spent 2-½ hours on the stand plodding through a skillfully written presentation of his case. Wrapping himself in the fabric of the American dream. He pictured himself as an immigrant who came from Russia 59 years ago as a boy of 8 to build a prosperous textile industry in New England, operating mills there when others were closing up or moving south. Making friends - some in high places and proud to have the kind of friends a poor man could not have in Russia. One of these friends - Sherman Adams and they liked to exchange gifts, actually he asserted, The Goldfine's got more from the Adams's then they gave. But, Goldfine stoutly denied that except to ask for an appointment with the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, he ever asked or received official favors from Adams. He detailed his difficulities with the FTC and the Securities & Exchange Commission and said "If it constitutes preferred treatment, I hope I never get any more of the same."

GOLDFINE: In 2 FTC cases and and the one SEC matter which stretched out over 4years, I think the record will show, they gave me just as hard and rough a time as they ever gave anybody else. And about the 2nd 3rd charge, if Governor Sherman Adams used his White House positiom to get me some kind of special treatment it because I payed some hotel bills and made some gifts, Mr. Chairman, I never asked Governor Adams to do anything out of line and he never did anythingfor me that was out of line. Mr. Chairman,I think you know Gov. Adams, is not that kind of a man and neither am I. Now, about Mr. John Fox, it's not pleasant to talk about Mr. Fox because he seems like a sick man to me.

S CHORR: Goldfine also attacked some people as trying to make a mountain out of a molehill for political reasons. This stirred Democratic committee members John Moss of California to charge that Goldfine's professionaly written (indistinct) as he called it made vicious, unfair, unjust accusations against the committee. But, Goldfine's story today was a rags to riches story - a story of (indistinct) friendship But one key issue that Goldfine did not touch on before the committee, was his reported listing of gifts and paid hotel bills for Adams asbusiness expenses for income tax purposes. Later, Goldfine's attorney Roger Rob admitted to newsmen it was so and tonight Goldfine in a special statement said, he is willing to pay the government back the money deducted for gifts to Adams if the internal revenue bureau feels we made a mistake. This sets the stage for tomorrow when questioning of Goldfine begins.

Now, back to CBS NEWS in New York.

LESUEUR: ... Mr. Eisenhower replied:

PRES. EISENHOWER: The statement I made to you ladies and gentlemen, about 2 weeks ago, is no more and no less as ... an expression than my convictions ... of my convictions at that time. I have nothing more to say at this time. The hearings are still going on and I will not make any comments or entertain any questions about that matter.

LESUEUR: White House correspondents were quick to notice ...

... This was something new to the President.

PRES. EISENHOWER: I had not made any suggestions on ... or any suggestions of that kind to the Internal Revenue because until this morning I had never a heard of such a possibility. And you couldn't expect me to go along about every businessman suggesting that his ... his tax accounts be overlooked. It was a brand new one to me, but I assume that I will have a request from the Internal Revenue people in a written report.

LESUEUR: Mr. Eisenhower appears to have suffered ....

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: 7/2/58

LESUEUR: ... in foreign aid funds.

PRES. EISENHOWER: We need more ammunition to wade the peace. A careful estimate of this years needs was made after prolonged study. It fixed the necessary total at approximately 3 billion 9 hundred million dollars. The sum aproposed by the appropriations committee is more than 20% lower than that estimate. This is taking reckless risks with our safety. The cut will dismay our friends in Latin America, in Asia, in Africa and in the Middle East. Every nation that is standing at our sidein this world wideepic. It is my deep conviction that reductions of the size contemplated by the committee will have grave consequense ... consequences in fortunes of a free world and therefore to our nations security. And, will encourage Communist imperialists. Our people must understand this, regardless of the many and mounting billions that we spend for our own military forces, those forces cannot alone achieve our security. Friendly nations must be ready and able to stand by our sides to present a solid front in the defenseof freedom. So, we have this choice, stand up and be counted, live up to our ideals and our purposesand assume the responsibilities that are ours or shrug our soldiers, say that freedom for others has no significance for us, is therefore no responsibility of ours, and so let international Communism gain the ultimate victory. As for me, the choice is clear. I stand for American security, to be attained and sustained by cooperation with our friends in the Free world. I'm certain that the American people will demand nothing less.

LESUEUR: Late this afternoon ....

... the President said this is a delicate problem.

PRES. EISENHOWER: This is a delicate question. Now, I remember when it first came to our intense study and concern years ago, as in the case of China, one thing was always insisted upon:

We are trying to get live Amdricans back; we are not disposed to do anything reckless that would a create consequences for them that would be final. So, I would like to have that kind of thinking in our minds as we discuss this matter a bit. Now, the cases that come up are not similar in their circumstances. For example, the case in Russia, the a case in East Germany, the one in China is wa entirely different from the one in Cuba.

LESUEUR: Two of the American ...

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., July 3, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Bernard Goldfine was cross-examined by House investigators. He acknowledged giving money...at Christmas time...to White House secretaries and to Congressional aides. He was not partial. The gifts went to Republicans and Democrats alike--"to the poor workers," to use his phrase, "who work in the different offices." But there was much more to his testimony. For a direct report from a CBS News correspondent who covered the story, Bob Pierpoint, speaking from Washington.

Pierpoint runs 3:30
Returns on cue: "--to Larry Lesueur in N.Y."

A new move by Soviet Premier Khrushchev...related to the problem of preventing surprise attack. ~~Russia has called repeatedly for an agreement against surprise attack. But~~ the latest Khrushchev note contains more than the usual propaganda cliches and generalities. It proposes that experts of the United States and Russia...and perhaps other countries...meet soon to and try to work out a system that would make it impossible for one nation to attack another ~~[illegible]~~ by surprise. Khrushchev ~~suggests~~ that ~~these experts meet for an agreed period of time (agreement),~~ and ~~then draw up recommendations~~ practical, and that these recommendations...~~on the practicality of this problem. be submitted at a summit meeting at the summit.~~ Khrushchev's note was delivered in Washington yesterday and made public today in Moscow. Secretary of State Dulles says it holds "some promise" of a new meeting of experts...~~although~~ there are certain conditions which are unacceptable. He did not elaborate. Mr. Dulles noted a similarity between Khrushchev's new proposition ~~[illegible]~~ and the technical talks already underway in Geneva...concerning means of detecting nuclear ~~tests~~ weapons. Each side at Geneva met separately today. But a new joint session is scheduled for tomorrow.

Mr. Dulles is flying to France tonight, for a meeting this week-end with General DeGaulle. This matter was discussed today at a two-hour conference Dulles had with the President. Dulles told reporters he "imagined" the question of atomic armament would come up in the course of his talks with the French leader. [redacted] "immediately [redacted] the law [redacted]

President Eisenhower submitted to Congress today an agreement...calling for AN exchange of nuclear weapons secrets with BRITAIN. The agreement was drawn-up in accordance with the measure...already approved by Congress...for sharing more atomic information with our allies. But before going in effect, it must lie before Congress for 30 days. Members of Congress will thus have an opportunity to look over the agreement, and, if they choose, to propose changes. Mr. Eisenhower reminded Congress today that it was the "cooperation" of American and British scientists, which in World War Two produced the first atomic bomb. It has become "manifestly clear," he said, that the countries of the free world must now cooperate with each other in the nuclear weapons field. The agreement provides...among other things...for the transfer to Britain of a nuclear power plant for a submarine and the nuclear material necessary to run it for 10 years.

General DeGaulle has wound up his three-day tour of Algeria with a radio broadcast from Algiers--promising new economic aid to Algeria and equal voting rights for all inhabitants. Algerians will be trained to take over civil service jobs, and women will be given the right to vote.

Dag Hammarskjold said today that reports of "mass" infiltration into Lebanon from the United Arab Republic are not warranted for the present. As for what infiltration there is, said The UN Secretary General it is difficult to say whether it has been slowed or stopped by the presence of U.N. observers.

In Lebanon today, government warplanes...and artillery...repulsed a new rebel attack in the hills overlooking the Beirut airport.

A major story tonight on the American labor front. Teamsters Union President James Hoffa signed a pact with the leaders of the National Maritime Union and the International Longshoremen's Association. to FORM what is called a permanent and continuing "Conference on Transportation Unity." Hoffa HAS invited all the other transport unions of the country to join. But he denies that the "Conference" is to become a new labor federation. rivaling the A.F.L.-C.I.O.

The United States has sent a new note to Russia...demanding, once again, that it assure the release of those nine American (servicemen) held in East Germany for almost a month. Moscow, the Russians have claimed that IT IS FOR THE U.S. TO a matter to take up with the East Germans. A Soviet embassy spokesman in Washington calls it a question "not within the competence of the United States." The State Department insists the Soviet Union is responsible. It points out that the Americans were detained by Soviet authorities BEFORE they were turned over to the East German regime.

In Cuba...a sudden hitch in the release of the other 43 Americans, kidnapped by rebel forces in the past week. Four Americans and one Canadian were flown out of Cuba last Saturday by Red Cross officials last night.

A broadcast...by the rebel radio...claimed that the abductions had been ordered--NOT by Fidel Castro---but by his brother. The broadcast said Fidel Castro had ordered that all the remaining Americans and Canadians be released. Since then, nothing has happened. It appears that further negotiations

(1)

Premier Kruschyev of Soviet Russia made a new disarmament move today, which if it does nothing else, appears to be an attempt to recover some of the ground lost by Russia in the cold war...//

This time the Soviet leader ATTEMPTS to erase some of the bad feeling AROUSED by ITS U.N. veto of the American call// for an ARCTIC inspection study.//To guard against suprise attacks over the North Pole..//

(The Soviet Leader now takes it on his own, in a letter to MR. Eisenhower, to suggest a conference of experts, to study ways of guarding against surprise attack//in this nuclear rocket age..

Such a system OF COURSE, WOULD entail an extensive scheme of international ground and air inspection, SOMETHING the Russians have blown hot and cold on for years...Kruschyev himself ONCE REMARKED that american air inppection of Russia would be just a means of SPYING ON THEM.

But today, Kruschyev takes the other tack, makes a proposal for a conference, as tho he had originally thought it up, instead of Eisenhower..//THUS UNDERSCORING a belief that Russian always turn down peace initiatives,//unless they make them themselves.

[redacted] IN ORDER to pose as the only option-holders on Peace, with the West as the war-mongers.

Today the Soviet leader called for a [redacted] meeting "in the nearest future" of military men, to work-out under a deadline, recommendations [redacted] to prevent the possibility of SURPRISE attack...with the results to be submitted to a summit conference.

[redacted]

TEST BAN..

So far, so good...After a long meeting with President Eisenhower and the National Security Council, today Secretary of State Dulles was wise enough to welcome the Kruschyev proposal, and to say it "contains some promise."//

Mr. Dulles did add that there are certain aspects of the Russian disarmament note which seem unacceptable...He didn't say what they were, but he did note that President Eisenhower's original proposal was broader in scope..//

The fact is, that today's Russian proposal suggests inspection of limited areas, which this country has already turned down as too restricted.

3.3.3

[redacted] it suggests inspection of a five hundred mile zone on either side of the iron curtain..Which we contend would [redacted] result in the permanent division of Germany--[redacted] Kruschyev also suggests aierial inspection of the Soviet Far East, and a corresponding part of the United States.. [redacted] OUR objection to that has been that it would be an unequal trade, since Soviet Siberia [redacted] is sparsely settled, whereas virtually every part of America is heavily industrialized..

Yet [redacted] Secretary Dulles apparently regards these as just bargaining points, and hopes to work out a fairer and [redacted] more wide-spread system of aireal inspection over [redacted] a conference table..

YET [redacted] what casts [redacted] SIMULTANEOUS DOUBT OVER Soviet Sincerity is their [redacted] release of an alleged letter today from an american airman in Britain, threatening to drop an atom-bomb off the English Coast..Which appears on the surface to be still another soviet attempt to frighten the British into banning [redacted] american [redacted] STRATEGIC bombers from Britain.

And yet it's unlikely that the United States will turn down this Russian [redacted] NOTE to talk about [redacted] aerial inspection..becuze we have little to lose and much to gain...It's an accepted fact that the Russians know a great deal about american military installations...while our knowledge of russian military secrets is limited--becuze of their [redacted] INNATE secrecy..

4.4.

Aerial inspection of Russia would be the best way of finding out..

But its certain that the Russians have no idea of giving us their military secrets on a silver platter..//

They may be trying this new gambit in order to create an atmosphere of potential agreement ON DISARMAMENT. In the Hope that Mr. Dulles WILL THUS BE encouraged this weekend to argue Premier De Gaulle out of making French atom bombs. ~~on the grounds that disarmament agreement with Russia never..~~

Or it may BE THAT THE Russians believe american scientists are not TOO far from developing The KIND OF earth satellite which could photograph Russia anyway, whether they agree to inspection or not...

this is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote the news.. FIRST a word from George Bryan.

It couldn't have happened, but it Did..

One of the Horse Guards in fron of London's Buckingham Palace, broke the tradition of silence on duty--And talked [redacted]

Seems That a guide WAS describing the horse-guards to some american tourists, [redacted] and said they and their [redacted] horses could remain absolutely STILL for hours on-end.

Then it happened, the stony-faced guardsman lowered his sword, pointed it at the Guide, and said: "You're a Liar."

The British war office IS INVESTIGATING. [redacted]

This is Larry LeSueur--Good Nite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Thursday, July 3, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... For a direct report from a CBS News correspondent who covered the story, here is Bob Pierpoint speaking from Washington.

PIERPOINT: As long as Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine stuck closely to the script, carefully prepared for him by his lawyers and public relations agents, things went well. But shortly after Goldfine finished reading his prepared text this morning, he ran into trouble. The trouble took the personal form of a cool, soft-spoken subcommittee chief counsel named Robert Lishman, who informed Goldfine that his investigators had incontrovertible proof that Goldfine had made payments of money to members of the White House staff, as well as to employees of Congressmen on Capitol Hill; 37 persons in all. Attorney Lishman handed Goldfine a list of 37 names and asked him to identify them. After studying the names and conferring with his entourage of lawyers, public relations advisers and his obviously efficient blond secretary, Goldfine admitted sending the checks. They were simply Christmas presents, Goldfine explained, sent to what he termed "poor office workers." One of the recipients turned out to be a secretary to Sherman Adams; another works for White House appointment secretary Tom Stevens; and some of the others held various jobs for Congressmen or Congressional committees. Four names were withheld by the subcommittee chairman after Goldfine's secretary, Miss Mildred Paperman, said they were not Government employees. Goldfine claimed most of the checks were for amounts of fifty dollars or less, were given strictly as Christmas presents and, he added defensively, "If that is bad then I'd like to know about it." A committee investigator later told reporters that some of the checks had gone as high as a hundred and fifty dollars and had been given to persons on the list every year for several years. Goldfine admitted the checks were listed by him as "tax deductible" business expenses. White House News Secretary James Hagerty later confirmed that both Sherman Adams' secretary and another woman employee, at the White House, had received and cashed, small checks from Goldfine. Hagerty added that the two women had no idea why Goldfine had sent them the money.

Later today witness Goldfine turned uncooperative. He refused to discuss certain of his financial activities with the subcommittee. Pressed to explain more than $770,000 in still unexplained checks issued by various Goldfine enterprises in the past seventeen years, the Boston businessman merely repeated that this information had nothing to do with the current subcommittee investigation. He also engaged in several heated exchanges today with subcommittee counsel Lishman over parts of his previous well-scripted testimony, parts which did not seem to jibe with Lishman's facts and over claims by Lishman that Goldfine's textile mills engaged in mislabelling their textile products. At the end of the day's hearings, Goldfine dashed out quickly, declining to talk with reporters. Subcommittee Chairman Oren Harris, Democrat of Arkansas, later told newsmen that he hears rumors his telephone line has been tapped, and that mysterious telephone calls have been made to some of his constituents inquiring into his past. Harris indicated he was not worried over reports that someone was trying to intimidate his subcommittee investigation. The subcommittee has scheduled more testimony by Goldfine when the hearings resume next Tuesday.

Back now to Larry Lesueur in New York.

LESUEUR: A new move by Soviet Premier Khrushchev ...

Ed. trans. P. O.

LeSueur for Murrow Fri. July 4, 1958

Subs for repeat

This is LL repeating for Aucoin

Good Evening Everyone....Here's what Happened today..

A U.S. Airforce plane with nine men aboard...disappeared in the Pacific six or seven hundred miles southwest of Hawaii...The missing aircraft is a double-deck Globe-Master...flying a cargo from Travis Air Force Base, in California to Toyko... The plane radioed early this morning, that one of its ~~engines~~ four engines was"running wild." A big sea and air search is on... led by the famed aircraft carrier "Boxer" veteran of the Korean War.. We have word that three men were sighted in life-jackets, ~~a raft dropped to them, and moments later they were~~ and were picked up by a helicopter from the Boxer.

Lesueur for Murrow Fri., July 4, 1958

Here's
Good evening, everyone...[redacted] what happened today:

A U.S. Air Force plane...with nine men aboard...disappeared in the [redacted] Pacific [redacted] six or seven hundred miles southwest of Hawaii. The missing aircraft [redacted] is a double-deck Globmaster...[redacted] flying a cargo from Travis Air Force Base in California to Tokyo. The plane radioed early this morning that one of its four engines was "running wild". No word from it since. And a big sea and air search in on...led by the FAMED [redacted] aircraft [redacted] carrier Boxer, veteran of the Korean War.

WE HAVE WORD [redacted] 3 men [redacted] HAVE BEEN SIGHTED in a life-raft

(2)

Secretary of State Dulles arrived in Paris today...for a meeting tomorrow with General DeGaulle. Mr. Dulles said...on his arrival...that he was looking forward to a "fruitful" exchange of views. (We'll have a direct report from Paris in a few minutes).

Bernard Goldfine flew back to Boston today...undismayed by his experience before the House committee investigating his apparent "gift" for dispensing gifts to people in government. A reporter asked Mr. Goldfine...at the Washington airport...if he ever regretted being so generous. "Not a bit," said Goldfine. "I expect to CONTINUE giving gifts." The Boston industrialist said he LOOKED forward "very much" to appearing before the committee again on Tuesday. No, he hadn't talked to Sherman Adams, but his wife DID have a chat with Mrs. Adams. When reporters pressed him with other questions...such as how did he explain those uncashed treasurer's and cashier's checks totaling 776-thousand dollars...he clammed up.

Ellis Mott, a reporter for CBS Radio station W.E.E.I. in Boston, has an exclusive story regarding some of Mr. Goldfine's larger financial problems. We switch to Ellis Mott in Boston.

(Tape runs 1:45
Ends on cue: "--Ellis Mott in the WEEI-CBS newsroom in Boston."

London and Paris do not agree completely with today's report from the U.N. Observers in Lebanon...The hundred or so U.N. observers in beleaguered Lebanon report, that the vast majority of rebels fighting against President Chamoun's government, APPEAR to be Lebanese..

They say they were unable to tell whether any rebels or their weapons, had come from outside the country... But the U.N. observers pointed out that the rebels barred their international watchdog teams, from entering those areas, where the government charges foreign help IS flowing in from Syria..

This first report from the U.N. observers in Lebanon, appears so inconclusive, that the U.N. Security Council is not likely to be in any rush, to call a meeting to consider it..But most important, it does not PRESENT any basis for direct Western Intervention..

Nevertheless, France, like Great Britain, is standing firm on its charg that there HAS BEEN considerable outside interference in the Lebanese conflict.. A French foreign OFFICE spokesman said today: "Our opinion on the validity of information from OUR Ambassador, is absolutely NOT changed. ~~Said France would still~~ INTERVENE ~~in Lebanon IF French citizens were endangered or French interests threatened~~..."

But he added carefully, that French confidence in Dag Hammershuld is undiminished...and hoped that the U.N. mission would result in a peaceful solution..

The U.N. observer's report came as a grave disappointment to President Chamoun's government.. He had charged "massive interference" in the civil war by President Nasser's Arab Republic.. And on the heels of this inconclusive U.N. report, the Chamoun government today ordered the expulsion of seven United Arab diplomats, on charges of "undesireable activities." They were accused of making contact with "Opposition elements" and given until noon tomorrow to leave Lebanon..

Heavy firing was underway in Bayroot today, with the government forces making a concerted counter-attack against rebels inside and outside the capital city.. The rebels have been driven back, out of sight of the international airport..

And the government claims to have repulsed the Moslem rebels attempting to enter the port city of Tripoli from the surrounding hills. The pro-western government is encouraged to think that if it stops the rebels now, the eight weeks rebellion will collapse.

(7)

The Geneva conference on means of detecting nuclear tests resumed today after a 48-hour recess. The Soviet delegate read a report on the "long-range propagation of sound and electro-magnetic waves radiated by nuclear explosions." Other reports were given on "the detection of nuclear explosions through acoustic signals." And a general discussion followed. Dr. Ernest Lawrence of the American delegation told reporters, "The meeting went very well."

7:51-55

(8)

In Yugoslavia...this, too, is Independence Day. Fifteen years ago today...in the Bosnian Mountains...19-thousand Yugoslav Partisan-fighters routed a force of 120-thousand Germans in one of the bloodiest battles of the war. ~~The Partisans suffered 6-thousand dead. Marshal Tito himself was wounded.~~ And in commemoration of the victory, ~~purchased at so high a price,~~ Tito designated July 4th as Yugoslavia's day for celebrating independence. Today, with President Nasser of Egypt as his guest, Tito returned to the scene of that battle and made a [redacted] speech. In an obvious reference to Russian criticism of his independent policy, Tito said, "They are attacking us from the highest places, but we will not waver." YUGOSLAV Communism, he said, can never be broken. // Then Nasser spoke in Arabic...expressing gratitude to Yugoslavia for supporting him during the invasion of Suez, two years ago. BOTH Tito and Nasser appealed for "world coexistence".

And now...for that direct report from Paris...here is David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 3:55
Ends on cue: "--to Larry Lesueur in New York."

This IS Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News. First, here is George Bryan.

(10) (4) (3)

The National Safety Council reports that the traffic death toll this holiday week-end is climbing at a rate "greater" than ~~[illegible]~~ expected." In the past 24 hours, almost a hundred persons have died on the nation's highways. Ned Dearborn, president of the safety council, calls this an "alarming" figure. "Certainly one of the freedoms worth remembering on Independence Day," he says, "is the freedom from suffering and tragedy caused by these traffic accidents." If you are driving, DO be careful.

This is Larry he Sueur - Jill be back in a moment with a foot note to the news - First, here's George Bryan

It was a BLISTERING hot day in Philadelphia, one hundred and 82 years ago, when after three long days of debate, the continental congress finally adopted the Declaration of Independence...

It was about two o'clock that hot afternoon, that the bellman in the Belfry of the State House, got the word.. He began to toll, long and loud, what would become known as the Liberty Bell..

It rang out the words prophetically graven round its rim.

"Proclaim Liberty throughout the Land, unto all the inhabitants Thereof.."

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Friday, July 4, 1958

7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

LESUEUR: ... we switch to Ellis Mott in Boston.

MOTT: This reporter has learned from the Massachusetts Secretary of State's Office that the Strathmore Woolen Company of Boston of which Bernard Goldfine is a principalofficer has not filed a certificate of condition as required by the State laws for the years 1950, 1953, '55 and '56. Massachusetts statutes state that a corporation failing to file for the 4 years indicated may be subject nto a penalty of $200.00, After 45 days from the due date. If the State Tax Commissioner carried out the penalty provisions of the law the Strathmore Woolen Company would be subject to a penalty of one million fifty-eight thousand ninth eight hundred dollars. A further look at the State House Tax Commissioner's Office shows that Bernard Goldfine himself has not filed his 1956 or 1957 State income tax. An extension was granted to Goldfine for the filing of his 1957 state income tax presumably until July 15th just 10 days from now. State laws, make this point, that if a corporation fails for two successive years to file its annnual reported condition a decree for a dissillusion of the corporation is left to the discretion of the State Tax Commissioner. Under this statute, the Commissioner of taxation could have sought the dissillusionment of the Strathmore Woolen Company. Massachusqttes State Tax Commissioner Joseph P. Healey was widely quoted yesterday as seeking means of collecting revenue in taxes due the Commonwealth. He reportedly will send out bills and take other appropriate action to collect sums due. At the Sametime, commissioner Healy was considering quiting his $15,000 post although his term does not expire until 1963.

This is Ellis Mott at WBZT CBS NEWS room in Boston

LESUEUR: London and Paris dos not agree completely with LESUEUR: And, now for that direct report from Paris, here is David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: While America is celebrating Independence Day, France is trying to meet the challenge to its own independence, both at home and abroad. At home, France has now reverted civil war. The Republic only saved itself by putting its fate in the hands of Charles de Gaulle, preferring surrender to assassination. And today, more than ever, with Charles de Gaulle at the head of government, and enjoying full personal powers, France is going to fight fiercely for her independence against all odds. And, Mr. John Foster Dulles who arrived here in Paris today will find that out when he meets with Premier de Gaulle tomorrow. Mr. Dulles is going to be dealing with a very different kind of French Premier than in the past. However, although he'll find de Gaulle a most difficult man to handle, this reporter ventures to predict that Mr. Dulles will also find it a relief to work with Charles de Gaulle. For de Gaulle not only knows what he wants, he can also deliver what he promises and he's a man of his word in every respect and that's a d change from the past decade of vacillating, double talking and powerless French statesman. Thus, although Mr. Dulles will find it tough to make a deal with De Gaulle, when it is made, it will stick. The 3 most important areas of negotiation between Dulles and de Gaulle center around East-West relations, Western defense and North African policy. On East-West relations Dulles will find that the French position is not dangerously different from his own. De Gaulle has few illusions about the Russians and the situation has changed considerably since the day in 1945 when de Gaulle negotiated a freindship ~~if~~ treaty with the Soviets. On Western defense, Dulles will find de Gaulle more difficult. More demanding for a greater role inNATO for France. More insistant upon American technical help in producing own nuclear weapons and absolutely adament upon refusing to ~~kmight~~ be barred from the atomic club of great powers. On the hand, de Gaulle is likely to understand Dulles's argument that more French troops are needed in NATO and that if France wants to be a big power with a big voice, she better put a bigger gun on the conference table. It is here, however, that French and American policies diverge most dangerously. For although France has one of the biggest and best combat trained armies in the western world, this army is fighting in Algeria and sofar as Americans are concerned is not defending NATO. Yet, for the French, they feel they are defending NATO, by defending a vital Mediterranean territory. And, the French even before de Gaulle have been sharply bitterly critical of American sympathy for the Algerian rebel cause and for the Arab countries in general. From Suez to Tunisia and Morocco. De Gaulle is not a man to take this kind of divergence lightly. He expects American support for his policy and he says it's a new policy which we can support, a policy of free elections in Algeria He says he's offering a new deal to the Algerian people and he has already given more than token evidence of his good faith. This week, de Gaulle increased the economic subsidy for new schools and homes in Algeria and he guaranteed a free and equal vote to all Moslems including the emancipation of women voters which is sure to give the Moslems a majority in any election. de Gaulle will explain to Dulles, that he's going to seek a solution to the Algerian question in this context of (indistinct) political equality and fraternity and that the solution will emerge from discussions from the freely elected representative of the peoples of Algeria Moslems and Europeans alike after the new legislative elections this fall. Untilthen, de Gaulle expects his allies to trust him. Not to make his search for peace and union any more difficult than it already is. That's the situation here tonight on the eve of one of the most important Franco-American meetings since the liberation. This is Paris, David Schoenbrun reporting and returning you now to Larry Lesueur in New York.

Lesueur for Murrow Monday, July 7, 1958

Good Evening, Everyone -- here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower signed legislation to make Alaska the 49th state. Thereafter, the president issued a statement once more calling upon Congress to admit Hawaii during this session of Congress. Said the president: "I personally believe that Hawaii is qualified for statehood equally with Alaska."

As he signed the Alaska statehood bill, President Eisenhower commented: "Okay, now that's 49 states." Then, as an afterthought, he added: "No, maybe we don't do that until the plebiscite."

8

Alaska must vote this fall whether to accept immediate statehood, and also ON the terms of the bill on which Congress completed action a week ago. The date of the election has not been set yet. ... But it's generally expected that by next Christmas -- Alaska will be FORMALLY ADMITTED to the union.

In Washington today, there was one development after another in the case of Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine -- and the House sub-committee investigating charges that he received special treatment from federal agencies. The original purpose of the inquiry all But got lost in today's events. AND FOR THAT story -- we switch to CBS news correspondent Charles Von Fremd in Washington:

1'6

Switch live to WA ... runs 3 mins.

OUT CUE: Back to Larry Lasueur in New York.

The Russians released nine United States Airmen at the Iranian border today -- after holding them for eleven days on charges of violating Soviet air space. The men were taken by car and plane to Tehran -- where United States embassy officials met them. They were hurried from their plane into embassy station wagons parked a few yards away. Reporters were not permitted to talk to them -- The embassy says all nine men are in good health.

~~The nine men -- seized when their plane was forced down in Soviet Armenia -- were turned over to Iranian authorities at the Caspian seaside town of Astara -- in northwest Iran -- near Soviet Azerbaijan. Gens. took them to Tehran .... a waiting United States air force plane flew them on to Tehran. After a rest, the men were flown to Wiesbaden, Germany. There they will report directly to United State Air Force European headquarters. ...~~

22

37

In Cuba, Fidel Castro's rebels freed three more United States civilians today. But they're still holding some thirty kidnaped American servicemen, three civilians and a Canadian. The freed civilians were ~~brought~~ FLOWN by helicopter to the United States ~~navy~~ NAVAL base at Guantanamo BAY. ~~-- and the pilot -- Lieutenant Commander John Gorman (of Grand Pass, Missouri) -- said he doubted any more captives would be brought out today.~~

~~Castro is reported to have ordered the release of all North Americans taken captive by his men in the Camaguey Oriente province. But the releases have been slow and come only in small groups.~~

The commander of the naval base -- Rear Admiral R. B. Ellis -- says contact with the rebels for the release of the men is ppor. He says the rebels lay out a pattern of white cloth at a specified time when they want to release hostages. A United States scout plane ~~flying above the rebel te~~ spots the signal and informs the navy base. Then a helicopter is DISPATCHED. ANOTHER OBSTACLE ~~-- this one reported by released hostages --~~ is that Castro apparently SEEKS ~~is seeking~~ United States recognition through U.S. consul Park Wollam -- who is negotiating with the rebels in the hills.

34

~~Rebels~~

~~[redacted]~~ of ~~President Fulgencio Batista.~~ //

C B S News correspondent Robert Taber reports in a letter smuggled out of rebel territory to Guantanamo -- that the rebels fully expect a big government drive as soon as all the hostages are freed. // Taber says the rebels are digging bomb shelters and preparing defenses. // ~~Taber's letter also says the men still held are "caught in the middle of a diplomatic squeeze" // and the time of their liberation is uncertain.~~

30

In Paris, premier [redacted]s de Gaulle today named Jacques Soustelle as minister of Information for France -// succeeding Andre Malraux, the author-[redacted]. //Soustelle is the rightist firebrand who escaped a police guard in Paris last May -/ and fled to Algeria to lead the Gaullist uprising. His appointment brings an Algerian ~~rebel~~ rightwinger into the cabinet for the first time since De Gaulle took office a[redacted]r on June first.// ~~Soustelle long had~~ He been spokesman for the Gaullist minority in ~~Parliament~~.

Malraux -- ~~also a Communist Gaullist~~ -- will remain in the cabinet to ~~his~~ handle cultural a~~mbassadorial questions~~ AFFAIRS. ~~He will have the title "delegate minister."~~

48

Secretary of State Dulles reported to President Eisenhower today on his recent conference with Premier De Gaulle .. and denied to newsmen afterward, that he had tried to dissuade De Gaulle from the development and production of nuclear weapons in France. // Dulles said -- emphatically -- that this is a question for each country to decide for itself. ~~Reports from Paris had indicated the Secretary of State had hoped France would not insist on joining the ranks of the major nuclear powers on grounds that this might damage the chances of an agreement to stop the arms race.~~)

Dulles said he and president Eisenhower also discussed plans for their trip to Ottawa tomorrow. They will spend a week in Canada, conferring with prime minister John Diefenbaker and other officials. ~~The conversations will concern international problems and bilateral issues, mainly economic -- which have arisen between Canada and the United States.~~

President Eisenhower also called upon Congress today for quick legislation to give the government authority to deny passports -- in the interest of United States foreign relations and national security. He asked for legislation to offset the Supreme court ruling of June 16th -- which limits the authority of the secretary of state to withhold passports. That 5 to 4 decision holds that under present law -- the state department lacks authority to deny passports on the basis of inquiry into the beliefs and associations of applicants. In his special message urging the congress to over-come this Supreme Court ruling, the president said: "each day and each week that passes without action exposes us to great danger." ..... The presidential message said "the secretary of state should have clear statutory authority to prevent Americans from using passports for travel to areas where there is no means of protecting them ... or where their presence would conflict with our foreign policy objectives ... OR BE inimical to the security of the United States." "Such grounds for restricting or denying passports," the message continued, "may or may not have any connection with the international communist movement."

(1)

The situation in Lebanon never was very clear-cut, and the attention did [redacted] Middle East States [redacted] obscured by the fine words in Washington.../..Yet ever since the visit of Dag Hammarshuld to the Middle East, the heat has suddenly gone out of what might have been an international crisis./..[redacted] talk about direct Western intervention has suddenly ended, and the clamor for [redacted] a U.N.police force, has died away..

Just how this came about is still something of a mystery, but that's becuz Dag Hammarshuld has not gone around tooting his own horn./../..And it does seem to be News [redacted] these days, when public relations experts are IN the headlines, that the U.N. Secretary General stands almost alone in his dedication to what he calls "quiet diplomacy."

That isn't to say that [redacted] Dag Hammarshuld lacks for public relations men, but he uses them more to keep himself unformed and his activities out of the headlines, than he does to get into the news columns.

The results of Mr. Hammarshuld's "quiet diplomacy" in the Middle East have not appeared sensational, but they have done SOMETHING [redacted] to keep [redacted] American troops FROM INVOLVEMENT [redacted] in what might have been another Korea..

Ever since Mr. Hammarshuld's visit to Bayrout and to Cairo, there is evidence that no infiltration from the United Arab Republic into Lebanon, has at least tapered off, if it hasn't stopped.. Britain and France have been at pains to state that while they accept Mr. Hammarshuld's statement that "No mass infiltration is taking place, at this time," their Ambassadors were correct when they said it did take place in the past.. But that's now besides the point..

Both Mr. Hammarshuld's preliminary statement and the first report of the U.N. observation team, have stressed that at this time, the U.N. could not consider the civil war in Lebanon, a threat to international peace. or "aggression" under The U.N. Charter.

At the same time the U.N. observation group drew attention to the fact that they were barred from penetrating rebel-held areas, where the Lebanese govt suspects that Syrian men and arms were flowing in.

And Hammarshuld himself POINTED OUT that interrogation remains to be done of Lebanese-held prisoners, said to be Syrians..

While the trouble in Lebanon is hardly over, it may be said at this time that the remarks of Hammarshuld and the U.N.observer's report have brought a kind of temporary balance to a highly precarious international situation..

The report of the UN observers is admittedly inconclusive, [redacted] NO [redacted] it. But its clear that altho the U.N. observers are hampered in their efforts to get all the facts they want, President Nasser is well aware that an unfavorable report, might HAVE PROOVED his ruination...And that he'll think twice now before providing justifaction for a future adverse verdict by the U.N. observer teams..

For no one doubts that the British have more than enough troops on Cyprus to preserve order there, as well as TO intervene in Lebanon, and that [redacted] still near U.S. Marines are [redacted] Lebanese waters..

Mr. Hammarshuld has NOT GONE ABOUT [redacted] claiming any premature victory for his "quiet diplomacy" but he has OBVIOUSLY averted an immediate showdown in Lebanon. and he continues to exert enough leverage on President Nasser, [redacted] to give the United Arab President [redacted] incentive [redacted] to avpid more OPEN interference in Lebanon..

The shooting may go on in Lebanon until July 24th, when the Lebanese Parliament is due to elect a new President. If the Lebanese [redacted] can agree on a compromise candidate to succeed President Chamoun, it may mean the end of Lebanon's pro-western government...But even a neutral Lebanon will be something short of a victory for Nasser.. This is Larry LeSueur I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News--First - George Bryan

There's a need for a Sherlock Holmes tonite...

Scotland Yard confesses itself Stumped by that purported letter from a U.S. Pilot threatening to drop an atomic bomb near the British Isles.. Scotland Yard asked the Russians for the original letter so it could analyze the paper and ink, But the Russians refuse to turn it over, have handed the British only a photostatic copy..

No Reason given for the Russian refusal...Perhaps they intend to claim later, they invented Sherlock holmes themselves..

Thiis is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Monday, July 7, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

LE SUEUR: And, for that story, we switch to CBS NEWS correspondent Charles von Frend in Washington.

VON FREND: As the bazaar Goldfine case raced toward a spectacular climax today, both the Boston industrialist and the Harris investigating subcommittee faced emotional crises. The subcommittee solved its dilemma - in part at least, by firing its chief investigator, who admitted hiding a microphone next to the hotel suite of a Goldfine press agent. But, as the day came to an end, Goldfine's fortunes plunged downword. He claimed important documents were stolen from his hotel room, then asked the committee to postpone his scheduled appearance on the witness stand tomorrow for health reasons.

These dramatic events unfolded 2 miles apart. On Capitol Hill, the Harris subcommittee spent the full day in an emergency closed door session, deciding the fate of investigator Baron Shacklette. As a thunderstorm rumbled outside the committee room, Chairman Harris, the Arkansas Democrat called in reporters. Told us Shacklette had expressed his deep regret for eavesdropping on Goldfine and his associates on three occasions at a downtown hotel this past week, added Shacklette had voluntarily tendered a resignation whichwas immediately unanimously accepted by the subcommittee. This didn't jive with Shacklette's remarks to reporters earlier in the afternoon. He indicated he would defend his actions - fight for his job. After the decision against him, the short stubby Shacklette left the building, pale and down cast, saying only, "No comment, you'll have to aske the Chairman." On the desk behind him stood one of those comic motto cards which read, "Do it tomorrow, you've made enough mistakes today."

Two miles from the capital, at a fashionable hotel, not far from the White House, the Goldfine camp experienced a day that will be long remembered here. It started in a rambunctious fashion. With a spokesman for the gift-giving industralist demanding the FBI move into the case of the hidden microphone. A demand incidentally that Chairman Harris seconded toward evening. Both Goldfine and the committee want the FBI to find out how reporter Jack Anderson who works for columnist Drew Pearson and investigator Shacklette were able to acquire rooms next to the Goldfine contingent. Then, came the bombshell. Goldfine's secretary, the blond and efficient Mildred Paperman said important documents, cancelled checks and personal letters that were to be used by Goldfine in testimony tomorrow had been stolen from her hotel room. She didnot explain why such important papers were left in an unlocked closet. Again, both camp s called for an FBI investigation that was quickly begun.

The excitement apparently was too much for even a man of Goldfine's formidable physicalappearance. His nerves badly strained he asked to be excused from questioning tomorrow. Harris deferred a decision until tomorrow morning. In the furor, White House Assistant Sherman Adams was almost forgotten. Only Drew Pearson re-directed attention to Adam's previous role in the investigation. Commenting on Adnerson's hotel eavesdropping, Pearson paraphrased from a statement by the President about Adams. Said Pearson of his assistant, "Jack Anderson of course was imprudent, but I need him."

Now, back to Larry Lesueur in New York.

LESUEUR: The Russians released 9 United States airmen at the Iranian ...

PT/n.m.

LeSueur for Murrow--- Tuesday July, 8, 1958

2

Good Evening Everyone---Here's what happened today.

President Eisenhower and Secretary [redacted] Dulles flew to Ottawa this morning, for three days of informal discussions with Canadian officials. The main purpose of the visit: to improve U.S.-Canadian relations. Canadian dis-satisfaction with [redacted] United States economic and trade policies -- has strained the [redacted] friendship between [redacted] OUR nations. ..... President Eisenhower undoubtedly will touch on these matters when he addresses the Canadian parliament tomorrow. ...

[redacted]

A crowd of a thousand or so met the President and Mrs. Eisenhower, and Mr. and Mrs. Dulles, under grey skies at the airport. There was a 21-gun salute for the president, a paratrooper guard of honor -- and welcome ceremonies from high Canadian officials. ... Small, friendly groups scattered along the eleven mile route to Ottawa -- cheered [redacted] the Eisenhowers. PARTY

~~The Canadian government does not follow a Washington practice of turning out government employes to welcome visiting dignitaries. ... And president Eisenhower has been to Ottawa three times before -- twice as a general ... and in 1953 as president.~~

12

The nine american airmen whose plane was downed in Soviet Armenia on June 27th -- are resting today at a United States air base in Wiesbaden, Germany. They were so weary their scheduled news conference was postponed a day. But the air force -- giving the first account of their mishap -- says their un-armed transport landed in flames in Armenia -- after being fired upon by Soviet jet fighters. Five crew-men bailed out. The four who rode the plane down -- said they were fired on as they came about to land, but leaped clear just before the big transport exploded. One man suffered second degree burns.

The plane had been on a flight with supplies from Wiesbaden to Pakistan. The air force says sudden thunderstorms and un-expected winds forced the plane over Russian territory. ... The russians released the men yesterday at the Iranian border, after the American government expressed regret at the "inadvertent" violation of the Soviet

In Washington, the Eisenhower ADMINISTRATION opened a fight in the senate to restore at least part of the 872-million dollars cut by the House -- from the President's NEARLY FOUR BILLION dollar foreign aid program.

The state department's top economic official -- undersecretary of state, C. Douglas DILLON -- put the administration's case before the senate appropriations committee. He said unless Congress restores the house-cut of 325-million dollars for overseas economic development loans -- the United States "could lose the cold war by default." Dillon warned against "too-little, too-late" policy, SAID Russia is moving into under-developed areas with increasing vigor. 3C

~~Dillon testified behind closed doors as the senate committee opened some ten days of hearings. His prepared testimony was made public by the committee. chairman (democrat Carl Hayden of Arizona)~~

~~An outspoken critic of the administration foreign aid program~~ is democratic Senator Allen Ellender of Louisiana, a member of the appropriations committee. He feels there is still plenty of room in the bill for cutting. He also says the administration must learn "that they cannot receive what they want by merely crying 'wolf.'"

A closely-divided senate finance committee today began closed-door consideration of President Eisenhower's Reciprocal Trade Bill. The senate democratic leader Lyndon Johnson says he strongly favors a five-year extension [redacted] asked by the president. Some senators want only a three-year extension.

40

The governments reports a rise in both employment and un-employment in the month of June, largely because of the expected June influx of students and graduates to the labor market. Employment rose to [redacted] 64-million-981-thousand in June (an increase of 920-thousand from May) ... and un-employment increased to five-million-437-thousand. a rise of 533-thousand. The UNEMPLOYMENT total is the highest in seventeen years.

But the government says there was a sizeable improvement in factory employment the first in a year and a half; AND the factory work-HOURS work increased; [redacted] of [redacted].

The army today announced new plans for reducing the National Guard and paid ground reserves. The revised program calls for cutting the guard from 400-thousand to 360-thousand men ... and the reserves from 300-thousand to 270-thousand before next June 30th. All but eleven of the 27 national guard divisions will be reduced in MANPOWER.

Five infantry divisions, and six armored divisions, will be kept at full organization strength. [redacted] ... earlier plan would have cut the actual [redacted] many states, and by many members of congress.

The army says the manpower reductions are required -- TO FIT this year's national guard budget.

Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine asked for and received a 24-hour breather from House investigators in Washington today. But the committee cautioned him not to spend the time "spreading propaganda."

TOMORROW, the house investigating sub-committee WILL TRY to find out why various companies, headed by Goldfine -- tied up a reported total of 776-thousand dollars in uncashed bank, IN SOME CASES checks -- for years.

Goldfine's attorney asked for the postponement.

Attorney Roger Robb told the committee the events of the week-end and yesterday had brought Goldfine to physical and mental exhaustion. SAID he had not been able to meet with his attorneys to prepare for the sub-committee's questions.

Committee chairman Oren Harris agreed to the postponement of Goldfine's testimony. But he said the sub-committee would not be happy if the t[redacted] intervening TIME were used "for the purpose of progagandizing the people of the united states by press conferences or radio-television appearances."

(During a delay granted some ten days ago, Goldfine [redacted] broadcast part of a carefully prepared statement of testimony before he delivered it to the committee itself.)

70

-0-

Before the senate rackets investigating committee today. [redacted] two Chicago restaurant operators testified they were victims of a shakedown racket run by a union that had no interest in the [redacted]d working conditions of its members. The testimony was given by John Rupcich and John McGann. They said they made payments to local [redacted] 394 of the Restaurant Workers union, in some cases [redacted] for employes who quit seven years ago and never were union members to begin with. McGann told the senate investigators: "If they HAD put up a picket line, we couldn't operate."

Here in New York, Vito Genovese ~~once called king of the nation's rackets~~ was indicted today with 36 alleged members of a Mafia international narcotics ring. The senate rackets committee last week pictured Genovese as amassing 30-million dollars in the rackets.

The Eisenhower administration today proposed a passport law which would ban travel abroad by any American whose activities helped Communism in the past ten years. Secretary of State Dulles called for its prompt passage as a matter of urgency. The proposal was designed to offset a June 16th Supreme Court ruling. The court held the secretary of state has no legal authority to withhold passports -- on grounds of communist party membership or associations.

In Colorado, an expert army mountain team is preparing to help rescue two men trapped for four days on a sheer rock wall of Conejos Canyon, in the (Cumbres) Mountains along the Colorado-New Mexico border. The men fell about 500 feet from a narrow trail along the canyon rim. Both are known to be injured -- one seriously.

In London, Queen Elizabeth has been ordered to bed, suffering from acute cattarhal sinusitis. Her condition is not serious.

In Philadelphia, members of the American Newspaper Guild have voted to accept a new two-year contract, ending a 30 day strike against the Philadelphia Inquirer.

President Eisenhower certainly won't get the kind of reception in Canada that Vice President Nixon got in Venezuela, but its no secret that a mood of resentment against this country has been building up in Canada for years..//

Canada is one of the fastest growing NATIONS in the world.. And her growing pains have resulted in a number of real or fancied grievances..//And SINCE countries are only human after all, many of these grievances HAVE TO BE blamed on SOMEONE ELSE.//And the nearest person to blame is ONE'S neighbor..

For a long time now Canadians have BEEN bored with the familiar American reference to the "longest undefended frontier in the world" Canada is NOT ONLY tired of being taken for granted by the United States, as a "Poor relation" but she feels that as America's best customer, she no longer deserves it. Canada spends about a Billion DOLLARS MORE in this country, than we do in Canada. Before the War, Canada's trouble was lack of money.. capital to exploit her vast and largely untapped resources...

But since the war, and actually in the past few years, Canada's trouble has not been lack of money---but the source of that money..

[redacted]

U.S. corporations and american private investors, now have upward of 13 billion dollars invested in Canada.. And the [redacted] Paradox is, that Canada at first welcomed this much-needed money to develop its resources and expand its industries.. Just as the United States welcomed British capital in the past, in order to develop...

But now among other things, the Canadians are annoyed by the fear that the profits from her resources will travel back into american pocketbooks...and furthermore, that Canadians don't have enough say in the companies that americans have financed in Canada..

This feeling of economic conflict, according to the Canadians, doesn't jibe with with the spirit of co-operation that the United States demands, and Canada has heretofore granted, in matters of military defense..

So far as most Americans are concerned, the so-called DEW line, or distant early warning system, is a tremendous electronic achievement, which protects both of us from Surprise attack over the North Pole..

But it would be an illusion to think that the Canadians are as happy about it as we are...

There's not as much grumbling about the numbers of American Air Force peersonnel in Canada as there is in Britain...but there's still grumbling.

And fresh irritants have appeared since this recession hit ~~Both~~ OUR COUNTRIES. U.S. purchases of Canadian copper, nickel and other ores have receded, [redacted] AND Now Canadians fear america will erect [redacted] higher tariffs against south-bound shipments of lead and zinc..

But Canadian complaints about American oil quota restrctions are even better documented.. The West Coast of the United States was one of Canada's best oil outlets...But recent U.S. oil import quotas and the growing cheapness of Middle East Oil has severely curtailed this market..

Canada would like to dispose of its excess oil in Montreal.. But aside from the lack of pipe-lines from the western producing areas to the big Canadian cities in the East, [redacted] its a fact that most of the Big Canadian oil companies are American afilliates---and being international in scope, they find it expedient to supply Montreal with oil from Venezuela...A situation which does NOT go down well [redacted] with small independent Canddian oil producers..

Canada feels, and not without reason, that if she's tied together with the United States in a North American Defense pact, then SHE SHOULD BE exempted from american import quotas on such a strategic material as oil. Or at least have first call on selling her oil in the United States, over such low-cost producers as the Middle East, Venezuela and Indonesia..

There are other U.S.-Canadian differences--water rights on rivers rising in Canada and flowing into the United States, American methods of disposing of surplus grain, and the right of American-owned Canadian companies to sell to red china, since these companies obey Washington's complete ban on the red china trade..

Aside from these tangible differences with the United States, Canadians are also sensitive to a more subtle danger to their rising nationalism. And that's the magnetic pull of american magazines, movies, radio and television.

But the most important element that has crystallized these Canadian grievances, is the rise of a politician to exploit them. Canada's new Prime MINISTER John Deefenbaker, didn't score his recent "landslide" victory on a platform of anti-americanism--but he did proclaim a crusade for "Canadianism."

In the pursuit of his now well-publicized ambition to switch fifteen per cent of Canada's trade from the United States to Britain, Mr. Deefenbaker has done little thus far, beyond arranging exchanges of trade missions. But he campaigned so strongly, and so victoriously on this issue, that he can hardly drop it, now that he has been swept into office..

But Canada's strongest [redacted] bargaining power in these talks with President Eisenhower, [redacted] is her powerful position in the jpint North American defense system. If, for example, Canada pulled out of the [redacted] Continental Air Defense Command, headquarters at Colorado Springs, we'd be in a bad way..

But neither politics nor trade can change geographical position, And Canada's security is IN-EXTRICABLY [redacted] wrapped-up with the United States..

So when [redacted] the dust settles [redacted] after these Canadian-American summit talks, there will [redacted] be promises and new understandings, but the bedrock of American and Canadian inter-dependence will be unchanged..

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news---First George Bryan.

Sherman Adams didn't accompany President Eisenhower to Canada today. The official reason? Because the President decided not to go fishing. That's what News Secretary Hagerty explained to reporters..

Said the original plan was for the President and Adams to go [redacted] fishing in New Brunswick. But the President then decided he couldn't spare the time. All this before the Adams-Goldfine gift-exchanging.

A reporter pointed out that Adams name was still on the travel list a week ago.. That may be, said Hagerty, "But as far as we're concerned [redacted]" the decision [redacted] was taken before the disclosures..

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow July 9,1958

Good Evening Everyone...Here's what happened today.

President Eisenhower got a big hand from the Canadian Parliament today, even tho he gave them a fairly blunt explanation of American policy, and cautioned that Canadian-American bickering must not obscure "the winning of the free world struggle against communist imperialism"

The President conceded that there are frictions between us, but expressed the belief, "we will find acceptable solutions."

Both the President and Prime Minister Diefenbaker, who introduced him, agreed the soviet economic and political threat, is as great as the "Russian" military menace.

Here's the way the President put it:

10 10- Tape runs 1'25 ; END CUE.

(Canadian fears of a trend in the United States away from forward-looking policies in the field of trade).

— o —

The President explained American policy of disposing of our surplus wheat...Said no one could quarrel with our purpose--although our methods may seem unobthodox. Sometimes we give it to famine-stricken nations, sometimes we barter it for strategic materials, sometime we turn the selling price into a loan to impoverished countries.

15

The President pointed out the benefits of this to Canada.

-0- Tape runs ; 53 secs

Evacue!

Graise standards of living and create enlarged markets for all of us.)

- o -

Mr. Eisenhower noted that Canadians are concerned because they buy more from this country--about a billion dollars WORTH, than they sell to us.. But he OBSERVED That this is done on individual initiative, NOT as part of a state-directed plan..

20

TAPE RUNS 30 secs

-0- END CUE: ... artificial re-direction (and applause)

That last burst of applause came mostly from the Liberal side of the Canadian Parliament... Because Conservative Prime Minister Diefenbaker had campaigned on a platform of switching 15 per cent of Canada's trade from the U.S. to Britain..

The President then made a final comment on the foreign trade policy of the United States..

TAPE RUNS 1:20:00

-0- END CUE ... "right to agree ... applause.)

(the hallmark of freedom is the right to differ as well as the right t to agree..)

The President's speech will be carried on many of these CBS Radio stations, later tonite.

After he spoke the President and his advisors conferred with Canadian leaders.. Then They announced agreement on greater co-operation in the fields of trade with communist China and safeguards against surprise attack.. The two governments will now consult one another on ALL cases where their laws on trade with Red China CONFLICT. And Experts from both countries will continue the study of safeguards against surprise attack..

6:00

In Washington, Bernard Goldfine was back before House investigators today -- to answer questions about HIS uncashed checks and other matters. CBS News correspondent Dan Schorr covered the hearing and we switch now to Washington for his direct report:

Switch to WASH. runs apppox 3 mins

End Cue: ... now back to Larry Leseur in NewYork."

9:30

Former president Harry Truman returned to New York from a European vacation today. And he told newsmen it is up to President Eisenhower to decide whether to fire his assistant -- Sharman Adams. "But," said Mister Truman, "The government would be in a bad fix if he loses Adams --- He's running it, you know."

Someone brought up the name of General Harry Vaughan -- Mister Truman's former military aide -- who came under fire during the Truman administration.

Mister Truman shot back: "There wasn't anything crooked about General Vaughan. He was viciously abused. They were trying to get at the man in the White House. Vaughan was my military aide and that's all. He had nothing to do with running the government."

Russia tonight accused the United States of side-stepping a "definite reply" on whether the Geneva "technical" talks should be devoted to BANNING nuclear weapons tests. The charge was made in a note handed to the United States ambassador in Moscow. The Kremlin first posed this question before the TECHNICAL TALKS OPENED on July first --

Our state department today charged Russian airmen with "inhuman tactics" -- in shooting down an un-armed United States air force transport over Soviet Armenia on June 27th. Department officials are studying all the facts of the incident -- to decide what further action might be taken. The nine-man crew finally released by the Soviets are still resting in Wiesbaden, Germany.

The United States SAID Today [redacted] inhumane attacks by Soviet jet fighters forced down an un-armed U. S. [redacted] transport plane in [redacted] Soviet Armenia on June 27th. // The state department -- describing itself as 'shocked' by the incident -- // strongly hinted it would send a formal protest to Moscow. // ..... // At the same time, the state department renewed its demand that Russia 'intervene' immediately -- to arrange The release of nine United States soldiers // held by the East [redacted] German communist authorities for the past 32 days. // The men were aboard a helicopter that strayed across the EAST German frontier in a thunderstorm.

~~The State Department has demanded that the Soviet intervene immediately to arrange the release of nine United States soldiers held captive in communist East Germany now for 32 days. The men were aboard a helicopter that strayed across the German frontier.~~

In Cuba, ~~the~~ Fidel Castro's rebels have released two more kidnaped Americans -- both civilians. The rebels still hold thirty united States sailors and marines, and ~~a~~ one Canadian civilian.

The Soviet Embassy in London says it has received two more letters -- purportedly written by crew-members of a United States bomber ... letters which threaten to drop a nuclear bomb off the British coast and then fly on TO RUSSIAN SANCTUARY. ~~to Russia as refugees.~~ ... United States authorities in London considered the first letter a fake; say ~~the~~ THE SAME ABOUT THESE TWO.

In St. Louis, The federal Court of Appeals has indicated it will rule before the fall school term -- in the LittleRock School case. At issue: -- a decision by a United States district judge suspending integration at the Little Rock high school for two and a half more years.

FROM

Reports in Eastern Europe say at least four -- and perhaps six -- more leaders of the Hungarian revolution have been executed -- following secret "trials" in Budapest." The Hungarian foreign office denies any knowledge of the executions.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to News -

First a word from. George Bgrn

Poet Ezra Pound, recently released from a U.S insane asylum [redacted], after the government dropped treason charges against him for the anti-american broadcasts he made during the war, still hasn't changed his mind.

Although american doctors testified he was too CRAZY insane [redacted] to stand trial, the bearded, 72-year-old Poet made it clear on arrival in Naples that he holds to his wartime views about his fellow-americans.

Poet Pound told Italian newsmen he didn't see how anybody could live in America, OUTSIDE a madhouse.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow July 9,1958

Good Evening Everyone...Here's what happened today.

President Eisenhower got a big hand from the Canadian Parliament today, even tho he gave them a fairly blunt explanation of American policy,and cautioned that Canadian-American bickering must not obscure "the winningof the free world struggle against communist imperialism"

The President conceded that there are frictions between us, but he exprssed the belief, "we will find acceptable solutions."

Both the President and Prime Minister Diefenbaker, who introduced him, agreed the soviet economic and political threat, is as great as the Russian military menace.

Here's the way the President put it:

-0- Tape runs 11:25 ; ENDCUE.

(Canadian fears of a trend in the United States away from forward-lookin policies in the field of trade). 1:25

— o —

The President explained American policy of disposing of our surplus wheat...Said no one could quarrel with our purpose--although our methods may seem unorthodox..Sometimes we give it away to famine-stricken nations, sometimes we barter it for strategic materials, sometime we turn the selling price into a loan to impoverished countries.

The President pointed out the benefits of this to Canada.

-0- Tape runs ; 53 secs.

End cue:

(raise standards of living and create enlarged markets for all of us.)

Mr. Eisenhower noted that Canadians are concerned because they buy more from this country--about a billion dollars WORTH, than they sell to us...But he pointed out this is done on individual initiative, NOT as part of a state-directed plan..

-0- TAPE RUNS 30 secs
END CUE: ... artificial re-direction (and applause)

That last burst of applause came mostly from the Liberal side of the Canadian Parliament...Because Conservative Prime Minister Diefenbaker campaigned on a platform of switching 15 per cent of Canada's trade from the U.S. to Britain..

The President then made a final comment on the foreign trade policy of the United States..

-0- TAPE RUNS 1:20:00
END CUE ... "right to agree ... applause.)

(the hallmark of freedom is the right to differ as well as the right to agree..)

The President's speech will be carried on many of these CBS Radio stations, later tonite.

After he spoke the President and his advisors conferred with Canadian leaders..They then announced agreement on greater co-operation in the fields of trade with communist China and safeguards against ~~XX~~ surprise attack.. The two government will now consult one another on ALL cases on which their laws on trade with Red China are out of harmony.. And Experts from both countries will continue the study of safeguards against surprise attack..

31

6: am

In Washington, Bernard Goldfine was back before House investigators today -- to answer questions about ~~[illegible]~~ uncashed checks and other matters. C B S News correspondent Dan Schorr covered the hearing and we switch now to Washington for his direct report:

Live
Switch to WASH. runs apppox 3 mins 1308

End Cue: ... now back to Larry Lesueur news in NewYork."

9: am

1055
9:50
2:00

Former president Harry Truman returned to New York from a European vacation today. And he told newsmen it is up to President Eisenhower to decide whether to fire his assistant -- Sharman Adams. "But," said Mister Truman, "The government would be in a bad fix if he loses Adams --- He's running it, you know."

4

~~When Someone brought up the name of General Harry~~ Vaughan -- Mister Truman's former ~~military aide -- who came under fire during~~ the Truman administration.

Mister Truman shot back: "There wasn't anything crooked about General Vaughan. He was viciously abused. They were trying to ~~xx~~ get at the man in the White House. Vaughan was my military aide and that's all. He had nothing to do with running the ~~x~~ government."

Russia tonight accused the United States of side-stepping a "definite reply" on whether the Geneva technical talks should be devoted to ~~[illegible]~~ ~~solving the suspension~~ banning of nuclear tests. The charge was made in a note handed to the United States ambassador in Moscow. The Kremlin first posed the question before the opening of the technical talks on July first ~~leading to belief the Russians would boycott the meetings~~

Our state department today charged Russian airmen with "inhuman ~~[illegible]~~ tactics" -- in shooting down an un-armed United States air force transport over Soviet Armenia on June 27th. Department officials are studying allthe facts of the indident -- to decide what further action might be taken. The nine-man crew finally released by the Soviets are still resting in Wiesbaden, Germany.

The United States said today inhumane attacks by Soviet jet fighters forced down an un-armed United States Air force transport plane in [redacted] oxxx Soviet Armenia on June 27th. The state department -- describing itself as shocked by the incident -- strongly hinted it would send a formal protest to Moscow. ..... At the same time, the state department renewed its demand that Russia intervene immediately -- to arrange release of nine United States soldiers held by East [redacted] German communist authorities for the past 32 days. The men were aboard a helicopter that strayed across the German frontier in a thunderstorm.

The State department also renewed its demand that Russia intervene immediately to arrange the release of nine United States soldiers held captive in communist East Germany now for 32 days. The men were aboard a helicopter that strayed across the German frontier.

In Cuba, Fidel Castro's rebels have released two more kidnaped Americans -- both civilians. The rebels still hold thirty united States sailors and marines, and one Canqdian civilian.

The Soviet Embassy in London says it has received two more letters -- purportedly written by crew-members of a United States bomber ... letters which threaten to drop a nuclear bomb off the British coast and then fly on to Russia sanctuary. ... United States authorities in London considered the first letter a fake; say these are, too.

Reports in Eastern Europe say at least four -- and perhaps six -- more leaders of the Hungarian revolution have been executed -- following secret "trials" in Budapest." The Hungarian foreign office denies any knowledge of the executions.

DB

-2-

(1) Adams

(2) Small dept. (Navy), cost dat structure damage
due to accident

(3)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Wednesday, July 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

LESUEUR: ... here's the way the President put it.

PRES. EISENHOWER: We both recognize the design of aggressive Communist imperialism which threatens every free nation. Both of us face a military threat and political attack. Our system of free enterprise is challenged throughout the world by a state-directed, state-controlled economic system.

Indeed, my friends, this could well be the area in which the competition will be most bitter and most decisive between the free world and Communist imperialism. We must never allow ourselves to become so preoccupied with any differences between our two nations that we lose sight of the transcendant importance of free world cooperation in the winning of the global struggle.

Let me now point to some of the matters which, it seems to me, are troublesome between us. Among these, some examples are the surplus wheat disposal policies of the United States, the imbalance in our mutual trade, certain aspects of United States private investment in Canada, and Canadian fears of a trend in the United States away from forward-looking policies in the field of trade.

LESUEUR: The President explained American policy of disposing of our surplus wheat. ...

... about the benifits of this to Canada.

PRES. EISENHOWER: In several respects, despite inconvenience and even occasional damage in the past, Canada stands to benefit from our moving some surplus agricultural commodities into consumption overseas. First and most evident of all, many hungry people around the world have ben been fed food which they otherwise would not have had. Secondly, had these products remained in dead storage they would have had a depressing influence on the world market and on world prices. Finally, the funds which we have been enabled to make available for recipient countries should in the long run help to raise standards of living which, in turn, will create enlarged markets for all of us.

LESUEUR: Mr. Eisenhower noted that Canadians ...

... that his is done on individual initiative - not as part of a state directed plan.

PRES. EISENHOWER: To try to balance our books once a month or once a year with every nation with which we trade would stifle rather than expand trade. I assume that Canada is as interested as we are in the expansion of world trade rather than in its artificial redirection.

LESUEUR: That last burst of applause ...

... on the foreign trade policy of the United States.

PRES. EISENHOWER: In 1934 the United States took an historic decision to embark on a positive policy of fostering trade with the launching of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements program. This policy we continue to support and to practice.

The Government of the United States, after a public searching of soul at times of renewal of the Trade Agreements Act, has consistently reaffirmed this policy. Have no fear that the United States will abandon a policy so well established.

Finally, there is no cause to be surprised or disturbed to discover that occasionally differences arise between us. The distinguishing character of peoples of the free world lies in the fact that differences between them can develop, can be expressed and then amicably resolved.

We in the United States have no more desire than you have to seek in our relations with other nations the silent sullen unity that elsewhere has been purchased or imposed. The hallmark of freedom is the right to differ as well as the right to agree.

LESUEUR: The President's speech will be carried on many of these CBS Radio stations later tonight.

... CBS NEWS correspondent Dan Schorr covered the hearing and we switch now to Washington for his direct report.

SCHORR: Bernard Goldfine spent 5 hours on the stand today while the House Investigating subcommittee groped through the maze of its his interlocking companies and mysterious check writing practices. But, when the day was done, he had won and important point. Upheld by Chairman Harris in his stubborn refusal to tell all about the uncashed checks. And, he had the additional satisfaction of seeing a committee member rebuked for raising a quashed 49 year old indictment against him. The 3/4 million dollars in checks had not yet arrived in the committee room when Goldfine started testifying, so committee counsel Robert Lichman opened with a line of questioning intended to show that after the intersession of Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams with the Federal Trade Commission in 1953, Goldfine was in Lichman's words "emboldent to commit more flagrant violations of labeling requirements." Goldfine's son, H. Maxwell, manager of one of his plants, was sworn in to answer questions that father could not, but proved almost equally vague. This line wasn't getting far and after lunch Chairman Harris with evident relief turned to the uncashed checks, which meanwhile had arrived. Goldfine aided by the blond sharp tongued secretary Mildred Paperman, produced certified checks still uncashed, photostats of others, unissued and recently deposited and a break down that included $89,000 in checks bought in 1941-2 and 3, for which he could not account, there were just no records, he said, $390,000 deposited since May, some since the investigation started and $210,000 still outstanding. An hour of questioning failed to produce any recollection of what had happened to these checks issued in the '40's. Then, committee members turned to the recently deppsited checks. Time and time again Goldfine repeated, "They had not been used for anything connected with Federal agencies or officials." "What were they used for, why did he write checks to his own companies and to others which were not cashed? Why were so many deposited after the investigation began?" These he refused to answer as not pertinent or reteveant. Suddenly, Democratic Representative Mack of Illinois asked Goldfine, if he'd ever been indicted for concealment of assets in a bankrupcy case? Challenged by Goldfine to explain what he was talking about, Mack produced a copy of an indictment dating back to 1909 when Goldfine was 18 years old. The indictment marked on its face as dropped for lack of sufficient evidence, Goldfine shouting over the chairman's gavel charged this wqs blackmail. Republican Representative Wolverton of New Jersey said"the raising of the indictment was unfortunate and chairman Harris agreed. Then, Republican Bennet of Michigan pressed the qu stion, of what the uncashed checks were used for and Harris ruled the question irrelevent. Bennet indicated he'd appeal the ruling to the full committee but it was clear the showdown had come and Goldfine had won. Incidentally, Goldfine the coiner of such phrases as an "eye for a tooth" came up with a new one today. "The more I think of the situation, the less I think of it."

Now, back to Larry Lesueur in New York.

LESUEUR: Russia tonight accused the United States ...

PT/n.m.

Lesuer for Murrow

Thursday, July 10, 1958

Good Evening everyone, here's what happened today:

The United States and Canada have agreed to create a joint cabinet committee on continental defense. And Canada's Prime minister Diefenbaker -- who [redacted] -- has indicated the United States may allow Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. FIRMS -- to trade with Red China in non-strategic goods. ... In Washington, Commerce secretary Weeks also indicates such trade will be permitted -- if the Canadian government approves the shipments.

We'll have a direct report on the Ottawa meetings later, FROM A CBS NEWS correspondent on the scene.

In Washington, another active day for Bernard Goldfine. House investigators have decided against any immediate action on whether to cite Goldfine for contempt -- for failing to answer questions about his uncashed checks. Democratic chairman oren Harris of Arkansas -- says the sub-committee has decided to complete the hearing before deciding the point. Goldfine will return for more questioning tomorrow. ... In today's session -- Goldfine admitted paying more than one thousand dollars worth of hotel bills for three Republican senators -- Styles Bridges and Norris Cotton -- both of New Hampshire -- and Frederick Payne of Maine. All three acknowledged the payments. ... House investigators also put into the record a figure of three thousand dollars as the cost of hotel bills Goldfine paid for Sherman Adams, President Eisenhower's chief aide. ... The cost had been set before at two thousand dollars.

Goldfine was told to expect a subpoena for his business records. The committee still wants to know why his various companies issued 777-thousand dollars worth of checks -- some of them long uncashed. ... When he refused to talk about a 20-thousand dollar withdrawal Goldfine is alleged to have made from one company -- the contempt question arose.

Five american airmen who bailed-out over Soviet Armenia, when Russian Migs shot down their unarmed transport plane, told a story TODAY of rough handling by the local populace.//

The four who rode the burning plane down, and were picked up by soviet soldiers, were not mistreated. AND All nine were treated with military correctness after the soviet army took them into custody.

The airmen appeared fresh and well-rested after two days back at their Veesbaden, Germany Air Base... But they related stories with a war-time ring about them, when interviewed by american newsmen.

30

Their senior officer, Col. Dale Brannon, of Chardon, Ohio, denied emphatically that they had intentionally violated Soviet air-space. Said they were on a routine cargo flight from Veesbaden to Pakistan. After a refuelling stop at Cyprus, he said the plane "overflew" soviet territory when The instruments went out during a thunderstorm.

Col. Brannon said they didn't realize they were over unfriendly territory, until two jet-fighters which had been criss-crossing in front of them, opened fire. They had assumed they were either Turkish or Iranian fighters, until they saw the soviet red star.

30

He said they immediately lowered the wheels to show their intention to land, but the red jets opened up and set Then ~~the~~ left-wing afire. The bail-out signal was given, but only five men could get out through the flames...The other four rode the plane down to a makeshift landing strip, and abandoned the burning aircraft..Soviet soldiers soon arrived and took them into custody.

The five airmen who bailed out, had experiences ranging from rough-handling to near-lynching..Major Bennie Shupe of Miami, Florida, HAD HIS HANDS TIED BEHIND HIS BACK AND ~~had~~ a noose pulled round his neck by Armenian peasants, until he convinced them he was an American. 30

Major Shupe said the rope was strung over a telephone pole, and all he could do in desperation was to try to identify himself as an american, by yelling out the names of American cities--When he finally got to New York and Chicago, a flicker of recognition ran through the mob, and they took the rope off his neck..

~~XX~~ a reporter suggested, The that The roughly-treated americans might have been mistaken for Turks, who oppressed the Armenians under the old Ottoman Empire...But a spokesman said the Air Force 4 simply doesn't know, 4 because neither the Armenians NOR the Americans understood each other's language.. 30

The air force CONCEDES that it may never find the mouse that was shot into space lastNITE a test of a ballistic missile nose cone last night.

The Thor-Able missile -- launched from cape canaveral, Florida -- IS KNOWN TO HAVE PLUNGED into the South Atlantic about six thousand miles from the launching point. But the air force says darkness has postponed search for the rocket nose cone until tomorrow. ... The air force calls the TWO-STAGE ROCKET TEST "successful."

(3)

The Cuban rebels have released one of thirty American servicemen kidnaped and held as hostages for the past two weeks. He is Airman Thomas Mosness of Ames, Iowa. Twenty nine U.S sailors and marines, and one Canadian Civilian + ARE still are held as by Fidel Castro's men.

[Mosness WAS BROUGHT OUT of the jungle by navy helicopter -- within hours after the Commander of the Atlantic Fleet -- Admiral Jerauld Wright -- arrived at Guantanamo Bay -- to see what could be done to release his men.]

Presidents Tito of Yugoslavia /and Nasser of the United Arab Republic -- / today appealed to the Eastern /and Western blocs/ to settle their differences. [redacted] /in a communique issued after eight days of talks on Brioni -- Tito's island retreat --/ the TWO leaders called for a summit conference of East-West nations --- and an end to nuclear weapons tests -- AND PRODUCTION, [redacted] The [redacted] presidents, [redacted] domination, the interference by some countries in the internal affairs of other countries, and the use of pressure or force or threat of force by any country against any another one."

Western and Soviet bloc [redacted] scientists announced tonight they have reached their first [redacted] agreement -- in the geneva conference on detection of nuclear WEAPONS TESTS. A conference communique says the delegates have agreed to recommend that the accoustic system be included "in the list of basic methods for the detection of nuclear explosions -- with the aid of a network of control posts." ... The wording appears to indicate that the western-sponsored system of world-wide control stations -- presumably including [redacted] Russia and Red China -- has been accepted in principle.

8

Now for the report on President Eisenhower's talks in Canada, here is CBS White House correspondent Robert Pierpoint in Ottawa:

TAPE RUNS 4:40

end cue: ... back to CBS news in New York.

Three persons are known dead and two are missing after AN earth-quake that shook the south east section of Alaska last night. The victims were [redacted] picnicker-s on [redacted] island -- that rose 20 feet at the height of the quake ... Then fell back into the sea. ... The quake also caused the worst cable break in the history of the Alaska communications system.

Alaska's governor Mike Stepovich says a plebiscite on Alaskan statehood will be held before August first ... [redacted] and he says an emphatic "yes" vote is indicated ...

That was Roosevelt Freeport + in Ottawa

In St. Louis, the U.S Circuit court of Appeals has set August fourth to hear an appeal from an order SUSPENDING [redacted] integration at Little Rock's central high school [redacted]. August fourth is the date suggested by the National association for the advancement of colored people.

UNTIL 1961.!!

This is Larry LeSueur

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News..

First George Bryan..

Adlai Stevenson may be on his way to Moscow, but foreign communists aren't going to scrub his back..

In Helsinki today, the former democratic presidential nominee, was initiated, like all foreign dignataries, into the mysteries of a Finnish bath, where temperatures reach the boiling point..

According to an old Finnish custom, all the top politicians joined him...and they followed thru on the tradition of scrubbing one another's backs...All except the Communists...They didn't show up at all..

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Thursday, July 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

LESUEUR: And, now, for that report on Pres. Eisenhower's talks in Canada. Here's CBS NEWS White House correspondent Robert Pierpoint in Ottawa.

PIERPOINT: In high good humor, President Eisenhower wound up this final day of his current Canadian visit with a sunny afternoon of golf at nearby Ottawa Hunt Club. Earlier in the day, the President and Prime Minister Diefenbaker had held their final conference. At this meeting, according to New Secretary James Hagerty, the President and Mr. Diefenbaker discussed two main topics: North American defense problems and trade policies toward Communist countries - particularly Communist China. The two heads of government have decided to set up a new cabinet level international committee to be known as the Canada-United States Committee on Joins Defense. The statement announcing the establishment of this new committee says its purpose is to see that matters of continental defense will be subject to civilian decision and guidance. Close cooperation and some integration already exists on a military level, but the Canadians have felt that this was not enough. They are therefore pleased that members of the Canadian cabinet will sit down periodically with the U. S. Secretaries of State, Defense and the Treasury to confer over joint military policy. According to News Secretary Hagerty, an example of what might be discussed and decided at a cabinet level meeting of this joint committee would be whether Canadian fighter bombers now operating side-by-side with and under American military commands should be equipped with the same types of modern nuclear weapons as are the American aircraft. Hagerty refused to disclose what had been the result of discussions concerning trade with Communist block nations at this mornings Diefenbaker-Eisenhower meeting. But later today, under questioning in the House of Parliament, Prime Minister Diefenbaker stated that Pres. Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles had agreed to allow American owned companies operating in Canada to sell non-strategic goods to Communist China. This would mean for instance, that American automobile companies with Canadian manufacturing subsidiaries would be able to sell their Canadian made cars to the Communist Chinese. Following this mornings Eisenhower-Diefenbaker conference, in answer to a direct question from this reporter, Presidential News Secretary Hagerty stated that Pres. Eisenhwwer had not agreed to any relaxation of U. S. trade restrictions against Communist China. The two statements seemed contrictory and just a short while ago, Mr. Hagerty declared he would not change his stated position when asked to comment on Prime Minister Diefenbaker's statement to the Canadian Parliament.

In view of the battle act outlawing such trade, and of the continuing bitterness in the United States against the Chinese, it would appear that Mr. Diefenbaker's understanding of his agreement with Mr. Eisenhower may undergo considerable scrutiny in the United States. Thedelicate issues involved here help explain why the American side in Canada has preferred to discuss the simpler problems of mutual defense. This difference of interest and/or opinion has been present all through these Ottawa talks. Pres. Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles continuously have stressed the importance of strengthening mutualdefense against the Soviet Union. While the Canadians have wanted instead to talk about their trade problems and how the United States might help them. Before Pres. Eisenhower came here, he said he would discuss with the Canadian government such issues as the under-cutting of Canadian wheat markets by surplus American wheat. Canada's trouble in exporting oil, lead, zinc and aluminum to the United States and other issues bothering the Canadians. Well, in his speech yesterday, before the Canadian Parliament, the President did discuss these issues. He explained American policies, in effect, told the Canadians that these policies would be continued and warned Canada not to become so preoccupied with local differences that it might forget the real menace of world Communism. Although many Canadians admired their American visitors frankness, it was not exactly what they had hoped here. But, while some Canadians may be disappointed that their economic troubles remain unresolved, Pres. Eisenhower's visit certainly has not been time wasted. Once again he has demonstrated by his very presence that Americans do care about their northern neighbor.

Back now to CBS NEWS in New York.

LESUEUR: That was Robert Pierpoint in Ottawa.

Lesueur for Murrow Friday, July 11, 1958

Good evening everyone ... here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower has returned to the White House -- after a three-day Canadian-American "summit" conference that produced three concrete decisions .... that a joint cabinet committee on continental defense [redacted] be created; that the two governments [redacted] work on plans for safeguards against surprise attack across the NORTH POLE .... and that They will consult [redacted] on lower levels to try to dissolve differences over trade with communist China -- TRADE by CANADIAN AFFILIATES of AMERICAN companies. Canadian prime minister [redacted] Diefenbaker -- reporting to the House of Commons on his talks with President Eisenhower said he hopes that matters of trade to Red China will be SOLVED soon. He said President Eisenhower pledged to consider favorably the -- suspending of penalties against any U-S company whose Canadian subsidiary traded non-strategic goods to Red China.

12

ON his way back to the Capital, the president stopped off at Massena, New York to inspect the huge St. Lawrence Seaway and power project a joint, billion dollar venture of the two nations. He spent two hours looking over the massive array of dams, canals and giant generators. The St. Lawrence Seaway will turn out nearly two-million kilowats of power and will give ocean-going vessels a passage from the Atlantic ocean to the great lakes. President Eisenhower glowed with interest as he toured the project. It was just four years ago that he signed the legislation to build it.

D1

(3)

Bernard Goldfine -- the Boston industrialist # appeared before the house "influence" investigating # sub-committee for the fifth time today. And the congressmen were far from satisfied by Goldfine's answers -- OR lack of answers. // The question of "contempt of congress" was dominant.

For the full story, we switch [redacted] to Washington and CBS news correspondent Daniel Schorr:

TAPE RUNS approx 3:25

end cue: ... now back to CBS news in New York.

The senate [redacted]

suddenly, and without a word of debate -- today passed a "code of ethics" for government officials. The house had approved the code eleven months ago. || The senators did not mention the current House investigation of the relations between Presidential assistant Sherman Adams -- and his gift-giving friend, || Bernard Goldfine. But it was apparent the senate's unexpected action stemmed from the disclosure that Goldfine gave presents to Adams and other government officials. ... [redacted]

Among other things, the 10-point code of ethics enjoins federal officials : "Never to discriminate unfairly by the dispensing of special favors or privileges to anyone -- whether for remuneration or not ..... and never to accept, for himself or his family -- favors or benefits under circumstances which might be construed by reasonable persons as influencing the performance of his governmental duties."

This "code of ethics" -- has no legal force -- and does not require the signature of the president.

413

Contempt of congress proceedings were begun today against Tony Accardo -- reputed boss of Chicago's underworld. He was accused of abusing his fifth amendment guarantee against self-incrimination while appearing before the Senate rackets committee. Chairman John McClellan said it is time for the courts to rule on whether the fifth amendment can be used "as a device simply to refuse to give information that could not possibly be incriminating." ..... Accardo refused to answer about ~~150~~ one hundred and fifty questions put by the committee. ... ~~Most of them concerned violent crime~~ most of them concerned violent crime in Chicago, but Accardo also refused to answer such questions as "where he was ~~in Chicago, and Accardo refused to answer questions as to where he~~ born, and whether he is a United States citizen.. ~~The committee says he is a native of Chicago.~~ ... Accardo refused to say anything about whether he was involved in an underworld conspiracy to shake down hotels, restaurants and liquor vendors (in Chicago) -- through gangster-run protection associations ~~organized by [redacted]~~ That's the main subject of the committee's present inquiry.

54

The United States has protested to Russia against the shooting down of [redacted] that un-armed American transport plane // inside the Soviet union two weeks ago. // ... The State department also renewed its demand that Russia intervene immediately — to obtain the release of nine american airmen held in East Germany. // The [redacted] Germans have refused to free them [redacted] directly with the [redacted] East [redacted] puppet regime.

58

In a speech to the East German Party congress today, Soviet Premier Kruschyev charged, that the western uproar over the execution of the Hungarian freedom leaders, was a cover-up for a plot to intervene in Lebanon... In addition he said the western powers were using Yugoslavia as a trojan horse, to shatter the soviet bloc..

[redacted]

Kruschyev was repeatedly interrupted by the cheers of some four thousand [redacted]..

The Soviet Premier said the United States had paid Marshall Tito a hundred million dollars for his "slanderous attacks on Russia."

He said the United States was wasting its money on Yugoslavia, and warned Marshal Tito "to shun U.S. aid." The americans, said Kruschyev don't give out money for nothing...You have to sell your soul to get it."

[redacted]

68

History doesn't necessarily repeat itself, but there are times, when conditions surrounding past and present events, bear a marked similarity... Two years ago it was Suez and Hungary... and now the headlines are Lebanon and Yugoslavia..

The events that led up to the world crisis over Suez and Hungary, are of course, decidedly different from those now surrounding Lebanon and Yugoslavia.. But each in its way, is an outgrowth, of what happened in 1956..

The Suez Canal, was and IS, the main shipping supply line for the oil of western Europe...And among the many things that Lebanon represents, its also the main outlet for the Middle East oil pipelines..

And now apparently, President Nasser thirsts to control both..

Two years ago, the mass unrest in Poland and Hungary, developed into the most significant revolt against Moscow's authority since the defection of Marshall Tito..

And now the Soviet Union seems to be seeking a showdown with Marshall Tito..

The break between Premier Kruschyev and Marshall Tito, appears to be complete... Kruschyev's endorsement of Stalin's attack on Tito, and the harshness of his accusations that Tito accepted american bribes, makes a full economic break with Yugoslavia, the least that can be expected... And this might prove critical for Marshall Tito, since 25 per cent of all Yugoslav trade is with the Soviet bloc..

After President Nasser nationalized the Suez Canal in 1956, and Britain and France got no satisfaction from the U.N. or in private discussions with Nasser, rumours began to circulate of an anglo-french military build-up on the island of Cyprus... Those rumors PROOVED correct..

This year, its no secret that Britain and the United States have the largest military forces in the Eastern Mediterranean since the Suez.Crisis.. And France has ITS crack combat divisions only a parachute-drop away in Algeria..

On Cyprus, today Britain reportedly has some 30 thousand troops, and six bomber and fighter wings...The U.S. Sixth fleet boasts three marine battalions, of several thousand men.

This year Again, altho for diffeerent reasons,of course, Britain and France ARE getting no satisfaction from the U.N. over their claims the Nasser has massively interfered in Lebanon..

The U.N. observers have reported that they can't find any such evidence, and Dag Hammarshuld has said that "only Lebanon can save Lebanon."

Any call by Lebanon for a U.N.Police Force, is sure to be met by a Soviet Veto, in the Security Council, and the chances of such a force getting the necessary two-thirds majority [redacted] from a special U.N. assembly session, appear slim.

But the Big Difference IN this year's Middle East Crisis, is that the United States and Russia, are NOT acting in concert, as they did when they stemmed the Suez invasion...They are in direct opposition over Lebanon, against a background of growing tension in the cold war.

But as Secretary [redacted] Dulles said recently, the possibility of direct American intervention in Lebanon, cannot be over-ruled.. And After Kruschyev's STERN warning to Marshall Tito, and East Germany's threats that Yugoslavia's leaders MAY ~~might~~ suffer the fate of the executed Hungarians, it would seem that the chances ~~possibility~~ of history repeating itself with another two-pronged crisis, cannot BE Entirely dismissed..

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the New...First A WORD FROM FORD. ~~George Hagen...~~

Britain's leading "men's" fashion magazine, has taken NOTE of the Adams-Goldfine case...

In an editorial today, the Magzaine "Tailor and Cuttdr" suggests, that american post-war generosity, and our emphasis on success, || makes the choice of a Vicuna logical, as the new symbol of the United States..

This authoritative voice of London's Savile Row adds, The Vicuna should replace the Eagle, "Because it's soft to a touch."

This is Larry LEsueur. Good nite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Friday, July 11, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Bernard Goldfine, the Boston industrialist, appeared before the House influence investigating subcommittee for the fifth time today - and the Congressmen were far from satisfied by Goldfine's answers - or lack of answers. The question of contempt of Congress was dominant. For the full story, we switch to Washington and CBS News correspondent Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: Twenty-two times today Bernard Goldfine refused to answer questions about financial manipulations with the Boston Port Development Company, which he controls. Each time, reading from a slip of paper, he said it was not "pertinent or relevant" to the matters the House subcommittee was authorized to investigate. Each time, as though enacting some weird ritual, Chairman Oren Harris stated the question was relevant, ordered Goldfine to reply and he refused again. The ritual had grim meaning. The subcommittee was laying the groundwork for a contempt of Congress citation against Goldfine - and as Harris told me later, the committee was proceeding very carefully, trying to comply with last year's Supreme Court decision limiting questioning by Congressional committees to their proper scope. Before today's hearing started Goldfine, hitherto a voluntary witness, was handed a subpoena, which he first threw away, then accepted. Harris opened the hearing by reading a statement on which committee counsel Robert Lishman had worked until midnight last night, asserting that it was proper for the committee to conduct this line of questioning as part of Congress's attempt to see if the Securities and Exchanges Commission was doing its job adequately and to see if new laws were needed to protect minority stockholders against milking of companies by majority stockholders. Never had a Congressional committee seemed more judicial than during this careful procedure of joining the issue. But then as though the tension was too great, suddnely the hearing erupted into more familiar naming of names; this time Democratic names. Republican O'Hara, of Minnesota, brought out by questioning Goldfine that he had been friendly with Democrats too, that he had given gifts to President Truman's assistant, John Steelman, who had helped him arrange a loan of $12 million from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to finance an underground garage in Boston, a loan that later fell through when, as Goldfine put it, "the fur coat matter" meaning the mink scandal, "came up." Steelman, now a private labor consultant, later denied obtaining any favors for Goldfine, though saying he did support the underground garage project "because it was at a time when we were so concerned with underground bomb shelters."

Steelman was not the only one mentioned. Goldfine had also entertained, Republicans' questions developed, Democratic Governor Furcolo, of Massachusetts, and the late ex-Governors Devers and Curley. He had contributed generously to Democratic as well as Republican campaign funds. But Goldfine did not remember ever paying a hotel bill for Adlai Stevenson, as O'Hara suggested. Goldfine also told more about his gifts of cloth to twenty-three governors in 1955. One governor, unnamed, asked for more cloth; another requested a pair of trousers. After this semi-comic interlude the committee straightened up and returned to the serious business of a possible contempt citation. Democrat Williams, of Mississippi, warned Goldfine he'd better reconsider over the week-end his refusal to answer the questions put to him. Goldfine said "I'll be glad to reconsider - but I feel I've done the best I could." Later Harris said there is no question that a basis has been laid for a contempt citation, but he added that no action would be taken before Goldfine finishes testifying.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: The Senate suddenly and without a word of debate, today passed a Code of Ethics for Government officials.

Ed. trans. P. O.

LeSueur for Murrow... Monday July 14,1958

(1)

Good Evening everyone...Here's what happened today..

Just before Dawn, pro-Egyptian Army revolutionaries overthrew the pro-western government of Iraq..and proclaimed the formation of a Republic friendly to President Nasser of the United Arab Republic..

The coup d'etat came as a stunning surprise to the West..

The overthrow of the civilian government of Young King Feisel of Iraq, apparently deprives the West of its richest and most powerful ALLY in the Middle East..

The coup--if successful---smashes the corner-stone of the anti-communist Bagdad Pact..and also the new Federation of Iraq and Jordon, created to counter Nasser's ambitions..

A showdown throughout the "oil-rich" Middle East--including rebellion-torn Lebanon may be at hand..

Direct communication with Bagdad is now severed..And the reprts from there are now vague and conflicting..

President Eisenhower has called for an emergency meeting of the United Nations security council tomorrow to take up the new Middle East crisis. His decision TO INSTRUCT The U.S. Delegation to ASK for a Security council meeting, followed an extra-ordinary two-hour meeting with democratic and republican congressional leaders at the White House.

Earlier in the day, the president had broken off a national security council meeting -- to confer with Secretary of state Dulles ... and Vice-President Nixon om the Iraqi situation.

In both Congress and the executive branch of the government, deep American concern over the day's developments was evident. Democratic Senator Mike Mansfield of Montana told newsmen after the bi-partisan conference -- that the president is "gravely concerned over this unexpected turn of events."

Before the long meeting --- senate foreign relations committee chairman Theodore green of Rhode Island --- described the Eisenhower Mid-East doctrine as ineffective ... and called for a new look at Mid-east policies.

158

[redacted] Baghdad radio says Iraq is under [redacted] martial law -- with an ardent nationalist -- General Abdel Karim Kassem -- at the head of [redacted] new MILITARY CABINET.

But other reports -- received in Tehran, Beirut and nearby capitals -- indicate the revolutionists may be having difficulties. [redacted]

[redacted]

The FATE [redacted] of young King Faisal IS STILL [redacted] not known.

An early broadcast from the rebel-controlled Baghdad radio -- said Feisal's AGED premier -- [redacted] INFLUENTIAL NURI ES SAID -- and Crown prince Abdul Ilah -- were killed by mobs in the street. The broadcasts said Abdul Ilah's body was dismembered and burned... but gave no DEFINITE [redacted] word ON WHAT HAPPENED TO YOUNG KING [redacted] Faisal the second. There was [redacted] fighting around Faisal's [redacted] palace. And some communist broadcasts -- which hailed the coup as a triumph -- said Faisal has been arrested.

(Take)

But [redacted] broadcast [redacted] on the same [redacted] wavelength in Jerusalem [redacted] PROCLAIMED [redacted] ILAH -- Abdul [redacted] -- Nuri [redacted] and [redacted] mobs in counter-attacks.

[redacted]

For a report of the situation from Nasser's capital -- where censorship is the rule --- we switch now to CBS news correspondent Frank Kearns in [redacted] Cairo:

TAPE RUNS: 2:50

ends on cue: ... now back to CBS news in New York.

(5)

The revolt in Iraq took place on the eve of a scheduled meeting of the Asian members of the Bagdad Pact in Istanbul...King Faisal and Premier Said were to have flownn to Turkey today for that meeting.. After their failure to arrive at Istanbul airport, the leaders of Iran Pakistan and Turkey, Then rushed to Ankara for emergency talks on the revolt in Bagdad and the consquent fate of the Bagdad Pact..

The Iraq revolt has heartened pro-Nasser rebels in Lebanon. Reports say THEY are preparing an all-out attack on the pro-western government of President Chamoun. // in Jordon, Young King Hessayn, the 23-yearOold cousin of the DEPOSED Feisel of Iraqm has proclaimedhimself Chief of State of the Iraq-Jordon Federation..One unconfirmed report SAYS he would lead loyal Iraqis in a counter-attack against the Bagdad revolutionaries.

JH

Early orders over the rebel-CONTROLLED Bagdad radio -- told the people not to attack foreign embassies or other establishments.../and announced the lives and property of foreigners would be safe-guarded.

American embassy personnel in Baghdad are reported safe -- BUT under guard by rebel troops. //

In London, the British foreign office says it has received a report that Iraqi mobs SACKED AND BURNED the British embassy, [redacted]. All British diplomats are reported safe.

Britain's prime minister MacMillan HAS called an emergency cabinet meeting tonight.

For British reaction TO the Iraqi situation, we switch now to London and CBS news correspondent Alexander Kendrick: reporting

69

TAPE RUNS: 3:35

Ends on cue: ... now back to CBS news in New York.

54

Nuri Said -- the brusque, tough nationalist who has been premier of Iraq for fifteen times -- is 71 years old, and was called one of the most durable pro-western leaders in the Middle East. His policies had brought to Iraq prosperity -- based on the 50-50 sharing in the profits of the British-owned Iraq petroleum company -- which developed Iraq's rich oil resources. ... Nationalization of Iraq's oil could be a threat to western Europe -- which depends on cheap Middle east oil. Nasser's control of the Suez canal -- and pipelines through Syria and Lebanon to the Mediterranean -- already have placed Europe's oil supply in considerable jeopardy. ... The middle East has almost seventy per cent of the free world's known oil deposits. Western Oil companies have more than three billion dollars invested in plants and equipment in the area. American oil companies own about 47 per cent of this investment.

Today -- as a result of the events in Iraq -- oil shares on the London stock market dropped sharply. The reports from Iraq brought general selling to the New York stock market -- which sustained its worst drop of the year. International oil companies with Middle-East holdings lost from one to four dollars a share

President Eisenhower [redacted] in effect rejected, Soviet premier Khruschev's request for long-term credits -- to finance proposed Russian purchases of U.S. machinery and other products. [redacted] suggested that [redacted] stepped-up [redacted] Soviet purchases // could help over-come effects of the American [redacted] recession. In a letter to Khruschev, the president said long-term credits would raise complex legal and political questions //. And he reminded Khrushchev that export-import trade in the United States // is private enterprise, not under government control.

-0-

United States navy [redacted] spokesmen in Cuba tonight said Fidel Castro's rebels have failed to release any of the 29 American servicemen they hold captive. [redacted] The rebels had promised last night to begin freeing the hostages today. There was no immediate explanation for their failure to follow through.

This is Larry Lesueur - Ill be back in a moment with a footnote The News — First George Bryan

The Senate today passed AND SENT TO the House A BILL [redacted] to provide unified control of the nation's air traffic..The measure would create a federal aviation agency with a civilian [redacted] ADMINISTRATOR, empowered to make traffic rules for all U.S. aircraft..

But while congress is debating,the air force training command has come up with some Yankee ingenuity... Says last January it started painting its trainers with bright orange fluorescent paint...There hasn't been a single air collision among training planes since then..

This is Larry LeSueur--Good nite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Monday, July 14, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... For a report on the situation from Nasser's capital, where censorship is the rule, we switch now to CBS News correspondent Frank Kearns in Cairo.

KEARNS: The Egyptian government has finally broken a 15 hour silence on the reported Iraqi revolution. Cairo Radio just declared the United Arab Republic officially recognizes the new government in Baghdad. The radio says Nasser has cabled the new regime, in Baghdad, his appreciation for their move in recognizing the United Arab Republic. The radio also says that Nasser, en route home from Yugoslavia, cabled the military leaders in Iraq, "May God help you to achieve good for Arabism." This is the first official reaction here to events in Baghdad. But the general jubilation here all day has left no doubt how Egyptians welcome this morning's dramatic news from Baghdad. Cairo Radio has been full of excited newscasts sandwiches between throbbing martial music. Two songs are being played over and over, one a stirring religious march: (indistinct) "God is great," and another written in the hectic days after the undeclared Suez war. Reports from Gaza say some 50,000 people, mostly Palestine refugees, staged a wild parade up there today - and Cairo's two afternoon newspapers headline: "Revolution in Iraq" and "Iraq a republic." Iraqi students have demonstrated at their embassy here for reports say all Iraqi embassadors to Arab countries are suspended till further notice. Egyptians generally have been clustered around radios, in cafes, shops and homes, and Cairo Radio newscasts have suddenly changed Iraqi Crown Prince's first name, Abdul, " (indistinct) of God" to Abdal, "Enemy of God." But behind the general jubilation individual Egyptians and foreigners alike are uneasy and worried. The first foreign persons I met today, after the big news from Baghdad, used the same word in three different languages. In Arabic (im-distinct) ... and in English, "war." Even the most optimistic pro-Nasser circles are frankly pessimistic about possible reaction, from London in particular. And nowhere in Western circles here can one find a single optimist. Meanwhile, the entire Middle East sky is jammed with conflicting reports of exactly what is happening in Baghdad. Most sources here in Cairo, however, tend to place full credence in Baghdad Radio claims that the revolutionary leaders have staged a successful coup d'etat and are in complete control. "The Middle East," one European diplomat commented here today, "the Middle East will never be the same again." Another diplomat, an American, simply pointed to a book on a shelf. The title of that book: "There Goes the Middle East."

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: The revolt in Iraq took place on the eve of a scheduled meeting of the Asian members of the Baghdad Pact, in Istanbul.

... Britain's Prime Minister Macmillan has called an emergency cabinet meeting for tonight. For British reaction to the Iraqi situation, we switch now to London - CBS News correspondent Alexander Kendrick reporting.

KENDRICK: Seven hours after the dawn's early light in Baghdad, which saw a military coup overthrow the monarchy of 23 year old Faisal and declare a pro-Nasser republic, the British government was still trying to be reassuring about the situation. That Western intelligence had been caught flat-footed was amply borne out by Foreign Office guidance to correspondents at noon saying there has been nothing recently to indicate that Colonel Nasser has been devoting undue attention to Iraq, or that Egypt has been trying to create trouble there. But only two hours later, in the House of Commons, the egg hit the fan. Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd rose gravely and reported there had been fighting around the King's palace in Baghdad; rioting crowds had besieged the British Embassy; communications were cut off; two British Embassy offices had been evacuated - there was apprehension for the safety of British nationals. Stunned and bewildered, the British public is tonight digesting the bitter truth that its major bastion in the Middle East has fallen, that it's vaunted Baghdad Pact is in danger of its life, that its principal adversary, Colonel Abdel Gamal Nasser, has won his biggest victory since the seizre of the Suez Canal.

There is some recrimination in London tonight, partly anti-American, that British and French troops were not permitted to continue with their Suez invasion two years ago and their attempt to bring down Nasser. But this recrimination, and the British troubles in Cyprus and Aden, are over-shadowed by the realization of the damaging blow done to all Western interest in the Middle East - and by the same token, of the benefit bound to accrue to the Kremlin.

In the London accounting sheet tonight is tabulated not only the great shiftin the balance of forces in the Middle East, caused by Iraq's change-over from pro-West to pro-Nasser, but also the fear that adjacent Jordan may be the next to go. For though it has survived two recent attempted coups, the latest only this week-end, the Jordanian government, of 23 year old King Hussein, is now isolated. It has lost its principal revenue, supplied by Iraq, and although under the terms of the new federal constitution uniting Jordan and Iraq, Hussein now assumed the federation leadership held by his cousin Faisal, there would seem to be no way of asserting that authority except by actual warfare.

On the debit side also tonight seems to be the Baghdad Pact, of which Iraq was the linchpin. Turkey, another member of the Baghdad Pact, still belongs to NATO; Pakistan still belongs to SEATO. But Iraq had no other alliance save the British alliance, expressed in the Baghdad Pact, supported by the United States.

Another blow to the British is expected when the fate of the Iraq Petroleum Company is announced , for if the Suez Canal and the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company are any criteria, it will be nationalized. Iraq Petroleum, third largest oil producer in the Middle East, is owned 50% by the British Government. Finally, there is Britain's air base at Habbaniya, 60 miles from Baghdad, with its 1000 RAF personnel - the only staging, communications and fuelling point for British military aviation between Cyprus and the Persian Gulf. These are all on the red side of the ledger tonight. If there is anything on the credit side, it is the belief that the coup in Baghdad will awaken the West to an even more acute sense of urgency and emergency in the Middle East. But exactly what can be done about the coup, if anything, is something else again.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: Today, as a result of the events in Iraq, oil shares on the London Stock Market dropped sharply and thereports from Iraq brought general selling to the New York Stock Market, which sustained its worst drop of the year.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

Good Evening everyone. Here's what happened today.

The United States has called on the United Nations to set up an international police force to protect the independence of Lebanon.

The U.S. proposal was submitted to the U-N Security council tonight -- after the Soviet Union demanded the U.N. Council order the immediate with-drawal of American forces from Lebanon.

The Russian delegate said the presdnce of U.S. forces in Lebanon-- threatens "a new global war."

The U.S. resolution says our forces will remain in Lebanon-- until the U-N itself is able to assme the responsibility for Lebanon's independence. The U.S. call for a U.N police force to protect Lebanon -- came shortly after President Eisenhower announced that the United States will send more troops if necessary to save Lebanon from "indirect aggression".

LEBA

13

[redacted]

the defense department announced the departure of a striking force from the tactical air command -- to an undisclosed overseas distination. // [redacted] announcement described [redacted] as [redacted] no [redacted] port.

At the same time, the Pacific Fleet [redacted] placed all its men and units on [redacted] alert, and announced that all units "have been made ready for extended operations." // Similar orders were given to the Atlantic fleet this morning. Anti-submarine forces have been ordered to increase their vigils. [redacted] over-threw the friendly [redacted] government.

President Eisenhower said his aim in sending troops to Lebanon -- is to prevent Lebanon from falling victim to the same kind of aggression he said, has taken place in other nations -- from Greece to Indo-China.

Until the overthrow of King Faisal in Iraq yesterday -- the president said -- there was hope that U-N efforts would preserve Lebanese independence. But he said all that was radically changed with the Iraq coup.

PLACED THE

He placed blame on Russia and Nasser's United Arab Republic.

EISENHOWER

He said the rebellion which broke out in Lebanon two months ago was strongly backed by the official Cairo, Damascus and Soviet radios which

. The president said the insurrection was further supported by sizable amounts of NEW ARMS and money --

pe

United . He said its purpose was to overthrow the Lebanon government and install by violence a government subordinate to the policies of the United Arab Republic. Such attacks have harrassed Lebanon for 65 days.

President Eisenhower said it was at the urgent request of Lebanon's president Chamoun -- that he sent U.S. Marines to Lebanon today.

INTO

It was the boldest White House military action since former President

U.S. ACTION IN Korea

Truman ordered s troops into Korea eight years ago. AND MR.

TODAY SUPPORTED Eisenhower - SAID

Truman " Under the circumstances, the president had no other choice. The peace of the world is at stake." Both republicam and democratic leaders in Congress generally gave quick and unstinted support to Eisenhower's action. 33

Earlier today, the United States notified an emergency-session of the U-N Security council -// of the landing of U-S marines in Lebanon.

Ambassador Lodge said the United States had moved to protect Lebanon -- and other pro-western countries -- from powers in the Middle East trying to crush them by ruthless aggression.//Lodge made it clear he was referring to president Nasser's united Arab Republic.

For a report of how the LEBANESE people felt, when the advance guard of marines landed on their shores, here CBS news correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut:

TAPE RUNS 2:00

ends on cue //.... "back to cbs news in New York."

JO

For Britain's reaction to the landing of the marines in Lebanon, we switch now to London, C B S news correspondent Charles Collingwood reporting:

TAPE RUNS 1:36

ends: ... now back to CBS news in New York.

The State department says two American businessmen and the U.N. Delegate from Iraq -- Fadhil Jamali -- have been SLAIN by mobs in Iraq. ... The U.S. embassy families have left Lebanon -- including the wife and son of Ambassador Robert McClintock. There's still no official word about the fate of Iraq's 23 year old King Feisal. One un-confirmed Washington report -- says he was killed. ... The rebel-controlled Baghdad radio says Feisal's premier -- pro-western Nuri Es Said -- was shot and killed today while trying to escape Baghdad in a woman's disguise.

C B S news correspondent Frank Kearns now reports the atmosphere in Cairo:

Tape runs 2:00
ends ... now back to CBS news in New York.

THE JORDAN RADIO AT RAMALLAH SAID TONIGHT THAT JORDAN'S KING HUSSEIN HAS APPEALED TO THE UNITED STATES AND BRITAIN FOR MILITARY HELP.

Stet. [redacted]

KING HUSSEIN yesterday PROCLAIMED HIMSELF CHIEF OF STATE OF THE IRAQ-JORDAN FEDERATION -- AFTER his cousin IRAQ's KING FAISAL was overthrown. [redacted]

It was a big day at the United Nations. Not since the Suez crisis two years ago, has the big blue Security Council Chamber been so [redacted] re-vitalized by diplomats and spectators alike...And never were Security precautions so apparent with blue-uniformed guards everywhere, and many areas roped-off from the public. // Yet the atmosphere was not one of [redacted] tension.. Instead it was one of nervousness...The usually composed Soviet delagate Arkady Sobolev, kept drumming his fingers on the big horse-shoe shapped conference table... AND U.S. Ambassador Lodge [redacted] kept FLEXING his jaw-muscles [redacted] perceptibly... [redacted] puffed [redacted] cigaret...

One diplomat put it to me this way: Said: "The United States has SENT forces in motion... But nobody knows where they will end."

[redacted]

What puzzles friendly foreign diplomats, is whether the United States means to protect just Lebanon, FROM "INDIRECT AGGRESSION" [redacted] or the [redacted] entire oil-producing [redacted] Middle East..

American diplomats at the U.N. are not sure themselves. // [redacted] In their private conversations with other diplomats, They talk about OUR setting up a "sanitary cordon" around Lebanon AND JORDON. // But that OF COURSE leaves out, all the important oil-producing regions of the Middle East..

The crux of the matter is whether any fighting is still going-on in oil-rich Iraq.//.If there is, it would be easier for us to go to the assistance of Iraqi loyalists...If there isn't, we might have to search for a legal reason..

The United States is saying that its marines will act in liason with the U.N. observers already on the scene in Lebanon...But this is a self-invitation...Dag Hammarshuld may have to rule on it, and he has, thus far, insisted that the UN observers are there only to observe//.The U.S.Marines are armed./The U.N. observers are not.//.And some of them, like the Indians, are awaiting word from Nehru/on whether they're willing to have their U.N. observers associated with the U.S. military force.

(The U.N. Secretary General is also known to be concerned about the future role of Britain and France//.He is understood to fear that if De Gaulle moves paratroopers in from Algeria to help the americans, the whole Middle-East might go up in flames..

As for the possibility of a global conflict with Russia...The U.S. is obviously taking a calculated risk that the Russians wont step in//.But thus far the Russians have been matching every one of our U.N. steps thus far with one of their own.//.Until today, they were one step ahead of us..

This is Larry Haeuser - I'll be back in a moment with a foot note to the news
First George Bye

The rebel coup d'etat in Iraq has dealt a hard blow to the Kings of the Hashemite clan, who have held four different arab thrones since world war one. Until yesterday that family had only two thrones left, occupied by the 23-year-old cousins, Faisal the second in Iraq and Hussein in Jordon. And if the rebel army leaders in Iraq succeed, only Hussein will be left... [redacted]

Reports on the fate of young King Feisel of Iraq are conflicting. But if he's beseiged in his Bagdad castle, the rebels may have a hard time breaking-in----because it resembles NOTHING LESS THAN [redacted] a medieval fortress..

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Tuesday, July 15, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... For a report on how the Lebanese people felt when the advance guard of Marines landed on their shores, here is CBS News correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut.

KALLSEN: About 2000 American Marines are dug in tonight in the sand dunes around the Beirut Airport. This was Objective No. 1 when they landed south of the city this afternoon, and it took them a little bit less than a half hour to secure it. They came from their landing craft in full battle dress, including bullet-proof vests - but not a shot was fired. It must have been the friendliest landing the Marines have ever made. They came ashore in mid-afternoon, in 12 landing craft, as two destroyers stood guard on either side. Beyond the horizon there were other vessels of the Sixth Fleet. Word of the landing spread quickly throughout the city and within an hour the road was jammed with cars and sight-seers. It was not a hostile crowd by any means, not even when the Marines, in impeccable battle order, tried to drive the crowd back from the landing beach. "Take it easy," their lieutenant said, "these people are civilians and treat them like that." In spite of all their efforts, the Marines simply couldn't restrain the Lebanese' curiosity and when they began to dig foxholes in the sand, some of the Lebanese began clapping. One shouted, "Welcome to the U.S. Navy." It was a cry which is not being echoed in the rebel quarters tonight. The opposition leader, Saeb Salaam, calls the landing a "flagrant violation of international conduct, an act of overt aggression." He says his men will resist with their last drop of blood. So far there has not been any blood-shed and the impressive display of power on the landing beach should have given any rebel pause. Jets roared low over the sand as the landing craft disgorged their jeeps and ambulances and guns and ammunition. Squadron of observation planes circled over the sea. Tonight President Chamoun spoke to his people for the first time in the 67 days of crisis. He said the UN had failed Lebanon and so it was necessary to resort to more effective measures. He did not even mention the American landing by name.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: For Britain's reaction to the landing of the Marines in Lebanon, we switch now to London - CBS News correspondent Charles Collingwood reporting.

COLLINGWOOD: British government's firm support of United States intervention in the Lebanon was announced this afternoon amid stormy scenes in the House of Commons. When Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House, "This action has Her Majesty's government's full support" there were cheers from the Conservative benches but from the Labor side came cries of, "Shame, Shame" and "Suez again." Although there are no British troops yet committed to the Lebanon operation, widespread military movements are being made in connection with the situation in the Middle East. An infantry brigade, in England, has been alerted for possible movement; and on Cyprus - already swollen with troops - the parachute brigade and the First Guards Brigade have been put on alert. British Marine commandos, based in Malta, are being immediately transferred to Cyprus, and troops from Kenya are being sent to Aden, and from Aden to the Persian Gulf. Although no British troops have yet been sent into Jordan, sources in London point out that none have been asked for and add that "there appears to be nothing in international law to prevent one country inviting another to station troops on its territory." One gets the impression that the British still hope that they will not have to come in to either the Lebanon or Jordan; that the present American show of force will be enough. But one also gets the impression that if things worsen they will have no hesitation about intervening. All this will be made clearer when the House of Commons debates the situation tomorrow.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: The State Department says two American businessmen and the Iraq UN delegate, Fadoal Jamali, have been reported slain by mobs in Iraq.

CBS News correspondent Frank Kearns now reports the atmosphere in Cairo.

KEARNS: The American Embassy reportedly burned a huge pile of classified documents here today. And rumors are spreading through the American community that the embassy may order at least partial evacuation tomorrow or the next day. Officials declined comment, but these reports underline individual reaction here to today's U.S. Marine landings at Beirut. On the surface, Cairo is calm, not the least sign of trouble. Official reaction awaits the return of President Nasser, now steaming toward Egypt to board ex-King Farouk's yacht. Knowledgeable sources predict some sort of sensational move by Nasser, similar to his appropriation of the Suez Canal, almost two years ago. Unoffically, in private groups, especially Leftist and supranationalist, there is talk of Soviet intervention, of Communist "volunteers." Most Egyptians expect any moment news of British intervention in Jordan or Iraq. And Western as well as Egyptian circles are keeping close watch on developments in unpredictable Turkey. Cairo Radio leads its newscasts not with details of the American landings in Beirut, but with reports of the killing of Iraq's veteran Premier, Nuri as-Said. And second place in broadcasts here goes to Soviet demands in the United Nations that American withdraw troops from Lebanon immediately. Baghdad Radio heard here a short time ago, claims that Iraq has withdrawn from the Iraqi-Jordanian Arab federation. Egyptians generally are shocked at the American landings in Beirut - and pro-Nasser circles claim this finishes the U.S., perhaps the entire West, in this part of the world. Meanwhile, it's impossible to find a single optimist here in Cairo tonight. Back now to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: The Jordan Radio ...

Ed. trans. P. O.

LeSueur for Murrow Wednesday, July 16, 1958

Good evening, everyone ... here's what happened today:

The United States [redacted] rushed more troops to the Middle East -- 16-hundred American airborne troops from Germany. And another airlift -- apparently of marines -- is reported proceeding through Italy.

But the White House says there are no present plans to send American troops to any middle east nation except Lebanon. The White House News secretary said there are no plans to send troops to bolster Turkey -- which has a common frontier with Russia. // But HAGERTY said it's a possibility U-S troops might be sent through Turkey -- to Lebanon.

Hagerty said he didn't know of any plan to send U.S. troops to Jordan.

The Defense Department said there are "no plans at this time" to increase draft calls -- beyond the 10-thousand-man-a-month level now set through August. //

11

Russia demanded today that the United States immediately withdraw [redacted] The five-thousand Marines ordered to Lebanon yesterday. The marines were sent at the request of Lebanon's president Camille Chamoun. [redacted] An official statement issued by the Soviet foreign ministry in Moscow says Russia [redacted] regards the marines as a "serious threat" ... and reserves the right to "halt a dangerous [redacted] situation near our border." The statement ADDED [redacted] the Soviet Union "cannot stand by as a spectator," ... and demanded that the United States halt "armed aggression" in the Middle East.

While the note bristled with condemnation of the United States ACTION, it made no MENTION [redacted] of active Soviet retaliation.

President Eisenhower sent his top diplomatic trouble-shooter -- undersecretary of state Robert Murphy to Lebanon by jet plane today. Murphy held a last-minute conference with the Lebanese foreign minister + Charles Malik, and Secretary of State Dulles, before departing. Murphy's orders are to help American military and diplomatic representatives end the civil war in Lebanon -- in co-operation with president Chamoun.

In Lebanon itself, the United States second marine battalion was re-inforced today by more +ROOPS. //

And For that story, we switch now to Beirut, CBS news correspondent Richard Kallsen reporting:

TAPE RUNS 1:48

end cue: .... now back to CBS news in New York ...

There are conflicting reports out of the Middle East. Some SAY the two-months of rebel fighting against the Chamoun regime had dwindled since the marines arrived .// Other reports have the rebel leader -- SAEBB Salem in Beirut -/ saying he will fight to the end to drive out The American marines . // The Syrian radio -/ one of the voices of Nasser's United Arab republic, //quoted Salam as saying: "We shall seek aid from any source."

Egypt's Nasser spoke OUT tonight on the United States ACTION in the Middle East. For that story //- relayed through heavy censorship --- here is C B S news correspondent Frank Kearns in Cairo:

TAPE RUNS 1:37

end cue ... now back to CBS news in New York.

(4)

In London, the British cabinet held day-long emergency sessions on the Middle East crisis ... and conferences between British and American leaders are scheduled in Washington tomorrow.

For the British story, we switch now to London, C B S news correspondent Charles Collingwood reporting:

TAPE RUNS 2:08

ends ... now back to CBS news in New York.

(43)

(5)

The Soviet union gave the new rebel government in Iraq formal diplomatic recognition today ... and Communist China followed suit.

But unconfirmed reports persist -- that the [redacted] revolutionaries who [redacted] overthrew the government of young King Feisal -- hold only a small section of Baghdad ... and there are still reports that [redacted] 42-thousand loyal Iraqi troops are marching on Baghdad ...

From Baghdad itself -- a report that King Faisal [redacted] was killed By one of his trusted Palace guards. Monday [redacted] The king, Crown Prince [redacted] and premier Nuri Said -- all were slain. [redacted] It was the first direct report from Baghdad on the [redacted]

In Jordan, King Hussein held an emergency meeting of his political and military advisers tonight. But widespread and unconfirmed reports -- indicate Hussein -- as chief of state of the Iraq-Jordan federation -- is asking for United States and British military help.

In Washington, the State department is considering -- on an urgent basis -- an appeal from Jordan for oil and gasoline. Jordan's supplies from Iraq now have been cut off.

AJ6

~~95~~ IN

~~[redacted]~~, CUBA, JU[redacted])-FOUR MORE UNITED STATES SERVICEMEN WERE REPORTED FREED BY THE CUBAN REBELS TODAY. ~~[redacted]~~RE ~~SCHEDULED TO BE LANDED HERE BY HELICOPTER ABOUT 3:00 P.M., EST.~~ ~~SEVEN [redacted] WERE RELEASED THURSDAY.~~ The rebels still hold 18 captives

MJ45PED

The big black limosines of diplomacy crowded the courtyard of the U.N. again today...and The AMBASSADORS argued at length on the U.S. intervention in Lebanon...And before the meeting adjourned until tomorrow afternoon, The United States was FACING mounting pressure against getting the U.N. to send a police force to relieve The Marines in Lebanon.

Dag Hammarshuld threw cold water on the idea.. Implied that the U.N. group already there, didn't need any new help to carry out its mission.. The U.N. Secretary General said They had been successful in getting the Lebanese rebels to permit them to inspect the entire frontier against infiltration..

The Japanese said they'd vote for the american resolution, although they couldn't agree with the part that said the proposed U.N. police force should insure against infiltration, since the UN observers found no evidence of it. And the Japanese showed no enthusiasm to furnish troops FOR an international army.

neutral Sweden questioned the necessity of sending U.S. military forces into Lebanon...The Swedish Ambassador said the marines are making it impossible for the U.N. observers to carry out their duties. He suggested suspending the activities of the U.N. observers, while the marines are There..

In the face of this coolness toward the american intervention, the western powers seemed in no hurry to force the american [redacted] resolution to a vote.// Russia is certain to veto the american call for a U.N. army to replace the marines...But this country is anxious to get a solid majority in favor, nevertheless despite the presumed Russia veto.. [redacted] But we're now having trouble getting the U.N. to associate itself with the uni-lateral U.S. intervention.

This is Larry LeSueur...I'll be back in a moment..with a footnote to the news...First George [redacted] Bryan..

The British take their crises cooly../ In Bagdad, an iraqi rebel mob/ sacked and burned / the British Embassy... But in London, today [redacted], only one bobby / guards the Iraq Embassy..

And the one man who might have had a lot to say about the U.S. intervention in Lebanon, is saying nothing. The ailing Ex-Prime Minister/

Sir Anthony Eden, [redacted] who triggered the Suez fiasco/two years ago/telegraphed just three words [redacted] to a reporter who asked for his comment/on the U.S. MILITARY MOVE [redacted] Replied Sir Anthony [redacted] "Regret stop Impossible

Thos LL. Goodnite

LeSueur for Murrow Thursday, July 17, 1958

Good Evening, everyone. Here's what heppened today:

Britain rushed two-thousand paratroops to Jordan this morning -- at the request of young King Hussein. The United States announced its support of the British troop landings -- but has ruled out sending U.S troops to join them -- at least, for the time being.

U.S. more than fifty navy jet planes made a low-altitude demonstration flight over Jordan today. A Pentagon spokesman said the purpose of the flights was "to let it be known WE were there."

The jets from the carriers Saratoga and Essex ROARED OVER the Jordan river valley for an hour and ten minutes. They returned to the carriers without incident.

10

There now are more than eight thousand United states and British troops in Lebanon, Jordan and Turkey. ... Besides the two aircraft carriers, the United States also has sent a heavy cruiser and 16 destroyers into Lebanese waters, to join at least 25 other units of the sixth fleet.

The Royal navy sent the aircraft carrier Eagle. Britain already has a submarine squadron, three destroyer squadrons and an amphibious warfare squadron in the Eastern Mediterranean. ... more United States paratroops are being flown to the Middle East from their Nato bases in West Germany.

Prime Minister MacMillan told Parliament today British paratroopers were flown to Jordan at Hussein's request to NIP A PLOT [redacted] against the young king's government. MacMillan said the plot was hatched by Nasser's UNITED ARAB Republic. [redacted] said Syrian troops were seen marching toward Jordan's frontiers.

Our state department has pledged all aid short of troops for jordan -- to back up the British paratroops.

[redacted]

25

President Eisenhower met for more than an hour this afternoon with British foreign secretary Selwyn Lloyd. A report said they discussed the situation in the Middle East -- AND HOLDS "a close identity of views" on moves to preserve the independence of Jordan and Lebanon. //

The Soviet union has ordered its land, sea and air forces to begin maneuvers tomorrow // in Russian areas bordering Turkey and Iran.

A Moscow defense ministry statement says the war games "are being held to maintain the "fighting preparedness of the armed forces of the U.S.S.R."

The maneuvers are OBVIOUSLY intended as a show of soviet military might in frontier zones nearest the disturbed Middle East. Our defense department says the Russian troops "do not present a threat to U-S and British troops in the area." //

In Moscow, a crowd of some two thousand Russians demonstrated for more than three hours outside the U.S. embassy there -- protesting the landing of American marines in Lebanon. The well-organized crowds shouted "Hands OFF Lebanon ... and "Hands OFF Iraq." ... There was no violence ... // but [illegible] incidents.

43

In Washington, the United States accused Russia and the United Arab Republic of trying to inflame the Arab world against the United States and its marines in Lebanon // with a co-ordinated propaganda barrage. / State department spokesman Lincoln White says / radio transmitters in Moscow, Cairo and Damascus -/ have begun to "broadcast false stories / of alleged incidents between American marines and the Lebanese."//

There was ~~one~~ AN incident / CONNECTED with the marines in Lebanon.// For that story -- and other developments -- we switch to CBS news correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut:

TAPE RUNS 1:37

end cue .... now back to CBS news in New York.

Prime minister Harold MacMillan / won sweeping parliamentary approval tonight / for Britain's intervention in Jordam / to forestall a threatened pro-Nasser coup against King Hussein. For that report, we switch now to C B S news correspondent Charles Callingwood in London:

TAPE RUNS 2:20

ends .... now back to CBS news in N Y

55

In Vienna, the Austrian defense ministry has ordered its air force units to "defend the air space over Austria" from american transport planes. // Austria has protested that last night the U.S. transports -- ferrying troops from Germany to Turkey -- were violating Austria's territorial rights. /

ISRAEL also protested to Britain today -- against R.A.F. transports flying across Israeli territory. British troops flown in to Jordan today crossed over a corner of Israel. /// But it is generally believed the Israeli protest was made "only for the Record." /

cs

-0-

GUANTANAMO (GWAN TAH NAH MOH), BAY---CUBAN REBELS HAVE RELEASED FOUR MORE AMERICAN CAPTIVES. THE INSURGENTS HAVE RELEASED 15 SAILORS AND MARINES IN THE PAST THREE DAYS.) THE REMAINING 14 CAPTIVE SERVICEMEN ARE EXPECTED TO BE FREED IN GROUPS OF FOUR DAILY. THE SERVICEMEN WERE SEIZED ON JUNE 28TH.

(12 Washington-7

W[redacted]N---BOSTON INDUSTRIALIST BERNARD GOLDFINE HAS REFUSED TO PURGE HIMSELF OF THREATENED CONTEMPT OF CONGRESS CHARGES. INSTEAD HE FLUNG A NEW SMEAR CHARGE AT THE GROUP DURING HIS FINAL APPEARANCE BEFORE THE COMMITTEE. GOLDFINE---IN A PREPARED STATEMENT---SAID THE COMMITTEE MADE EVERY POSSIBLE ATTEMPT TO SMEAR HIM.

-0-

[redacted]---THE HOUSE HAS PASSED A DOUBLE-BARRELED STATES' RIGHTS BILL AIMED AT PREVENTING FEDERAL LEGISLATION FROM TAKING PRECEDENCE OVER STATE LAWS. THE HOUSE PASSED THE BILL BY A 241 TO 155 VOTE. SO[redacted]Y THE ACTION WAS AN OBVIOUS SLAP AT RECENT SUPREME COURT [redacted]IONS. decisions.

It was standing room only at the U.N. today...The news of the British move into Jordon brought one of the largest crowds of diplomats, newsmen and spectators to the Security Council Chamber, that I've ever seen...But the atmosphere changed perciptably...The very massivness of the anglo-american intervention in the Middle East seemed to steady the nerves of some of the smaller countries..And U.S. Ambassador Lodge made it plain that the U.S. and Britain are determined to put the U.N. spotlight on Nasser's United Arab Republic, and what he called its master plan to seize the whole Middle East by "indirect aggression.." Lodge didn't actually mention Nasser by name, but he said you can read all about it in the Cairo papers..//

The U.S. Ambassador also made it clear that this country will not be diverted from its intention to protect the Middle East until the U.N. itself takes over..He Said frankly: IF the United Nations cannot deal with indirect aggression, the United Nations will break up...[redacted]...This was taken by many as a rebuke to Dag Hammarshuld...The U.N. Secretary General has reported that his observer team has successfully patrolled the Lebanese borders against new infiltration...[redacted]

But lodge WAS [redacted] pointing out that Observer teams had not prevented the sensational Nasser coup in Iraq. And the U.S. and Britain are determined not To see the [redacted] entire oil-rich Middle East fall to Nasser, through any lack of Anglo-American resolution.

Its still a question whether the U.N. Council will press for a vote tonight on the rival resolutions of the United States and Soviet Russia. OURS calling for a U.N. army to replace the Marines, the Russians demanding [redacted] american withdrawal. CBS radio will BROADCAST THE MEETING LATER TONITE IF NEITHER RESOLUTION PASSES, The soviet Union says it will demand a special U.N. General Assembly session, to try to [redacted] martial the neutral nations into asking the anglo-americans to withdraw... But it did seem as the the war scare TRY subsiding...Unless we attempt to recapture Oil-Rich IRAQ.

This is Larry LeSueur...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news.. But first - a word from Geo. Bryan.

(27)

Young King Hessein [redacted] has faced more crises in his 23 years, than most Kings face in a lifetime. // In his five years of Jordon rule, Hussein has faced rebellion, bankruptcy, and death.. He defied Nasser and Russia last year, by firing his pro-russian Premier. // He's now appealed to Britain & and the U.S. to save his Kingdom from destruction.

But his biggest test is yet to come..Now that the British are back to protect his Kingdom... [redacted] The question IS, will Hussein order his famed Arab Legion TRY TO recapture his federated Kingdom of Iraq?.

This is Larry LeSueur..Good Nite..

LeSueur for Murrow Friday, July 18, 1958

Good Evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

President Nasser of the United Arab republic /.. and Soviet Premier [redacted] Khrushchev //- who conferred secretly in Moscow yesterday -/ HAVE NOW [redacted] issued separate, bitter denunciations of the Anglo-American intervention in the Middle East.

[redacted] shortly after their denunciations were PUBLICIZED [redacted] -- this action was taking place at the United Nations in New York:

The Security council rejected the Soviet demand that it order United States forces out of Lebanom .//. and British troops out of Jordan. The vote was eight against;/ and one in favor -- Russia.//Swedan and Japan abstained.

Then the Soviet Uniom vetoed the United States plan [redacted] to send a United Nations police force to Lebanon. //The vote on the United States plan was 9 to ome -- Russia negative. Sweden abstained. The Russian veto killed the proposal.

13

The council / then rejected Sweden's resolution asking Secretary-general Dag Hammarskjold to suspend the [redacted] activities of the U-N observation group in Lebanon -- until further notice. That vote was nine to two ... no abstentions. /

Then the United States [redacted] the U-N security council to convene an emergency session of the General Assembly -- to deal with the Middle East Crisis. [redacted]

18

But the United States agreed [redacted] its call for an assembly session while Japan works on a new Security Council resolution which would expand the U N observer team in Lebanon. This would pave the way for the departure of the United States Marines.

The Security council's inconclusive voting ~~action~~ ended four days of bitter exchanges between the United States and Soviet delegates.

But in Moscow, the Kremlin issued a statement warning the United States and Great Britain it will "have to take the necessary steps" to counter what it called "unprovoked aggression" by Britain against Jordan ... and demanded again that the U.S. get out of Lebanon.

For the Kremlin statement -- and other developments of the day in Moscow -- we switch now to CBS news correspondent Paul Niven:

TAPE RUNS 1:53

end cue ... now back to CBS news in New York.

The Russian statement said little about President Nasser ... but he did his own speaking in Damascus, Syria, just a few hours after his return from Moscow. Nasser declared the Arabs are ready "to fight to the last drop of their blood" -- to preserve arab nationalism. He said the United States and Britain should know the era of occupation has ended.

Said Nasser: "We will stand by what we have announced before: we antagonize whoever antagonizes us ... and befriend those who befriend us."

As heard in Jerusalem over Radio Damascus, Nasser said that if Iraq is attacked -- he will stand behind it. In his words: "... we will carry arms to defend the torch of freedom -- which has become victorious in Iraq."

Nasser's speech made no mention of his surprise trip to Moscow. Egypt's Middle East news agency said Nasser and Khrushchev had two meetings -- which lasted eight hours altogether.

C B S news correspondent Frank Kearns -- speaking through heavy censorship -- reports of the atmosphere in Cairo:

TAPE RUNS 1:40

ends ..... now back to CBS news in New York.

The United States has warned the United Arab republic that any attack on U. S. forces in the Middle East -- by military units of the U - A - R, or units under Nasser control -- "could involve grave consequences."

45

[redacted]

Diplomats in London speculated that Khrushchev and Nasser -- in their Moscow meetings -- discussed sending Soviet troops to the U-A-R province of Syria to counter the American landings in Lebanon, and the airlift of British paratroopers to Jordan.

The build-up of Anglo-American forces in the Middle East continued today. For a direct report, here is C B S news correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut:

52

TAPE RUNS 1:37

ends ... back to CBS news in New York.

British jets flew into Amman today, to cover the British AIR transports bringing the last of two-thousand paratroops into Jordan. Britain completed its troop airlift from Cyprus to Jordan in less than 24 hours and a spokesman said there are no plans to send more troops to Jordan.

Soviet armed forces CONDUCTED LARGE military maneuvers along the frontiers of Turkey and Iran during the day. Turkey took the demonstration of RUSSIAN military might calmly.

58

Secretary of State Dulles and British foreign secretary Selwyn Lloyd conferred on the mid-east situation for nearly three hours today. They met in Washington with military experts -- and will meet again tonight.

President Eisenhower also called a meeting -- of eight congressional leaders of both parties -- for a conference on his foreign aid bill. Before the senate appropriations committee today -- Dulles pleaded for the full three-billion-675-million dollar foreign aid program authorized by congress. Mr Dulles said gravely -- that "powerful forces in the world will destroy us -- if we merely sit on the sidelines as observers."

67

The Cuban rebels released EIGHT more American servicemen today. They still hold SIX ...

And agreement seems to be a little closer on the release of nine American servicemen who have been held by communist East Germany since their helicopter strayed over the border ...

In Washington, another set of House investigators says it will begin hearings next Monday on allegations that presidential assistant Sherman Adams intervened in a government case against a business firm. Witnesses will be questioned by a House armed services sub-committee. The case involves a war-time contract with a New Hampshire woolen mill.

Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine left Washington today -- after a farewell meeting with his friend Sherman Adams. Goldfine wound up his testimony before House influence investigators yesterday. He says he will be ready to return to Washington if the sub-committee calls him back.

13

The United States beat the russians to the punch today... Ambassador Lodge's surprise call for an immediate emergency session of the U.N. General Assembly to deal with the Middle East crisis, stole the Russian's thunder...And the move left the Russian [illegible] glum and Ambassador Lodge looking as tho he just swallowed a canary..

Russia had threatened just such a move if the U.N. Council refused to order the American and British Forces out of Lebanon and Jordon.. And it had been widely understood that the U.S. was reluctant to take its call for U.N. Police force to the Assembly, where its approval would require a two-thirds vote, or at least 54 of the Assembly's 81 members..

[illegible] But Lodge lost no time in making his surprise move immediately after the Soviet Veto killed the american resolution to send an international military force to Lebanon..

The U.S. SAID IT WOULD ASK for an emergency Assembly SESSION "to make appropriate recommendations concerning the Lebanese complaint-- But Russia is expected to stipulate that the Emergency session also considers its demand that the Anglo-American forces be ousted from Lebanon and Jordon..

This country might have a close call in any GeneralAssembly session, since India has already raised its influential voice against the Anglo-American intervention...But the American Ambassador has already stressed/that if the U.N. fails to take/any action against the kind of indirect aggression that sub-verted Iraq, The Peace organization may collapse..

He seemed to be serving notice that the United States didN't move massively into the Middle East, just to pull right out again.. And this country might defy the U.N. if we were called upon to do it.

But Lodge didn't press for a vote to convene the Assembly until the Council considers on Monday, a Japanese proposal, understood to call for an enlarged U.N. observer force in Lebanon. [redacted] Between Now AND Monday [redacted] a word Word to the News...First [redacted]n..

(V)

[redacted] Experienced observers of the Russian scene are concerned about the wave of anti-american demonstrations in Moscow...Because it denotes an organized conditioning of the Russian people against ~~this~~ The U.S. [redacted]y and its people...

But altho There [redacted] was tension and anti-american feeling evident ~~almost everywhere~~ in the Soviet capital today, russian spectators [redacted] still observed with great interest [redacted] the workout of the University of Washington [redacted] crew for tomorrow's Moscow regatta... Coach Al Ulbrickson [redacted] says the Huskies are in good shape--but tomorrow's race ~~will~~ may be a tough one.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite

7.45 pm net 7/21/58 picker

Good Evening Everyone. Here's What happened Today

Talk of a possible summit conference -- to be held at the United Nations -- dominates the Middle East crisis tonight. The White House made known today that the United States, Britain and France have started drafting a reply to Khrushchev's soviet premier proposal for an immediate top-level meeting on The Middle East. It's understood that this reply will reject the call for a meeting outside The U.N. But URGE KEEPING the discussions within the U.N. Security Council, instead. The western big three are reported in agreement to challenge Khrushchev to appear personally before the U.N. At such a meeting, the Russian leader would be called upon to back up his charges that Britain and the United States are endangering world peace. And it could open the way for President Eisenhower and Prime Minister MacMillan to speak for their governments at the U.N.

Washington officials reportedly view Khrushchev's call for a summit meeting on the Middle East as essentially a prepaganda maneuver. But the U.S. is reported facing increasing pressure from Britain and France for some kind of top-level meeting with Russia to ease war Tensions. all three western powers are said to be agreed on rejecting Khruschev's call for a meeting outside the U.N. ...Canada's Prime Minister Diefenbaker today called on the western leaders to follow up Khruschev's offer of immediate summit talks -- with a meeting in the U.N. Security Council.

Prime Minister MacMillan told the House of Commons in London today that he favors a summit meeting. But, he said, "we must be neither foolishly swift nor obstinately slow" -- adding that his government is not going to be panicked into such a meeting. French Premier De Gaulle expressed a similar stand -- a statement issued in his behalf saying that while he welcomed a soviet invitation to a The Summit, the undiplomatic tone of Khrushchev IS NOT an obstacle. De Gaulle's statement said the matter should be worked out through diplomatic channels, so that summit talks could be held in an "atmosphere of objectivity....." India's Prime Minister Nehru already has accepted the soviet call to a summit meeting, and presumably would not object to a meeting in New York. [redacted]

The Defense Department in Washington issued a statement today saying it "can not forsee any circumstance requiring the use of atomic weapons" in the cufrent situation in Lebanon. This statement was issued after press reports from Beirut quoted a U.S. Navy spokesman there as saying that all American ground, air and sea combat units have atomic capability.

In reply to questions, a Pentagon spokesman said he did not know whether the marines had landed weapons which are capable of hurling either conventional explosives or nuclear projectiles.

The commander of the U.S. Sixth Fleet, Vice Admiral Charles Brown, told newsmen today that everything was going well with the Navy's operations off Lebanon, except for rebel sniping at planes. Speaking aboard the U.S.S. Des Moines, he said the fleet could support Jordan, if ordered to do so, with The SAME ease. The Vice Admiral went on to say that his fleet had grown to 75 ships, and that no soviet naval vessels have been detected slipping into the Mediterranean. Members of his staff said that sixteen planes from the fleet have been hit by lebanese rebel snipers, mostly from the area around Tripoli.

~~Soviet sources in Paris said today that there's a possibility~~ Moscow would send troops to adjoining Syria, if an emergency summit conference fails to produce a Middle East settlement. These soviet sources were quoted as saying the United States is building up a strong base in Lebanon for an attack on Syria, or the Nasser-controlled regime in Iraq.

U.S undersecretary of State

~~U.S. Envoy~~ Robert Murphy talked with rebel leaders in Lebanon today. For that story, we take you now to Beirut -/ CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen reporting:

(Tape Runs 1 min. 43 sec.)

The new revolutionary government in Iraq, gives indications that it wants to preserve good relations with the west. Iraqi sources in Washington say the new regime wants to keep its political, economic and military ties with the west -- but warned that it would be forced to turn to the Soviet Union if the United States cuts off military supplies. A spokesman for the Iraqi regime in Badhdad said its foreign policy will be to "befriend those friendly to us -- and to be hostile to those hostile to us." The new regime also pledged the safety of western oil installations.

The first group of Americans to be brought out of Iraq since the rebel coup there a week ago arrived in Rome by plane today from Baghdad. Aboard the big commercial airliner were 92 Americans, including 36 women, 54 children and two men. Most of them are expected to stay in Rome, hoping for the Middle East situation to quiet down, so they may eventually return to Iraq. The airliner had been chartered by the State Department, and was the first of several scheduled emergency flights to evacuate the American colony in Iraq.

81

In Washington, preliminary figures issued by the government indicate a national budget deficit of 2-billion, 813-million dollars for the fiscal year 1958, which ended on June 30th. This is about seven times as high as the deficit Predicted by President Eisenhower in January. The higher figure is the result of increased spending for defense, for programs to combat the recession, and for the farm price support program....For the fiscal year of 1959, ~~which began on July 1st,~~ government officials are expecting a budget deficit of ten to twelve billion dollars.

The House gave overwhelming approval today to a program of so-called fringe benefit tax relief for small business. The bill would not actually reduce tax rates, but would benefit small business to the extent of 260-million dollars a year. The measure, which has strong bi-partisan support, now goes to the senate.

~~President Eisenhower has nominated Bertha Adkins -- assistant~~ chairman of the Republican national committee -- to be undersecretary of Health, Education and Welfare. Miss Adkins, a native of Salisbury, Maryland, would succeed Dr. John Alanson Perkins, who resigned on March 1st to return to his post as President of the University of Delaware.

A former member of the Armed Services Board of Contract Appeals has expressed the opinion that Sherman Adams acted improperly when he made an inquiry about a case handled by the board last year. However, the former member, Roswell Austin, said that Adams did not influence the board in any way. Austin added that an unidentified member of congress who also took an interest in the case, did not sway the board in any way. The White House has said that Presidential assistant Adams merely relayed inquiries and replies about the case, which involved the now-defunct Raylaine Worsteds company of Manchester, New Hampshire.

Commerce Secretary Weeks today defended Sherman Adams -- saying Adams has been "whip-lashed more brutally than any man in public life in our generation." Weeks said that from years of close association, he knows Sherman Adams to be "a man of integrity." Two other cabinet officers -- Secretary of Labor Mitchell and Interior Secretary Seaton -- previously defended Adams in the face of demands that he resign from his White House post.

All seven judges of the U.S. District Court of Appeals in St. Louis have been ordered to rule on the appeal calling for the setting aside of an order delaying integration at Central High S[illegible] in Little Rock. Earlier this month it was understood that only three of the seven judges would hear the motions -- in a session scheduled for August 4th.

117

The anglo-american drive to get U.N. sponsored troops into Lebanon got a dusty answer at the U.N. Security Council today.. Even tho, U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarshuld placed his prestige behind the Japanese proposal.. Which was a compromise between the [redacted] vetoed- United States call for a U.N. army, and the [redacted] proposal which originally sent U.N. observers to Lebanon. The Japanese wanted to "expand and strengthen" the U.N. observer force already there, without specifying how [redacted] big it should be, but enough to make possible the withdrawal of the marines..

But the Russian delegate declared it was unacceptable..Said it would amount to tacit approval of the anglo-american intervention, And Sobolev added that it would, in effect, make the U.N. a party to the intervention...The Russians obviously want [redacted] nothing less than a diplomatic [redacted] defeat for the United States, and a U.N-ordered withdrawal, without any face-saving devices..

But American Ambassador Lodge again served notice that the the dispatch of U.N.-sponsored [redacted] observers or troops is the "indispensable minimum" that would make possible a U.S. withdrawal.

But it was clear that Premier Kruschyev's call for a "quickie" summit conference on the Middle East, has put both the U.S. and the Russian U.N. delegates in a box...Altho both of them have said they'd call for a special U.N. Assembly session, neither one could put in a formal motion../.The Russian couldn't do it because his boss, Kruschyev, had asked for a summit conference instead..And Ambassador Lodge couldn't do it, because he'd be brushing-off President Eisenhower's prospective reply to Kruschyev....

Most U.N. diplomats throw cold-water on idea that Kruschyev might come to New York to sit-in on a U.N. Security Council meeting...They point out that he wouldn't sit down with any Nationalist Chinese representative, especially if it were Chiang Kai Shek himself.. And if Kruschyev did, the whole debate would turn out to be an argument on the representative of CHINA...

The Russians are spreading rumors that if we turn down Krushyev's call for a Middle East summit conference, than the Russians will move troops into Syria, at the invitation of President Nasser.. But there are those who say that if Nasser's invites the Russians into the Middle East, it will mean his finish too..

3.3.3.

On the grounds that Nasser can't invite in the Russians without losing his popularity among the Arabs... On the [illegible] grounds that they'd be faced with Russian occupiers, after their desperate effort to get rid of the western colonialists..

But the biggest question among neutral diplomats today, is how the United States expects any U.N army to safeguard the entire oil resources of the Middle East..

This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news... First George Bryan..

United Arab Republic President Jamal Abdel [redacted] Nasser flew home to Cairo today in a special soviet-built jet airliner - a gift from Premier Krushyev...The editor of the Cairo newspaper Al Ahram who often acts as Nasser's unofficial [redacted] spokesman came home with him. The editor immediately started writing a series of articles about his Moscow trip.. He Began by saying: "I sat with Nasser at the dinner table with Kruschyev...and heard the Soviet Premier [redacted] give all present with the anecdotes and jokes. Most of them according to the Cairo editor, "were about John Foster Dulles."

This is Larry LeSueur..Goodnite..

745pm lesueur (robinson) 7/23/58

Good Evening everyone - Here's what happened today.

Neither the White House nor the State Department has commented THUS far on Soviet Premier Khrushchev's agreement, made public late today, to take part in a summit meeting on the Middle East within the frame work of the U-N Security Council. The Khrushchev reply came in separate letters to President Eisenhower and to Prime Ministers Macmillan of Britain, De Gaulle of France and Nehru of India. Khrushchev said he was taking into account the seriousness of the Middle East situation in his rapid agreement for a meeting within the U-N and laid down as a condition only that Prime Minister Nehru and the Arab representatives also be invited. The Soviet Premier asked the western powers to set a date as soon as possible for the summit meeting and said the Russians would be ready for a top-level meeting to begin in New York as EARLY as this coming Monday. Khrushchev agreed with yesterday's suggestion FROM Prime Minister Macmillan that the object of the summit meeting would be to reach AGREEMENT.. --and not to record disagreement by means of voting. And he therefore went along with Macmillan's proposal that no resolutions should be introduced AT the summit session of the Council except by previous unanimous agreement. The Soviet Premier also pointed out that East and West could hold informal meetings apart from the official talks around the Security Council table--with the possibility of important results, he said.

ON THE SIDE OF PEACE.

~~of peace~~. "The threat to world peace at present," he said, "has reached a dangerous level--so much so that no time should be lost in arguing, which cannot but delay the period of reaching agreement and the adoption of all possible and immediate steps to prevent the outbreak of world conflict."

The first ~~public~~ OFFICIAL word of the Khrushchev acceptance was made public some 22 hours after the separate western replies on a summit meeting had been received in Moscow. The Moscow Radio broke the story in a brief report at almost the same moment that the Khrushchev letters were being handed to the Ambassadors of the affected countries. Thus the President and Secretary of State Dulles--who were meeting on the Middle East at the White House--apparently received their first word of the Kruschyev reply in the form of a news dispatch delivered to them by News Secretary Hagerty.

Hagerty ~~announced~~ SAID later that there was ~~no change~~ NO CHANGE of an American response tonight--to allow time for the translation of the Khrushchev letter to be studied. Secretary Dulles had announced earlier in the day, that he would leave Friday by air for talks with the Bonn government in West Germany--and a Monday meeting in London with the leaders of the Baghdad Pact nations. He is understood to be going ahead with those plans--which would mean he would be out of the country until Tuesday, at the earliest. That would make it unlikely, at the very least, that the summit meeting of the Security Council could begin on Monday as Khrushchev proposes. But his letters made it clear that the Soviet Premier was prepared to come to New York at any time after MONDAY that the other key powers proposed as convenient.

Another deterrent to a meeting as early as Monday is the formal White House announcement, made before the Khrushchev reply, that Italian Prime Minister Fanfani will confer in Washington next Tuesday and Wednesday with the President and Secretary Dulles on a wide range of topics of mutual interest to the United States and Italy.

Another possible hitch may develop in Paris, where Premier De Gaulle is reported to feel more strongly than ever that United Nations headquarters in New York is not a properly CALM location for a summit conference on the Middle East--and that any such meeting ought to be held on neutral ground--such as Geneva.

While there has been no formal response yet from London to the latest Khrushchev letter, it's considered a foregone conclusion that Prime Minister Macmillan will go along with the Soviet Premier--with only the actual date of a meeting to be determined.

444444

Even before the Khrushchev reply was disclosed, officials at the State Department said today that much of the heat seemed to be seeping out of the Middle East crisis. They give much credit to Deputy Under Secretary of State Robert Murphy -whom the President sent to the Middle East a week ago to try to work out a solution, at least in Lebanon, which would allow the rapid withdrawal of American troops from that country. They indicate that Murphy has succeeded in convincing Lebanese Rebel Leaders there that the United States does not intend to maintain President Chamoun in office by force -and activity has been resumed toward the parliamentary selection of a man to succeed Chamoun. // The Speaker of the Lebanese Parliament said today that the Parliament will now meet on July thirty-first to elect a new Lebanese President. //

As for Iraq, State Department officials say that the new regime which TOPPLED the monarchy last week has made repeated appeals for the maintenance of "freindly relations" with the United States -and that some sort of "practical relationship" with the new Republic may be worked out. They say Deputy Under Secretary Murphy may soon visit Baghdad for informal talks with the leaders of the new regime -and may even travel to Cairo — to sound out President Nasser on his views on the possibilities of a stable peace.

25

55555

STRUGGLES

One of the hottest [redacted] of the current session of Congress is just about over. A Senate-and-House conference committee has approved a Defense Reorganization Bill which would give President Eisenhower almost all the power he wanted to revamp the Pentagon along more efficient lines. The full Senate and House are expected to take final action SHORTLY and send the bill to Mr. Eisenhower whose quick signature is anticipated.

The Senate Appropriations Subcommittee agreed today to take a longer look at proposals to boost the Defense Budget by two-and-a-half-billion dollars after the White House sent word that Mr. Eisenhower is opposed to the bigger figure.

The House ignored administration objections today and approved a bill to extend for another year the farm surplus disposal program. The measure now goes to a conference committee to compromise conflicts with the Senate measure.

The House Ways and Means Committee tentatively approved a bill today to boost Social Security benefits by seven percent to allow for the increased cost of living.

And the government's cost-of-living index showed a new rise today for the May-June period but only by less than one-tenth of one percent. The amount of the rise is so small that economic experts believe a decline 93 in living costs may be recorded this month or soon after as a result of the usual seasonal decline in food prices during the summer and early fall. But, as one of the experts pointed out today, these hopes could vanish if a shooting war began in the Middle East.

At Cape Canaveral, the Air Force late today successfully fired another of its Thor-Able rockets into space--again with a live mouse as a passenger in the rocket's nose cone. The Air Force announcement fifteen minutes after blast-off said the rocket performance was satisfactory--and an effort will be made to recover the nose cone after its six-thousand-mile trip into space and back. This is the second successful test of the Thor-Able rocket. The first rocket--fired on July 104 NINE covered the full distance but its nose-cone was never FOUND.

The primary purpose of the shoot is to test the ability of the nose-cone --which could also haul a hydrogen bomb warhead--to resist the terrible heat of friction as it returns into the heavy atmosphere of the earth at a speed of some 12-thousand miles an hour. A fleet of Air Force ships and planes is now waiting in the TARGET area near Ascension Island, one-thousand miles off the African coast, to attempt to trace the comet-like course of the nose-cone in this latest recovery attempt. 111

Although the U.N. is used to emergencies, even its officials think next Monday may be a little too soon to get the kind of Security Council together that Premier Krushyev envisages..

But despite the difficulties of getting everyone to New York that Krushyev has suggested, there are really no technical difficulties, in the way of calling such a high-level Security Council meeting next week..

The Security Council "Rules of proceedure" already provide for the heads of governments or foreign ministers to represent their countries on the council without credentials.. And it's to be recalled that there were no less than six foreign ministers present at The U.N during the Suez crisis two years ago..

Under the rules of the Council the four great powers could send a joint letter to the various heads of states, inviting them to New York, But among the things that are not clear in Kruschev's suggestion to which ARAB States he actually means...The only arab "member" of the council NOW, now is Iraq, and the credentials of its representative are in dispute

Jordon, Saudi Arabia

Presumably [redacted], Kruschev would include the United Arab Republic, Jordon and Lebanon, but whether he also means Tunis, Morrocco, Iran, Yeman and the Sudan, remains to be spelled out..

If a high-level [redacted] UN Security Council meeting were called next Monday, its President would still be Columbia..But nobody could expect such talks to be brief, and since the U.N. Council presidency rotates monthly, its President next Friday and for the entire month of August will be France...and presumably [redacted] General De Gaulle..Although the French Premier was NOT enthusiastic about a U.N. summit meeting in his [redacted] last letter to MOSCOW. [redacted]

(The Russian leader's proposal today made no direct mention of the possibility of Generalissimo Chiang-Kai-Shek sitting in as the delegate of China.. But the Soviet leader could not resist a passing dig at the Chinese Nationalists... [redacted] SAID "one of the so-called permanent U.N. Council members [redacted], doesn't represent anyone.."

Yet Kruchyev has not called For a restricted "committee" of the U.N. [redacted] Security Council, which might have excluded [redacted] nationalist China..

Whatever such a U.N. summit meeting, I COULD [illegible] accomplish., its almost certain to be a PROPAGANDA FEAST., Kruschyev already hints at that, by objecting to Eisenhower's assertion that the Russian U.N., "supports expansionist and aggressive policies in the world." AND In his previous note to Eisenhower, Kruchyev charged us, with fomenting war, and suggested that the commander of the U.S. Sixth fleet be confined to a mental hospital.

ALL this underscores the American reluctance TO PARTAKE IN a summit MEETING at this time. Premier Kruschyev will be in the position of "accuser" and we will be in the position of "defender" over the causes and consequences of our Middle East intervention. And this will put America at a disadvantage in any highly publicized meeting..

And if Kruschyev ever really comes to New York, it will be the most highly publicized meeting the world has yet seen... Practically every newspaper, news magazine, radio and TV station in the country, is already clamoring to beef-up their U.N. coverage..

And if "I" may add a personal note. Please don't ask me for U.N. tickets!

This is Larry LeSueur I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News.....First George Bryan.

If soviet Premier Kruschyev should come to New York, his visit would pose the greatest security problem this country has ever undertaken...a virtual army of police and plain-clothesmen would have to be assigned to the job, in addition to members of the soviet secret police...

The New York Police would assign a large part of their 24-thousand-man force to the job, and possibly call in the New York State police too.. Even now The New York Police have had to assigned a task force to guard Russian headquarters against angry Hungarian picketers.. As for the blue-uniformed United Nations Guards, all their leaves and vacations have already been cancelled..

This is L.C. Goodrich

745pm lesueur
robinson
7/24/58

Good evening EVERYONE. Here's what happened today.....

The draft of an American reply to Soviet Premier Khrushchev has been completed and sent to London and to Paris. A final version is expected to go to Moscow tomorrow or Saturday--after Prime Minister Macmillan and Premier De Gaulle have had an opportunity to express their opinions of the American STAND on a summit meeting. Today's American draft was completed after President Eisenhower met for two hours in the morning with the National Security Council--and met twice later in the day with Secretary of State Dulles. The reply is reported to be mainly an effort to establish the condition that U-N Security Council rules will be followed at such a meeting. The British and the Russians have indicated a preference to amend those rules--to allow the summit meeting to be devoted mainly to discussion--with no resolutions to be presented for a vote except by unanimous agreement in advance. IT'S also speculated that the American note will propose a meeting date about two weeks hence--to allow time for fuller preparation. Certainly, the meeting will not come as early as Monday--as Premier Khrushchev proposed. A State Department spokesman said Secretary Dulles has not changed his plans to fly to West Germany on Friday--and to attend a Baghdad Pact meeting in London on Monday. The British Foreign Office also said in a formal statement that the proposal for a meeting on Monday "seems to us unrealistic." But it expressed continued willingness to meet as soon as a special meeting can be conveniently arranged. The statement added that the British government "is glad that Mr. Khrushchev appears to have accepted" the suggestion for the summit meeting to take place within the Security Council. The British also indicate they want time to discuss which nations will be invited to the meeting besides the permanent members of the Council--in view of Khrushchev's proposal to invite INDIA'S Prime Minister Nehru and Arab leaders.

French Premier De Gaulle--who would preside as head of the Security Council if the summit meeting is held in August--is still opposed to the idea of a meeting in New York. My colleague, IN PARIS CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun, has this report on the French government's view.

TAPE: Runs 1:33--ending on cue: "..to CBS News in New York."

The French view was conveyed to Secretary [redacted]e Dulles today by Ambassador Hervé Alphand, who called personally at the State Department. Alphand told newsmen after the meeting that the French "want real results and we don't think the Security Council is a good place." He said it was clear from De Gaulle's reply to Khrushchev that France is "not in favor." Reporters interpreted this to mean that De Gaulle would refuse to come to New York. But the French Ambassador issued a clarifying statement a few minutes later in which he denied any such inference.

Our troops in Lebanon a[redacted]g to have a quiet time of it. A briefing officer at the Pentagon said the feeling now is that the situation there seems to be "calming down." He announced that the Army's Major General Paul Adams--commanding general of the Northern Area Command in Europe--is on his way to Beirut to take over as commander of American land forces at the request of Admiral James Holoway--the over-all chief of the Middle East operation. The Pentagon spokesman said there is no official knowledge in Washington concerning an announcement today over the Syrian radio. Syria, which has a common border with Lebanon, said that two unidentified jet planes intruded over that border today--and Syrian guns opened fire. The announcement said both planes fled--and that one of them went down in flames in Lebanese territory. Syria is federated with Egypt in the United Arab Republic. // United States Navy planes have been flying continuous patrols along the Syrian-Lebanese FRONTIER, --but there was no announcement from the Sixth Fleet that ANY of our planes is missing. //

Washington continues its wait-and-see attitude in relation to the revolution in Iraq. // The Senate Foreign Relations Committee now hopes to hear from officials of the Central Intelligence Agency on SUBJECT OF IRAQ early next WEEK. // Republican Committee member George Aiken of Vermont said strong sentiment is building up within the committee for early recognition of the revolutionary regime--which continues to profess its desire to maintain friendly relations with the West, now that the Iraqi monarchy has been overthrown. //

The Senate completed action today on a Defense Reorganization Bill--which it sent to the White House. // Both the House and Senate approved by a voice vote the compromise worked-out by a conference committee. // It gives the President the essential changes, he has requested, to streamline the Defense Department for more efficient and more economical national defense. /// He is expected to sign it into law quickly. / Defense Secretary McElroy expressed satisfaction with the compromise-BILL during an appearance before a Senate Defense group.

55555

But, when

Majority Leader Johnson asked McElroy to list any other things he wants from Congress, the defense chief said his present budget was adequate--and that he'd rather SEE Congress add hundreds of millions of dollars to the foreign aid program.

But a little later in the day, the Senate Appropriations Committee approved an annual defense money bill of some 40-billion dollars. That's one-billion-200-MILLION dollars more than asked FOR by the administration--and one-billion-600-million dollars more than the amount voted earlier by the House. Most of the additional money would go toward a build-up of air-power.

The increased cost of running the government--including the higher cost of national defense--will lead to an administration request next week for another increase in the legal limit of the national debt.

Treasury Secretary Anderson has arranged to go before the House Ways-and-Means Committee on Monday to request the additional leeway in the government's power to borrow. The present permanent ceiling is 275-billions. But Congress authorized earlier in the session a temporary increase to 280-billion--with the prospect that the Treasury will now ask authority to raise That figure by another eight-billion.

Pause

There doesn't seem to be any doubt, that whether a summit U.N.meeting is held in New York, Geneva or elsewhere, or even if its never held at all, Nikita Krushchev has scored the biggest propaganda coup of The COLD WAR.

By brushing aside all the apparent obstacles to a U.N. summit meeting, The Soviet leader has PLACED the western powers in the position of having to make all the conditions, or objections, if any..

It's of course, well-known, that the Russians possess a flare for the dramatic, but we're told even the Russian people were surprised by Krushchev's boldness...

It's UNPRECEDENTED for the russian people to read in the Soviet Government newspaper IZVESTIA, that the Americans must think the Russians fools to accept a conference at the U.N. because of the presence of the Chinese Nationalists, and then have their leader brush aside this obstacle, a few hours after the paper appeared..

Some people even wonder whether Kruschev planted the story himself, for dramatic effect, or whether the editor of Izvestia is now heading for the salt mines.. All that can be said of it, IT SIMPLY NEVER HAS happened before. For the SOVIET newspapers are the very voices of the party and the Kremlin..

There's no getting away from it, the events of the past nine days have played into Kruschev's hands.// .The coup in Iraq has deprived the West not only of control of the oil,// but control of the best Arab army in the Middle-East.// The Iraqis are not only good soldiers, but ~~they~~ They're ~~have been~~ equipped with about fifty million dollars worth of the most modern american weapons..//

And to the man in the street in Europe as well as the Middle East, the american ~~intervention~~ ATTEMPT to prevent the rest of the Middle East ~~going like~~ collapsing like a House of Cards, brought the world to the verge of possible atomic war..//

And Krushchev ~~is now~~ IS NOW the government chief who took the initiative for summit talks,// when the threat of war seemed real.// And ~~And~~ by his boldness he is able to pose as the Champion of Arab Nationalism, and the protector of the worried neutrals, like Sweden and India..

~~Kruschshev~~ Kruschshev has been able to gain his own ~~primary~~ POLITICAL objective.// .the promise of summit talks with little preparation.. Because careful preparation might lead to summit talks that he could not turn to his advantage.. //

And perhaps most important, the Russians, after centuries of Western defiance, are now being formally recognized as a power with direct interests in the Middle East..

Now it could be a great thrill for Americans to see and hear to Premier Kruschev at the United Nations. But while he gets a large audience to attack President Eisenhower and denounce American policy, it will be a one-way street. There doesn't seem any chance of western criticism of Russia's aggressive, and expansionist policy, reaching the Soviet people..

Premier Kruschev now seems to HOLD MOST OF the trumps... He can play the role of prosecutor and we will be the defendents in the case of the Middle East intervention..

And personally Kruschev can now look forward to SOON the United States. an invitation he's been SUBTLY angling-for, for months... As one reporter PUT IT today, Kruschev will come to New York if he has to get off in LABRADOR and take a Grayhound buss..

This is Larry LeSueur---Ill be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...first goegroe bryran.

The BIG air-sea-rescue search for wickie, the space mouse, has NOW been called off ACCOUNT of darkness..Seems the rocket nose-cone that carried the mouse 600 miles up INTO space, and more than 6 thousand miles down the rocket range from Cape Canaveral, isn't sending out any radio signals..

The mouse's heart-beat was detected for 32 minutes after blast-off, indicating he lived thrugh his space flight and back TO earth...So if they don't find him tomorrow, they'll HAVE TO assume Wickie lost his life at Sea..

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

* 7:45 pm net 7/25/58 Le Seur - Picker

(1)

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today.

President Eisenhower today sent a letter to soviet Premier Khrushchev, in reply to the recent Russian note urging a summit meeting. // The President said that the United Nations Security Council should first decide whether a Middle East summit conference is justified at this time. If the Council decides that it is -- the President went on -- the Council should then fix the date and composition of the meeting -- under the rules of the Council and the U.N. Charter. As for the date of July 28th, suggested by Khruschev -- the President said that's too early. Other Washington officials indicated that August 11th -- two weeks later -- would be more acceptable, provided the British and French agree.

In his letter, Mr. Eisenhower served notice that this country will not agree to a mere discussion of Khruschev's charge that the United States and Britain FOMENTED WORLD WAR by sending troops into Lebanon and Jordan. // Instead, he said, this country will insist on broadening the discussion to include western accusations that the real cause of the Middle East crisis is a soviet-supported campaign to overthrow independent governments in the area. And he said that the situations in Lebanon and Jordan "are but isolated manifestations of far broader problems."

(2)

The President did not make any mention of informal, closed-door talks among the summit leaders -- [redacted] the type of talks, [redacted] favored by Khruschev, and also by British Prime Minister MacMillan. Nor did the President agree with MacMillan's proposal that a summit Council meeting hold discussion -- but not vote -- on the ISSUES that come before it.

Mr. Eisenhower held open the possibility that the United States might demand VOTING and introduce specific resolutions at such a meeting -- under the established rules of the Security Council.

The President's letter was handed to soviet Ambassador Menshikov in Washington. Menshikov was then asked by newsmen whether Khruschev would agree to the President's stipulations -- and the Russian emissary shrugged, and said, "I'll have to ask him."

In London, a foreign office spokesman welcomed the President's reply to Khruschev, saying that Britain was fully consulted on its terms. There's been no official reaction from the French government, THUS FAR, but Premier De Gaulle, who is expected to reply to Khruschev tomorrow, previously indicated he was not in favor of holding a summit meeting in New York, U.N., in the glare of publicity.

President Eisenhower's stand on a summit meeting was generally supported by key members of Congress, [redacted]

ADD P.2

(3)

Democratic senator Mansfield of Montana said that if such a meeting is held, the United States must take into it a positive program for peace -- and not appear to be "dragging our feet." Another democrat, senator Morse of Oregon, said that while the President's stand on a summit conference is sound -- the President's action in sending troops into Lebanon involved what Morse called "a clear violation of the constitution." Republican senators, including Knowland and Wiley, endorsed the President's letter to Khruschev.

The question of United States Troops in Lebanon, remains at the center of the Middle East Crisis. And for a picture of the situation there we take you now to Bayrout, CBS News correspondent Bob Pierpoint reporting

(4)

An Associated Press dispatch from Beirut quotes rebel leader SA-EBB Salam as saying his forces will not permit the Lebanese parliament to name a president as long as pro-western President Chamoun is in power -- and foreign troops remain in Lebanon. His statement Apparently knocked down hopes for an early settlement of the Lebanese crisis LEBANON'S Parliament is scheduled to meet Thursday to ELECT a successor to Chamoun.

In Washington, AMBASSADOR James Wadsworth, deputy U.S. representative to the U.N., SAID ITS possible that U.S. troops can be withdrawn from Lebanon quite soon. He said that U.S. policy is not to hold a gun to the heads of the Lebanese.

Moscow Radio said tonight that Russia has sent a formal note warning Turkey against attacking Iraq. The note -- delivered yesterday -- cited what it called reports that the Turkish government is preparing to begin military operations against Iraq in a few days. The reports were not specified. ...In New York, Turkish DIPLOMATS at the U.N. said the Russian note should not be taken too seriously -- that Turkey has no plans of any kind to attack ANYONE. These sources recalled that a similar Russian note was sent to Turkey during the last Syrian crisis in the U.N.

62

Secretary of State Dulles took off from Washington today for West Germany, for talks with Chancellor Adenauer. Dulles will then fly to London tomorrow night for talks with the Baghdad Pact nations and also with Prime Minister MacMillan ON [redacted] a summit conference planning.

(J)

Defense Secretary McElroy and his aides appeared today before a closed session of the Senate Preparedness subcommittee -- to describe a number of secret military projects -- to show that the nation's defense buildup is moving ahead. Senate majority leader Johnson, who heads the group, said the examples cited definitely represent PROGRESS. But Johnson commented: "If Rome had been built at the same rate of speed, the streets would still be unpaved."

The Securities and Exchange Commission has adopted a code of ethics designed to prevent S-E-C members from discussing pending cases with the White House or MEMBERS OF CONGRESS ~~executive agencies. The House committee investigating federal agencies recently heard testimony that Presidential Assistant~~ Sherman Adams ~~communicated with the S-E-C three times on matters involving his friend,~~ Bernard Goldfine, ~~the Boston industrialist.~~

Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana today demanded an investigation of why a Maryland firm -- now fighting a bill before Congress -- put democratic Representative James Roosevelt of California on its payroll. Citing the House inquiry involving Adams and Goldfine, the senator said: "What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander."

Pause

1a

President Eisenhower's response to Premier Kruchchev today, is clearly designed to take some of the heat out of the crisis atmosphere engendered by Kruchyev's impetuous rush to the summit..//

[redacted]

By calling upon the permanent ambassadors to the U.N. Security Council to exchange views among themselves, and with Dag Hammarshuld, The President, in effect, is bringing the negotiations for a summit conference, back again to the Ambassadorial level...Where they were, until the Russians broke them off By their accusations that we were endangering the peace, With our H-Bomb flights over the Arctic..

Mr. Eisenhower simply doesn't take at face value, the Russian CLAMOR- [redacted], that the world demands a summit conference because of U.S. intervention in the Middle East...And so the President questions the desireability of a quickie summit conference at the U.N...Altho he says, for [redacted] IT COULD BE the case.. // Mr. Eisenhower is obviously referring to the position of France..whose General De Gaulle IS KNOWN [redacted] NOT TO FAVOR a U.N. summit MEETING in New York, and has yet to reply to Kruschcev...

And De Gaulle's opinion is weighted by the fact that he would be President of a summit meeting of the U.N. Security Council in August..

So President Eisenhower cooly questions not only the desireability of a U.N. summit meeting, but its very acceptability to the Security Council as a body, not of nations, mind you, but in its regular composition of Ambbassadors. as he carefully pointed out. today It is to be presumed of course, that the Ambassadors to the U.N. would follow the instructions of their capitals, but the credentials of one those eleven U.N. representatives is still in doubt..namely Iraq.. And the composition of the Council is now heavily in favor of the West..

But President Eisenhower really rebuffs Kruschev, for his having made specific suggestions as to who the Russians think should sit-in on a U.N. summit meeting...The President points out that there are established U.N. rules on these matters, and he doesn't want them tampered with..

It's clear that WE think some other states are entitled to be represented, if Premier Nehru of India is invited as well as the Arab states.. //

And most important, many of them, think they should be innvited, too if matters of direct interest to them are discussed.

If the Arab states are invited, naturally Isreal thinks she should sit in.. And if India is invited, Pakistan doesn't want to be left out..And Turkey feels the same way about it, since they're both Moslem countries and more a part of the Middle East than India is..

And Japan which is a regular member of the Security Council, doesn't want to be excluded, if the Four Great powers get together with India in private talks..// Japan being a potential rival of India's for leadership of the Asian nations....And if the Big powers meet privately with India, then President Nasser is reportedly murmurring, that he's not going to come to the U.N. just to sit around the corridors, // and wait to be invited in..

Eisenhower's insistence on sticking to the regular rules of the Security Council, and calling upon its regular Ambassadors to work out these problems among themselves and with Hammarshuld, doesn't require any regular meeting of the U.N. Security Council until Theyre concluded. [redacted] and all these questions of UN. Council proceedure are non-vetoable. [redacted]

This is Larry LeSueur..I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News--First George Bryan..

Like some people we know, Premier Kruschev does a lot of talking, but he doesn't listen...And he fires off a lot of letters, but he doesn't spend much time ~~on~~ READING the replies..

President Eisenhower observed this today in his note..Told Kruschev: I've studied your letter of July 23, and I find in it, apparent misunderstandings of the view I expressed in my letter of July 22.. which I request you to read again more carefully..

Yesterday Kruschev did the same thing. Misinterpreted a letter from Premier De Gaulle...The French ambassador said Kruschev was either mistaken--or he hadn't read it too well..

This is Larry LeSueur----Goodnite..

LeSueur for Murrow 7:45pm Tuesday, July 29, 1958

Good Evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower HAS BEGUN drafting a reply to Soviet premier Khruschev's summit conference message of yesterday.

Washington sources say the president will propose that he, Khruschev and other heads of government -- discuss the Middle East crisis at a U.N. security council meeting early in August.

The White House announced late today the reply to Khruschev will be delivered by the end of the week -- OR perhaps as early as tomorrow.

ONE official -- in reply -- says President Eisenhower will reject flatly -- Premier Khruschev's revived proposal for a five-power conference outside the U.N.

Russia has since the end of world war two.

10

The rebellion and political unrest continued in Lebanon today.

An attempt to assassinate Premier Sami Solh missed by a split second ... and hopes for a solution to ... There were heavy spatters of gunfire in Beirut ... the 81-day presidential crisis faded, ... underscores ... All this ... that withdrawal of U.S. troops from Lebanon is not ... within sight.

For a direct report, here is CBS news correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut:

TAPE RUNS 1:56

ends ... now back to CBS news in New York ...

The United States embassy in Beirut SAYS ... American troops will be withdrawn from Lebanon -- only when internal security is re-established, and the United Nations adequately guarantees Lebanon's independence. An embassy spokesman said simple agreement on a compromise president -- would not necessarily mean withdrawal of our troops.

21

President Eisenhower made ANOTHER plea today for more foreign aid money pegging it to the Middle East crisis. URGING THE restoration of more than half a billion dollars cut from his AID PROGRAM for friendly nations -- the president emphasized the suddenly increased needs of Turkey and Iran.

made his regular weekly meeting with republican congressional leaders.

53

A band of only seven men -- including one identified as an American -- tried to stage a coup in the capital of Haiti, during the night. All seven were killed. Despite their small number, the seven seized the army barracks back of the national palace -- and captured fifty soldiers, before the Haitian army struck back. The army was under the personal command of President Francois Du Valier. The army said the attempted coup was engineered by three exiled Haitian army officers from Miami, Florida -- who support the comeback hopes of former president Paul Magloire. From his [redacted] New York city, Magloire denied any connection with the plot against the government. ... The police chief of Port Au Prince said the slain American was Arthur Payne, of Miami, Florida.

The United States embassy has warned americans to stay off the streets in the Haitian capital.

The State Department has sent an urgent query to U-S ambassador [redacted] Drew in Haiti -- asking for details of the uprising.

/4

67

Arkansas voters turned out in greater numbers than expected today -- for the democratic primary in which Governor Orval / Faubus SEEKS / a third term. / Democratic nomination in Arkansas / is equivalent to election. // The voting climaxed a tense, / emotional campaign. It centered around / the controversial actions of Governor Faubus -- in fighting the court-ordered integration / of Little Rock's Central High school.

Opposing Faubus / are State judge / Lee Ward ... and / Chris Finkbeiner, a businessman.

Scientists from many countries TO meet in Moscow tomorrow +- to [redacted] discuss [redacted] outer-space information brought BACK [redacted] by the rockets and satellites launched by BOTH EAST AND WEST [redacted] during thecurrent International Geophysical year. The discussions of the Fifth general assembly of the I.G.Y. committee -- will give Western scientists a chance to study th[redacted]d information SUPPLIED r[redacted]d by Russia from its three Sputniks and the first LIVING animal in space, the dog Laika.

The West is interested to learn whether Soviet scientists will revive a Soviet government proposal made earlier this year -- TO PUT [redacted] space research under th[redacted]f the United Nations.

House influence investigators voted eight to nothing today -- to launch contempt of Congress proceedings against Bernard Goldfine -- the long-time friend of white house aide Sherman Adams. The House sub-committee recommended that Goldfine be cited for contempt because of his refusal to answer 23 questions about his financial dealings.

If the commerce committee -- parent of the sub-committee -- approves the recommendation, the citation will be submitted to the House. Then it would be up to the Justice Department to decide whether prosecution is justified. Goldfine would face a possible maximum sentence of a year in jail, and a one-thousand dollar fine on each count -- if tried and convicted.

The contempt action grew out of Goldfine's testimony before the sub-committee -- in which he freely admitted paying about three-thousand dollars worth of hotel bills for Adams, and giving him some expensive gifts. ... Both Adams and Goldfine denied that Adams secured preferential treatment for the Boston industrialist. ... Goldfine balked chiefly at questions about his reasons for issuing more than 700-thousand dollars in long-uncashed checks.... and other business questions he deemed "irrelevant."

In Boston, lawyers for Goldfine issued a statement SAYING ..."no citizen has any obligation to reveal all the aspects of his personal life, [redacted] for the entertainment of a congressional committee or the public. .. // The statement SAID It is the sub-committee's curiosity [redacted] about Mr. Goldfine himself which has been thwarted ... [redacted] .. not the committee's desire to learn whether certain regulatory agencies have been properly fulfilling the functions conferred upon them by [redacted] Congress [redacted]."

91

7

98

The Committee for Economic Development said today the United States could afford to pay billions more for defense -- if necessary. The committee -- a privately-supported, research organization of businessmen -- says, however, that there is an urgent need for better management of defense spending.

The Committee for Economic Development says -- that national defense policy must be geared to the assumption that the communist threat "will continue into the distant future, and that its removal is not within our control." ~~The report said prolonged defense expenditures at a high level~~ SHOULD ~~be put on a pay as you go basis.~~

~~The report also praised President Eisenhower's proposals for re-organization of the Defense Department.~~

47

10

President Eisenhower has signed a bill creating a civilian-controlled agency to run the nation's space research projects. The president will be in direct charge of the agency -- acting through an administrator and he will have the services of an eight man advisory council, including the secretaries of state and defense.

Special provisions in the bill assure that the defense department will continue to control purely military space projects ... and give the president the final say in any disputes as to whether space research projects are military.

The Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge, Massachusetts -- reports the first sighting of America's latest satellite -- Explorer Four. A moon-watch team near Cape Town, South Africa saw the Explorer. It could not be seen with the naked eye. But the Smithsonian says the report indicates the new American satellite "is on the schedule laid-down for it."

(1) A

The diplomatic tug-of-war over the date, place, composition and rules of proceedure for a summit conference, have all but failed to obscure the fact, that sometime and somewhere, a summit conference will take place..

The baggaining over a summit conference has been almost continuous since last Autumn, after the Russians launched their living dog into space, and began their sputnick diplomacy for a summit conference, FIRST CAME THEIR [redacted] phony war scare between Turkey and Syria.. It was Then [redacted], that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko announced, in effect, that the frontiers of Soviet Russia [redacted] lay in Syria, thereby placing the position of Lebanon in THEORETICAL [redacted], if not actual, jeopardy...

President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles have held out much longer this time, than they did in 1955, when the first summit conference took place in Geneva, with a minimum of formality..

At that time, the Soviet Union, by agreeing to a peace treaty with Austria, gave at least some preliminary indications that it might entertain compromises... This time it is not [redacted] furnishing any such prospect at all. Its just flatly demanding a voice in the Middle East.

2.2.2 A

It's now clear that Secretary of State Dulles expects a summit conference to take place sooner or later.// He's gone out of his way to reserve some american positions, placing them out of range of any summit conference bargaining..Yesterday in London, Mr. Dulles quickly turned the meeting of the Bagdad Pact, into A SUMMIT CONFERENCE PRELIMINARY. ... Served notice that the United States will not consider halting arms shipments to Turkey, Iran and Pakistan..// This foreknowledge that one of Russia's most oft-repeated demands, has been for a Middle East Arms embargo..// We might agree not to arm Isreal, AND IRAQ if Russia stops arming Egypt AND Syria, but as of yesterday, we have treaty obligations to arm the northern tier OF MIDDLE EAST STATES, just as Britain has treaty obligations to arm Jordon..

It's no wonder that Premier Krushchev insists ON having Premier Nehru sit-in on ANY summit conference... The Indians are dead SET against the arming of their MOSLEM neighbor, Pakistan...

Premier Nehru would also lend support to the Russians, on an expected demand for a ban on nuclear weapons tests.. also on a call for anglo-american withdrawal from LEBANON AND JORDON.)...

Russia has also taken care to reserve some of its POSITIONS from the bargaining table..Premier Krushchev has repeatedly asserted that the re-unification of Germany by free elections, is not open to bargaining, in the events a summit conference embraces Europe as well as the Middle East. SAYS HE'LL only agree to a merger of the communist east and west german governments..

But aside from these reserved positions, a U.N. summit conference MIGHT be wide open...The Russians say they'll demand the withdrawal of U.S. and British troops from Lebanon and Jordon..We've implied that that we will bring up all of Russia's continued interference there, if we have to go as far back as their refusal to get out of Northern Iran in 1946..President Eisenhower has said he wants a U.N. conference restricted to the Middle East. British Prime Minister MacMillan and Premier De Gaulle HINT they're willing to talk to Krushchev informally... thus Russia may get an opportunity to present its biggest and most CHERISHED demand---withdrawal of all foreign bases from the Middle East and Europe..

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But a word from FoQ. First, G[illegible]n..

Now that we're involved in the sun-baked Middle East, Sun glasses have become a military priority...

Congress became involved today when the President of the Sun Glass institute complained that floods of american-made glasses are NOW invading the country as cheap imports. Said he was surprised when the committee showed him two almost similar pairs of sun-glasses and disclosed that the Navy was buying one kind by the thousands, while the air force was selling the other overseas as U.S. surplus..

This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite..

LeSueur for Murrow 7:45pm Wednesday July 30, 1958

Good evening, everyone, here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower discussed summit strategy with secretary Dulles in their second White House conference in two days. They also discussed the president's forthcoming reply to Soviet Premier Khruschev's latest note on the subject.

Dulles has scheduled a news conference for three P.M. EASTERN TIME tomorrow afternoon, RAISING SPECULATION that the NOTE WILL BE DISPATCHED TO MOSCOW BEFORE THEN

White House news secretary Hagerty says an outline of what President Eisenhower WILL include in his note to Khruschev -- has been sent to the NATO organization meeting in Paris.

The Nato council is trying to arrange a compromise on differences among the Three western powers ON SUMMIT CONFERENCE PROCEDURE

France wants a meeting outside the U.N. The United States and Britain want one within the U-N framework. ... The Nato council called another meeting for tomorrow -- to continue the discussions. But Britain would agree TO PRIVATE TALKS

14

[redacted]

Lebanon's parliament apparently agreed to meet tomorrow -- to elect a new president. This election could the climax of that Mid-East country's three-month political rebellion.

For a direct report, here is CBS news correspondent Richard Kallsen in Beirut:

TAPE RUNS: 2:21 (2:21)

ends ... now back to CBS news in New York.

49

~~Early in the morning, new United States military precautions went into effect in Beirut. Two marine helicopters swept over the port area -- now occupied by the marines -- to look for snipers on the rooftops stretching to rebel-held quarters only a few blocks away. The commander of the American ground forces in Beirut -- Major General Paul Adams -- drove through the city with a bodyguard of armed airborne troops and Lebanese police. A jeep with a mounted 50-caliber machine gun escorted the general's car. Other marine vehicles moved through the streets -- carrying marine guards in full battle dress.~~

9

The Lebanese ~~parliament~~ PARLIAMENTARY election -- if it goes off as scheduled -- should begin at four a-m, New York time. The session is expected to be short. The deputies cast their votes at once. There is no debate.

A quorum of 34 of the 66 members is required. A candidate must have two-thirds of the votes on the first ballot, to be elected. Subsequent ballots require a simple majority.

14

24

Robert Murphy, the president's special envoy in the Middle East -- met with General Chehab at the U.S. embassy before flying to Jordon for talks with King Hussein. || Murphy left Beirut for Amman barely fourteen hours before Lebanon's scheduled presidential election, with the situation still uncertain. || Murphy acted as key mediator in the attempts to bring the opposing factions together in Lebanon's long crisis. His departure for Amman at this time, underlined the urgency of the situation inside Jordan. ||Heavy censorship is blocking dispatches from Jordan, but reports reaching London indicate considerable tension in young King Hussein's capital.

Twenty-three year-old Hussein has been in trouble since the Iraq revolution on July 14th when his cousin, King Faisal, was assassinated. Hussein foiled a plot to overthrow his government earlier this month -- by arresting 60 Jordanian army OFFICERS.

~~Bri[illegible] two thousand par[illegible] reports in January, helping [illegible] Hus[illegible]. Last night a small bomb exploded in the library of the British council center in Amman. And another exploded outside the garage of a British banker.~~

A United States embassy source in Amman SAYS Murphy and King Hussein are discussing the Jordanian appeal for American military assistance -- MADE two weeks ago. The United States never formally answered the appeal.

VF

State department officials in Washington say the U.S. will consult fully with Britain before withdrawing American troops from Lebanon. But reportedly -- there is no pledge that United States troops will stay in Lebanon as long as British forces remain in Jordan. ... Secretary Dulles -- in his talks with British leaders -- promised only to continue logistical support to the British in Jordan as long as necessary.

~~That means moving in supplies as petroleum as are required by the British ... and to keep degree by Jordanic civil population.~~

~~The most optimistic estimates in Washington are that~~ American ~~troops might be pulled out in a few weeks~~ Lebanon ~~if ... provide a political solution to stabilize its internal problem ... and if the United Nations is prepared to assume care-taker responsibility~~ for Lebanon.

52

The West is moving toward recognition of Iraq's new revolutionary government. West Germany and Greece formally recognized the new Iraq regime earlier today. Tonight Bagdad pact members Pakistan ... Iran ... and Turkey formally recognized the new Iraq Republic. ... this just SIXTEEN days after The PRO-NASSER COUP AND the slaying of Iraq's King Faisal --

[redacted]

Reports from London say [redacted] MAY [redacted] WITH [redacted] ...

WITH [redacted].

58

B

8

Russia has accused the United States and the FOUR BAGDAD PACT MEMBERS -- of preparing TO attack the new republic of Iraq. // The Russians warned that in the event of such an attack -- the communist countries would go to the aid of the VICTIM.

[redacted] -- with [redacted] against aggression.

In Washington, White House news secretary James Hagerty said of THIS Soviet Accusation: "We haven't any comment except to say it is ridiculous."

Russia also charged today that a United States plane flying from Iran -- OVER THE CASPIAN SEA -- violated soviet air space -- and Russian fighters forced the plane to withdraw. The soviet government handed protests to the United States and Iranian ambassadors in Moscow. ... The State department says it will investigate.

Three more steel producers announce increases prices -- effective tomorrow. Republic Steel, the third largest steel producer, and Jones and Laughlin AND NATIONAL STEEL the fourth largest -- (and National Steel) published today a similar steel price increases of about 4 DOLLARS AND 50 cents a ton. ... Armco steel announced a similar increase yesterday. ...U-S and Steel and Bethlehem steel -- the two biggest producers -- say they are still studying the price situation.

The increases scheduled for tomorrow -- follow an automatic wage boost that went into effect in the steel industry July first.

In Washington, the House passed a bill aimed at easing the economic plight of the railroads. The bill now goes to the White house. Chiefly, it provides a 500- million dollar loan program for railroads.

The House Ways and Means committee voted today to raise the public debt limit to 288 Billion dollars. It is now 280 billion. President Eisenhower asked for the increase.

In Little Rock, Arkansas -- Governor Orval Faubus won a third term victory. Yesterday's primary elections gave him the greatest majority in the history of ~~the~~ Arkansas gubernatorial primaries. FAUBUS ~~Faubus~~ said today he will neither "claim nor disclaim" leadership of the southern state's rights movements -- if the role is thrust upon him.

~~Faubus~~ called out the national guard last September, to prevent integration of Central high school in Little Rock, and said he would do it again.

Britain announced today agreement by fifteen allies to REVISE [redacted] and [redacted]e curbs on trade with the communist world. DETAIL WILL BE [redacted]

[redacted] announced in London August 15th. It's reported they would PERMIT [redacted] Russia, Red China and The COMMUNIST BLOC [redacted] -- to buy nearly 100 items of manufactured goods and raw materials previously barred to them.

State department news officer Lincoln White [redacted] said "this has no effect on our flat embargo" on trade with Red China. But he did say the United States has agreed that Britain and others can relax their restrictions.

9

76

No matter how many more letters are exchanged between the government leaders in Washington, London, Paris and Moscow, their diplomatic agents are going ahead on the assumption that there's going to be a summit conference, and that it will probably take place in New York..

And with this in prospect, a long line of diplomatic cars drew up before the tall U.N. building in New York, and the delegates of almost a dozen nations, from Lall of India to Menemenjoglu of Turkey, began long talks with U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarshuld. Today

United Nations officials are not so much concerned about where and when the summit conference will be held, although they're hoping FOR NEW YORK — But their problem is to figure out how such top-level talks could be fitted into the proceedure of the U.N. Security Council..

President Eisenhower has stressed the fact that he wants the talks under the U.N. Security Council rules...which means the introduction of resolutions, discussion, voting, and perhaps the introduction of the big power veto..

But there are those who think that such a meeting need not be a three-ring PROPAGANDA circus... And they point out that Britain and France have not excluded the possibility of private talks among the heads of government, with the U.N. Secretary General acting as a kind of referee.

And they think that certain resolutions might be agreed upon [redacted] in the privacy of Hammarshuld's 38th floor office, and then be voted upon unanimously in the big public Security [redacted] Council Chamber...

The thinking of These U.N. officials is that there might be a big public meeting on the first day of a high-level Security Council session, with the government leaders blowing-off steam by reading prepared statements.. After that, some of them at least could retire to Hammarshuld's private office to see if some agreement were possible..//

Its presumed that the government leaders are not really seeking a knock-down and drag-out verbal battle, but rather, some sort of accomodation that would ease war tensions, and leave [redacted] world public opinion satisfied that the world is not coming to an end. Its regarded as a [redacted] dead-certainty that every government leader will want to pose as the champion of peace..

So its not considered too far-fetched that out of this prospective Middle East summit meeting, may come some kind of agreement against any foreign interference in Lebanon[redacted].

After all the United Nations still has observers in Lebanon, although they haven't been making any new reports, and Dag Hammarshuld has stated publically that he's going ahead with their EXPANSION..

So the neutralization of Lebanon against foreign interference, COULD be one of the limited agreements emerging from a U.N. summit conference.. At any rate, that's what Dag Hammarshuld is hoping for..

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news... First--a word from George Bryan..

While New Yorkers ask each other whether a summit conference is impending in the U.N. headquarters on 42nd street and the East River, Some 150 thousand visitors here have been told that the end of the world is nigh.. And with that event in prospect, thousands of Jehovah's witnesses immersed themselves not far from the U.N. building, in a mass baptism the like of which New York has never seen before.. //

It is the Witnesses' belief that the world will end with the battle of Armageddon, in which the forces of Jehovah defeat the forces of Satan.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

LeSueur for Murrow 7:45pm Thursday, July 31, 1958

Good Evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

The Western powers DIFFERED again today on plans for a MIDDLE-EAST summit CONFERENCE.

Prime Minister MacMillan sent a note to premier Khruschev -- proposing an August 12th HIGH-LEVEL meeting of the United Nations Security council -- in New York, Geneva or elsewhere. MacMillan said he is asking U-N headquarters in New York to act at once to arrange the meeting. He said he is willing to attend, personally.

French premier DE GAULLE -- in a message he sent today to Khruschev -- proposed a big power conference in Geneva on August 18th. De Gaulle objected again to summit talks within the United Nations framework. Instead, he accepted the original Soviet proposal for a meeting of the Big Four powers -- plus India -- AND with U-N secretary general Dag Hammarskhold sitting in. De Gaulle said, although a Geneva session opening August 18th is his first choice -- any other date and any other "European" city -- would serve.

12

President Eisenhower's letter to Khruschev ... will be delivered tomorrow. And secretary Dulles told his news conference this afternoon that the U.S. proposal will be along the same general lines as Britain's stand: that a meeting should be called about August 12th, within the framework of the United Nations Security council. Dulles said the meeting presumably could go ahead without Premier De Gaulle if the French leader decided to stay away.

The split between De Gaulle, MacMillan and president Eisenhower emerged publically -- despite three special sessions of the NATO council in Paris during the past 24 hours - in a vain attempt to settle the differences.

But CBS news in Washington says the De Gaulle proposal for a middle East conference outside the United Nations is viewed at the capital -- as only a difference in approach. It is felt the end results would be identical.

28

[redacted] And for a report on De Gaulle's approach to the summit, we switch now to PARIS, CBS NEWS coreespondent Lou Cioffi reporting.

27

TODAY
Mr. Dulles said if Russia does not want a war, the Soviet government will almost certainly have to agree at the proposed U-N summit meeting, that "indirect aggression" -- must be brought under control by United Nations action. Dulles reiterated -- that the United States regards "indirect aggression" as the greatest source of danger in the world today. He said it is a danger not only in the Middle East but in every place where the independence of smaller nations is threatened.

The secretary of state also said the United States is going along with decisions by its middle Eastern Allies such as Turkey -- that it is wise to recognize the new REPUBLICAN regime in Iraq. This statement WOULD SEEM TO IMPLY early United States regognition.

MR Dulles was asked what he thought a summit session could accomplish. Dulles said he thought such a meeting would dispel the false allegation by Khruschev -- that the United States and Britain are engaged in aggression in Lebanon and Jordan ... and that it would show that the great danger to peace ... is the danger of internal aggression.

43

(5)

CORRESPONDENT CHARLES VON FREMD REPORTS FROM WASHINGTON

C B S news [redacted] -- on high authority -- that "although" the United States will continue to insist that any security council [redacted] rules //. the United States expects ... and wants ...

SUMMIT [redacted] conference on Middle Eastern [redacted] ISSUES BE CONDUCTED WITHIN the U- N

a later summit meeting, outside the U-N. ON BROADER ISSUES. [redacted]

[redacted] to object one way or another -- in the meantime.

In India, Prime Minister Nehru said he may leave New Delhi around

August 10th // if the summit talks are arranged, and if he is wanted.

Senator WILLIAM [redacted] Fulbright, [redacted] -- said earlier TODAY [redacted] the Eisenhower administration is "favorably inclined" [redacted] toward recognition of the new Iraqi [redacted] REPUBLIC //... The ARKANSAW DEMOCRAT [redacted] -- after a

[redacted] state department briefing of senators -- reported [redacted] the state department is "very pleased about the election in Lebanon."

[redacted]

THE LEBANESE ARMY CHIEF OF STAFF

General Fuad Shehab was elected to the presidency in Lebanon today -- by an overwhelming vote. // We'll have a detailed report on that election -- and other developments in Lebanon -- in a few MOMENTS.

U.S. UNDERSECRETARY OF STATE

[redacted] Robert Murphy -- // fresh from a diplomatic victory in Lebanon -- SPENT THE DAY [redacted] in Israel for talks with Premier David Ben Gurion. // Mupphy told newsmen the situation in Lebanon has improved a great deal -- and the trend is very favorable."

AGAIN REPORTED

The United Nations observer group in Lebanon -- [redacted] TODAY LITTLE EVIDENCE OF SYRIAN INFILTRATION INTO LEBANON [redacted]

SAID ARMS SMUGGLING [redacted] from the United Arab republic to aid the Lebanese rebels -- is taking place. But ONLY on a limited scale, largely confined to small arms and ammunition. // The U.N. observer group was DISPATCHED to Lebanon by the U.N. security council last month -- to insure against infiltration across the border from Syria.

(65)

[redacted] in favor of

IN WASHINGTON, The Senate VOTED TODAY / IN FAVOR OF creating a permanent U.N police force -- one large enough to keep the peace in the Middle East or elsewhere.// The resolution now goes to the House.

(The House commerce committee voted unanimously to cite Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine/ for contempt of congress -- for his refusal to answer questions ABOUT HIS FINANCES. The case now goes to the House ITSELF, for action/ -- probably next week.

The House today passed and sent to the Senate/ a bill to increase social security pensions/ by seven per cent. //The increase would be accompanied by an immediate raise in payroll taxes// -- from two and a quarter to two and one half per cent each,/ on BOTH workers and their employers --// t[redacted].

All major steel companies now have raised their prices fo r flat rolled steel [redacted].// The latest/ are the nation's two largest producers // U-S steel, and Bethlehem.//.. The Aluminum company of america also is boosting its prices, effective tomorrow/. The increase amounts/ to seven-tenths of a cent/ per pound in basic aluminum prices.

During his news conference today, secretary of state dulles said the U.S. would withdraw its troops from Lebanom --if asked to do so "by a duly constituted Lebanese government." ~~American troops in Leb~~ ~~troops were sent to Lebanon at the request of the present president~~ -- ~~Camille~~ C B S news ~~x~~ co respondent Richard Kallsen reports NOW from Beirut -- ~~on Lebanese politics whether~~ ON DEVELOPMENTS THERE -- ~~developments~~:

TAPE RUNS ~~at~~ 4:15

ends ... now back to CBS news in New York.

This is Larry LeSueur, I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News...First--a word from Ford..

Sir Winston Churchill arrived on the French Riviera today for an extended holiday,...The 83-year-old statesmen apparently does not expect to be consulted on a summit conference...But he's always been in favor of just talking...The last time he suggested it, he said - the leaders should meet informally in privacy and seclusion. Said maybe no agreements would be reached, but there might be a general feeling among from those gathered there, that they might do something better than tear the human race, including themselves, to bits..

Said Churchill: "I Dont see why anyone should be freightened at having a try for it..

They say that one frenchman, is a [redacted] highly-skilled craftsmen...Two french are a

They say take one Frenchman, and you have a skilled craftsmen.. Take two and you have a political argument....

France is a nation of individualists, and Premier De Gaulle seems to be one of the most individual of all..

LeSueur for Murrow... August one, 1958 7:45p

Good Evening Everyone...Here's what happened today...

President Eisenhower definitely committed himself to attend a U.N. Summit meeting with Premier Kruschev...to debate the oustanding issues of the Middle East... The President promised to attend a face-to-face meeting with theSoviet Premier, either in New York, or in a European city---Anywhere except Moscow...The memories of the recently well-organized mass demonstrations against the U.S. Embassy, THERE, said the President, " are still too fresh in the minds of the American people."

The President thus backed-up yesterday's British note, to the Kremlin, suggesting a high-level meeting of the 11-nation U.N. Security Council, and rejected Kruschev's proposal for a five-power meeting outside the U.N..

Mr. Eisenhower's terse, 7-hundred word reply to Premier Krushchev, was far more emphatic than Prime Minister's Macmillan's, in denying Russia's charges of anglo-american aggression in the Middle East.

Said the "real problem" is the threat of further "indirect aggression" against independent states..

ADDED, that this, is CLEARLY the responsibility of the U.N. Security Council."

The President said Krushchev's "assumption" that the Five great powers could "dictate" decisions, to the smaller powers, was like Russia's [redacted] domination of Eastern Europe... "The United States," said Eisenhower," cannot accept that point of view."

The British put in a formal request for a high-level U.N. Security Council MEETING on-or-about August 12.. U.N. Secretary general Hammarshuld [redacted] acted immediately, summoned the representatives of the five big powers [redacted] for individual consultations this [redacted] afternoon. Soviet Ambassador Arkady Soboleff, was the last big-power delegate to talk to the U.N. Secretary General today. Before going up to Hammarshuld's office, Soboleff told this reporter that he had " No instructions from Moscow."

Should Premier Kruschev reply in the affirmative, there are still three problems to be settled, the place of the meeting, the list of participants, and the agenda for the conferance..

The French Ambassador, George-Picot, was the first to see Hammarshuld, since the French will preside over the U.N. Security Council in August, with Premier de Gaulle occupying the presiding CHAIR, if he attends.. The French Ambassador said he would call a U.N. Council meeting NOW THAT A Council member HAD requested it.. But he recalled that Premier De Gaulle suggested a five-power meeting in Geneva, on August 18, OUTSIDE the U.N. //

President Eisenhower's letter to Kruschev today, did not mention France, NOR De Gaulle's proposed approach to the summit...So for THAT, we switch now to Paris, Eric Sevareid reporting..

40

(4)

Britain today formally recognized the new republican government of Iraq. A Foreign Office announcement also said Britain no longer regards the Iraq-Jordan union as being in Existence -- and that Jordan has been so informed. Turkey, Iran and Pakistan [redacted] -- recognized the new IRAQ regime earlier this week. ... Canada (and Finland) also announced recognition of the new IRAQ government today.

The United States is expected to follow suit SHORTLY.

Secretary of state Dulles said yesterday that the question of recognition had been discussed at the recent Baghdad Pact MEETING in London -- and had -- on the whole been considered desirable.

4

(5)

The Lebanese government today also announced [redacted] recognition of [redacted] the new Iraqi regime.

But Lebanon's own political situation is still NOT STABILIZED. C BS news correspondent Richard Kallsen reports from Beirut that President Chamoun WAS INTERVIEWED with president-Elect General [redacted] Shehab at his side ... and withheld a decision on whether (CHAMOUN HAS BEEN SAYING [redacted]) he will retain his office until the end of his term -- September 23rd. Premier Sami Solh -- who bitterly opposed The parliamentary election of Shehab -- wants to quit himself H. but HE would be difficult to replace. NOBODY SAY correspondent Kadson [redacted] wants the job for just two months. ... General Shehab still declines all comment on his future course of action.

Cairo's Nasser-controlled newspapers hail Shehab's election ... predict he soon will ask The United States forces to withdraw from Lebanon.

But today 18-hundred more American troops arrived at Beirut in a transport ship from Bremerhaven, Germany. They sailed from Germany July 24th. They are scheduled to go ashore tomorrow -- to support the [redacted] American soldiers now in Lebanon. The new troops are non-combat, port WORKERS

(6

HAITI's president Francois Duvalier today accused the United States of permitting Haitian exiles to plot on United States soil -- against the Haitian government. // Duvalier also said Haiti is demanding extradition from New York -- of former president Paul Magloire. // Duvalier said Tuesday's attempted coup - // in which three FORMER HAITIAN army officers and five Americans were killed -- was "international brigandage."

The territorial governor of Alaska -- Mike Stepovich -- said in Washington today he will resign August ninth. He wants to run as SENATOR from Alaska, when it becomes the 49th state.

[redacted]

77

(7)

The Republic steel corporation increased more steel prices today -- about three per cent for the cost of bars, rod, pipe and wire. Increases announced earlier this week -- and now posted by every major producer -- had affected only flat rolled products. Youngstown Sheet and Tube ... and Pittsburgh steel -- reported similar price increases. Wheeling steel raised its tube prices. //

The Senate anti-trust sub-committee voted today to begin hearings soon -- [redacted] -- on the increase in steel prices. #

The House today killed a democratic- sponsored bill that would have provided two billion dollars in loans for local anti-recession public works projects.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress for an extra 25-million dollars for atomic energy [redacted] research and development in this country ---and for a power reactor program in Europe.

The Securities and Exchange commission today notified Bernard Goldfine it will take action against his East Boston company -- for failing to file required financial report this year. The report was due July 29th.

Capitalist Louis Wolfson consented today to a permanent injunction against from alleged manipulation of American Motors corporation common stock. Wolfson denied the manipulation charges, simply, states the law, intention or

10

Now ... the first report FROM BAGDAD — [redacted] under

Ken[redacted]q -- where the July 14th revolution touched off the latest middle-east crisis, [redacted] n troops to Lebanon and [redacted] This report was received from CBS news correspondent Alex Kendrick, by Mail —

TAPE RUNS 3.27

ends /... now back to CBs news in New York.

This is Harry he Seem + Dll be back in a moment - write a footnote to Re NEWS — First George Began -

(UNITED STATES)

The [redacted] fired-off a rocket with a nuclear war-head for the first time today...The atomic missile was launched skyward in the Johnson island area of the Pacific, some 700 miles from Hawaii..The spectacular flash many miles above the earth, and characteristic mushroom cloud frightened people in Honolulu. It was the fifteenth atomic blast in our current test series, and MAY have been, the first step in developing an anti-rocket ROCKET.. [redacted] if it carried a mouse, they certainly won't have (to) waste any time looking for it..

This is Larry LeSueur---Good nite..

Lesueur for Murrow Mon., Aug. 4, 1958

Good evening, everyone./. Here's what happened today:

Washington/ awaited a reply from Nikita Khrushchev../.on President Eisenhower's Suggestion of a summit conference on the Middle East, within the framework of the U.N./(United Press International says/ it has information that Khrushchev WILL accept Mr. Eisenhower's proposal for such a meeting./ The President said/ he would agree to meet anywhere EXCEPT in [redacted] Moscow./ The Associated Press speculates/ that the first word of the Soviet premier's reply/ may come---not from Moscow---// but from Soviet UN Delegate Arkady Sobolev, [redacted] N. At United Nations headquarters today, our ambassador../.Henry Cabot Lodge...engaged in a round of INTENSIVE consultations/ with Secretary General/ Dag Hammarskjold...the British ambassador, Sir Pierson Dixon,/ and the French ambassador, Georges-Picot.

There is additional speculation that Russia will take a stand against Nationalist China participating in any summit meeting within the framework of the U.N. That MAY have been one of the topics discussed last week end in BAY-PING, at that conference attended by Red Chinese boss Mao Tse-Dung and Khrushchev.

In Beirut today, the newly elected president of Lebanon made his first speech. For a direct report on that, we switch to Beirut and CBS News Correspondent Robert Pierpoint.//

(Tape runs 1:35
Ends on cue: "--to CBS News in N.Y."

Secretary of State Dulles arrived in Rio de Janeiro today, for two days of talks with Brazilian leaders.// Special precautions were taken to prevent possible hostile demonstrations.//such as those which beset Vice President Nixon on HIS recent Latin American tour.// There WAS some jeering by students.

President Eisenhower has vetoed an appropriation bill, for the first time since he took office...rejecting the six-and-a-half billion dollar measure passed by Congress for financing 17 federal agencies in the next fiscal year. Mr. Eisenhower says he invoked his veto power "reluctantly"...but contends the inclusion in the measure of half a billion dollars for the civil service retirement system had "no sound justification whatever." The Senate voted the money for the civil service fund at the insistence of the House of Representatives. The President calls this "an unnecessary extravagance," points out that 8-billion dollars IS ALREADY ON hand in the fund and predicts that receipts of the fund "will exceed outgo during the current year, and for years to come." Congress now has the choice of revising the bill to conform WITH what the president wants...or of trying to override the President's VETO by a two-thirds majority vote. In any case, it gives Congress something more to do before it adjourns. HOPED Members of Congress to adjourn by August 15th. Majority Leader Johnson said today that he will insist that the Senate stay on the job until its work is done. Listed among the unfinished measure extending the Reciprocal Trade Act, the education bill providing federal scholarship money, and a new program of foreign aid.

→

President Eisenhower DID sign legislation today authorizing expenditure of 386-million dollars on various atomic energy projects...although he felt (in his phrase) that the need of some of the projects had not been "solidly determined".

Late this afternoon, the Federal Reserve Board raised its margin requirement on the purchase of stock back to 70 percent. This is an ANTI-inflationary move; IT goes in effect tomorrow. The 50 percent requirement which HAS been in effect was set last January...when the market was falling, not rising as it is today. The new requirement means that a person who wants, for example, to buy 100 dollars' worth of a certain stock must now put up at least 70 dollars of that amount in cash. The Federal Reserve Board action.. raising the margin requirement...did NOT take Wall Street by surprise. And brokers here in New York are calling it a "good thing" for the national economy.

Today, U.S. Steel followed the lead of the country's smaller steel producers and raised the price on most of its products by 3 percent. BETHLEHEM STEEL SAYS IT WILL FOLLOW SUIT TOMORROW.

From Pontiac, Michigan...an UGLY story of a teamster union official stumbling into a Pontiac hospital. // .85 percent of his body covered with burns. / The burns were so severe that the man had to be identified by [redacted] his fingerprints--/ he refused, for hours, in his delirium to give his name, / saying he was "John Doe" / or / "I don't remember." Actually, he is Frank Kierdorf, / business agent for Teamsters Local / 332 in Flint, Michigan...one of the [redacted] teamster's union officials / called to testify, last year / before the Senate Rackets Committee. / When Kierdorf appeared before the committee...in November. /..he refused to answer questions, invoked the Fifth Amendment more than FORTY times. // Senator Mundt of South Dakota / accused him...at that time. /..of operating a shakedown racket, [redacted] of threatening small businessmen / unless they hired certain labor consultants. [redacted] Police in Pontiac tonight say / Kierdorf may have been tortured. [redacted] Nurses at the hospital say [redacted] his shoes, smelled of gasoline. [redacted] But, so far, / there is no confirmation of these suspicions...no definite proof. / James Hoffa, president of the Teamsters Union, / is scheduled to testify tomorrow / before the Senate committee. // Committee Counsel Robert Kennedy says / he knows of NO connection between the burning of Kierdorf / and the committee's inquiry. // But, says Kennedy, he WILL ask Hoffa why Kierdorf was → kept on with the teamsters. after refusing to help the committee clear up "some very serious matters." [illegible] described [illegible] one hearing said, "any other man would be dead."

Late today, Herman Kierdorf...an uncle... said he had received an [illegible] anonymous telephone call, warning him he would be next. Herman Kierdorf was business agent for Teamster Joint Council 32 in Detroit until a few days ago, when he resigned. He said he could give no explanation for the burning of his nephew OR for the telephoned threat.

More than four years ago...on May 17th, 1954. the U.S. Supreme Court ordered the desegration of public schools in Prince Edward County, Virginia. The order was part of the historic Supreme Court decision... calling for de-segregation of ALL public schools in the country "with all deliberate speed." Since then, the question of de-segregation in Prince Edward County has been much before the lower courts. Last month, attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked Federal District Judge Sterling Hutcheson to order the county. which is chiefly a farming community in Southern Virginia.

→

+ out →

to de-segregate its schools this September. Today, the district judge authorized a seven-year delay in school integration in Prince Edward County.

"Judging from the experience of other communities," he said--in which he APPARENTLY included Little Rock, although he did not say so--"violence may be within the realm of probability if precipitate action is taken."

The judge said further...in his 5-thousand-word opinion...that he reserved the right to reduce...or extend...the 7-year deadline for de-segregation, "in accordance with what may develop." Virginia political leaders say the action taken by Judge Hutcheson is "very gratifying." Negro attorneys are almost certain to appeal.

In St. Louis today...in the Circuit Court of Appeals...oral arguments were heard in the legal battle over the suspension of racial integration at Central High School in Little Rock. The hearing...on the district court order suspending integration at the high school for two and a half years lasted for two-and-a-half hours. Attorneys for the N.A.A.C.P. argued that the delay...if permitted to stand...would be seized upon by segregationists in other southern communities as a means of postponing school integration. The seven-judge court of appeals took the matter under advisement. It is expected to

(1)

Today a new Mystery was added to the cross-currents and riptides of Middle East Politics. The two thousand British paratrooper in Jordon have been left practically isolated, by the abrupt suspension of the anglo-american airlift, of oil and ammunition, to Jordon from the island of Cyprus..

Isreal has apparently forbidden the transport planes from transgressing Isreali air space.. The London foreign office declines to comment.. Isreal merely referred to the suspension in a brief comment over Radio Isreal... Nobody seems very worried, since the British troops are apparently well-supplied, with large supply dumps built-up since they landed in Jordon three weeks ago..

According to reliable reports, the airlift across a corner of Isreal, was terminated because of a strongly-worded Soviet protest to Tel-Aviv.. delivered to Isreal after the four-day secret meeting between Premier Krushchev and Mao Tse Dung in Peiping..

Government sources in Isreal refuse to comment on this report.. give no indication whether the reported Moscow note contained any threats. It would seem unlikely that Isreal would be greatly frightened by [redacted] threats from Moscow, since the Russians failed to react militarily, to the anglo-american interventions..

And no-one knows better than Isreal, that Moscow has long based its Middle East policy, on opposing Isreal and supporting the Arabs..

Yet it's to be recalled, that just BEFORE the revolution in Iraq, Isreal's Ben-Gurion made a deliberate diplomatic appreach to Moscow, asking Premeir Krushchev, to act as GO-Between, in arranging direct peace talks with Ben-Gurion and President Nasser./

Thus far, Moscow has reportedly ignored the Isreali appeal.. But today Isreal declines all comment on the contents of the reported note from THE Kremlin..

Premier Kruschev's EVIDENT desire to carve-up the Middle East at a summit conference, may be causing Isreal, to tread carefully..

The British are plainly on a spot in neighboring Jordon.. Most observers agree, that if they pulled-OUT their paratroopers, young King Hussein's throne would topple..The majority of Jordanians, have no loyalty to King or country...Most of the them are refugees from Old Palestine..With aspirations to join with Egypt, Syria and Iraq, to forge an iron ring around Isreal.

The British recognition of the Republic of Iraq last week, further weakened King Hussein's Monarchy...

Very little appears to support him now, except the actual physical presence of British troops.., If the British should leave, Jordon would probably collapse...The result, might precipitate another Arab-Isreali crisis...This time,with Russia and the West on opposite sides...

One thing that might be usefully attempted, is the disappearance of Jordon within the United Arab Republic, when it happens, in an orderly fashion..

Russia might be induced, at a summit conference, to join with Britain and the United States, in guaranteeing the Arab-Isreali frontiers...

But the only Isreal that Russia seems prepared to guarantee, is a DISMEMBERED Isreal. With this in mind, [redacted] Premier Ben -Gurion is evidently "mending" [redacted] ALL diplomatic fences, in preparation for a summit conference..

This is Larry LeSueur--- I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news... First (a word from) Bill Martin eight russian agricultural specialists toured Michigan state University today, on a four-week tour through the [redacted] Mid-West farm belt.

One of the Russians was here three years ago, [redacted] on a much publicized tour through Texas..At that time, according to reports, One of the Russians was amazed by his Texas Guide's description of everything in Texas, as the biggest THING" in existence. So he asked the Texan, what was the [redacted] smallest thing in Texas..The Texan pondered a moment and SAID, "The smallest thing? The communist Party.."

This is Larry LeSueur...[redacted] Goodnite..

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Soviet Premier Khrushchev rejected the Anglo-American CALL for a summit meeting in the U.N. Security Council. //.proposed, instead, that the General Assembly be called into special session to take up Russia's demand that British and American troops get out of Jordan and Lebanon. The Security Council, said Khrushchev, has proved itself "not capable" of solving the Middle East crisis. He claimed the Council is ineffective "because it is practically subordinated to the foreign policy of the United States." //It is a body, he said, "where the [redacted] place of the "legitimate" representative of the great Chinese Peoples Republic is occupied by a political corpse--Chiang Kai-shek."

The policy of ignoring Red China, he said, "makes no sense." ~~And here we have a suggestion of at least one tack...taken last week in those secret talks between the Russian leader and Chinese Communist Boss Mao Tse-Dung.~~

Premier Khrushchev did not close the door on possible summit talks. He concluded his 10-page letter to President Eisenhower.../.and ~~[redacted]~~ separate notes to British Prime Minister Macmillan and French Premier DeGaulle.../.. by arguing that a special session of the General Assembly might expedite an eventual meeting at the summit./ And he chided the United States and Britain for not accepting his original proposal for a five-power summit meeting OUTSIDE the U.N.

At the U.N., Soviet Delegate Arkady Sobolev.../.acting promptly on instructions by his government.../.has formally asked the Security Council ~~[redacted]~~ to consider calling the General Assembly into emergency session./ Sobolev submitted his formal request to this month's council president, Georges-Picot of France./ Our ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge, said the United States "welcomes" such a debate. The Security Council ~~[redacted]~~ WILL MEET THURSDAY afternoon.

In Washington, ~~[redacted]~~ News Secretary Hagerty said the White House will NOT comment on the new Khrushchev letter until a full translation has been received./ A STATEMENT IS EXPECTED LATER, ~~MOMENTARILY~~, ~~(As usual, news of the letter...and its contents, [redacted] came first from the Moscow Radio.)~~

This para deleted on Standard Nix report

President Eisenhower was at the Burning Tree CLUB ...playing golf...when word was received. He returned to the White House and conferred with Undersecretary of State Christian Herter...who is "acting secretary" while Mr. Dulles is in Rio de Janeiro. Mr. Eisenhower is holding a news conference tomorrow--his first in four weeks.

Secretary Dulles said in Rio de Janeiro tonight that the United States will have "no hestitation" in debating the questions raised by Premier Khrushchev in the U.N. General Assembly. [redacted], Mr. Dulles pointed out THAT [redacted] the Security Council now HAS an American proposal calling for a special meeting of the General Assembly...a proposal, Mr. Dulles said, which was suspended only because the Soviet Union asked for meeting in a more restricted group. The Secretary of State made no other comment...saying that he had not had an opportunity to see Khrushchev's [redacted] statement. But off the record, Washington officials...and Western diplomats at [redacted]N...say the latest Khrushchev note apparently has killed any prospect there MAY have been of an early meeting at the summit.

—7

—INSERT—

We're informed
The White House has just issued a statement...saying that President Eisenhower ACCEPTS Khrushchev's call for a special Assembly session. But he XXXXX insists on U.S. terms.

In Congress, the Senate Democratic whip...Mike Mansfield... predicts that what Khrushchev has done will backfire on the Soviets. SAID he has made it appear that Russia does not really want a settlement of the Middle-East question. WANTS only to engage in propaganda "and sow seeds of discontent." Democratic Senator Humphrey told the Senate that President Eisenhower should stand firm, shoot a reply back to Khrushchev that "will literally SHAKE the bricks in the Kremlin." Humphrey said the United States should be willing to have the General Assembly meet...but should insist, at the same time, that the place to work on a settlement is in the Security Council. (I should like to discuss the problem, as we face it in the U.N., in a few minutes. But first, this direct report from the CBS News correspondent, Paul Niven, in Moscow.)

Tape runs _____. Ends on cue, "to CBS News in N.Y."

President Eisenhower's Special Envoy

[redacted]... Robert Murphy...has arrived in Cairo for a meeting tomorrow with President Nasser. Before leaving Beirut this morning Murphy had another round of talks with the president-elect of Lebanon, General Chehab, and with rebel leader Saeb Salaam. He also conferred with the outgoing president, Camille Chamoun. Before leaving Lebanon for Egypt Mr. Murphy told [redacted] a news conference it would be "impossible" to say when American troops would be withdrawn from Lebanon. "The KEY to the question of withdrawal," he said, "is the time when the Lebanese government considers that adequate stability has been restored." When he was [redacted] asked about General Chehab's statement yesterday that the withdrawal of the American forces was "foremost" among the national aims of Lebanon, Murphy said he thought the president-elect [redacted] was still more interested "at the moment" in achieving internal sability. When another reporter asked about the [redacted] new arrival of American troops in Lebanon, Murphy said the soldiers had been "in the pipeline". // "You can't turn on the faucet," he said, "and then turn it off in two minutes." // Incidentally, the arrival of another thousand service troops in Lebanon today virtually completes the landing operation. // U.S. Army and Marine forces there now total more than 15 thousand men.

Mr. Murphy said he might be "foolishly encouraged", but it seemed to him that the Middle East situation was improved.

Jordan offered today to re-open its frontiers with Syria--IF Syria reciprocated. According to Jordan, Syria closed its border to JORDANIAN traffic, last Saturday night.

[redacted]

The Middle East crisis may have influenced The vote for more foreign aid money, taken today by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The committee approved a 3-billion, 518-million-dollar measure...providing 440-million dollars MORE for foreign aid than was voted by the House. The restoration had been urged by President Eisenhower, and Democratic Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson...and [redacted] Senate Republican Leader Knowland... likewise pressed for the higher appropriations AMOUNT. House Republican Leader Joe Martin says the House is in a mood now to give the [redacted] foreign aid program more money than it originally voted.

Primary elections were held today in West Virginia, Missouri, Kansas, and Michigan...with two Democratic presidential possibilities, Michigan's Governor Mennen Williams and Missouri Senator Stuart Symington, strong favorites to WIN renomination. Williams is seeking an unprecedented → sixth term as Michigan governor.

Teamsters President James Hoffa appeared...as scheduled today...before the Senate Rackets Committee. Witnesses told of (an alleged) [redacted] 17-thousand-dollar "pay-off" by Detroit laundry owners in 1949, to avoid a citywide teamsters strike. Two witnesses said they THOUGHT some of the money went to Hoffa, but SAID they could not swear to it. Hoffa himself listened to this testimony in silence. He will be questioned about it later.

In Pontiac, Michigan....the burned teamsters union official, Frank Kierdorf, remains near death. His uncle, [redacted] Herman Kierdorf, has disappeared after swearing that he would [redacted]" find out who was responsible. Police are trying to take him into custody, [redacted] in case he is seeking revenge. He is reportedly [redacted] armed.

Weal it Looks as Tho

Premier Kruschev got His knuckles rapped in Bay-Ping over his impetuous acceptance of a High Level UN Security Council meeting, without Red China. His belated acknowledgement today, that "A policy of ignoring the People's Republic of China, makes no sense." and his consequent call for a Bi-Nation special U.N. General Assembly session, of course side-tracks the possibility of a high-level U.N. meeting at This time.

yet At the moment, the only thing on the agenda of the U.N. Security Council IS the proposal By Britain and America that a high-level meeting SUMMONED be one week from today. But President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan can OF Course gracefully bow out, with professions of sorrow that the meeting with Kruschev could not be arranged..

what's left before the Security Council is ~~American Ambassador~~ Lodge's proposal Presently that a special assembly be convened to debate the Eisenhower-Macmillan-Khrushchev issues. Mr. Lodge only made this proposal to beat the Russians to the punch, and he could HAVE SAID that he thinks the emergency is now over, and a special U.N. Assembly session WAS no longer necessary..

But The Russian delegate Arkady Sobolev tonite complied with his bosses call for a special U.N. meeting of the 81 member states, [redacted] yet if the Wstern powers so decide, they can [redacted] easily summon the five negative votes necessary to block [redacted] must soviet call for a special U.N. Assembly..

~~It takes seven affirmative votes in the Security Council to summon an emergency session of the U.N. General Assembly. So if just five out of the 11 Security Council members abstained, there would be no hasty summoning of the General Assembly as Premier Krushchev has proposed.~~

Nevertheless, American Ambassador Lodge has accepted Russia's [redacted] challenge for an emergency U.N. General Assembly session.. Says he welcomes an emergency meeting of the 81-Nations, but pointed-out that his priority proposal calls for a debate on the over-all situation in Lebanon, rather than the Soviet call for the [redacted] ouster of the ANGLO American troops..

So if the United States presses for this debate, presumably we'll get our way. But [redacted], some other western nations are not as keen as the americans to match the russians in calling a special General Assembly session.///

There are two ways, you know, of calling a special session of the U.N. [redacted] Assembly...There's the regular way, and [redacted] there's the American-devised way...The normal way, is for a U.N. member to ask the Secretary General to convene such a gathering...Dag Hammarshuld then polls the capitals of the U.N. members, and if a [redacted] simple majority of 41 are in favor, a date would be set for such a meeting..

The American way simply demands a meeting of the U.N. Security Council, and if any seven [redacted] out of the eleven members vote in favor of summoning a special assembly, one could be convened in 24 hours..

[redacted]

This method was devised by Dean Acheson, to get around a possible russian veto on the Security Council. So it came as a [redacted] surprise tonight, that the Russian delegate decided to employ it, in response to his bosses call for a special assembly-[redacted] Surprising because the Russians bitterly opposed the idea when Dean Acheson conceived it, and called it 'illegal" when it was passed."

But Premier Krushchev doesn't hesitate to quote the bible when it suits his purpose, and it obviously suits the Russian book to get a special U.N. General Assembly convened while this country and Britain still have troops in Lebanon and Jordon..

desperately to regain [illegible]

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news... First B[redacted]in..

a word from Ford

On [redacted], thirteeen years ago TOMORROW the first U.S. atomic bomb was dropped on the Japanese city of Hiroshima. In an instant, Hiroshima was reduced to dust and ashes with more than 79 thousand persons killed and more than 2 hundred thousand injured..

When the Japanese refused a second call for their surrender, another, and improved atomic bomb was dropped on NAG Nagasaki, [redacted] da[redacted]. The Japanese Emperor finally agreed to give up, and the formal surrender came WITHIN [redacted] hours..

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower said he would attend an emergency meeting of the U.N. General Assembly--if that should be found "desirable or necessary". But so far, he said, he knows of no "general intention" on the part of other heads of government to attend. (A special ~~Assembly~~ U.N. meeting on the Middle East is expected next week. The Security Council takes up the question of such a meeting tomorrow ~~with~~ ON the ~~blessing~~ DEMAND of both Russia and the United States). Mr. Eisenhower made ~~the~~ this statement at his first news conference in five weeks. It was an IMPORTANT conference...attended by 241 reporters...~~he~~ The President appeared for the most part confident and relaxed. In answer to one of the first questions, he said the United States wants the WHOLE Middle East problem...and its underlying causes.// aired in the Assembly. And not for the discussion, in his phrase, to be limited to "little Lebanon". As for the Soviet charge that the United States committed aggression in sending troops into Lebanon, Mr. Eisenhower pointed to the record. The history of the past century, he said, shows that the United States has "sought sovereignty" over no other country. Russia, on the other hand, has gobbled up a whole series of states in Eastern Europe and has supported Communist "adventures" in North Korea and Vietnam. He conceded that OUR charge (of "indirect" aggression in the Middle East) will not be easy to prove. .but SAID nevertheless, we have a good case. American troops will leave Lebanon, he said, when the Lebanese government declares the situation to be "in hand." "Any time that the legitimate government of Lebanon asks us "out," said the President, "we WILL be out."

—)

Mr. Eisenhower noted that ~~[illegible]~~ Soviet Premier Khrushchev had not ruled out the possibility of an EVENTUAL summit meeting. .notwithstanding his rejection of a heads of government meeting within the framework of the Security Council. The President said he was still willing to attend a ~~summit conference. IF it were sufficiently prepared and promised success.~~

B. Altman & Co.

Swirl into fall

our dark-toned Swirl® provides cool transition for misses' and half size figures. Hound's tooth checked cotton in blue, red, or rust predominating. Sizes 10 to 20, 14½ to 24½. 6.95

Altman forenoon shop, second floor

MUrrayhill 9-7000—Fifth Avenue at 34th Street

Text of President's N

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6 (UPI)—Following is the transcript of President Eisenhower's news conference today:

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER—Please sit down. Good morning. Good morning. I have no questions or statements.

1 MARVIN L. ARROWSMITH of The Associated Press—Mr. President, do you have any plans to attend and perhaps make a speech at the proposed United Nations general meeting on the Mideast?

A.—Well, I think, first, I should say I know of no general intention on the part of other heads of government to go to this meeting. But, as you know, each delegation can be headed, if that Government so chooses, by the head of the Government. And if I found it necessary or desirable, why, I think I should, I could participate.

As of this moment there are no plans of that kind made and no particular intention.

2 PETER LISAGOR of The Chicago Daily News—Mr. President, can you tell us what you would like to see discussed at a General Assembly meeting? Whether you would like to see it confined only to Lebanon and Jordan or whether you would like to see it deal with the whole problem of the Middle East?

A.—Well, we have stated in several of the notes that we have sent, I think you will recall, that it is the general problems of the Mideast with their underlying causes that we would intend to discuss and to confer about.

And, of course, this takes in quite a broad field. But I think you couldn't possibly confine anything just to, say, the little country of Lebanon, because the causes of the difficulty are so much wider than are to be found merely within that area that it would be impossible. You would have to discuss the problems.

3 DAVID P. SENTNER of the Hearst newspapers—Mr. President, would you say the development in the last twenty-four hours has virtually removed the possibility of any full-dress summit meeting?

A.—Well, no; you can't say that because about the final three paragraphs, I think it was, or four of Mr. Khrushchev's letter, again we turn to the subject of summit meeting, and the general attiude of the United States has been perfectly consistent.

We are, if we see that there can be anything constructive come about from the summit meeting, of course, we would be prepared to attend. But the assurance that anything constructive can be discussed or do you think it would be worth while?

A.—Well, there is no time that I have heard this advanced until this moment. But I would say this:

From all I know, the Governor is a reasonable American, and if he would like to talk to me, I would like to talk to him about it. I have no objection, certainly, to such a chat with the Governor.

7 SARAH McCLENDON of The Manchester (N. H.) Union Leader—Mr. President, Sarah McClendon of The Manchester, New Hampshire, Union Leader. Sir—[laughter].

I want to quote to you, if you don't mind, from a—[laughter]—these are your own words, sir, in a speech you made to the G. O. P. women in Washington on March 18, 1958.

You said:

"There is only one possible principle for all Americans to follow. The standard of official conduct must be the highest standard known to human behavior. Of course, a government as large as ours, staffed by fallible human beings, has no way to make certain that a deviation from this standard will not sometimes occur. But all of us can make certain by prompt, decisive and fair corrective action that public confidence in the integrity of government is maintained. The greater the role and responsibility of government, the greater the importance of uncompromising insistence on the highest official standards are all the time everywhere."

Now, sir, I wonder, in view of this, if you can justify keeping Sherman Adams and the girls in the White House who took the gifts from Goldfine on your payroll?

A.—I made my statement about this subject some time ago. I hope you will understand—you will remember it, and I am going to say nothing more about it.

8 JOHN SCALI of The Associated Press—Mr. President, in his letter to you, Premier Khrushchev credits his call for a five-power summit conference with forcing the United States and Britain to abandon whatever additional plans they had to enlarge the so-called aggression in the Middle East. What do you think of this remark?

A.—Well, it would be difficult for me to express my opinion adequately. Now, the history of this century shows to my mind very defenitely the basic purposes and principles of the United States as they are applied to the rest of the world.

We have sought sovereignty over no other country; we have not tried to make any

News Parley on Mideast and U. S. Affairs

Associated Press Wirephoto

MIDEAST IS THE SUBJECT: President Eisenhower answers reporter's question during his news conference.

lution were vetoed by the Soviet Union.

But their history, which includes all of the Eastern European nations that they have taken over by force and held by force since the conclusion of World War II, their adventures into North Korea and North Vietnam, all say, show, and point to the fact that the accusation they made should be directed directly to themselves and not to us.

9 JOHN HERLING of Editors Syndicate—Mr. President, this has to do with labor-management reform legislation, which is a bipartisan bill passed by the Senate, 88 to 1.

This, as you know, is an outgrowth of the McClellan committee, which recommended measures of this kind. The same bill now has a fighting chance of passage in the House if it gets the same bipartisan support.

Would you comment, sir, on the importance of this legislation, and specifically will you give your backing to this labor - management reform bill?

A.—When such a bill comes before me, I will decide what to do about it.

Now, my recommendations on it have been set out in detail not only in my own specific messages to the Congress but by my Secretary of Labor, who has gone down time and again to explain our opinions and our beliefs about it.

Now, if we get a bill that, in spite of its elimination of is maintained and sustained within the Administration.

I was merely pointing to the principle and the standards of conduct that the United States sets up for itself and out of its deep convictions, lasting for these many years. Now, what you are talking about is the application and that, of course, is a most extraordinarily difficult thing.

Positive Action

I believe, I will say this much, in the generality to cover the situation: I believe that negative measures are never going to succeed, just as any defense in war, if it is maintained forever is going to fail, because only the offensive can do anything positive. We must do positive things to bring about that state, that sense of cohesion, that sense of oneness among the Free World that we must have if we are going to be successful.

I believe in nationalism. This Administration believes in nationalism. We believe it for ourselves, and we believe that any nation, any peoples, have the right to their independence. Indeed, it is because of our belief in the spirit of nationalism that we are in Lebanon today, and if the Arabs, as a whole, want to express their nationalism in the form of a federation of a larger state, we have no objections to that. As a matter of fact, we recognized very quickly the U. A. R. [United Arab Republic] because of our belief in that.

ever accept the political consequences of what both knew to be a very fine economic development.

But, nevertheless, you have asked a question that, to my mind, does illustrate what should be the basic concern not just of this Administration, but of America today.

11 DAYTON MOORE of United Press International—In light of the rise in steel prices and the prospects for large Federal deficits during the next five years, do you have any plans to curb inflation?

A.—Well, strangely enough, you gentlemen, ladies and gentlemen, were hearing me talk about this problem of inflation a few months back where everybody wanted to spend more money and to decrease taxes.

I believe that labor, management and Government must all be concerned in this problem; and I think, of all these branches, no one could be more concerned than is labor.

It is easy to suppose that because a man is getting increased wages that he, through his collective bargaining process, is staying ahead of the process or the progress of inflation.

I don't believe this is ever true, and the reason that it is not true is this:

Our whole civilization, our industrial civilization, today certainly, has come to include as its important feature for the future of the laborer is the pension plan, Social Security, pension plans of the companies and his own insurance and bonds, savings of that kind.

Now, when he starts to make those savings at the beginning of, let's say, a thirty-year period of work, but every year there is inflation, regardless of his wages, he cannot get back then out of his pension dollars that are better than at least the median dollar—he will get back the dollars at the end of his inflationary period; whereas, he was paying in his dollars at the median of that whole process.

Interest of Labor

In other words, if you take the average of the dollars he put in, they will be worth fifteen years of inflation more than the ones he gets back. So that no group can have any more interest in combating inflation than labor, as I see the problem.

Therefore, I think that, first of all, if we are going to remain a country without artificial control, meaning that we are not going to try to go into a Federally controlled economy, then labor and business must be very, very careful about this whole problem of pushing wages each year above those [illegible] think was necessary and for the good of the country. I would hope that it would be substantially enacted.

Now, there were three things, you may recall, in the international field; the reformation of the defense organization, the mutual aid and reciprocal trade. All of these things seem to me to be absolutely vital to our international health.

There are many other things that apply to this domestically.

Now, some of them are going pretty well in the way I recommended; some are not. But I would say, all in all, there seems to be a pretty good record of accomplishment. But I would say this: I am not yet satisfied, and they are not through yet.

14 MRS. MAY CRAIG of The Portland Press Herald—Indirect aggression is very difficult to prove. How do we expect to prove it in the General Assembly in relation to indirect aggression in the Middle East?

A.—Well, I think it is correct that it is somewhat difficult to prove. It is a little bit difficult to prove sometimes things in a trial court. You have to get in all the evidence; you have got the evidence that comes in, the circumstantial evidence, as well as the direct evidence, things that you can see.

But the United States did publish, as I recall, a series of incidents within Lebanon. I believe there were 125, as I recall, and they pointed these things out at the same time that the local freely elected Government said it was occurring.

Now, in this instance—and then, as I say, with the sudden revolt in Iraq, we thought that the evidence was clear, so far as we are concerned. We would hope to be able to prove it.

But I will cheerfully admit that it can be done sometimes so cleverly and in such a clandestine manner that it will be difficult.

15 EDWARD T. FOLLIARD of The Washington Post and Times Herald—Mr. President, there have been stories in the London papers saying that your health is not good. You look pretty good to me. May I ask, sir, how you feel?

A.—Thank you, Eddie, for the remark. [Laughter.]

I—some time ago Mr. Hagerty told me about these stories, I hadn't read them. I don't know why it is done, nor what is the purpose.

I know this: They have not consulted my doctors, and certainly they haven't consulted me as to how I feel.

The only thing they could be talking about that I can see is that my last two golf scores—and they are, I ad-

MUrrayhill 9-7000—Fifth Avenue at 34th Street and at White Plains, Manhasset and Short Hills

NEW YORK • MASSAPEQUA PARK • STAMFORD

Soft,

cling-fit jersey looks so glamorous!

45.00

Clingy, drapy matte rayon jersey in jet black or royal blue; sizes 10 to 18. By RAYNOR FASHIONS.

Come in, write or phone; sorry, no C.O.D's.
Saks-34th—Salon Elegant —Fifth Floor and branch stores

SAKS-34TH • 34TH AT BROADWAY • LACKAWANNA 4-7000

ALL STORES OPEN THURSDAY NIGHT

assurance that anything constructive can be discussed must be attained by going through the preparatory process that we have always urged as a prerequisite to a meeting.

This man right here [indicating].

4 ANTHONY LEWIS of The New York Times—Mr. President, we are approaching the start of another school year that seems likely to produce as much tension in the South over racial integration as last year and, perhaps, more.

I wondered, sir, whether you had any plans during the month before the start of school to try to head off that tension in the way of personal action by you, talks, statements or in special instructions to the Justice Department?

A.—Well, I haven't planned at this moment any particular speeches, as you point out.

Now, I have consistently tried over five and a half years to show that my belief—that mere law will never solve this problem. I believe we have got to look inside ourselves, and this means not only as individuals, this means as groups. It means county authorities, state authorities and Federal authorities.

How are we going to solve this problem? It is a difficult one, and I keep preaching that there must be some wisdom, some sense of civic duty in accordance with the principles which have been laid out for a citizen in this country, and that I think we must continue to do.

Now, I cannot possibly tell you in what aspect any acute situation may arise, indeed, whether there ever will be of that kind.

I just say it is something all of us have to work, and I would—if I could think of anything I thought would be effective in August or in the few weeks before, the two or three weeks before, the schools start, why, I certainly shouldn't hesitate to do it.

5 STEWART HENSLEY of United Press International—Mr. President, can you give us any indication, sir, as to when the withdrawal of American forces in Lebanon might begin?

A.—Well, I think this will be when the Government of Lebanon says that "We feel that the situation is in hand, and we do not feel the effects of this indirect aggression that we did before," and, therefore, we feel confident that at this point we would start out or start back.

Now, in addition, any time that the legitimate Government of Lebanon asked us out, we will not be there. That's all there is to it.

6 GARNETT D. HORNER of The Washington Star—Some time ago, sir, Representative [Joel T.] Broyhill [Republican] of Virginia suggested a meeting between you and Gov. [J. Lindsay] Almond of Virginia concerning the school integration crisis in near-by Arlington. Have you any plans for such a meeting, over no other country; we have not tried to make any country or any people or any nation subservient to us in any way, politically or through military force or in any other—or through economic means.

We do believe that freedom and the principle of liberty is indivisible in the world and, therefore, when freedom of the weak, the independence of the weak, is threatened, the United States has a very deep responsibility; indeed, in its own self-interest it must attempt to carry that responsibility.

Now, since the founding of the United Nations we have tried to do this collectively. We believe it should be done, and we believe certainly in the Charter of that organization. And only where, because of the critical circumstances, as they came in the Lebanon situation, because of the unexpected revolt or the sudden revolt, rather, in Iraq, the United States felt that the Government of Lebanon was justified in calling for a little help, we did call for help.

We immediately put the whole problem before the United Nations again, announcing our readiness to get out of there as quickly as the United Nations could take positive action. As you know, both the United States resolution and the Japanese reso-

News Confere

Special to The Ne

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6—of President Eisenhower's new

Foreign Policy—The Unite sibility to protect the indepe nations everywhere because fr liberty is universally indivisibl be discharged collectively throu possible, or directly as in th necessary. [Questions 8, 10 and Nationalism—This is some people and Government firmly independence. [Questions 8 and

General Assembly Meeting no present intention attending ing on the Middle East nor have But he could do so if circums it. [Questions 1, 2, 3 and 8.]

Summit Meeting—It does Khrushchev's latest note that t summit meeting" later on the lems. [Question 3.]

Khrushchev's Latest Note century belies the Khrushche expansion of Anglo-American East. On the contrary, Khrush sion to this country should be whose whole post-war record in Eastern Europe, North Kore areas. [Question 8.]

Troops Withdrawal—Amer be withdrawn any time the Lebanon requests it. [Question

Wages and Inflation—Busi to fear a "revolt" of the buy wage increases bring further [Question 11.]

Integration in Schools—H "tensions" inherent in the ap application of racial desegregat to join in any effort toward th his conviction that integration alone. [Question 4.]

The Record of Congress— gressional session had given lative program he requested, h yet and the session is not yet o

Presidential Health—To juc by his physicians, the Preside Also he is feeling physically fit

Now, if we get a bill that, in spite of its elimination of measures or its avoiding of bringing up measures that I think are necessary, if it is still progress toward the goals we have set, then, of course, I would approve and support it.

10 EDWARD P. MORGAN of American Broadcasting Company—Mr. President, you have just re-enunciated some of your principles of conduct in international affairs.

Some of your—some of the members of your Administration privately are saying that as noble as they are that these are not enough, and that opposition to indirect aggression in the Middle East is not enough, that we have, perhaps, to get down to specifics and clarify our position and policies on such specific matters as Arab nationalism, the borders of Israel, economic plans for the area, and so forth.

Admitting the awful tortuous complications of such problems, do you think it is possible or—and/or wise to take a fresh look at these problems now?

A.—Oh, indeed. As a matter of fact, I think we should take a fresh look at them all the time, and I hope there is no rigidity of opinion that rence in Brief

New York Times.

—Following are the highlights ews conference today:

ited States has a deep respon- pendence of threatened little freedom and the principle of ible. This responsibility should ough the United Nations where the case of Lebanon where nd 12.]

nething in which the American ly believe as an expression of nd 10.]

ng at United Nations—He has g the General Assembly meet- ave other heads of government. nstances appeared to warrant es not follow from Premier there will not be a "full dress he Middle East or other prob-ote—American history of the hev claim of having spiked n "aggression" in the Middle hchev's imputation of aggres- be directed to Soviet Russia d of aggression was written rea, North Vietnam and other erican forces in Lebanon will e legitimate government of ons 12, 14 and 18.]

siness and labor have reason ying public should continued er inflation in their wake.

He has no plan to head off pproaching school term and ation. But he would be happy that purpose that recognized n cannot be achieved by laws

—Although the current Con- him substantially the legis- he is not entirely satisfied as over. [Question 13.]

udge from all the indices used dent is in very good health. it. [Questions 15 and 16.]

cause of our belief in that.

But even that is not enough. This country—I mean these countries—did not develop such as ours. Here was a vast wilderness of natural resources with very few people. Opportunity was so rich and found on so many sides that our problems were how could each of us drive himself far enough, hard enough to achieve the ambitions that he almost limitless ambitions, he either himself.

These people are already in crowded areas, denuded areas. For example, in the Mideast and Africa, I have often heard the saying that the Arab doesn't follow the desert, the desert follows the Arab.

His ways of grazing and of handling his flocks, and so on, when all the cover is gone, all the grass cover is gone, he moves on, but the desert follows wherever he has gone.

Now, I believe that some things can be done to bring that back, but that is only one specific place.

Capital Investments

Throughout the world these crowded countries, some of them not so crowded, but they do need the sums, the capital investments that will help them achieve more rapidly their economic, legitimate economic, aspirations.

This the United States, I believe, must help do, if we are going to be true to ourselves, to make ourselves more secure. It is the reason that I have worked so hard, and never have I worked any harder on any particular bill, than to get the needed sums for the Mutual Security Act this year, because we begin to see evidence that some of these dissatisfactions are reaching the boiling point.

The people are impatient, and they are turning to people that they do not trust, that they do not believe are going to be content in letting them have their own freedom of action; and I say we must make it possible for them to turn to us to get effective help of this kind and, therefore, I say it must be not merely negative.

Troops are never going to win the peace. We have got to do something positive, and this must be in the field of moral and spiritual and economic and political strengthening of all these areas.

Q. Does this mean, sir, that with or without a summit meeting, your Administration plans to come up with an integrated over-all program of operation in the Middle East?

A.—Well, now, I am not going to put it in those broad and quite such resounding terms. We certainly know what we want to do, and we are prepared to, as we agree with each of these countries or in groups, indeed, with a group of these countries, if we can, to help wherever we can.

As you know, for many years we have had working on the [Eric] Johnston Plan, the so-called Jordan plan, so that both Arab countries and Israel could get great benefits from that river, but neither side apparently could of pushing wages each year above those rates that imply or show the increases in productivity, and business must make its profits of such a scale that where they can still continue to invest money they are not robbing the public. Because if they do, just as sure as you are a foot high, one day the American consumer is going to rebel, he is going to rebel in a big way, and there will be real trouble, and we will get something that we don't want.

Now, Government's principal reason here is to keep down expenses so we can try to keep, so far as we can, fiscal responsibility, and I do not admit, and I do not for a moment believe, that we are going to have constantly increasing deficits.

I believe the prospects are for this next one which goodness knows, horrible as it is, must be the highest one, and we must go back from there.

12 CHALMERS ROBERTS of The Washington Post—Mr. President in the Middle East question, Sir, one of the points of this here in Washington seems to be whether the United States accepts as a fact the presence of the Soviet Union as a power in the Middle East.

In your answer to the questions asked by Mr. Morgan do you imply that the United States would be prepared to do economic—take economic steps or give border guarantees only as a Western proposition or would we be prepared to do these things in conjunction with the Soviet Union?

A.—Well, in that case I think we ought to do it through the United Nations because one other thing, I believe, that the United States abhors, as a corollary, as a consequence of the principles I have already talked is any thought that big powers are going to control the world.

We must have, so far as—there must be an equality in their sovereignty and in their rights of each nation to dictate its own affairs. So I would say in the United Nations these things should be done, and we would be prepared to go along with any decision of that kind. And, of course, we would hope that the Soviet Union not only would be prepared to do the same thing, but would actually observe its commitments. But I don't think that we ought merely to say two or three great powers, "that this is going to be the score." I do not believe that.

13 WILLIAM KNIGHTON JR. of The Baltimore Sun—Mr. President, are you rather well satisfied with what Congress has done to your legislative program this year and, if you are, what are you going to use as a campaign issue this fall? [Laughter.]

A.—Well, I will tell you one thing: I believe I have got enough on my mind that I am not compelled at this moment to think of campaigns, political campaign issues.

I do say this: I have laid before the Congress a program of legislation that I scores—and they are, I assure you, they are terrible. [Laughter.]

16 LAWRENCE H. BURD of The Chicago Tribune—In that connection, with Mr. Folliard's question, when you are dealing with very urgent heavy and domestic—foreign and domestic problems, as you have been recently, do you find that the burden of office is harder to carry than it was five years ago? And in that connection, do you have to pace yourself a little more as time goes on?

A.—No, I don't think I have to pace myself more. But I feel this:

Now, this may be just because of my advancing years which, after all, everybody has to experience. I feel that the last five or six months it seems to me, or even more than that, going back, say, to the beginning of the depression, it seems to have brought a more constant stream of problems that need evening meetings or late afternoon or try to get some decision out for use the next day or very quickly.

I think there seems to be more of them, and I don't know whether it is just because I notice them more or because there are actually more. But actually, frankly, so far as the physical part of it is concerned, I assure you all of the indices that the doctors use, they say that I am in good shape, and as far as I feel, I don't feel physically a burden that is really greater.

17 ROBERT J. SPIVACK of The New York Post—Mr. President, in looking over the current shift in Soviet tactics regarding the summit conference, do you have any information yet on how important the role was of Mao Tse-tung? Can you assess it? A.—Well, no, but I tell you, I have some people studying that who told me they would give me an idea of it. I think there are some indications that he had quite a bit, but not too much.

18 CHARLES W. ROBERTS of News Week—Mr. President, since the summit meeting now seems to be off, sir, I wonder if you could give us an outline of the concrete proposals you were to make at that meeting or if that is too large a question, if you could comment on the idea that was advanced for neutralization for that area; was that encompassed in that suggestion?

A.—Well, we certainly were prepared to discuss such a thing. But I would say this:

Our major effort would be, first of all, to show that we had acted within the spirit of the United Nations, and from there on to put all our emphasis on constructive things to help the peoples of this area, to help them develop themselves, and to bring about a peace not only by the advances they make but by their certainty that we are doing it because of that, for that reasons.

MR. ARROWSMITH—Thank you, Mr. President.

A.—Thank you.

Mr. Eisenhower said the United States had not tried to make any country or people subservient to us in any way---either politically, economically, or by military means. It has been our purpose, he said, to work collectively through the U.N. A reporter suggested that Mr. Eisenhower had...in effect...re-iterated some of this country's principles of conduct in international affairs. The reporter quoted some members of the Administration as saying (privately)...that these principles---noble as they are---are not enough, that they need to be clarified, that there's a need to get down to specifics. Do you think, asked the reporter, that it's possible to take a fresh look at these problems at this time?

(Tape runs 3:47
Ends on cue: "---strengthening of all these areas."

The reporter pressed the point. He wanted to know: Does this mean that, (with-or without) a summit meeting, the Administration plans to come up with an integrated, overall program of operation in the Middle East?

(Tape runs 53 seconds
Ends on cue: "---not just of this Administration, but of America today."

Moscow Radio said tonight that Premier Khrushchev did not rule out the possibility of an EVENTUAL summit conference...in rejecting a conference within the framework of the U.N. Security Council---Dispatches from Moscow, passed by the soviet censorship, say Krushchev's retreat from a U.N. summit meeting, may be a blow to the personal fortunes of the Soviet Leader..."

The Red China radio says the Chinese people "firmly demand" the convening of a summit conference...one, it implies, at which the Chinese Peoples Republic should be represented.

President Eisenhower's special envoy to the Middle East...Robert Murphy.. finally was received by President Nasser in Cairo tonight, after a 10-hour delay. Murphy WAS scheduled to see Nasser this morning, but he was left AWAITING NASSER'S CALL in what APPEARS to have been a deliberate snub.

No word yet on the outcome of tonight's meeting.

In London, the Foreign Office announces that Prime Minister Macmillan will fly to Athens tomorrow, in a dramatic, personal attempt to bring peace to Cyprus. Mr. Macmillan ALSO wants to go to Turkey, but---so far---no reply from the Turkish government on his offer.

The airlift of supplies to those British troops in Jordan---CUT-OFF four days ago at the request of Israel---has been suddenly resumed. An explanation is lacking, but there is a suggestion that the resumption is only temporary.

Secretary of State Dulles wound up his two days of talks with President Kubitschek of Brazil. A joint communique...issued tonight... recommends that the foreign ministers of the 21 American republics "meet periodically within the framework of the Organization of American States."...just as the foreign ministers of NATO also meet periodically.

Most of President Eisenhower's news conference dealt with the Middle East, but domestic issues ALSO came in for attention. Labor and business, he said, must be "very, very careful" about spiraling wages and prices...if we are going to remain a country without "artificial control". If business raises prices to the extent of robbing the public, consumers will rebel. And in the end, he warned, everyone would suffer.

The President has no "special" plan for forestalling possible tension... in the field of public school integration...when classes resume this fall. No "mere law", he said, will ever solve this problem. And there must be every effort on the state and local community level to deal with the situation understandingly, and with moderation.

Mr. Eisenhower showed some temper when a reporter raised the question whether Sherman Adams might resign. It was a subject, he said, on which he had nothing further to say.

After his news conference, the President signed the bill giving him authority to reorganize the Defense Department. The measure does not give Mr. Eisenhower ALL the authority he requested. But, in signing it, he called it "a major advance".

(1)

Diplomats were not surprised [redacted] to learn that President Nasser kept Presidential envoy Robert Murphy "cooling his heels" in Cairo today.. before finally consenting to speak to him.. The answer, of course, lies in the wording of the American resolution calling for a special session of the U.N. General Assembly.. It asks the EIGHTY-ONE U.N. [redacted] members to consider the "complaint by Lebanon," arising from the intervention of the United Arab Republic in Lebanese affairs..."

So, if not amended, before tomorrow's meeting of the U.N. Security Council, Ambassador Lodge's resolution will [redacted] to all intents and purposes, be asking for the public Trial of President Nasser before the world Assembly, on charges of "indirect aggression."

This doesn't seem to be quite what President Eisenhower had in mind [redacted] when he "regretted" Premier Krushchev's decision not to attend a U.N. Security Council summit meeting. Eisenhower [redacted] didn't mention "Nasser" at all.. Just Said he was instructing Ambassador Lodge to move the previously presented U.S. resolution, FOR a general assembly session. [redacted]..

Yet if this american resolution to convene the U.N. General Assembly [redacted] remains unaltered, It will not pit the United States against Russia, but would concentrate the american attack against the United Arab Republic... Leaving the Soviet Union to defend Nasser, and demand the withdrawal of the anglo-american troops from Lebanon and Jordon..

2.2.2

, the Russian attack against a big power might have more popular appeal among the neutral states, especially the Afro-Asian bloc, then the scheduled american offensive against what many consider to be simply a nationalist movement..The burden of proof that IT ISN'T will rest upon the United States..

ITS reported that the United States will broaden its U.N. resolution to include the entire Middle East, but at this moment we're really just asking for the relatively unpopular trial of President Nasser, and NOT Russia.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News...First Bill Martin..

When Roger Bannister [redacted] became the first man to run a mile in less than four minutes, he predicted that other runners, realizing it was possible, would proceed to do better.. He was right.. Today in Dublin, Australia's Herb Elliot broke the world's mile record with a time of three minutes, 54 and five-tenths seconds.. Elliot beat [redacted] four other runners to the tape by eight yards.. It was the fastest competition in mile-race history, with the first five runners all clocked under the [redacted] once IMPOSSIBLE time of four minutes..

This is Larry LeSueur---[redacted] Good Nite..

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The U.N. Security Council took up the question of an emergency meeting of the General Assembly to deal with the Middle East problem. The council convened at 3 o'clock this afternoon, New York time, and is still in session. In debating the question, Soviet Delegate Sobolev accused the United States of trying...deliberately... (in his phrase) "to prevent the adoption of measures which might lead to normalization of the situation." The United States, he said, claims to "burn" with desire to withdraw its troops from Lebanon, "yet in secret, or under camouflage, the United States is increasing its forces there." He said the American troops had been increased from 35-hundred men to 15-thousand. He claimed other sources placed the figure as high as 20-thousand. Actually, the 15-thousand figure is closer to the MARK, and the Defense Department has let it be known that the landing operation is over--no more American troops are being landed in Lebanon. Our U.N. ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge, told the Council that the United States wants an emergency meeting of the General Assembly "to deal constructively with the fundamental, broad problems of the Middle East." "We believe, he said, that the Assembly will not be satisfied with more stop-gaps." Ambassador Lodge accused Soviet Premier Khrushchev of "performing a somersault" in agreeing to a summit meeting in the Security Council and then...suddenly...after a [redacted] talk with Red China's Mao Tse-Tung [redacted] SAYING "NO"--what he wanted was a meeting of the U.N. Assembly. "Whatever the reasons for the latest Soviet maneuver," said Lodge, "it adds considerably to our [redacted] doubt that the Soviet government is prepared to contribute seriously to a settlement." While members of the Council argued, there was HERE no doubt that a special General Assembly session WOULD be voted--- to convene, perhaps, as early as tomorrow.

→

The White House says it has "no information" on whether Khrushchev plans to attend the General Assembly session. As for the published report that Khrushchev has made a request through the State Department for permission to travel across the United States, News Secretary Hagerty says he has checked on that. And it simply isn't so.

President Eisenhower told his news conference yesterday that he might attend the General Assembly meeting--if that should become "desirable or necessary."//

Prime Minister Nehru of India said today that he has NO intention of coming. The idea of a summit conference, he said, has become "lost in the clouds."

British Prime Minister Macmillan sent Khrushchev a letter tonight... bluntly accusing the Soviet leader of breaking the agreement to hold a summit meeting within the framework of the U.N. Security Council. Macmillan told Khrushchev he still thought a summit meeting in the Council...where there could be negotiation as well as debate...could have made more progress. But, said Macmillan, a special session of the Assembly "is acceptable to her Majesty's Government."

Secretary of State Dulles...back in Washington after his mission to South America...told reporters Khrushchev was so "erratic," it was difficult to keep track. Khrushchev, he said, seemed to be following an "on again, off again Finnegan" policy.

One note of lessening tension: Russia announces that Red Army maneuvers along the Turkish and Iranian frontiers have ended.

The British government has invited Israel's foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, to London for a meeting with Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd. Mrs. Meir met in Paris this week with Premier Charles DeGaulle. Eric Sevareid cables from Paris that in talking with DeGaulle she reportedly did more than outline Israel's problems as officially stated. Sevareid has it on good authority that Mrs. Meir gave official assurances that Israel would NOT move troops into Jordan, should Jordan collapse. This, says Sevareid, is interpreted as an Israeli concession in a general effort to reduce tension and to discourage violent moves on the part of Syria or Iraq. General DeGaulle conferred for nearly two hours today with Prime Minister Fanfani of Italy.

President Eisenhower's special Middle East envoy, Robert Murphy, flew to Ethiopia today, after what he called a "very satisfactory" conversation last night with President Nasser of the United Arab Republic. Mr. Murphy will be in Addis Abba, the capital of Ethiopia, for just one day for talks with Emperor Haile Selassie, then fly on to Athens.

Prime Minister Macmillan has arrived in Athens, where he will confer tomorrow with Greek Premier Karamanlis on the Cyprus question. Macmillan may also see Murphy before proceeding to Ankara for talks with Turkish Premier Menderes this week-end. Macmillan's objective: A broad, interim agreement on the Cyprus dispute.

Russian newspapers today accused the Chinese Nationalist air force of "provocative activities" in the Formosa Strait. The nationalist government reports a "dogfight" between its aircraft and at least 10 Communist Migs. No losses, but the Red China radio claims one Nationalist plane was damaged. On Formosa, the Nationalists are maintaining the alert...ordered after the arrival across the strait of a covey of new Russian-built jets. All military leaves on Formosa have been cancelled.

Congress gave final approval today to a 39 and a half billion-dollar defense appropriation bill...carrying 815 million dollars MORE than President Eisenhower requested. It's the biggest money bill for defense in peacetime history.

The House approved a compromise reciprocal trade bill today by a vote of 161 to 56. The measure gives Mr. Eisenhower most of what he asked for...extends the Reciprocal Trade Act for another four years. The Senate probably will vote its approval on Monday.

The Senate Rackets Committee has asked the Justice Department to determine whether there are grounds for a perjury indictment against James Hoffa, president of the Teamsters Union. Last year, Hoffa testified...under oath... that no teamster money ever went to former heavyweight boxer Embrel Davidson. Today, Davidson told the committee that he received 75 dollars a week from the Michigan teamsters union welfare fund for nearly two years and that for this he cut the grass at the home of Bert Brennan, a teamsters vice president...and helped out around a race track owned by Brennan. Said Committee Chairman McClellan: "Somebody is not telling the truth."

In Pontiac, Michigan today...Frank Kierdorf died of burns he SAID were inflicted by two strangers who "took him for a ride." The story told by the minor teamster union official was discounted today by Michigan's Attorney General Paul Adams. Adams quoted a "mystery witness" as saying that Kierdorf actually was burned trying to set fire to a dry cleaning shop in Flint, Michigan. The state suspects that the victim's missing uncle, Herman Kierdorf, was "in on the job." Hoffa told the rackets committee today that he knew "positively nothing" about the circumstances surrounding Frank Kierdorf's death.

The U.S. Court of Appeals today REVERSED the contempt of Congress conviction of Playwright Arthur Miller. Miller was convicted last year, after refusing...on grounds of conscience.. to give the House Committee on Un-American Activities the NAMES of Communist writers with whom he allegedly admittedly associated in 1949. The Appeals Court ordered the lower District Court to enter a judgment of acquittal...cited the Supreme Court decision that it must be "brought home" to a witness that in refusing to answer a question he risks the penalty of contempt. Miller says he is "very happy to have been vindicated."

Fifteen persons are KNOWN dead. in that collision of two American oil tankers early today off Newport, Rhode Island. Thirty-five crewmen have been hospitalized. The ships collided in early morning fog, then burst into flames.

Well

after an absence of several weeks because of the super-charged atmosphere, [redacted] the art of diplomacy got in a few licks in at the U.N. today... There wasn't even an argument over which delegate represented Iraq.. the old one just never showed up, and the representative of the newly recognized Republic was in his seat when the [redacted] Meeting began.. The French COUNCIL president made a little speech [redacted] welcoming the man who was refused a seat last time, Ambassador Lodge had his picture taken with the new Iraqi Ambassador, and the [redacted] diplomats settled down to the familiar sparring match between the United States and The Soviet Union.

The U.S. carefully changed its resolution calling for a special U.N. Assembly, MAKING NO reference to previous charges against President Nasser's "indirect aggression" in Lebanon... And the Soviet resolution [redacted] deleted the word "serious" when [redacted] called anglo-american intervention a "threat to international peace."

And Many experienced observers agreed that it looked as though world was going to stay in-one-piece for a while...

It was [redacted] immediately apparent that the United States [redacted] INTENDS going to soft-pedal its long-heralded charges of "indirect aggression" — against Nasser ...BECAUSE of our prompt recognition of the revolutionary government of Iraq. And WILL turn to a more constructive approach in our attempt to win the necessary two-thirds majority support from [redacted] the coming 81-nation U.N. Assembly..

That doesn't mean we're going to forget our CLAIMS that indirect aggression [redacted] is a menace to the Middle East, but now that horse is stolen in Iraq, this country prefers to concentrate on building a BIGGER and better barn, to contain the entire Near and Middle East..

This according to informants will take the form of a Middle East Development Plan, marking a shift away from military alliances, [redacted] TOWARD new forms of economic partnership..

Three years ago, this month Secretary Dulles offered to pick-up [redacted] the check for large-scale Arab-Isreali economic [redacted] projects, [redacted] IF THEY COULD get together. But President Nasser used that against us.. lambasting nations that received U.S. Aid, on the grounds it prevented Arab unity... But the Dulles offer of 1955 is STILL likely to be the basis of the forthcoming plan. He said Them the U.S. would make a loan to Isreal, if ISRAEL made restoration offers to the Palestine refugees, and he said the U.S. would propose frontier guarantees, if the Arabs and Isreal could agree on them...

The NEW plan

[redacted] might also embrace the hitherto-unaccepted Eric Johnston formula, for harnessing the River Jordon, apportioning the scant water supply between the Arabs and Isreal, thus removing a potential cause of [redacted] war..

Its true all these offers were made by the U.S before and never accepted by the Arabs because of their enmity for Isreal, and Nasser used that enmity as a fulcrum for his drive to unify the area..//

But its understood that the new element to be added in what Ambassador Lodge [redacted] today called a"broad plan, not a mere stop-gap," [redacted] would be to put the Middle East development PLAN under a new United Nations Agency..

IF TRUE [redacted], even President Nasser and his friends would find it hard to turn down, especially if the Soviet Union was invited to participate..

It WOULD be even harder for the 81-Nation assembly to reject it if President Eisenhower presents the plan WITH a personal appearance..

Alone at the Summit..//

This is Larry LeSueur,,I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news---first Bill Martin..

Mia the Mouse may be missing/[redacted] flight, but Mathilda the [redacted] Monkey, has survived./ The thirteen pound female [redacted] survived a ten mile fall to earth,/ from under a collapsed balloon./.so did some frogs and assorted fruit flies and other insects.. The only casualties were some goldfish, which sucummbed when their water container burst..// Mathilda and her travelling companions came down today 60 miles from their [redacted] launching site at Crosby, Minnesota.. Mathilda was groggey, but they fed her a banana,/and examination showed her fit for another space exploration next week..

This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite..

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., Aug. 7, 1958

Good evening, everyone....Here's what happened today:

The U.N. Security Council took up the question of an emergency meeting of the General Assembly to deal with the Middle East problem. And it just voted to hold such a meeting. For a direct report, we switch to Stu Novins in the Council Chamber.

Spot to run about 1 min, 10 seconds

Returns on cue: "Now back to Larry Lesueur."

Stub footnote

Instead of my "Footnote to the Day's News", I have this late word from the U.N. Security Council. // The Security Council has just voted its approval of a special emergency general assembly, to consider the Middle East item under discussion for the past several weeks, without reaching unanimity in the Council...The American resolution which left out any condemnation of specific Iraqi then indirect aggression in the Middle East, was unanimously adopted, with all eleven council members including the Soviet Union voting in favor. The U.N. special assembly will meet tomorrow.

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight!

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The U.N. General Assembly opened its emergency meeting on the Middle East. heard Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold outline a broad plan for establishing in the area economic stability and peace. Mr. Hammarskjold called upon the Arab countries to reaffirm their pledges of non-aggression and non-interference according to the principles of the Arab League. But the U.N., he said, should make clear that Arab states have the right to shape their own destinies as they see fit. He urged the JOINT utilization of water resources. said, further, that there should be joint ECONOMIC cooperation. SAID "Proper institutions" should be created to foster cooperation between the countries which produce oil and those over whose territories it is PIPED.

→

He indicated that an international police force might be needed in Lebanon, along with a strengthened truce supervision set-up in Jordan, to stabilize the situation there. But Mr. Hammarskjold did not submit any detailed blueprint. What he was offering, he said, was something to serve as a basis on which members might wish to develop positive and constructive suggestions."

The Assembly also heard a brief attack by Soviet Delegate Sobolev on the presence of American troops in Lebanon. But the Russian did NOT challenge the right of Nationalist China to sit in the Assembly.

The opening session today lasted only 35 minutes, then recessed until next Wednesday for the start of full-scale formal debate.

Today in Athens, the British and Greek prime ministers met twice--- once in the morning and again tonight---in search of a formula for solving the Cyprus problem. Between their two conferences, the British governor of Cyprus, Sir Hugh Foot, talked for more than an hour with Archbishop Makarios, exiled leader of the Cyprus "union-with-Greece" movement. Tomorrow, Prime Minister Macmillan will hold a third conference with Premier Karamanlis, then fly to Ankara for a top-level meeting with the Turks. A Greek spokesman says that TODAY there was "a full and sincere, exchange of views."

A group of senators attended a briefing today at the State Department, and Republican Senator Aiken told reporters afterward, "We must keep a watchful eye on the Far East." Aiken, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, did not elaborate. However, the State Department lashed out today at Red China's buildup of air power on the mainland, opposite Formosa. The said the action is "clearly designed to increase tensions and raise the spectre of war." [redacted] Department Spokesman Joseph Reap called the military alert...ordered by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek on Formosa.. "a realistic defensive precaution under the circumstances." Reap noted that the buildup of Red aircraft..only a few [redacted] minutes flying time from Formosa.. was accompanied by the usual flow of Peiping broadcasts, threatening to "liberate" the Nationalist island.

A Chinese Nationalist spokesman said today that the Red Chinese [redacted] have now massed 12-hundred [redacted] warplanes within striking distance. The little [redacted] Nationalist-held island of Matsu had two air alerts during the night. No bombs were dropped.

Today, President Eisenhower nominated Dr. T. K[illian] Glennan, president of the Case Institute of Technology in Cleveland, to be admistrator of the new space agency. Nominated to be DEPUTY administrator was Dr. Hugh Dryden, who...since 1938..has been head physicist in the National Bureau of Standards. Legislation creating the space agency was signed by Mr. Eisenhower only last week. The OFFICIAL name for the new agency is the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

But the story released by the White House today...that captured the imagination..was how the nation's first atomic submarine, the Nautilus, had sailed from H[onolulu], PEARL HARBOR through the Bering Strait between Alaska and Siberia, eastward under the Arctic ice cap to Greenland..Successfully completing Man's first voyage under the North Pole. A story worthy of Jules Verne, for whose [imaginary submarine] the Nautilus was named. President Eisenhower made the dramatic announcment at a White House news conference..at which he pinned a Legion of Merit medal on Commander W.R. Anderson and gave a presidential "unit citation to the entire 116-man crew--the first ever awarded in peacetime. The crewmen were not present. The Nautilius is still at sea..bound for an undisclosed European port. In awarding the citation, Mr. Eisenhower said the voyage of the Nautilius had pointed the way to possible use of the polar route by nuclear-powered submarines "as a new commercial seaway between the major oceans of the world." Rear Admiral Rickover, "father of the atomic submarine", was not invited to attend today's ceremony. Rickover's promotion to Vice Admiral has been under consideration for some time. [redacted] Under Navy retirement rules, unless the admiral is promoted in the course of the next year, he must be relieved. The fact that Rickover was excluded from the White House ceremony--although other government officials were invited--is taken in Washington as indication he will NOT be promoted. If the promotion is not forthcoming, the Navy would dispense with his further services, UNLESS he is kept on a year-to-year basis.

→

The A government report that unemployment in July dropped by 143-thousand. This does NOT represent a material brightening of the job picture. Unemployment NORMALLY declines this time of year. In fact, the decline is usually greater than the 143-thousand reported today by the Commerce and Labor Departments. // Employment increased in July for the fifth straight month. But again, the rise in employment did not come up to the usual increase for the month. The conclusion is that the OVER-ALL job situation was about the same in July as it was in June.

The Agriculture Department estimates this year's cotton crop at 11-million, 583-thousand bales. // That's a 6 percent increase over the cotton harvest last year. //

Secretary Benson said today that it is "essential" for Congress to pass a new farm bill this year. He predicted that without new legislation, "disastrous" cuts in cotton and rice plantings are ahead.

The renomination of Democratic Senator Gore...in yesterday's Tennessee primary...is being hailed in Northern Democratic circles as a victory for enlightenment as regards civil rights. Democratic Senator Neuberger of Oregon says it shows that a Southerner can take "an enlightened position on civil rights and still survive politically." But one of Gore's southern colleagues--Sparkman of Alabama---calls the vote "a recognition of the outstanding work Gore has done as a member of the Senate." Gore won handily over former Governor Prentice Cooper, and the Democratic nomination in Tennessee AMOUNTS to election. The race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination was close. But tonight, with only a few precincts unreported, Buford Ellington (running with the blessing of Governor Clement), cinched the nomination by less than 7-thousand votes. Ellington is a strong segregationist. His closest rival in a four-cornered race was Memphis mayor, Edmund Orgill.

In Hollywood today...in a race with a stork...Mrs. Bing Crosby gave birth to a baby boy. Weight: Seven pounds, nine ounces. Both mother and child...AND father...doing fine.

The news that an american atomic submarine has completed the first passage from the Pacific to the Atlantic, under the ice of the North Pole, cannot be expected to get banner headlines in the Soviet press.. It may be as upsetting to Soviet officialdom as the news was to us, that they had launched the first earth satellite..

To the Russians, the bleak northland is their heritage...And no nation has ever matched them in surface exploration of the North Polar areas.. Indeed most Russian maps, carry a red flag over the North Pole.. They've already claimed it as their own..

So the news that, unknown to them, an american submarine has navigated the long-sought North-West Passage, completely submerged all the way, and conquered the North Polar ice-cap, will be most dis-heartening.. The Russians not only regarded the North Pole as their posession, but ever since Stalin's time, they have placed their FAITH on an underwater fleet.. The Soviet Union has the greatest SUBMARINE fleet in military history.. between 5 hundred and 5 hundred and 25 submarines, many of them high performance craft developed out of the Nazi U-Boats..

But according to the best information available, the Soviet Union does not possess a nuclear-powered submarine. Although its obviously working to develop one..

But the difference between an ordinary submarine and an atomic submarine is almost as great as the difference between an airplane and a rocket. An airplane needs air to support it. And there are absolute limits a dozen MILES OR SO above the earth, BEYOND which the air is too thin for an airplane to fly...

But the upward range of a rocket, as we know, is practically limitless. IT's really governed only by the forces of gravity..

until now, only a thin top layer of water, say five hundred FEET Deep has been much used by submarines. Undersea voyagers have been tied to the water's surface. because all except nuclear engines, need air to breathe. But the development of the nuclear-powered submarine has opened up the depths of oceans...and they cover seventy per cent of the earth's surface to an average depth of two-and-a-half miles. there are great Valleys in the ocean floor, that dwarf of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado..

Where a nuclear submarine could lie in wait for weeks, undetected.

There are 10 THOUSAND FOOT depths under the North Polar ice-cap.. // Because unlike the mountainous Ant-Artic, the top of the world is a deep hollow.. It clear that although the Russians have protested at the U.N. over our H-BOMB patrols OVER THE ARCTIC regions, they have more to fear from a submarine which can lie under POLAR ice for weeks, undetected and UNGET-ATABLE..

Its more than ever clear, that the rapid development of THE Atomic submarine, has opened up a new defense frontier for the Soviet Union.. Her previously inaccesible ARCTIC Coast, from the big port of Arahangel in the White Sea, to the East Siberian sea, exposing the entire north Russian hinterland...

And if armed with the 15 hundred mile Polaris missile, now under development, an american nuclear powered submarine could bring much of Northern Russia under attack, from Moscow to the secret cities of the Urals.. //

And defense-wise, such submarines could maintain a radar picket line against russian rockets, that would be of inestimable value in peacetime..

Although the world now concentrates on defense, it may be that the voyage of the [redacted] nautilus, will prove a greater boon to mankind, than all of its war-making [redacted] potentiality.

For 4 hundred and fifty years, men have been searching for an all-water route around the Northern Coast of North America. From John Cabot to Martin Frobisher, and from Henry Hudson to Samuel de Champlain..

Today's announced underwater navigation of the Northwest passage may come particularly hard to the Russians. For one of the last act's of Peter the Great, was to send one of his foreign Naval officers, Samuel Bering, A DANE to seek the passage. He didn't find it - But it was the [redacted] Bering strait that Commander W. R. Anderson of Waverley Tennessee, passed under in history's first undersea voyage across the top of the world.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...First a word from Ford [redacted]

Commander W. R. Anderson, SKIPPER of the trans-polar submarine Nautilus, seemed a bit dazed by the floodlights, cameramen and reporters in the White House conference room today... Said it was "quite a change" from the many days spent underwater from Hawaii to Iceland... The 37-year-old Tennesean didn't think the Russians spotted his craft, even when it went through the Bering strait... He was asked if he saw anything interesting on his voyage.. Sure, he SAID "the ice overhead, we could see it by television. It was Fascinating."

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

Lesueur for Murrow Mon., Aug. 11, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Congress completed action on the reciprocal trade bill. //. sent it/ to President Eisenhower for his signature. /The measure extends the reciprocal trade program for four years. //. authorizes the President to cut tariffs (as much as 20 percent. // The cuts are (not) to exceed (10 percent in any (ONE year. And to be eligible, foreign countries (in return (would have to make concessions (on [redacted] import/of U.S. goods. // The bill gives the President (most of what he asked for--he has called it "acceptable". / But the measure does give Congress a larger say-so (on one point. If the Tariff Commission decides (that a certain import duty should be raised... and the President rejects that decision.. (then (Congress has authority to override him (by a two-thirds vote. // Final passage...in the Senate today...

→

was by a vote of 72 to 18.

It is still uncertain when Congress can adjourn. The House recessed today...out of respect for Representative William McVey of Illinois, who died last night after a heart attack. But the House is nearer to winding-up its business than the Senate...which must still act on important legislation, including federal assistance to education, the three-and-a-half billion-dollar foreign aid appropriation, and the measure aimed at increasing Social Security benefits. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce criticized the Social Security bill today as "a patch-work, election year expansion---unfair to the employees and employers who pay the taxes and to the beneficiaries, alike." The Chamber of Commerce criticism was presented in testimony before the Senate Finance Committee. The measure...as it came from the House.. would increase Social Security benefits by 7 percent. Democratic Senator Kennedy introduced an amendment today to have the benefits increased by 8 percent.

LYNDON

Majority Leader Johnson said today...in a brief speech on the floor of the Senate...that there ought to be more men like Rear Admiral Rickover, who is credited with doing more than any other person in developing the atomic submarine. Johnson was commenting on the failure of the White House to invite the admiral to last week's Nautilus ceremony. News Secretary Hagerty has said that no "slight" was intended...that only the "top brass" had been invited to attend. Senator Johnson said today that the achievements of the Nautilus are a tribute to the "skill and dedication" of Admiral Rickover. "If we had MORE men like that," he said, "we would be years ahead in our scientific development."

President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles conferred for two hours today. .on American plans for the U.N. General Assembly meeting, which resumes on Wednesday. There is renewed speculation that Mr. Eisenhower may attend in order to present...in person...new proposals for solving the Middle East problem. But there is nothing official on this. Mr. Hagerty said this afternoon that any such decision will be announced "when it is made." Mr. Dulles will fly to New York tomorrow to be on hand for the opening debate.

Mr. Eisenhower had another appointment today--with Moustafa Kamel, the new ambassador of the United Arab Republic. The ambassador presented his credentials...relayed President Nasser's expression of "sincere friendship" for Mr. Eisenhower and the people of the United States. Mr. Eisenhower asked the ambassador to convey his same sentiments to President Nasser and the peoples of the United Arab Republic. // Mr. Eisenhower said the United States intends to defend the principles of Man's freedom and dignity, both at home and in its relations with other states. //

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd took off from London tonight for the U.N. General Assembly meeting. He said...at the airport...that Middle East countries must be guarded against "subversive elements from the outside." // The United States and Britain, he said, are in complete accord on the Middle East.

Israel's foreign minister...Mrs. Golda Meir...conferred in London today with Foreign Secretary Lloyd and, according to a communique issued after the meeting, "had a most useful exchange of views." Mrs. Meir told a news conference that the situation in the Middle East today calls for a big power guarentee to the independent countries...including Israel...for their territorial integrity and independence. She said if the United Arab Republic or Iraq should occupy Jordan, "Israel would have very seriously to consider what security measures she would have to take."

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said today that Russia REJECTED of a summit meeting in the U.N. Security Council because...under the circumstances... such a meeting would have been "an aimless waste of time." Khrushchev made this statement in a new letter to British Prime Minister Macmillan, answering Macmillan's note...of last week...accusing him in polite language of welshing on an agreement to meet in the Security Council. Khrushchev, in this new letter, claims Secretary Dulles made it obvious that the council meeting would be used only to justify what Khrushchev called the "aggressive acts of Britain and the United States in the Middle East." Such an approach, said Khrushchev, would...without doubt... "have dragged us into a maze of sterile discussions." The Soviet premier told Macmillan he "hopes" the emergency Assembly meeting will help clear the way "for a conference of leading statesmen of the East and West." Khrushchev did not use the customary phrase, "heads of government." But this MAY not be a significant point.

Prime Minister Macmillan has concluded four days of private talks with leaders of Greece and Turkey on the Cyprus ISSUE. Greece reportedly intends to bring the question of Cyprus back before the U.N. General Assembly in its regular September session. This would indicate some dissatisfaction → with the British proposal for a seven-year "cooling-off" period...in which Britain would rule Cyprus in partnership with Turkey and Greece.// According to Reuters news service, Mr. Macmillan explained the details of this plan...but did not ask for specific agreement from either the Greek or Turkish governments.// Rather, he listened to their reactions.

Formosa remains on the alert.// Air raid sirens were sounded twice this afternoon on the Nationalist island of Quemoy, but no bombs were dropped.// Four Chinese Migs were sighted by Nationalist aircraft NEAR Quemoy. No shots were fired.

The State Department issued a statement today...reaffirming its policy not to recognize Communist China.// The statement went to American diplomatic missions around the world. It said recognition would "seriously cripple or not altogether destroy" Chiang Kai-shek's Formosa government. Diplomatic recognition, it said, would enhance the prestige of the Red China regime.// and lead to the seating of Red Chinese representatives in the U.N. The statement said, "In the view of the United States, this would vitiate, if not destroy...the United Nations as an instrument for the maintenance of international peace."// It also said U.S. policy in this regard is not inflexible. The American view, it said, will be "readjusted" if the Chinese Communists stop posing a threat to the security of the free world.

→

The Soviet News Agency Tass said today that Russia and Red China have signed a new economic agreement. Russia is to extend new technical aid, help the Chinese Communists build 47 new industrial plants.

The Senate Judiciary Committee...after seven months delay...has approved the nomination of W. Wilson White as head of the Justice Department's new Civil Rights Division. Approval was assured today when eight of the fifteen members of the committee voted FOR the appointment. President Eisenhower made the nomination last January. But it was stymied in committee, due to the opposition of Southern members who blamed Mr. White...in part...for the decision to send federal troops to Little Rock. White, an assistant attorney general...advised the President on his legal power to employ the armed forces. ~~Chairman Eastland of Mississippi says that with two members of the committee yet to be polled, today's vote for approval of the nomination was 8 to 5.~~

~~Today, President Eisenhower nominated~~ Mrs. Barbara Gunderson, of Rapid City, South Dakota, to be a member of the Civil Service Commission. Mrs. Gunderson is a member of the Republican National Committee. She succeeds Bernard Flanagan, of St. Albans, Vermont...who was ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ himself named to the commission only eight months ago. Flanagan resigned under congressional fire...for making what he called "honest mistakes" in making out his own job application form.

Well,

The Long-awaited U.N. report on world-wide radiation, has made it clear that the fall-out from atomic BOMB tests, is a menace to mankind...After two-and-a-half years of study, the 15-nation committee, on which the United States was represented, reported that atomic tests will probably increase the number of deformed babies and leukemia victims..

This U.N. Scientific Committee [redacted] Unequivocally pictured the dangers to generations, yet unborn...as well as to those, now alive, from [redacted] nuclear weapons tests..

To those of us familiar with the [redacted] repeated warnings [redacted] that heavy cigaret smoking has a connection with lung cancer, this pronouncement has a familiar ring... But this time, its not the tobacco industry, but the U.S. Atomic Energy Committee, which immediately countered [redacted] this report...While acknowledging that it was a "thorogoing scientic study," the A.E. C. MINIMIZES it at the same time, by saying the conclusions were "based on the most pessimistic assumptions."

Even tho the United States was on [redacted] the 15-nation [redacted] U.N. committee that approved the report, the A.E. C. promptly issued a [redacted] statement "underscoring" the limitations of the document..

The A.E. C. remarks that the U.N. committee says there's no certainty that fall-out will produce any additional cases of leukemia... And the U.S. atomic Energy Committee also points out that the Committee went to pains: "to estimate the greatest number of cases, which might result from fall-out under the most pessimistic conditions."

As for the effects of fall-out on future generations, the A.E.C. declared that the U.N. report's estimate: "would constitute a small fraction of probable effects caused by natural radiation.."

But the AE.C. did not comment on the fact the committee report said one of the problems involved is the DELAY in appearance of observable effects from radiation or chemical agents..Leukemia may not appear for five to ten years, and cancer may take from ten to twenty years to develop...

The U.N. committee also agreed that DIET has a lot to do with the toll from atomic fall-out.. In Japan, for example, where the DIET is rice, and there's a low calcium content in the soil, the poisonous "strontium Ninety" found in atomic weapons fall-out, is more readily absorbed into crops, and thence into the body..

Whereas in a milk-drinking country like the United States, the danger from bone-cancer, under the same circumstances, is lessened.. [redacted] Unlike rice-eating India and Japan, we rely mostly on milk for our calcium.. So the increased radiation dose can be [redacted] is as much as 700 per cent higher in the Far East. According to the U.N. report, this is especially important to children, since they are more sensitive to radiation than adults..

The A.E.C. doesn't quarrel with the political conclusions of the U.N. report, since the majority, including the AMERICAN scientists on the committee, [redacted] declined to MAKE ANY [redacted] representative..The soviet Union's scientists called for the "immediate cessation of atomic weapons teats." The majority agreed that this [redacted] was beyond the jurisdiction of the committee..

The United Arab Republic was the only non-communist country, [redacted] to support the Soviet Union on this, Japan voted with majority against it, India abstained...

It seems probable that the scientists of most of the free-world nations on this U.N. committee, were instructed NOT to make any political decisions following their two-and-a-half-year [redacted] radiation study..

OBVIOUSLY Such high political decisions are [illegible] negotiable, with highly important bargaining points involved. SO The scientists appointed to the 15-nation committee, Just confined themselves, instead, to making a thorough-going scientific report, based ON information [illegible] available to them. The U.S. political position on the subject of nuclear weapons tests, is contained in the A.E.C's comment.. It says "man must learn to live with new risks, even as he accepts new benefits conferred upon him." This is another way of saying that we're not ready to give up testing atomic bombs, since this is the only weapon we possess to counter-balance the communist bloc's acknowledged superiority in man-power..

THERE IS A [illegible] difference between this report on the dangers of atomic bomb testing, and the familiar debate between health authorities and the tobacco industry on the dangers of heavy cigaret smoking.. [illegible] Altho the tobacco industry advertising [illegible] MAY be more wide-spread than the cancer-warnings, the reverse is likely to be true of this U.N. radiation report... Its unanimous findings on the increasing radioactivity in the world [illegible] will resound in the HALLS of the United Nations in a great debate for months to come.

This is Larry Lesueur - See be back in a moment with a footnote for the news. / First

Mr Eisenhower announces the resignation of Arthur Larson as his special assistant.. to take a position at the Duke University school of LAW Mr. Larson has written speeches for the President on numerous occasions. He will continue as unpaid consultant.

Truck drivers began going on strike today in California, and the walkout is expected to spread to 10 other Western states. The issue is higher pay.

(Footnote)

Diplomats and diamonds are complicating the lives of New York's policemen...When one of them left his beat today, to safeguard Russia's Gromyko, thieves lifted more than a hundred thousand dollars worth of diamonds from Tiffany's show-windows..//

But most of the foreign ministers will be staying at New York's Waldorf Astoria..And with them on display will be a single diamond worth more than twice a The Reuters Tiffany Haul..

Its now better guarded than most diplomats. Five armed detectives during the day, watch it and during the night they escort it to a vault at night.//

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

Lesueur for Murrow Tues., Aug. 12, 1958

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower flew to New York...to address tomorrow's emergency U.N. Assembly session on the Middle East. The White House says Mr. Eisenhower will set forth the American position in a major speech opening the U.N. Assembly debate, then fly back to Washington. (The speech will, of course, be carried by C.B.S.). Mr. Eisenhower will be followed at the speaker's rostrum by Russia's foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko. And the tenor of Gromyko's speech was forecast today...with the submission of a Soviet resolution, demanding the complete withdrawal of American and British troops from Lebanon and Jordan. The Soviet resolution ALSO calls for the expansion of U.N. forces in Lebanon and Jordan...not only to supervise the Anglo-American evacuation...but also "to observe the situation along the frontiers."

→

One battalion of U.S. Marines (15) pulling out of Lebanon tomorrow...the withdrawal announced by Admiral Holloway, commander of all American forces on the scene. The partial evacuation was ordered due to "improvement in the internal and external security situation"...also apparently timed for the opening of tomorrow's U.N. debate. Only the Second Battalion of the Second Marine Regiment...or about 17-hundred men...are involved in this withdrawal. There are [redacted] 13-thousand OTHER U.S. troops in Lebanon. A State Department spokesman says he knows of no plan for a further withdrawal at this time.

The Lebanese rebel leader, Saeb Salaam, calls the withdrawal of (This) one battalion a welcome gesture...but far short of meeting the rebel demand for total evacuation. And in the U.N., [redacted] the Asian and African delegations also indicate dissatisfaction. In the words of a prominent member of the (AFRO-ASIAN) group: "The pulling out of one or two thousand Marines is not enough. We are determined to press for "complete" withdrawal of both U.S. and British forces as the first consideration for any Middle East settlement."

The U.N. headquarters building...on the East River...was a scene of intense diplomatic activity. Secretary of State Dulles (who flew up from Washington this morning) lunched with our permanent U.N. delegate, Henry Cabot Lodge...while Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold lunched with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. Then Dulles had one of his rare private talks with Gromyko. // Tonight, Dulles is to see the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. // And President Eisenhower may join their (Sulzberger) meeting. // Hammarskjold, also arranged...during the day...to confer with both Dulles and Lloyd. [redacted] Mr. [redacted] just back from his "trouble-shooting" mission to half a dozen Afro-Asian countries, including Lebanon (Jordon) [redacted] planning to stay in New York [redacted] reporting to Dulles on the results of his trip [redacted] in the course of the U.N. debate.

President Eisenhower's address to the U.N. Assembly tomorrow will mark a shift in american policy, away from direct bi-lateral economic and military aid to the Middle East, in favor of a kind of "do-it yourself plan" for the Middle East states themselves.. The President will propose a regional economic plan for the area, an operating body, running on its own finances, presumably out of the revenues of the oil producing states, Those which found that are paid for piping the oil over their territory. Other coountries would be invited to support the plan, not excluding Russia, and it would be registered under the United Nations. with the U.N. supplying token forces, especially to protect the integrity of threatened states like Lebanon and Jordon. These would not be large-scale forces such as our previous demand for a U.N. army to replace the american troops in Lebanon. But rather, symbolic forces, not to seal-off frontiers, because that's almost an impossible task...But prhaps small permanent U.N. elements at key points, and in some capital cities. The President will not ignore the threat of indirect aggression, but he's not expected to stress it, beyond saying that the fomenting of civil strife is one of the greatest of international crimes. But he will ask for voluntary efforts on the part of the Middle East States, to desist from infiltration, arms smuggling and The inciting to violence by radio broadcasts. All three obviously aimed at President Nasser's United Arab Republic...

(4A)

The President will not recriminate over past events in the Middle East...Nor will he try to solve the Arab-Israeli issue, other than in the context of this new regional economic plan..

But like Dag Hammarshuld's recent [redacted] remarks to the U.N. Assembly, the President will ask for special treatment for Lebanon and Jordon, on the grounds that their collapse would cause another war....

He will say that both Jordon and Lebanon must be sustained as they are, [redacted] and reiterate our previous stand that the american troops will remain in Lebanon, until they are no longer necessary, or until the [redacted] Lebanese government asks them to leave..

The fact that the President is pinning his prestige and that of the United Nations on this regional plan for the Middle East, will make it difficult for President Nasser to To Turn Down Unless NASSER gets the support of the Soviet Union.. [redacted] President Eisenhower will stress the gravity of the Middle East Situation..

Stet

In Moscow, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda criticizes the plan for the Middle East as outlined by Hammarskjold last Friday... Because, says Pravda, "it doesn't call for the withdrawal of the armed forces of the interventionists." And a Cairo newspaper says tonight, "The opposition of Arab countries destroy the Hammarskjold and Eisenhower proposals before they are formally presented."

A military court in Jordan today sentenced 13 persons to death for smuggling arms into the country across the Syrian frontier. ~~Ten others got death sentences which were commuted to life imprisonment.~~

~~Dispatches from London say that an internal uprising against King Hussein of Jordan is [illegible] KNOWN attempts to [illegible] Syrian troops went into Jordan on July [illegible] These dispatches quote "authoritative informants".~~

~~The Chinese Communists sent 18 waves of jet fighters over the nationalist held islands of Quemoy and Amoy in the Formosa Straits. They made no attempt to [illegible] But Communist [illegible] on the Chinese mainland lobbed 51 shells at Quemoy. No damage reported.~~

(6)

The Navy announces that another atomic submarine, the Skate, has duplicated the feat of the Nautilus...and has PASSED UNDER the North Pole. The Skate left New London, Connecticut on July 30. It reached the North Pole at 9:47 p.m. Daylight Time, yesterday. The Navy says, "The Skate is continuing her under-ice exploration."

Secretary of the Navy Gates said today that it is his fault Rear Admiral Rickover was not invited to last week's White House ceremony honoring the commander and crew of the Nautilus. "In our preoccupation with the operational significance of this magnificent FEAT we failed to include Admiral Rickover, a man whose devotion and scientific skill had so uniquely contributed to the creation of the ship." The failure to invite Rickover has provoked strong criticism in Congress.

(7)

The [redacted] Nautilus arrived in Portland, England today...ending a voyage of 81-hundred, 45 miles from Pearl Harbor by way of the North Pole. To tell us how the Nautilus was greeted, here is Alexander Kendrick, speaking from London. //

(Tape runs 4:08
(Ends on cue: "Now back to CBS News in N.Y."

(That was my colleague, CBS News correspondent Alex Kendrick, with the story of the historic arrival of the Nautilus today in Portland, England.

And this is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the [redacted] News. First, [redacted] Bill Martin. [redacted]

"Footnote"

New York may be the capital of the world peace organization, but a visitor here might get the wrong idea..One of the sights that New York cab drivers like to point out, is not just the "glass house" as they call the towering U.N. headquarters, but what they call New York's "most popular corner." That's 68th street and Park Avenue, where more than a score of armed police, patrol day-and night before the Soviet U.N. headquarters.. The russian building is like a MOVIE premeer — Flood-lit to to additionally protect our distinguished soviet visitors..

this is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Tuesday, August 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM

LESUEUR: To tell us how the Nautilus was greeted, here is Alexander Kendrick speaking from London.

KENDRICK: The southwest country of England is Drakes country and except for such moderate additions as airplanes, helicopters and sirens, the scene that was unfolded in Portland Harbor this afternoon, might have taken place in Drake's time, when the famous navigator and seaman returned home after his amazing voyage around the world. Today it was not the Golden Hind, but the American nuclear submarine Nautilus that came into port to an enthusiastic maritime civic and popular welcome. Two bands; the Royal Marines and the Lowland Pipers alternated on the dock with the music that brought the long gray hhull in through the harbour entrance. Thousands of cheering waving Britains - many of whom had arrived by special busses from all over the country, filled the shore and the Portland hillside, while the harbour swarmed with pleasure launches, tourist boats, motor boats and sailing craft, plus a few ships of the Royal Navy, all fitted out with flags and bunting. On shore, British sailors and dock workers climbed up on gantries and towers to urge the Nautilus in. As the submarine approached dock every craft in the water opened up her siren and a tug turned on her fire hose. The Nautilus came in on a sweeping wave, the stars and stripes flying from her stern and on her masthead a brand new blue and gold flag showing the North Pole and inscribed "Submerge Polar transit - Nautilus, 1958." Commander William Anderson, her skipper was in the conning tower, he had been flown out of the Nautilus from/this shore morning in a royal Navy helicopter and re-boarded his craft seven miles at sea. The crew was on thedeck at harbour stations as the submarine was moored to the jetty at 2:32 PM, ending the 8145 miles, 20 day journey xxxx that included the worlds first passage under the ice of the North Pole. As she was made fast, the early afternoon rain cleared and was replaced by bright August sunshine. On the dock stood the American Ambassador John Hay Whitney as some of the highest brass in the Royal Navy; the First Lord of the Admirality, the Commander in Chief Home Fleet, the Third Sea Lord, the flag officer - submarines, plus American Naval officers on duty here. After time out for photographs and the distribution of bundles of newspapers to the crew, they got their first mail today since they left Honolulu. The Ambassador and the Naval personages went on deck to the tune of "Rule Britannia" for the ceremony of conferring on the crew the First Presidential Citation ever awarded in peace time. "I'm proud to be aboard" said Mr. Whitney and then he pointed out that Portland is Brtain's anti-submarine center, but today said the Ambassador "Portland is not anti-submarine." Mr. Whitney linked the Nautilus's feat with the achievement of Sir Vivan Fuchs in crossing the South Pole as an exercise in Anglo-American raport. "It's gratifying to know" he said "that while our explorers are poles apart our governments and our peoples are so close together." Facing the Nautilus crew, he declared, "your country is proud of you, you are the latest of a great breed - the American pioneers." Then, the citation was read and received on behalf of the ships company by Chief Torpedo Man Linus Larch of Hancock, Mighigan, whp had the decoration pinned on his. The ceremonsy over, unlimited shore leave was granted to the crew, many of them took off at once by train for London. The others stayed in Portland and nearby Weymuthm for a round of parties and receptions that will continne until the Nautilus leaves next Monday morning.

This being Drake's country, Sir Francis had the last say today. As twilight fell on Portland and rain began again, there was a rumble of celler thunder on the hillside, Drake's drums said the Portlanders quoting a local legend. If drum it was, it was certainly beating approval. Now, back to CBS News in New York. PT/n.m.

Lesueur for Murrow Wed., Aug. 13, 1958

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower went before the U.N. General Assembly...outlined a six-point program for the Middle East. "Within the Near East," he said, "and within this assembly are the forces to make...with time and patience... a framework of political order and peace." Here is what Mr. Eisenhower proposed: That the U.N. Assembly--free of the veto--consider how it can assure the continued independence and integrity of Lebanon. American troops will be "totally" withdrawn, he said, when this is requested by the duly constituted government, "or whenever Lebanon is no longer exposed to the original danger." Point Two concerned Jordan--an appeal for prompt U.N. action to preserve peace in that little kingdom. He made no SPECIFIC recommendation...but noted that the U.N. has a "particular" responsibility in this matter, since it sponsored the Palestine Armistice agreements upon which peace in the area rests. Nowhere in his half-hour speech did the President make reference to Israel. Under Point Three, Mr. Eisenhower called for "an end to the fomenting from without of civil strife." "I believe," he said, "that this assembly should consider means for monitoring the radio broadcasts directed across national frontiers in the troubled Near East area." Moreover, that the countries should be freed from armed pressure and infiltration coming across their borders. And...as Point Four of his program...Mr. Eisenhower proposed the creation of a stand-by U.N. peace force," said the need for XXX such a force in being had been "clearly demonstrated by recent events." Point Five had for its theme: Economic stability. He said Consultations should be undertaken at once...between Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold and the Arab states..."to ascertain whether an agreement can be reached to establish an "Arab development institution on a regional basis." The "institution"...as he called it...would seek to promote industry, agriculture, water supply, health and education. Mr. Eisenhower said the United States would be prepared to support (this development program...but that it should be governed by the (Arabs themselves. He envisaged that it might attract international capital, "both public and private." But the function of leadership, he said, MUST belong to the Arab states. Mr. Eisenhower's SIXTH...and last...point was that if the Middle East countries make progress in these directions, they will no longer feel the need for spiralling military buildups...which, he said, lead not only to economic impotence but to war. [redacted]

→

When Mr. Eisenhower finished, the Assembly gave him a standing ovation with extended applause. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko did NOT applaud. Mr. Gromyko was the next speaker...and after his 46-minute speech, it was the turn of Secretary of State Dulles not to applaud. (Mr. Eisenhower, in the meantime, had left the assembly hall and was flying back to Washington) With reference to the President's regional development program, Gromyko said, "The extending of economic aid to the countries of the Near and Middle East is certainly good". He called the plan worthy of careful consideration.

But the FIRST business of the U.N. Assembly, he said, is to get TWO British and American troops out of the Middle East. He described the withdrawal of one Marine battalion from Lebanon "a tactic...a token gesture." // Gromyko asked the assembly to approve the Soviet resolution...calling for EXPANDED U.N. forces in Lebanon and Jordan to supervise the Anglo-American evacuation...and to observe the situation along the frontiers of those two countries. Russia, he said, does not have "one soldier" in the Middle East...and he renewed his charge of aggression against Britain and the United States. Moreover, he said, Turkey had better be careful. "Any disturbance in the area can only drag Turkey into the holocaust of war."

[redacted] followed to the rostrum by [redacted] who said the "guiding [redacted] fill the hearts of [redacted] with hope and satisfaction. [redacted] minister of the United Arab Republic...Mahmoud Fawzi...also [redacted] echoed Gromyko's [redacted] withdrawal [redacted] and American troops [redacted] the assembly adjourned [redacted] tomorrow morning.

The U.N. Assembly reconvenes at 10:30 tomorrow morning.

Congress is reacting favorably..for the most part...to Mr. Eisenhower's speech. Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota has called the Eisenhower proposals "highly meritorious." "The President," he said, "has laid down a program which I personally support." Oregon's Democratic Senator Morse...who has frequently criticized the President...told the Senate that, if carried out, Mr. Eisenhower's proposals "would stand to the everlasting credit of our foreign policy." Senator Mike Mansfield, the Montana Democratic, called the President's declaration "only the beginning." Mr. Eisenhower, he said, should now come forward with "specifics".

[redacted]

Mr. Eisenhower had made "a good ... speech ... which he hoped the U.N. Assembly would act without delay.

Tonight, the President's speech ... around the world by the Voice of America. ... estimated audience ...

The Senate opened its education bill today. Democratic Senator McNamara of Michigan tried ... to expand the measure... by offering ... 2-billion-dollar school construction ...

The House voted...367 to 8.// to cite New England textile manufacturer Bernard Goldfine for contempt of Congress// for his refusal to answer questions put to him by the Harris committee.// The citation now goes to the Justice Dept. [illegible] a possible maximum sentence of one year in prison and a 1-thousand-dollar fine.//

House Speaker Sam Rayburn [illegible] Congress WILL pass a compromise farm bill.../.to head off a sharp reduction in rice and cotton acreages./ "It looks," he said, "like we will get together on a measure satisfactory enough to [illegible] go into effect.

Well President Eisenhower gave the Arab states and the world, much food for thought today...His six-point peace plan for the Middle East, proposed revolutionary changes in american policy toward the area...by offering aid to the entire region, INSTEAD OF our former method of dealing with the Middle East NATION-BY-NATION. He offered the Arabs control over their own destinies, and at least indirectly, the President offered Russia a voice in a region from which it has long been excluded..

But the President put a price on his program...The 81 U.N members must agree to supply and the Arab states must agree to accept, the kind of international military power and political pressure necessary, to bring order to a highly disordered area..

If the United Nations does not act on the President's suggestions, he left no doubt that the United States, would continue to respond to the appeals of friendly small nations for direct help to preserve their independence, as we have already done in Lebabon.. The President said the U.S. respects the right of every Arab nation to live in freedom, without domination from any source- far or near..."Far" was taken to mean Russia--and "Near"--the United Arab republic.

~~as far as London is concerned, the President as much as said that~~

~~if the United Powers get to keep that small nation intact, new~~

~~war will break out..~~

The President's omission of Isreal, was of course deliberate..

He was really asking that his Middle East program be examined as a package..

hoping that within its context a Palestine peace might ensue..

The first reaction of Arab diplomats was one of suspicion..

The arab newspapers will charge that the President is attempting to solve the Middle East problem on an economic basis, rather than COMING TO GRIPS WITH ITS BASIC political problems..the enmity for Isreal and the case of the Palestine refugees.. But the Arab reaction was tempered by the closing remarks of President Nasser's Foreign Minister,

He said he recognized that a hand had been raised over the heads of many people..Said it occassionally marked and punctuated "words of blessing," and in its own way, offered good cheer.. Fawzi said frankly that it would take time to ponder and appraise their real portent..

He was hinting that the United Arab Republic is willing to listen--

And is waiting to hear MORE..

~~our hopes that the economic plan for the Mid East..~~

(9)

President Eisenhower had already conceded something that Arab Nationalists have long demanded. That the Arab states do have regional interests common to all the ARAB STATES.

The President named no figures, but he promised [redacted] Arab development help from international capital, [redacted].. And almost before [redacted] Mr. Eisenhower finished speaking, there were rumors that international oil companies might in the future consider a plan, to pay out a percentage of their oil revenues, to be placed in a regional economic development fund, to the tune of more than a hundred MILLION dollars a year, if the oil producing countries of the Middle East, and those which PIPE [redacted] the oil [redacted], are willing to do the same. There is no confirmation of this, but it is known that exploratory talks have [redacted] taken place between [redacted] international oil industry leaders and the State Department..

Finally the president implied that a most important role in the Middle East Package plan, would be played by the U.N. Secretary General.. Hinted that Dag Hammarshuld might make another Middle Eastern trip, to sound out the Arab leaders..

Most diplomats agreed today, that the President's plan is so far-reachi that its unlikely to be resolved at this special U.N. Assembly session.. It may well remain the main subject for the next regular U.N. assembly session [redacted] starting in September.

(10)

Mr. Eisenhower concluded his address today...with these words:

(Tape runs 2:20
Ends on cue: "Thank you very much for your attention." (plus 2 secs of applause)

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News. First, Bill Martin

Rear Admiral [redacted]. Rickover [redacted] nuclear [redacted], MAY not have been invited to the White House ceremony honoring the crew of the [redacted] Nautilus, for [redacted]. But he may get a medal anyway, [redacted] because he was ignored..

[redacted] Twenty-one senators today cosponsored [redacted] a bipartizan bill to award a ONE to Rickover in recognition of his [redacted] direction of [redacted] the development and construction of the world's first nuclear-powered ships. The bill would authorize the [redacted] Striking [redacted] dollars to [redacted] of a special gold medal, costing 25 hundred dollars

[redacted] is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., Aug. 14, 1958

Good evening, everyone../. Here's/ what happened today:

A Dutch airliner/ crashed in the North Atlantic../.claiming, it/ is feared, the lives of all/ 99 persons on board./ The big, four-engine/ "Super Constellatio" went down in the ATLANTIC during the night,/ shortly after take-off from Shannon, Ireland./.on an "economy flight"/ from Amsterdam to New York. There were 90 passengers and a crew of nine../.representing at least 10 nationalities./ Perhaps as many as 50 of the passengers/ were citizens of the United States./ If, indeed, there ARE no survivors, it was the worst CIVIL/ air disaster/ involving a single plane/ in aviation history.

Hope t[redacted] that there were SOME/ who survived/ mounted early this afternoon, when a French trawler../.at the scene../ radioed/ t[redacted] IT had spotted life-rafts with men aboard. Later, it corrected the report...said that after taking a close look, it could see no sign of life. Wreckage covered a wide area, some 100 miles off the Irish coast. The first report of sighting wreckage appears to have come from an R.A.F. patrol bomber 11 hours after the KLM plane's take-off from Shannon. Thirty-five minutes after take-off, the airliner reported that it was cruising smoothly at 16-thousand feet. That was the last report it made. Other trans-Atlantic planes say there were rain-squalls in the area at the time. One pilot says he ran into a squall...with wind and rain...that was "really rough". Speculation has it that the airliner may have encountered engine trouble...that it was hurled into the water by a sudden down-draft of air...or that it was struck by lightning. The plane APPEARS to have been smashed to bits. Pieces of aircraft, half-inflated rafts...and bodies...have been sighted. Darkness has now descended...impeding the rescue effort. There is also some fog, although the weather is no longer severe.

→

[redacted] Numerous surface craft, including a Canadian destroyer and the big cruise ship Caronia...are speeding to the scene, hoping against hope. Seven bodies have been recovered. The airplane was an extra flight...added to the regular schedule because of the heavy summer traffic. The disaster shatters an amazing safety record for trans-Atlantic commercial flight.

→

At the U.N. Assembly today, British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd, gave full support to President Eisenhower's Middle East "peace plan"...said he "warmly" welcomed it for its "constructive and imaginative ideas." Mr. Lloyd said Great Britain would give "such help as may be within its power" to a regional economic development program...but he was careful to add, that the British assistance must be acceptable "to the countries concerned," that it must be requested by the Arab states. Mr. Lloyd said, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko had "taken to a flight of fancy", when he charged in his speech...yesterday..."that the West was guilty of aggression in the Middle East and was fomenting unrest. Actually, said Lloyd, "nothing has done more to create tension and instability in the area than the massive supplies of Soviet arms." British troops, he said, will leave Jordan when they are REQUESTED to leave by that country's lawful government..."or if suitable arrangements are made to preserve JORDAN from external threat."

The delegate from Jordan spoke...and caused some surprise by saying that

→

Jordan could not permit the stationing of U.N. troops on its territory. Nor, he said, could it allow U.N. observer teams to operate in Jordan. "What Jordan needs and asks for," he said, "is material assistance to reinforce its own Army and security forces." The Jordanian delegate went on to accuse pro-Nasser forces of indirect aggression against his country, but it was his stand against the stationing of U.N. forces in Jordan that attracted most COMMENT. Both the United States and Britain favor such action. Even Russia has proposed sending U.N. personnel to Jordan and Lebanon--- to supervise the withdrawal of British and American troops.

India's Prime Minister Nehru said today that there can be no [redacted] the Middle East "until foreign troops are withdrawn." Nehru told the Indian parliament he is against the U.N. sending "any kind" of armed force into Lebanon or Jordan. He said, however, India would be prepared "to consider favorably" a suggestion that U.N. observer teams in the area be reinforced. Nehru said any FINAL solution must take Israel into account. But he doubted that the question of an Arab-Israeli settlement should be raised "at this [redacted]."

Dispatches from Jordan tonight say that King Hussein has smashed a second plot..by Army personnel...against his throne. Nothing official on this....but 15 officers are SAID to have been placed under arrest.

→

The foreign minister of Lebanon, Dr. Charles Malik, finally left for New York today to represent his government in the U.N. debate. Opposition leaders had objected to him leading the Lebanese delegation...and were attempting to send a rival group.

President Eisenhower said today that he has only "one regret" about the reaction to his speech yesterday before the UN General Assembly...and that is that Russia apparently is "jamming" the Voice of America broadcasts of the proceedings. //

Reports that the Pentagon has been considering circumstances under which the United States might surrender under nuclear attack provoked reaction today, both from the White House and from Congress. News Secretary Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower considered the report "ridiculous" and had demanded an explanation from the Department of Defense. The President, Mr. Hagerty said, "certainly wouldn't agree to any talk about surrender by the United States." Democratic Senator Symington recalled a recent story in the St. Louis Post Dispatch...[redacted]ng saying that several non-profit agencies had prepared reports on the general subject of surrender.

→

Senator Symington referred especially to a report by Mr. Ellis Johnson of the operations research office of John Hopkins University. The Defense Department referred to a study made by the Rand Corporation in 1951...said IT might have been the source of the reports. But the Rand Corporation has issued a statement saying that NOWHERE did the study deal with any hypothetical surrender by the United States. The situation, it said, is "treated solely in the context of termination of a war in which the U.S. would be victorious." A Pentagon spokesman points out, however, that it is standard military practice to study all sorts of eventualities, including some which are quite unlikely to arise. Chairman Russell of the SENATE Armed Services Committee moved to have any agency which considers how this country should surrender deprived of federal funds.

The House passed a compromise farm bill today...and sent it to the Senate. The measure cuts some price supports to a 20-year low. Democratic Senator Humphrey, of the Agriculture Committee, calls it a "monstrosity". But Aiken of Vermont predicts it WILL be approved by the Senate and become law. The Senate Finance Committee approved a bill today to raise Social Security benefits by 7 percent. It comes up tomorrow on the Senate floor.

The United States announces a new relaxation of controls on shipments to Russia and to its European satellites. No change in the total U.S. embargo on shipments of any kind to Red China, North Korea and North Vietnam. Sixty-three types of goods...ranging from civilian aircraft to ball bearings...are taken off the prohibited list to Russia

The Nationalist government...on Formosa...reports two Chinese Communist jets...possibly THREE...shot down today in a dogfight over the Formosa Strait. The Nationalists lost one aircraft [redacted] "due to mechanical failure."

In Washington, the Federal Reserve Board has raised the discount rate at the San Francisco reserve bank from one and three-quarters to 2 percent. This is a reversal of the government's recent anti-recession policy...which called for the lowering of the discount rate to expand credit.

This U.N. special emergency assembly session was convened because the summit talks collapsed. But now it shows signs of turning into pre-summit talks. The Western powers are tonight searching for a formula - some kind of proposal which would put some flesh on President Eisenhower's sweeping but skeleton-like Middle East program, one which will get around the Soviet demand for the immediate withdrawal of the anglo-american troops, yet at the same time promise all things to all men, so that it will win the necessary two-thirds vote from the 81-nation assembly..

As a result, there's a growing tendency on the part of all the great powers, to suggest private talks away from the Television cameras in the high-altitude 38th floor office of Dag Hammarshuld... a kind of PRE-SUMMIT MEETING OF Foreign Ministers -

~~And more than that, there's an increasing demand that the UN Secretary General explore the possibility of further consultations on the Middle East at a heads of government level.~~

The Unusual mildness of the latter part of Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko's speech yesterday, ~~after his [illegible] tirade~~, has encouraged the Western Powers to think that private conversations among the big five foreign ministers could be useful...

The smaller powers at the United Nations are now in the process of blowing-off-steam, in the big gold and blue G[redacted]l Assembly Hall... But behind the scenes the search for general agreement goes-on, and invariably the trail leads [redacted] to the office of the U.N. Secretary General...He has been busy day-and-nite in a round of private discussions, LEADING, PERHAPS, TO [redacted] behind-the-scenes-meeting of the FOUR Big Powers..

[redacted] Russia's Gromyko virtually suggested this yesterday when he said he was ready to enter consultations with ANY diplomats, [redacted], to seek a mutually acceptable forumla for the withdrawal of forces from Lebanon and Jordon. It may have been this hint in Gromyko's speech which brought about the reported decision of French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville, to change his mind and attend this U.N. assembly..

[redacted] Thus far there has been a striking absence of the kind of vituperative propaganda shouting, which Premier De Gaulle thought would [redacted] take place [redacted] in New York..

3.3.3

Even the soviet resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of anglo-american troops, under the supervision of U.N. observers, marks the first time in [redacted] history, that the Soviet Union has proposed [redacted] dispatching U.N. forces ANYWHERE...

[redacted] The Russian proposal is admittedly [redacted] clever..

By watering down their previous [redacted] demand for outright anglo-american evacuation, [redacted], and adding to it, the expansion of U.N. observers in Lebanon and Jordon, the Soviet Union undoubtedly hopes to attract the votes of the nations in the middle,..The russians aren't turning a hair over the fact that they vetoed practically the same plan when Japan [redacted] proposed it in the Security Council..

It's up to the Western powers to match this call for expanded U.N. forces to go to Lebanon and Jordon, while at the same time permitting the anglo-american forces to remain there, until the U.N. forces are are big enough to maintain the security of both the threatened countries [redacted], even when coupled with President Eisenhower's promise of an american-supported economic plan for the Middle East.. This will NOT BE EASY —

At the moment there appears a definite need for some spelling out of the Eisenhower program...[redacted]

Secretary General Hammarshuld has already stated t[illegible] he has in mind, co-operation between both the oil-producing and oil transitting [illegible] countries...in other words between the [illegible] "Have" and Have-Not" nations of the Middle East.. and yesterday's rumours that t[illegible] State Department is sounding out the american oil companies in the area, to contribute a percentage of their profits, have not been denied..~~The annual income to the Middle East states from such a plan would amount to about a hundred million dollars annually, with a possibility that the United States and the U.N. would match this with another hundred million, thus starting~~ a ~~Middle East development program with a kitty of~~ some 2 hundred thousand ~~dollars~~..

all of This American plan

But [illegible] must wait on a U.N. Assembly agreement that the anglo-american troops remain in Jordon and Lebanon, until such time as other nations contribute enough man-power to a U.N. force, Big enough to maintain those countries' independence..

Little Jordon jolted both [illegible] sides of the U.N. today by saying it would [illegible] Not permit either U.N. observers as the Russians suggest, or U.N. troops, as we suggest, to enter Jordanian territory..This would be an insurmountable roadblock to any settlement.. But its p[illegible] Hoped that [illegible] King Hussein can be prevailed [illegible] upon to change his MIND-

This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news---first a word from. Bill Mauldin

Jordon's announcement that they would not permit any kind of U.N. observers or troops on King Hussein's soil, may have thrown a monkey-wrench into everyone hopes for a Middle East settlement.// ~~Under the U.N. charter no nation can be forced to accept foreign troops on its soil, without its permission..~~

Unless Jordon changed its mind it will send President Eisenhower's peace-plan a-glimmering..One diplomat remarked that in 1953 Eisenhower offered the U.N. "atoms-for-peace".//.This time, he said, Ike offered"Arabs-for-Peace."

This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite..

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

The Senate voted to prohibit the use of federal money for any study of circumstances under which the United States...theoretically... might surrender in the [redacted] event of nuclear attack. The vote was on an amendment to A MILITARY appropriation bill...submitted by Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Russell had been aroused by reports that such studies have been made. ..said he did not want Moscow to get the "erroneous idea" that the possibility of surrender by this country was being considered by anyone. Some senators...Republican and Democrat...tried to get Russell to withdraw his amendment. They feared it would lend credence to the reports, have an effect OPPOSITE to what Senator Russell wanted.

In today's debate, Republican Senator John Sherman Cooper said he was against the amendment because it would (in his words) "be an expression that the Senate lacks faith in the President and in some future Administration." Oregon's Democratic Senator, Richard L. Neuberger, took the same tack. But Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson said no senator need hesitate to say publicly "that we are not going to pay people to think about surrender---we're not." The final roll-call vote was 88 to 2, with Senators Cooper and Neuberger still opposed. President Eisenhower said again today---through News Secretary Hagerty---that he regarded the reports as "ridiculous". He said, "There has been no public money spent to study how or when the United States might surrender. There will be no such money spent for such a purpose." (I should like to discuss this question further in a few minutes).

→

[redacted]

Soviet Premier Khrushchev got into the Middle East debate today, although he made no appearance in the U.N. Assembly hall, [redacted] in New York. Instead, he sent a letter to a non-government organization in Britain...called "The Movement for Nuclear Disarmament." Khrushchev repeated the Soviet charge that Britain and the United States...in Lebanon and Jordan...are both guilty of armed intervention...reiterated the warning that this might lead to [redacted] world conflict. Any settlement, he declared, "must have due regard for the interests of ALL states linked with the countries of this part of the globe"--in other words, the interests of Soviet Russia. Khrushchev offered to pledge...jointly with the United States and Britain...NOT to use nuclear weapons "in any circumstances." The Russian leader said the pledge would apply both to aircraft and rockets.

[redacted], former Soviet Premier Nikolai Bulganin has AGAIN been kicked downstairs. According to the official Soviet news agency, Bulganin is no longer chairman of the State Bank. His new title: Chairman of the economic council in the remote Stavropol region. The relative unimportance of the new job becomes apparent when one considers that there are 105 of these regions, under Khrushchev's program for de-centralizing Soviet industry.

The U.N. Assembly has gone through its third day of emergency session with the significant activity still going on BEHIND the scenes. Support is said to be building for a resolution...sponsored by Norway...which MAY enable the Assembly to come up with a formula acceptable to at least two-thirds of the 81 delegates. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold would be instructed under the Norwegian proposal to make necessary arrangements for safeguarding the independence of Lebanon and Jordan...in order to PERMIT the withdrawal of U.S. and British troops. He would also be instructed to study the possible creation of an economic organization for the Middle East...and to make recommendations regarding a standby U.N. police force. In HIS U.N. speech today, the Japanese foreign minister warned that "extended" stationing of foreign troops in Lebanon and Jordan might invite "undesirable consequences." He argued that President Eisenhower's long-range proposals should be taken up later, at the regular September assembly session.

Crown Prince Faisal of Saudi Arabia flew to Cairo today for important talks with President Nasser. Last week, Nasser conferred at length with Saudi Arabia's minister of war. Now, the crown prince comes to Cairo...and there is talk of a new defense alliance between Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Republic. ..perhaps even federation. Faisal is seeing Nasser tonight.

In Jordan, persistent rumors of an impending coup. ..with Jordanian police searching for hidden arms in two of the big Palestine refugee camps. In one of the camps, the searchers found an unspecified amount of ammunition. ..seized 140 persons for questioning. The twenty-five U.N. relief agency camps were NOT affected. King Hussein...mindful of the fate that overtook his cousin, King Faisal of Iraq. ..is keeping himself surrounded by 60 guards, all heavily armed.

New violence in Lebanon, with at least five persons killed. ..12 wounded.. in a series of bombing and shooting incidents. Three persons died when a bomb exploded in a vegetable market in downtown Beirut. A U.S. Navy plane fired on by rebel forces today. ..while on patrol over Northern Lebanon. The plane returned to the Aircraft Carrier Essex with six bullet holes in its fusilage. No one was hurt.

The British government announces it's going ahead with its seven-year "partnership plan" for Cyprus. --- WITH MODIFICATIONS. The government holds-out promise that Archbishop Makarios...exiled from Cyprus since March, 1956...will be allowed to return to the island, provided no violence occurs. Under the British plan, the Greek and Turkish communities of Cyprus would elect separate legislatures, govern their own communal affairs. ~~Britain has dropped the proposal...which would have put representatives of Greece and Turkey on the British governor's council. Instead, the Greek and Turkish representatives would be regarded as envoys, with the right of direct access to the governor whenever they feel that matters of national interest are involved. Today's announcement says first steps already are being taken in preparation for communal elections in two or three months. Prime Minister Macmillan recently conferred with Greek and Turkish leaders, and the plan has been slightly modified, apparently due to various objections which they raised.~~ The first reaction to today's policy statement comes from Athens...where a spokesman for Archbishop Makarios calls the amended British plan "unacceptable".

In the North Atlantic...all hope abandoned of finding ANY survivors in the crash of that Dutch airliner, with 99 persons aboard. An investigation into the CAUSE of the disaster. A K.L.M. spokesman says the airline has NO reason whatsoever to suspect sabotage. //

In Washington...the Federal Reserve Board announces that industrial output in July went up for the third straight month...that production now stands at a level 6 percent ABOVE what it was last April.

And the Labor Department reports that the number of persons drawing unemployment benefits dropped...in the week ending August second.//.to the lowest level since last December.

~~The House today passed a compromise bill to ease the tax load on small business. The measure now goes to the Senate.// The House leadership scheduled a showdown Monday on the Senate bill for combatting crime in labor unions.~~

[redacted]AL

[redacted]--THE SENATE REFUSED TODAY TO ACCEPT A COMPROMISE HOUSE-APPROVED FARM BILL. SPEAKER SAM RAYBURN PROMPTLY WARNED IT WAS "VERY DOUBTFUL" ANY FARM LEGISLATION WOULD BE ENACTED THIS YEAR UNLESS THE SENATE CHANGES ITS MIND.

well

The furore over the idea of any studies being made of conditions under which the UNITED STATES might surrender in a Nuclear War, has resulted in a Senate vote to bar government money for any surrender possibility studies in the future..

But on the positive side, this tempest on Capital Hill, has again served to focus attention on the immensities of the problems facing the entire world in a nuclear war.. Problems, which for this country, have at times been hushed-up, as when the Gaither report on nuclear survival, was withheld from publication..

Most Sanators seem to agree that the very thought of possible american surrender in a nuclear war might be damaging to public morale---And give possible comfort to a potential enemy..

Yet there are many other political conclusions that may be drawn from the publication of the facts of life about nuclear warfare.. One of them is, that there may be some things which are vitally necessary, to insure that this country will be victorious...It is NOT enough to say that there are some thoughts which we cannot even think about... When U.S Civil defense authorities have long clamored for the building of suitable underground shelters, to give some measure of public defense against surprise attack...

There's no blinking the fact that at the present stage of military development, there is no (PRESENT) defense against intercontinental rockets. This fact has been plainly stated to the British public, for example, in a recent official white paper. ~~And many well-informed and conscientious american military men~~ have told this reporter ~~and that the only defense against nuclear warfare is to attack first..~~

It's obvious that the Communist world, is also aware of this. And it is to the eternal credit of the United States government that it has long sought political agreement with the Soviet Union, seeking ways in which both sides of the world could be safeguarded against the possibility of suprise attack. Thus far the Soviet Union has been willing to enter into "paper" agreements to ban the use of nuclear weapons, But NOT to an adequately safe-guarded inspection system..

~~Apparently the [illegible] idea of American suspension in a nuclear [illegible] out of a series of [illegible] articles originally printed [illegible] in the Saint Louis Post-Dispatch~~

3.3.3

(9)

Two years ago, when hopes rose [redacted] the London disarmament talks, High up That the SOVIET UNION MIGHT agree to an INSPECTION SYSTEM ~~that the Soviet Union might agree to an inspection system~~, The Russians broke off the talks with the announcement that they were the sole possessors of an [redacted] inter-continental rocket... They followed this up with their sputnicks, and then called for a summit conference to [redacted] bargain from military strength... [redacted] ~~Bulganin~~ ~~that we have been able to defer~~ ~~a summit conference~~, we were able to improve ~~our~~ military position..

This country IS NOW WILLING [redacted] to enter a summit conference IF the Soviet Union is ~~ready~~ WILLING to talk disarmament... But without This the danger of suprise attack is ever clear. [redacted]

The furore over this surrender talk, grew out of some non-political studies, one by Doctor Ellis Johnson of Johns Hopkins University, estimating that american casualties from a surprise attack could range from 15 to 90 million dead, depending of the state of our active and passive defenses. But this could just as well be interpreted as a call for America to gird its loins and put its civil defenses in such order that a catastrophe like that couldnt happen.

(10)

The series of articles in the Saint Louis Post Dispatch, [redacted] re-printed [redacted] in the Congressional Record, drew attention to the possibility that we might not be able to fight back [redacted] after such a disaster.. But it may be equally interpreted as a call for renewed political effort toward [redacted] real disarmament negotiations with Russia... Negotiations which would be successful only when conducted [redacted] in a posture of confidence in our own ability to attack or defend ourselves adequately... //

One Minute

/ The St, Louis Post dispatch articles also drew on a book by Paul Kescskemeti, called "strategic surrender" Mr. Kesskkemiti is a former correpondent with experience in wartime Germany.. His Book includes studies of of the surrenders of France in 1940, Italy in 1943, and Germany and Japan in 1945. He discusses the idea of "Unconditional surrender" which We applied to Nazi Germany - a political decision [redacted] which some people think permitted Russia to [redacted] dominate Eastern Europe..

Kesskemiti writes that "present weapons portend" a disruptive effect going far beyond earlier battle strategies. Says "Full-scale nuclear warfare threatens a level of destruction so high, that co-ordinated [redacted] activities in the [redacted] target might stop..." [redacted]

In other words, he thinks

Unconditional surrender in nuclear war may no longer be a political decision, but [redacted] an unavoidable consquence arising from surprise attack...

Surely these are not thoughts we must be afraid of, but ideas that Should [redacted] strengthen the resolution of an informed public, so they Cannot [redacted] occur...

This is Larry LeSueur...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news.. First, [redacted] a word from Bul Mautn

Today Japan quietly observed the 13th anniversary of the end of world war two.. Memorial services for Japan's three million war dead, were held in Tokyo, Hiroshima, Nagasaki and [redacted] other cities..

The date of Japan's surrender to the Allies was noted in a number of Japanese newspaper editorials..

The newspaper Yomiuri said: Japanese scientists were trying to develop nuclear weapons, when Japan was forced to surrender..

ADDED:

[redacted] "we would have used them, if they had been available.."

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite.

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

The U.S. Court of Appeals...in St. Louis... REVERSED the lower court order delaying the integration of Little Rock Central High School for two and a half years. The delay had been ordered by District Judge Harry Lemley, on the petition of the Little Rock school board. Today...in its 6-to-1 decision, the Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the petition dismissed. The majority opinion was written by Judge Martin C. Matthes...at age 52, the youngest of the seven jurists who heard the arguments in open court, just two weeks ago. He stated, in his opinion, "The issue plainly comes down to the question of whether overt public resistance...including mob protest...constitutes sufficient cause to nullify the order of the Federal Court directing the school board to proceed with its integration plan. We say," he continued, "that the time has not yet come in these United States when an order of a Federal Court must be whittled away, watered down, or shamefully withdrawn, in the face of violent and unlawful acts of individual citizens in opposition thereto."

→

~~Judge Matthes agreed with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, that if the two and a half year delay were upheld, it would be "an open invitation" to some people in other districts to oppose the integration of public schools "through violent and unlawful means."~~

There was no dissenting opinion today, as such. However, the chief judge of the appeals court... Archibald Gardner... offered a memorandum in which he took issue with the opinion of the majority. The school authorities, he said, had acted [redacted] in good faith. It was his belief that the action of Judge Lemley...ordering the delay..."was based on realities and on conditions, rather than theories." So far, there has been no reaction from the White House...or the Justice Department...or Governor Faubus. It is not [redacted] at all definite that, as a result of the majority decision, Central High School will re-open next month on an integrated basis.

~~There is likely to be further legal action. The attorneys for the school board, for example, could ask for a rehearing of their case.~~

A source close to Governor Faubus...in Little Rock...says the governor plans to call the state legislature into special session before the end of the week to consider the possibility of delaying integration by means of a new law. Senator McClellan of Arkansas said tonight that the Court of Appeals in its decision had "wholly disregarded the welfare of both races.

Senator Fulbright said he received word of the decision with "deep regret". He said, "It presents the people of Arkansas with a very unhappy situation."

A compromise resolution for easing Middle East tension...was submitted to the U.N. Assembly today by Norway and six other countries. It is a MILD resolution...calculated to win the approval of the 81 nations assembled. It takes note of declarations...by the United States and Britain...that they are willing to withdraw their forces from Lebanon and Jordan whenever this is requested by the duly constituted governments of those countries...or "whenever as a result of action of the U.N.../.or otherwise../.their presence is no longer required." The resolution says nothing about stopping the Middle East arms race...or about inflamatory broadcasts. It DOES say...in vague lahguage...that all countries should "refrain from any threats or acts...direct or indirect...aimed at the freedom, independence or integrity of any other country." It also vaguely asks Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold "forthwith" to make such practical arrangements as he...in consultation with thegovernments concerned...may find would adequately serve to help in upholding the purposes and principles of the U.N. Charter in relation to Lebanon and Jordan." Mr. Hammarskjold is asked to report...not later than the last day of September...on his Middle East peace efforts. ~~[illegible] this whole question further [illegible] During the day, Secretary of State Dulles had private talks with both the foreign ministers of the Soviet Union and the United Arab Republic. (I should like to examine this whole question further in a few minutes).~~

(8) →

Reports from Belgrade say that Yugoslavia has asked the United States for a new, long-term industrial loan...totaling more than 300 million dollars. Last Spring, Russia suspended a long-term loan to Yugoslavia for almost this amount.

32

Two major pieces of domestic legislation...killed today by the House. Both measures failed to win the necessary Two-Thirds majority, under the "no amendment" short-cut prodedure laid down by House Democratic leaders. First, the House killed a billion-dollar housing measure, which the Administration had denounced as inflationary. The vote was 251 to 134, six votes shy of the two-thirds majority required. Republican representatives demanded the right to vote on a substitute measure, calling for expenditure of less money...accused Speaker Sam Rayburn of sanctioning the no-amendment procedure in order to put the G.O.P. "on the spot." The House then proceeded to reject the Kennedy-Ives labor bill...which the Senate had passed in June. This second measure didn't even come close to mustering a two-thirds majority, with the final roll-call showing 190 votes FOR the legislation and 198 votes AGAINST. Republicans complained that they had no opportunity to amend the bill...that it (still had not been considered by the House Labor Committee. Democratic Representative James Roosevelt, of California, replied that what the Republicans really wanted was a political issue--not legislation to deal with labor problems. The Kennedy-Ives bill would...among other things...require public reporting of union finances and the election of union officers by secret ballot. Leaders of the AFL-CIO... meeting today in Pennsylvania... passed a resolution urging the House to approve the legislation... but to no avail. The co-sponsors of the legislation, Kennedy of Massachusetts and Ives of New York... both put out statements, deploring the House action. Ives said the House rejection of the bill was tantamount an open invitation to all crimners to make the most of their opportunities in the labor-management field." Senator Kennedy said, in his statement, that only Jimmy Hoffa can rejoice at his continued good luck." Kennedy promised that "constructive" labor reform legislation would "definitely be brought forward again next year." "In the meantime," he said, "those who defeated this bill will bear a heavy responsibility for the labor racketeering that will continue unchecked."

5V →

The Senate voted "contempt-of-Congress" citations today against Maurice Hutcheson, president of the international carpenters union... and 12 others who have refused to answer questions put to them by the Senate Rackets Committee. Hutcheson did not claim the protection of the Fifth Amendment in refusing to answer questions... but DID challenge the committee's jurisdiction, contending that it was trying to deprive him of "due process of law. However, most of the 6 cited today pleaded the Fifth Amendment. And Chairman McClellan...in requesting contempt citations... said he hoped their cases would be made a "test". The constitutional right NOT to incriminate oneself, he said, had been abused. The citations will now go to the Justice Department for possible action by a grand jury.

69

The AFL-CIO Executive Council voted today to outlaw all mutual aid agreements between its affiliated unions and the Teamsters. Cooperation with the Teamsters Union on the local level in such matters as strike support... will be continued.

The farm bill...about which there has been so much controversy... was passed by the Senate tonight and sent to the White House for President Eisenhower's signature. Passage was by a voice vote, after many senators reversed their previous STAND on it...and accepted modifications written into the bill by the House. The measure permits government price supports to be lowered on cotton, rice and corn. The [illegible] deactivation.

82

well today

The western powers decided to try to galvanize the United Nations Assembly on support of the Eisenhower Middle East program. The resolution presented today by a group of small nations, sparked by Norway, leaves it to Dag Hammarshuld to work out the arrangements for a Middle East PEACE- [illegible] But The american and british-supported proposal would in effect stake the prestige of the UN. Secretary General on an effort to lift the Middle East into the 20th century, and at the Same TIME stop the spread of Egypt's imperialism, by safe-guarding those Middle East States, which STILL WANT TO REMAIN independent.

The operative paragraphs of the resolution does not refer to the the withdrawal of the British and American troops from Lebanon and Jordon, but the preamble [illegible] mentions the new assurances given to the U.N. today, that the anglo american forces would be withdrawn [illegible] the U.N. decides that by its own decisions, there [illegible] to make it easier to obtain [illegible] and vote for the operative paragraphs.

These assurances of eventual anglo-american troop withdrawal, conveyed in separate letters to the U.N. Assembly President by Secretary Dulles and British foreign Secretary Llyod, MARK a conciliatory shift in the american position.. Ambassador Lodge's previous statements made earlier in the Middle East crisis, had conveyed the impression that the United States would not leave Lebanon until We a Pro Lebanese Govt Fell the time was ripe, and that we would defy any U.N. attempts to order us out.. It was clear that GIVING this promise to leave when the U.N. thinks we should go, The United States and Britain are hoping that Egypt's demand for The anglo-american troop ouster, can be overcome, if not altogether, at least by an abstention rather than a negative vote..

The United Arab delegation has not yet commented publically on the this new western resolution.. But they are far from enthusiastic about it.. And Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko said FIRMLY to this reporter.. "Its a bad resolution. We Will fight it.."

All of which indicates a vast, behind-the-scenes tug of war in the U.N. corridors before the U.N. Assembly reaches a vote later this week..

The key elements confronting the Western powers efforts to swing The neccessary two-thirds vote Behind This plan, are The United Arab Republic and India..

The Western powers presume that President Nasser will think twice about offending the U.N. Secretary General, with a negative vote... They point to Egypt's [redacted] lack of enthusiasm for the United Nations police force which was sent Egypt after the Suez crisis, 2½ years ago, but they note that President Nasser has never demanded its removal..

The position of India is still not definite...But there are said to be encouraging signs, that India may be prevailed upon to abstain rather than vote against Britain, America and in effect, Dag Hammarshuld..

The U.N. Secretary General is placing his own prestige on the block - by his unvoiced consent to take the load of such a Middle East settlement on his own shoulders.#.It is noteworthy that the resolution was sparked by little Norway, [redacted] a member of Mr. Hammarshuld's own Scandinavia.. and Denmark is a co-sponsor.

The small nations [redacted] sponsoring the resolution are confident that they have the entire Latin-American bloc behind them, as well as all the Nato nations...And they hope to pick-up enough votes from the Asian-Arab bloc, if India and the United Arab Republic do not join Russia in [redacted] battling against it..

It is also noteworthy that although the United States and Britain [redacted] are stoutly supporting this proposal to leave it to Dag Hammarshuld, neither of them are sponsors of the western-backed proposal.. [redacted] They deliberately refrained from putting their names on it, since they are directly concerned with the situation, [redacted].

And diplomatically, this lack of formal commitment to the proposal, still gives the United States and Britain room for maneuver, in the event the U.N. [redacted] reaches a deadlock..

Should this occur, then the prospects for [redacted] SUB-SUMMIT talks among the Foreign Ministers [redacted] MIGHT come to the [redacted] forefront... The decision of the French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville to fly to New York tomorrow, points-up this possibility... His mission to the United Nations [redacted] is not known, but he will be on hand, [redacted] IF neither the Western nor Soviet resoltions can achieve the necessary two-thirds majority. The French foreign Minister is said to flying here fully instructed by Premier De Gaulle, who is known to favor [redacted] an eventual Summit conference. [redacted]..

~~[redacted] The Soviet Union is clearly hoping for such a U.N. deadlock.~~

The soviet Union is clearly hoping for a U.N. deadlock..

It knows its own resolution calling for imm diate anglo-american withdrawal cannot pass..But in his speech tomorrow, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko hopes to whip up ENOUGH FEELING against the presence of anglo-american troops in the Middle East, to ensure that the western-backed proposal won't pass either..

In that case there might be time for sub-summit [redacted] talks between Gromyko and the Western Foreign Ministers, plus Egypt and India..

But both the United States and Britain are dead SET against this....as well as of accepting any amendment that would place a definite date on anglo-american withdrawal from Jordon and Lebenon...

And at this moment, The United States is convinced it can get 54 out of the 81 nations to pull with [redacted] Eisenhower and Hammarshuld [redacted] IN THIS [redacted] Middle East tug-of war..

This is Larry LeSueur..I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News...First Bill Martin.

— Footnote —

The British shared some of the disappointment of the United States, when the air force racket aimed at the Moon yeterday, exploded a minute or so after BLAST-OFF... The British had planned to train their biggest telescope on the american rocket, to let us know how close we came..

But the London Daily Herald STILL sees some humor in the abortive american attempt to be first with a moon-rocket..

It TOPS its story of the rocket's failure with a smiling picture of MA moon, and a caption saying: "Missed Me! By 2 hundred and twenty-two thousand miles and 28 hundred feet..

This is Larry LeSueur..Goodnite..

Lesueur for Murrow Tues., Aug. 19, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Governor Faubus called in the reporters...but left "hanging-fire" what HE will do about the Circuit Court ruling that racial integration at Little Rock Central High is NOT to be put off. A CBS newsman covered the Faubus news conference. Here is Harry Reasoner with his report:

(Tape runs 1:40
Ends on cue: "to CBS News in N.Y."

School Superintendent Virgil Blossom says he is calling a special meeting of the School Board TONITE. He said the board would pursue "any and-all legal remedies" to effect a delay. Mrs. L.C. Bates, of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said: "When the School Board calls us, we will listen to their plan. Then," she said, "we will decide what to do."

→

In Washington, the White House declined comment. News Secretary Hagerty told reporters he had nothing to say one way or another as to whether President Eisenhower might broadcast an appeal for all citizens to obey the law, prior to the opening of school.

Congress is rushing toward adjournment. The House...by a voice vote...has passed and sent to the White House the measure increasing Social Security benefits by 7 percent. Mr. Eisenhower is expected to sign.

The House ALSO gave final congressional approval to a bill requiring "public" accounting of employee welfare and pension programs. The law would apply to administrators of welfare and pension plans covering more than 25 employees. Wilful failure to furnish the required information COULD result in a thousand-dollar fine, or six months in jail.

And the House Foreign Affairs Committee approved legislation that would authorize the Secretary of State to deny passports to subversives.

The Senate began debating a measure to modify the Supreme Court decision that a prisoner must be formally charged upon his arrest.

Secretary of State Dulles is working hard for a western victory at the UNITED Nations... He cancelled a trip to Washington today, to confer with Latin American delegates, telling them that the United States can compromise no further than the Norwegian resolution that would send Dag Hammarshuld to the Middle-East to sell the Eisenhower program. Mr. Dulles also conferred with British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd and with French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville, who arrived from Paris this morning.

But a key group of asian-African nations, led by India, is determined to offer amendments that would stress immediate withdrawal of the gnglo-american troops from Jordon and Lebanon.. and omit any mention of the creation of a standby U.N. Police Force. Although this Indian-led proposal has not yet crystallized, it may take the form of acknowledging the withdrawal of the one battalion of U.S. Marines, and recommend the withdrawal of them all.. The Asian-African group will meet again tomorrow, with some of its members like Japan, known to favor the Western proposal.. And at this moment, the Western Powers are still confident That the Norwegian plan can squeak through with a two-thirds majority. THEY SAY THEY'LL refuse to accept any watering-down amendments that might catch only a few more votes ANY way.

U.N. Assembly President Sir Leslie Munro announced he'll try to wind-up the long-list of speakers at a nite session tomorrow, [redacted], with a vote on Thursday,. Thus making possible the departure of U.N. Secretary General Hammarshuld on his Middle East Peace Mission this weekend..

The atomic scientists..meeting in Geneva..have agreed on a system for detecting violations of a possible ban on nuclear WEAPONS tests. This is not to say that the scientists...representing East-and-West...have agreed to set-up a control system. Rather, they have agreed on what technical arrangements should be made, if a test ban, is to be enforced. [redacted] All the talks in Geneva...since they started July first..have been on a purely SCIENTIFIC level. The details of today's agreement have not yet been announced [redacted] a final report on their work. And it may be that this report will be transmitted to the various governments involved before it is made public. The governments represented are the United States, Britain, Canada and France on one side and Russia, Poland, Roumania and Czechoslovakia on the other. Just how COMPLETE their technical agreement is remains to be seen.

America's largest atomic submarine, the Triton, was launched today at [redacted] Groton, Connecticut. The Triton is the first submarine to be powered by TWO nuclear reactors... DISPLACES almost 6-thousand tons, measures 447 feet in length. And it will carry more radar equipment than any submarine [redacted] IN BYSTANCE. Admiral Jerauld Wright, commander of the U.S. Atlantic Fleet, said...at its launching...that the ultra-modern radar would amount to a virtual "electronic periscope", with a range 100 times greater than that possessed by submarines in the past. As a new-style radar picket ship, he said, it will be a "nuclear-propelled, invisible, electronic [redacted] brain...hundreds of miles in advance of our atomic strike fleet."

→

Rear Admiral Rickover, "father of the atomic submarine," did not attend the launching...but sent [redacted] a message, saying that the Triton "symbolizes the submersible capital ships of the future."

The White House announced today that President Eisenhower has designated Admiral Rickover as his personal representative to welcome the submarine Nautilus home from its epic voyage under the North Pole. The Nautilus is due to arrive in New York on Monday, and there will be a traditional ticker-tape parade. News Secretary Hagerty says Mr. Eisenhower [redacted] designated Admiral Rickover [redacted] To represent him on the suggestion of [redacted] Secretary of the Navy Thomas Gates. [redacted] Rickover was not invited to the White House ceremony...at which the historic achievement of the Nautilus was announced. Hagerty said.. at the time...

(7)

that Rickover was not invited because of "insufficient room." Since then, NAVY SECRETARY Gates has apologized...saying the admiral had been overlooked "due to preoccupation with the OPERATIONAL significance of the voyage."

The State Department confirms that the United States is shipping military equipment to Indonesia. A department spokesman says the equipment was requested by the Indonesian government for the purpose of maintaining internal security, and that the shipments consist of small arms, communications equipment, trucks and trainers. The size of the shipments was not disclosed.

STET

The Chinese Communist radio said today that the arrival of U.S. Marines in Singapore "poses a new military threat." Claimed the United States is reverting to "a gunboat policy." About a thousand Marines are involved. The Indonesian government says it accepts the explanation of the U.S. ambassador...that the troops in Singapore are "on a recreation leave, and will be departing soon."

The Greek government said tonight it "cannot accept" the latest British plan for Cyprus. The rejection was contained in a formal note to British Prime Minister Macmillan, who has offered Greek and Turkish-Cypriots a seven-year "interim" program of limited self-rule.

The Senate Rackets Committee heard testimony today that Joseph Costello, [redacted] owner of a St. Louis taxi fleet, IS BELIEVED TO HAVE some of the Greenlease kidnap money. The testimony came from a St. Louis detective, [redacted] Captain John Doherty. [redacted] When called to the stand, Costello refused to say whether he was involved in the theft of the missing 300-thousand dollars. He pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

[redacted]

Now...for a first-hand report from the Middle East...we switch to CBS News Correspondent Robert Pierpoint in Amman, the capital of Jordan.

(Tape runs 3:00
(Ends on cue: "--to CBS News in NY."

And This is L.L. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the [redacted] News.

First, B.C Marton -

(9)

Prince Aly Khan, the international playboy turned diplomat, went to the post today, for his maiden speech at the U.N.

Now Pakistan's chief delegate, Prince Aly wore the colors of a diplomat. dark blue suit, white shirt, dark tie and black shoes. He appeared cool and confident as he upheld Jordon and Lebanon's right to request anglo-american troops to protect them. and urged the creation of a ~~standby U.N. Police Force~~ STANDBY U.N POLICE FORCE...

The socialite Prince warmly supported Eisenhower's Middle East development plan, and Western diplomats think Prince Aly is aboard another winner..

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Tuesday, August 19, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EDT

LESUEUR: ...A CBS Newsman covered the Faubus news conference Here is Harry Reasoner with his report.

REASONER: One of the things that people of Arkansas like about Orville Faubus is that he's frequently good for a surprise. One of his political techniques is to talk not about what people expect, but what about serves his situation best. Today, he dismissed the newest Federal court decision as regretable and then proceeded to put the Little Rock school board and superintendent Virgil Blossom on the spot. If the Board hadn't been so anxious to get integration started, Faubus implied, Arkansas might right now be two years away from a crisis. But, said Faubus, "The board can still reform, fight integration by legal means and take Little Rock out of the worlds headlines for a while at any rate." The Governor suggested use of a student assignement law which might keep negro children out of white schools pending another courttest. And, he suggested an approach by the Board to negro parents and to the NAACP an appeal for a temporary suspension of their asperations, he said, to give Arkansas time to cool off. Or, said the Governor, "If this Board can't do either of thosethings, it could resign and let a Board be elected which could." If a the board neither actsnor resigns said Faubus, he's prepared to act. It's understood his action will be a special legislative session and legal steps to hold off integration. Reporters today thought Gov. Faubus was mile and consciencely statesmanlike. After his landslide election, he seemed to have more assurance that what he has done and intends to do is absolutely right and so far as anyone could gtell, what he intends to do does not at the moment include any compromise.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: School superintendent Virgil Blossom ...

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS: 8/19/58 2

LESUEUR: Now, for a first hand report from the Middle East we switch to CBS News correspondent Robert Pierpoint in Amman, capital of Jordan.

PIERPOINT: ~~x~~ 3¼ American women and children passed through Jerusalem's Mandelbaum Gate today crossing from Jordan into Israel. It was the largest group to leave this country since the US State Department ordered the evacuation of dependents about 10 days ago. Most of the 3¼ who left Jordan today are families of diplomats and foreign aid program employees here in Amman. They will go by ship from Israel to Italy, remaining there until the State Department says it is safe for them to return to Jordan. Some Jordanians resent the evacuation of American dependents, pointing out that coming at this time, it appears to show lack of confidence in the government of Jordan's King Hussein. Officially, the US State Department denies this, calls the evacuation merely an administrative suggestion. But, the plain fact is that the American government is definitely worried over the stability of Jordan. Privately, diplomats here will tell you that noone knows how lpng the King will be able to hold the lid on a cauldron boiling with anti-government ~~and~~ and pro-Nasser opposition. And, when and if the lid blows these diplomats predict things will be very rough for the foreigners here much rougher they say then in Baghdad where only a few British and Americans were killed. ~~HE~~ Of course, the presnece of British troops in Jordan certainly has helped avert a revolution here, but the British made quite certain that they would like to get out as soon as possible and there are now indications that the Jordnaian government might also be agreeable to a British withdrawal. At, least, that is the way the short speech in New York yesterday ~~abx~~ Abdul Rifi Rifa, Jordan's delegate to the United Nations is being interpreted here today. Local newspapers point out that while Jordan as Rifi stated wants no United Nations forces here and finds no useful purpose in UN observer teams either, this country would nevertheless accept any resolution passed by the General Assembly that might lead to an end to the present crisis. In other words, we don't like UN troops say the Jordanians, but we might agree to a few observer teams if our friends insist. It's understood here that the friends are insisting. It seems the only way to get the British off the hook. But, the British do not want to leave until both they and young King Hussein are reasonably sure that Hussein can stay on the throne without their presence and they that could be sometime yet. That's why many of those Americans who departed Jordan today may not be back for quite a while.

This is Bob Pierpoint in Amman. Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: And, this is Larry Lesueur.....

LeSueur for Murrow... Wed, August 20,1958

Good Evening everyone....Here's what happened today..

A dramatic behind-the-scenes development at the United Nations.. With the prospect of a get-together among embattled Jordon and Lebanon, and the United Arab Republic...An unexpected Arab show of unity which sent Secretary of State Dulles hurrying to a personal meeting at the White House with President Eisenhower, on a quick round-trip [redacted] between Washington and New York...A development which may bring the U.N. special Assembly session to a [redacted] quick showdown vote tomorrow, and the conclusion of the Emergency Session..

For that story we switch direct to United Nations Headquarters, Richard C. Hottelet reporting..

runs 3 MIN.

At 10:05 tonight, Eastern Time, CBS News will present a special U.N. broadcast, "Eve of Decision".

11

Presidene Eisenhower said at his news conference today, that he "hopes" American troops may soon be withdrawn from Lebanon.. But he could set no definite date. It would depend he said, on whether the legal government of LEBANON requests their withdrawal....AND on what steps are taken at the U.N.

Mr. Eisenhower began his news conference by implying that in the face of violence...he might again use federal troops to enforce a court-order for school integration. Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference that if a state allows a court decree to be frustrated by violence, then there can be "no equivocation as to the responsibility of the Federal Government. My feelings," he said, "are EXACTLY as they were a year ago." It was, of course, just 11 months ago that the President ordered federal troops into Little Rock. Mr. Eisenhower opened his news conference by saying that he had a "little statement" he wanted to read...in anticipation of questions which might be asked regarding the recent decision of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals...the decision REVERSING the lower court order that would have delayed integration at Central High School → for two and a half years. Here is the complete statement, as read by the President.

(Tape runs 2:00
Ends on cue: "---if we are to solve this problem."

Mr. Eisenhower said that for the present he had nothing further to say. But later in the news conference, he relented. He said in response to questions that he believed it "completely unwise" for him to reveal his own PERSONAL feeling on the principle of school integration. He was sworn, he said, to one thing--to defend the Constitution of the United States and uphold its laws. What if there was a decision he opposed? He felt it was "just not good business" for him to comment on the decisions of a court.

In Little Rock, Governor Faubus said what Mr. Eisenhower failed to realize was that he was supporting a court decision which is not constitutional. The President, he said, "cannot obtain peaceable compliance with illegal court orders which go against the overwhelming sentiments of the people, simply by invoking the sacred name of the Constitution and the once-magic name of Eisenhower." And then...taking his gloves off...Governor Faubus declared that the name of Eisenhower had--in his phrase---"lost its luster and appeal months and months ago."

→

The Arkansas Gazette said in an editorial today that there was "ample justification" for a temporary suspension of integration at Central High School. It was justified, the paper said, not only in the "intolerable" local circumstances...but in the language of the original Supreme Court decision itself." A reference to the fact that the Supreme Court ordered the de-segregation of public schools "with all DELIBERATE speed."

Tonight, Governor Faubus is attending a meeting of the Little Rock School Board. School Board attorneys are making TWO legal moves. They are drawing up petitions...asking for a "stay" of the Appeals Court order continuing integration at Central High. The petitions are being addressed to the Supreme Court...which is in summer recess...and to the Appeals Court itself.

The President had expected someone...at his news conference...to ask about labor legislation, in view of the House action killing the Kennedy-Ives bill. The question was NOT raised. And so later in the day, Mr. Eisenhower issued a special statement...saying that he STILL hopes Congress will pass an "effective" labor reform bill before it adjourns. The President criticized the Kennedy-Ives measure as falling "far short" of what he thought was necessary to curb the abuses uncovered by the Senate Rackets Committee.

On the subject of the national economy, Mr. Eisenhower said at his news conference that he did not know how he could take a tougher stand against inflation without advocating controls [redacted] of which he disapproves. He noted that he had vetoed several bills passed by Congress because they asked [redacted] "just too much money."

~~Mr. Eisenhower said he "hopes" that American troops may soon be withdrawn from Lebanon, but he could set no definite date. It would depend, he said, on whether the legal government of Lebanon REQUESTS withdrawal...and on what steps are taken in the U.N.~~

(5)

Premier Charles DeGaulle took off from Paris today..on a 12-thousand-mile trip that will take him to all the French African colonies---from Madagascar, to the Sahara, from French Equitorial Africa to Algiers. The PURPOSE of General DeGaulle's barnstorming trip will be to "sell" the people of French Africa on his new constitution..to be voted on in a national referendum on September 28. My colleague, Eric Sevareid, reports from Paris that DeGaulle will be taking with him a personal message from Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Sevareid says it is an oral---not a written message---and that it was conveyed to DeGaulle this week by former Premier Mendes-France...who was MAN recently in Moscow. While the details of the message are not known Sevareid says the message concerns the Middle East...and that it is "very friendly and conciliatory in tone." ~~It is a message implying that Khrushchev wants to see order restored in the Middle East. According to Sevareid's information, it has revived the~~ long-standing French notion that ~~the Russians, sooner or later, will be willing---with other countries---to guarantee the borders of the nations of the Middle East, INCLUDING those of Israel.~~

United Press International...in a dispatch from Washington...says the United States will soon announce a temporary suspension of nuclear weapons tests. The dispatch quotes "informed sources". It says a White House statement may come tomorrow.

(6)

In Congress...the Senate has killed a bill aimed at curbing the power of the Supreme Court. The vote to table the measure...and thus dispose of it for this session...was 49 to 41. The legislation was co-sponsored by two Republican senators--Jenner of Indiana and Butler of Maryland. And the vote to shelve the measure came after three hours of heated debate. The bill---if passed by Congress---would have allowed congressional investigating committees to decide the pertinency of their questions. And it would have allowed states to enforce their own anti-subversion laws... laws which the Supreme Court has held are superseded by FEDERAL law. The measure also would have reduced the review powers of the Supreme Court.

President Eisenhower today signed into law the legislation extending the reciprocal trade program for another FOUR years.

This is Larry Lesueur will be back in a moment with a footnote to the news - first - Bill Matter

Footnote

A group of fourteen soviet vacationers arrived in New York today, the first Russian [redacted] tourists ever to come in this country..

Unlike all the subsidized scientists, diplomats, farmers and ballet dancers who have come here in official parties..Today's russian arrivals paid their own way...11 hundred and 45 dollars each in hard-earned rubles..

The one woman in the Party, Mrs. Anna S. Butenko, a practicing architect, said it was like an answer to a dream.." [redacted] she would most to see american architecture and the people...Asked if she would do any shopping,she said "[redacted] OF COURSE, I am also a woman."

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITHT HE NEWS: (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Wednesday, August 20, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EDT

LESUEUR: ... For that story, we switch directly to the United Nations headquarters, Richard C. Hottlett reporting.

HOTTLETT: Droaning, druping debate in the UN General Assembly was punctuated sharply this evening by a dramatic development behind the scenes. The ten delegations of the Arab states met secretly for two hours and unanimously agreed on a way out of the present Middle East deadlock. This agreement is now in the form of a draft resolution which has gone back to the Arab Governments for their approval. The official answer is expected tomorrow and if the resolution is submitted to the General Assembly in the form outlined to us reporters at the UN, it should bring this especial emergency session to a spectacular end. The details have not been published, but they are reliably said to be close to the spirit of the Western resolution. The Arab nations reaffirmed the principle of Arab unity and without condemning any country say they will respect eqch others territorial integrity and independence. The key issue of United Nations action and western withdrawal are dealt with in terms that the West can accept. The Arab states proposed that UN Sec. Gen. Dag Hammarskjold be asked to make the necessary arrangements to make possible the early withdrawal of foreign troops. The Arabs do not ask for withdrawal or set any time limit. If the Arab Governments approve this resolution, which their delegates have unanimously drafted, the whole picture at the United Nations General Assembly will radically change. Right nwo, the Assembly faces a choice between a Soviet and a Western position. The Soviets have concentrated on insisting that Western troops have invaded the Middle East and should be ordered to withdraw at once. The Western proposal known as the Norwegian resolution asks the UN to assure through its continued presence, that withdrawal from the Middle East will not merely leave an explosive vacuum in the area. For days there has been frantic activity behind the scenes with both sides lobbying for votes and 3rd parties - like India, proposing compromises that would have been unacceptable to the West. Then, this afternoon, the Arab states apparently weary of continued tension took things into their own hands and Lebanon, Jordan and Nasser's United Arab Republic agreed on this formula which - if it's carried out would leave the United Nations in the Middle East,and the Cold War there and produce a basic relaxation of tension. While, this agreement was being drafted in a basement conference room, Soviet delegate Andre Gromyko was speaking to the Assembly in his old tones talking about a situation that had ceased to exist. He was apparently taken completely by surprise. But, Sec. of State Dulles was on his way to see Pres. Eisenhower with the knowledge at least that this Arab attempt was being made. The General debate will finish this evening, tomorrow, if agreement comes in from the Arab states, the Arab resolution should be submitted. The Western powers are then expected to drop their own resolution and the Arab proposal - the firstin many years on which these nations have acted in harmony should win by acclamation in an Assembly that was still deadlocked this morning.

This is Richard C. Hottlett at UN headquarters, now back to Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: ... Here is the complete statement as ready by the President.

PRES. EISENHOWER: Because there are still some phases of this case pending in the courts it would not be appropriate for me to express my view on the case itself. This case, however, or any persons agreement or disagreement with its moutcome must nat be confused with the solemn duty that all Americans have to com ply with the final orders of the courts. Nor should we lose sight of the fact that the maintenanceof order to permit compliance with the final orders of the court is the responsibility of each state. Each state owes to its inhabitants, to its sister states and to the union, the obligation to surpress unlawful forces. It cannot by action or deliberate failure to f act permit violence to frustrate the preservation of individual rights as determined by a Court decree. It is my hope that each state will fulfill its own obligation with a full realization k of the gravity of any other course. Defiance of this duty would present the most serious problems. But, there can be no equivocation as to the responsibility of the federal government in such an event. My feelings are exactly as they were ag year ago, and I said then, the very basis of our individual rights and freedoms rests upon the certainty that the President and the Executive branch of government will support and insure the carrying out of the decisions of the federal courts. Every American must understand - that's the end of the quote by the way, every American must understand that if an individual, a community or a state is going successfully and continously to defy the courts, then there is anarchy. I continue to insist that the common sense of the individual and his feeling of civic responsibility must eventually come into gmplay if we are to solve this problem.

LESUEUR: Mr. Eisenhower said that for the present he had nothing further to say.

pt/n/m

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., Aug. 21, 1958

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

At the United Nations, eight days of EMERGENCY debate climaxed tonight by a final vote on an all-Arab proposal... aimed at reducing tension in the Middle East.

For the result of that vote, we switch DIRECT to U.N. headquarters and CBS News correspondent Daniel Schorr.

(Tape runs 3:32
(Ends on cue: "---to Larry Lesueur."

(2)

Today, the atomic scientists, in Geneva, issued a formal communique... announcing their agreement on a "technically feasible" system for policing a ban on nuclear tests. The governments represented at these talks...on the Scientific level...were the United States, Britain, Canada and France on one side and Russia, Poland, Roumania and Czechoslovakia on the other. These experts...in their communique...said they believed there COULD be "a workable and effective control system" for the detection of violations of a possible agreement to ban nuclear tests. Nuclear explosions, they said, could be detected by collecting samples of radio-active debris...by recording seismic, acoustic, and hydro-acoustic waves...and by the radio-signal method. The scientists also suggested the setting up of "a network of control posts...disposed on continents and on islands...and on ships at sea." They said a "few" ships would be required. There was NO specific mention of the feasibility of setting up control stations in Communist China. The scientists...who said the EFFECTIVENESS of these techniques would doubtless improve with the passage of time...have sent complete reports of their seven weeks of study to their respective governments. The full information, they said, will be published later...at a time to be determined by their respective governments. The U.N. secretary general, Dag Hammarskjold, has congratulated these scientists for "making a signal contribution...an effective dent in the hitherto rather intractable problem of disarmament." // The head of the Soviet delegation...at Geneva...issued a statement saying the conference had proved that it is possible to detect all nuclear explosions, "whether deep down in the earth or high up in space." The scientists, he said, had shown "a spirit of mutual cooperation."

→

Still no official announcement by the United States that it is ready to go along with a TEMPORARY suspension of nuclear tests. Informed sources in Washington say that President Eisenhower plans to announce a ONE-YEAR suspension, dating from the time that negotiations begin on an agreement to police a PERMANENT test Prohibition. According to these sources, Mr. Eisenhower may propose that these negotiations start in October or November. // If this is true, Britain might have time to complete ITS series of ~~atomic~~ nuclear tests // -due to start soon. in The Pacific.
Democratic Senator Humphrey said today that he is "under the impression" that the United States is about to announce a one-year suspension of tests.

And another Democratic senator--Jackson of Washington State---said that if this announcement IS made, it would represent a victory of the State Department over the Atomic Energy Commission and the Department of Defense.... which, he said, "apparently opposed a test suspension."

Tonight, Denmark suddenly cancelled the scheduled visit there next week of the U.S. atomic submarine "Skate." Premier Hansen of Denmark said it was the feeling of top scientists in his country that such a visit would entail ~~for Denmark a potential risk.~~ potential danger for Denmark He said, "In case of accident, there would be a risk." He did not specify. ~~The [redacted] altogether clear.~~

A new development in the Little Rock case...making it "almost certain" that when classes resume next month, only white students will be allowed to attend. // What happened today is that the Circuit Court of Appeals granted a stay of its ~~own~~ recent judgment // that integration of Central High School was NOT to be delayed. / The Appeals Court in no way REVERSES its decision. But it DOES say the school board shall be given time to appeal its case to the U.S. Supreme Court. // At the same time, the court DENIED a motion...filed on behalf of the Negro students...asking for immediate execution of the integration order. // The stay was granted for 30 days...with the stipulation that this time can be "stretched-out" until the Supreme Court disposes of the case. How soon the Supreme Court will act is uncertain. // It is now in summer recess, with the new term not due to start until October. // When the Supreme Court DOES convene, the filing of new briefs---petitions and ANSWERS to petitions---COULD delay the final outcome for months. / School Superintendent Virgil Blossom calls the Circuit Court action...granting a stay...."wonderful news". // He says Central High will re-open on September second as an "all-white school"...feels this will provide a "breathing spell," in which things can---in his phrase---

→

"be worked out on an orderly basis." BEFORE the new court action was taken, Governor Faubus told members of the Arkansas state legislature to "stand by" for a possible special session. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People served notice that it will fight the stay order. Thurgood Marshal, chief counsel [redacted] for the N.A.A.C.P., says he will file a motion with the Supreme Court tomorrow. .in an effort to prevent the delay in integration at Central High. He said, "We'll be working through the night."

Virginia's Governor Almond told a news conference today that there will be no "enforced" integration in his state. "If troops are sent into Virginia," he said, "they will patrol empty school houses." Three Virginia communities have been directed by [redacted] Federal Court to end their school segregation policy at the start of the fall term.

— INSERT —

The Senate tonight killed legislation...designed to nullify some recent Supreme Court decisions. The House took similar action yesterday.

A Senate-House conference committee agreed today on a four-year aid to education program.. costing less than 250-million dollars a year. Stripped from the measure was the Senate provision...calling for Federal scholarships to help promising students through college. Instead, students would be assisted on a LOAN basis. The states would receive [redacted] money...on a matching basis.. for equipment used in teaching science and for student guidance.

The House...by a vote of 182 to 159.. KILLED a domestic minerals subsidy bill. The measure called for a copper stockpile...and price supports for lead, fluorspar, tungsten and zinc.

The House, however, DID pass...and send to the White House...legislation granting former Presidents an annual pension of 25-thousand dollars. The bill...before the final vote.. was warmly supported by leaders of both parties.

And the Harris committee announces that it will resume hearings next month, in the Goldfine case. Chairman Harris said other matters involving the F.C.C. and other government regulatory agencies also will be taken up. The hearings [redacted] to last "at least" two weeks.

(7)

The AFL-CIO executive council has ordered Maurice Hutcheson, president of the carpenters union, to answer corruption charges brought against him in the Senate Rackets Committee. Hutcheson was told to appear before the executive council at its October meeting.

Tonight, the Federal Reserve Board authorized the Dallas reserve bank to raise its discount rate to 2 percent...an increase of one-quarter of one percent. The federal reserve bank in San Francisco raised ITS rate to 2 percent just a week ago. ~~Ten other reserve banks...besides these two... are expected to follow suit.~~

The National ~~Industrial~~ Conference Board said today that the cost-of-living in July dipped for the first time in ~~more than~~ two years. ~~The decline, according to the Board, was a slight~~ one-tenth of one percent.

This is Larry Hesselman. I'll be back in a moment with a ~~footnote~~ to the news - First Bill Mauldin

From Brooklyn Navy Yard, they towed the aircraft carrier Enterprise to the scrapheap, to be converted into 20 thousand tons of JUNK.. There were just 15 crewmen aboard the carrier that won 20 out of a possible 22 battlestars in the Pacific, when she made her last voyage, today..

And in Pearl Harbor, six Japanese warships steamed peacefully past the hulk of the battleship Arizona, still flying its flag, as a memorial to the more than a thousand men, who went down with her on [redacted] that "day of infamy", almost 17 years ago..

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Thursday, August 21, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EDT

LESUEUR: For the result of that vote, we switch direct to UN headquarters and CBS News correspondent, Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: The United Nations Assembly has adopted unanimously the 10-nation Arab resolution that dramatically broke the deadlock over the Middle East. The resolution submitted this afternoon after a last minute drafting change by the sponsors was endorsed by 80 of the 81 members. One delegate was not present, the Dominican Republic which has been boycotting thissession. After nine days of debate in this emergency session, itwas a weary Assembly that listened through the final round of speeches waiting impatiently for the vote. It was except for Israel a chorus of praise for the initiative of the 10 Arab countries in drawing up a resolution that broke the deadlock. Speeches full of phrases like historic, momentous and a welcome augury. Israel, alarmed at the growth of Arab power had been considering abstaning from the vote, but last minute instructions from Jerusalem authorized Ambassador Abba Eban to vote in favor in order not to stand alone against the whole United Nations. But, Eban expressed serious reservations about the future of the Arab League and he urged that the principle of non-interference contained in the resolution apply to all in our region - meaning to Israel as well as to Lebanon and Jordan. For the rest, the top delegates joined in weldoming the resolution and congratulating the Arab states. But, there were important differences of emphasis between east and west. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko announced that unless there was early evacuation of American and British forces, he would re-introduce the Russian resolution at the regular Assembly session next month. And, he warned the United States and Britain against delaying their withdrawal under various pretexts as he put it.

Sec. of State Dulles defended our intervention in Lebanon, he said, the failure to send troops when asked would have condemned many small nations to a sense of insecurity. And, while praising the Arab initiative, he warned, that no resolution alone can solve the problems of the Middle East. But, said Dulles, "If the principles of the Arab resolution are put into practice, then, the problems we believe can be solved." The resolution adopted tonight calls on Sec. Gen. Dag Hammarskjold to make arrangements so as to facilitate the original wording was "to make possible," to facilitate early withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon and Jordan. It's now expected that Hammarskjold will make a flying trip to the Middle East possibly next week, to start working on his mission. The resolution calls for him to report back to the Assembly by Sept. 30th.

And, so, except for a final exchange of recriminations over the credentials of the Chinese and Hungarian delegates, this was the windup of this Assembly session. For eight days debate had been centered on two resolutions. A Soviet demand for immediate withdrawal of troops under UN supervision and a Western resolution introduced by Norway and others that Hammarskjold make necessary arrangements to enable the troops to withdraw. Various Asian countries tried to draft compromises but failed to get any substantial support. Finally, two days ago the Arab delegates got together. In effect, on the promise of Nasser's United Arab Republic to respect their sovereignty, Lebanon and Jordan agreed to join in urging the early withdrawal of foreign troops. In essence, the vote was to leave it to Dag, to Dag Hammarskjold that is, since the first day of debate he has not spoken, now the spotlight is on him.

And, now back to Larry Lesueur.

PT/n.m.

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

The United States and Britain proposed a one-year ban on nuclear weapons tests...starting in about two months. The proposal was made to Moscow by President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan in special statements issued simultaneously in Washington and London. The Anglo-American offer is conditional. The test suspension would go in-effect ONLY when the representatives of the United States, Britain and RUSSIA get-together and start negotiating a permanent agreement--an agreement governing not only weapons tests but also "the problem of detonations for peaceful purposes." The negotiations would necessarily deal with the establishment of an international control system--based on the findings of scientists from both sides of the Iron Curtain...who said yesterday that a worldwide system of detecting nuclear explosions is "technically feasible." Mr. Eisenhower said today that the scientists had reached a "most important" conclusion...since progress in the field of disarmament depends on the ability to establish effective controls. AND, he added, on the willingness of countries to accept those controls. The President...and Prime Minister Macmillan...proposed that American, British and Soviet negotiators meet to tackle the problem on the thirty-first of October. (A British note to Moscow suggests that the talks be held, here in New York). The United States and Britain would discontinue their testing for a period of one year, dating from the start of the negotiations. Russia...unilaterally...stopped testing last March. The United States and Britain propose that if at the end of a year, Russia has not resumed its tests, that the test suspension be continued on a year-to-year basis. The question of continuance of the ban would depend on whether an inspection system is working...and on whether satisfactory progress is being made in reaching agreement on "major disarmament questions." Mr. Eisenhower says the suspension of nuclear tests is not...in itself...a measure of disarmament, or even a limitation of ARMAMENTS agreement. The President emphasizes that only if progress is being made toward real disarmament---such as the reduction of fissionable material for weapons purposes---will the United States feel itself bound to extend its suspension of nuclear tests from year to year. It is in this hope of larger agreement, he says, that the United States at this time proposes a a one-year moratorium on WEAPONS tests.

The designation of October 31st. for the start of three-power talks... is significant. It not only allows time for the United States to wind up its current series of Pacific tests--if, indeed, they are not already concluded--but it gives Britain an opportunity to conduct ITS series of tests...which have just gotten under way at Christmas Island in the Pacific. The British Ministry of Supply announces that a nuclear device was exploded high over the island today from a balloon...and that the explosion was a success. The nuclear device was of "low yield"...in the kiloton range...meaning that it was equivalent OF a thousand tons of T.N.T. The announcement of this test came only two hours after a statement from No. 10 Downing Street...serving notice that Britain "WOULD" carry out its experiments at Christmas Island, but that the experiments would be completed "as soon as possible."

France is not abandoning its effort to become an ~~atomic~~ ATOMIC power....and possess nuclear weapons of its own. The French Foreign Ministry says that until there is a general agreement for the controlled elimination of existing "nuclear weapon stocks." France has no choice but to continue its program for ~~the~~ developing AN atomic bomb.

~~The Anglo-American offer to suspend nuclear tests is being generally~~ applauded in Congress. The chairman of the atomic energy committee...Durham of North Carolina...hails the move as a possible first step toward a permanent prohibition of such testing for military purposes. Democratic Senator Jackson says the proposal "lays the groundwork for a test of Soviet good faith. ...in negotiations for a "rascal-proof" system for atomic as well as conventional disarmament." Republican Senator Butler of Maryland said he "didn't like the idea of suspending tests"...felt any agreement ~~made by the Russians would be "only for their own convenience."~~

The Senate today passed a compromise "aid to education" bill...and sent it to the House. The measure authorizes the LENDING of money to NEEDY [redacted] college students, but the federal scholarship provision...requested by the President...is eliminated. Total cost of the program over a four-year period is estimated at around 900-million dollars.

The House passed a bill today...that would apply the government's loyalty-security program temporarily to ALL federal employes...including those in non-sensitive jobs. Passage was by a voice vote, and the measure now goes to the Senate.

(2)

The House also approved a six-billion-dollar money bill, after rewriting it in a form more to the liking of the President. Mr. Eisenhower vetoed the measure the first time around, because it carried nearly 600-million dollars for the Civil Service retirement fund. The President said the fund already had all the money it needed. As passed today, the legislation provides 5-billion, 990 million dollars for operating 17 independent government agencies---MINUS the retirement fund money which caused the President to exercise his veto power.

Mr. Eisenhower signed the 39 and a half billion-dollar defense appropriation bill tonight...despite his dislike for some of its features. Congress, he said, not only gave him a billion dollars MORE than he believes necessary...but imposed certain restrictions which he feels will result in a waste of both money and resources.

The cost-of-living in July set a new record high. Government figures... released today...show that the consumer price index rose LAST MONTH BY two-tenths of one percent. The cost-of-living has now risen 21 times in the past 23 months, and the government predicts little change in this trend in the months immediately ahead. New fall clothing and new-model cars are expected to cost more. And, of course, the new higher cost of mailing letters will be reckoned into the August consumer price index...to be announced in September.

In the Little Rock case, attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have made their appeal to the Supreme Court. Legal papers were filed...asking Justice Charles E. Whittaker of the Supreme Court to vacate the stay...granted yesterday BY of the Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. Under the stay, integration of Central High School would be delayed until the Little Rock School Board takes "ITS" case to the Supreme Court. Judge Whittaker said in Denver today that the question of a stay CAN be ruled on by a single justice of the Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, registration for attendance at Central High got underway in Little Rock today on an "all-white" basis...although the seven Negro students →

MAY try to register next week.

A sports note: It's reported that the Washington baseball club will soon ask the American League for permission to move to Minneapolis. According to United Press International, the Senators may make their bid in the next few days.../.or, during the World Series.

At a news conference today...at U.N. headquarters... Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold announced that he will depart on his peace mission to the Middle East next Monday. He said he would go first to Jordan...and later to the United Arab Republic, to Lebanon and Iraq.

well

Victory in the U.N. settlement of the Middle East crisis has been PND-claimed by practically all t[redacted] SIDES concerned in the crisis, with the notable exceptions of Soviet Russia and Isreal...

The arab states found unity for the first time in their existence, // [redacted] Not only because they were offered a form of economic unity by President Eisenhower's Middle East D[redacted] ECONOMIC Program, but because they joined hands on a common ~~enmity~~ POLITICAL for Isreal...

As for Soviet Russia, ~~[redacted]~~ Its considerable hopes ~~[redacted]~~ were dashed that a U.N. ORDERED call for the withdrawal of the anglo-american troops, // would hand us a resounding diplomatic defeat...And more than that, to the [redacted] intense satisfaction of the United States and Britain, The Soviet Union was left isolated at the [redacted] end of yesterday's U.N. assembly session..

Despite ~~[redacted]~~ her constant protestations of being the Arab's only protectors, Russia was rebuffed by the Arab states themselves...A blow that may have political repercussions for ~~[redacted]~~ The SOVIET UNION among other [redacted] small nations, in the future..

[redacted] none of the world's diplomats gave voice to another conclusion // although many talked about it in private. Namely, that the United States and Britain had successfully called Russia's military bluff in the Middle East...//

And Russia had failed to respond...except FOR Moscow's now familiar language that she CANNOT "remain "indifferent" to events on her southern frontiers.// and her usual saber-rattling maneuvers along the frontiers of Iran and Turkey..

During the Suez-crisis two years ago, the Arabs had rejoiced in Russia's threats that she would go to war for them...They found less satisfaction in Russia's actual performance this time..

That is not to say that Foreign Minister Gromyko didn't harshly warn that that He would pursue the question of anglo-american troop withdrawal at the next regular U.N. Assembly in mid-septembe r... But there is good reason to think that the American troops, at least, will be withdrawn before President Chamoun's term of office expires in Lebanon on September 23rd.. And a strong probability that By that time

Dag Hammarshuld will have appointed either a U.N commissioner for Jordon, or a substantial group of observers to take over from the British Forces protecting King Hussein..

The representatives of the Soviet Union didn't even bother to put a cheerful face on their dramatic rebuff by the Arabs...Foreign Minister Gromyko was obviously miffed as he voted in favor of the All-Arab PEACE PLAN.

Just how much of his ambitions President Nasser gave up to achieve this show of Arab unity, only the future will reveal...The unanimously passed resolution which Egypt's Foreign Minister Fawzi helped to frame pledges All the Arab states " to abstain from any action calculated to change established systems of government". [redacted] Few Western diplomats [redacted] really believe [redacted] Nasser has abandoned his well-publicized goals of leadership over the whole Arab world from the Atlantic to the [redacted] Persian Gulf..

But they think he does want time to consolidate his gains, especially in Iraq... And they hope that by giving Dag Hammarshuld the power [redacted] to recommend prattically anything he wants, that the U.N. Secretary General can maintain ~~a~~ TIGHT check-rein on Nasser---through HIS U.N. observers and the power of world opinion. .For Hammarshuld always retains the power to report back to the U.N. and ask it to take appropriate steps..

But every victory contains the seeds of defeat, and every defeat, the seeds of victory...Although Soviet Russia's paternal protection of the Arabs states may have been rejected this time...It goes without saying, that the Arabs will again resort to it, to play the Middle East off between Russia and the West...

President Nasser may have given up some immediate GOALS [redacted], in return for a period of consolidation.//.He may have agreed to let Hussein keep the throne of Jordon...But what the Arabs have really won, is recognition from the West that they constitute a regional unity./. in which the Arab states are no longer divided by the anti-communist Bagdad Pact, which prevented them from [redacted] bargaining as a [redacted] unit between Russia and the West...

The United States and Britain have replaced their own crumbling Middle East influence with that of Dag Hammarshuld's United Nations.. And President Eisenhower's Middle East [redacted] economic program has been grasped by the Arabs, at least to breathe new life into the almost DEFUNCT Arab League...

Its a certainty that President Nasser will now control the Arab League..and with it, the future destiny of Jordon, while frightened Saudi Arabia moves deeper into his camp...

With Western political influence now moving out of oil-rich Arabia [redacted] Isreal will be surrounded by enemies on all sides//.Her confidence in [redacted] Dag Hammarshuld is not so firm as Nasser's//.And as our Isreali [redacted] correspondent says..she thinks the West is abdicating FROM the Middle East and will live to regret it... This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news--first Bill Martin.

Well there's nothing like finding out...That's what General Leslie Wieler, governor of the Tower of London thought today, when he set off the burglar alarm GUARDING the 50 million dollars worth of British crown jewels..

A recorded voice resounded in Scotland Yard. "Intruders," it said, have entered the jewel house, tower of London."

Detectives and London bobbies streamed to the tower, on foot, by car, and by motor-launch. THANK-GOD "Thank you," said General Wieler, that the alarm works splendidly. Scotland Yard doesn't share his joy. wants an investigation.

This is Larry LeSueur---Good nite..

Lesueur for Murrow Mon., Aug. 25, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The Supreme Court agreed to meet in extraordinary session to consider whether Negro students should be allowed to enter Little Rock Central High School, when it re-opens next month. A quick ruling is indicated. Central High will open its doors in eight days. // Chief Justice Warren...acting on the appeal of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People...has summoned the entire court to convene on Thursday of this week. A special session of the Arkansas State Legislature has been called for tomorrow. Governor Faubus says he will ask the legislature to postpone the opening of the school for a week. He may also ask the legislature to make it possible for him to close Central High School by proclamation, if that be necessary to prevent integration. One of the possible bills being considered is that no person shall be denied the "right" to receive an education, because of his refusal to attend a class with a member of another race. This, presumably, would mean no integrated classes but separate classes for Negroes and whites in Little Rock -

→

The U.S. Attorney General...William Rogers...said tonight that the United States "cannot fall short of the mark in its race relations, IF it is to maintain its influence abroad. Mr. Rogers was speaking before the National Bar Association meeting in Los Angeles.

Chinese Communist guns have shelled Nationalist-held Quemoy Island on the coast of Red China for the fourth straight day. Sixty-eight rounds fired in this new bombardment...in contrast to the massive week-end barrage in which an estimated 80-thousand shells pounded Quemoy and Little Quemoy, the much smaller [redacted] island nearby. The Nationalists claim two Migs shot-down over Quemoy last night...in a dogfight lasting eight minutes.

The Defense Department has alerted the 7th Fleet and other American units in the Far East to take "precautionary" defense measures." And tonight eight ships of the 7th Fleet...visiting Singapore...got orders to leave port. Preparations REPORTEDLY are being made for joint maneuvers with Nationalist warships off Southern Formosa next week.

In Peiping, Chinese Communist papers ARE accusing American warships of "provocations". IN the words of one Communist editorial, "It is our sacred duty to liberate the islands. The Chinese people will not be bullied by the 7th Fleet."

Secretary of State Dulles said...over the week-end...that a Communist invasion of the Quemoy and Matsu islands would "constitute a threat to the peace of the area"...that it would be "hazardous to assume" that an attempt to conquer the islands could be a LIMITED operation. Today, two members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee--Democrat Zablocki of Wisconsin and Republican Judd of Minnesota--supported the stand taken by Mr. Dulles. But Oregon's Democratic Senator Wayne Morse criticized Dulles vigorously...accused him of being guilty of "sematics and deceit". Mr. Dulles, he said, KNOWS Congress has repeatedly been advised by Pentagon officials that Quemoy and Matsu are NOT essential to Formosa's defense.

White House News Secretary Hagerty said today...in answer to a reporter's question..."that, of course, the United States is watching the Far East situation "very closely". President Eisenhower conferred this morning with General Nathan Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The President and General Twining have been HOLDING such meetings every two weeks.

With Congress adjourned, Mr. and Mrs. Eisenhower "hope" to get away from Washington this Thursday or Friday for a Rhode Island vacation. The President plans (as last year) to have his vacation office at the U.S. Naval Base on Coaster Harbor Island, near Newport. But the Eisenhowers will have their living quarters at Port Adams, across the harbor from the naval bases and only two minutes from a golf course. He will make the trip back and forth on the 90-foot presidential yacht, Barbara Anne. Hagerty emphasized that [redacted] all this is "conditional", depending on [redacted] domestic and international developments.

The Atomic Energy Commission announces that the United States has completed its series of nuclear tests at Johnston Island...in the Pacific. Says the tests "contributed to further development of weapons for the defense of the United States and the free world." The statement refers ONLY to the tests at Johnston Island. The conclusion of experiments at Eniwetok has NOT been announced.

[redacted]

A hero's welcome in New York Harbor for the crew of the submarine Nautilus, back from her atomic-powered voyage under the North Pole. // Even in her crossing from England she had set a precedent. // making the Atlantic trip submerged in a record six and a half days. The Nautilus paused briefly on her way into the harbor to pick up President Eisenhower's personal representative, Rear Admiral Hyman Rickover...who, more than any other, was responsible for her creation. || Its 116-man crew stood at attention as Rickover was piped aboard. // to be welcomed by the skipper, Commander William Anderson. || And then the mighty submarine moved up the North River to the noisy accompaniment of whistles from a dozen ocean liners, the spray of city fireboats, and police helicopters circling overhead. [redacted] All in a heavy downpour, with the windows of Manhattan's downtown skyscrapers filled with admiring office workers. // .but only a scant 300 persons huddled under umbrellas at the battery to see her pass. At 42nd street, the Nautilus turned and retraced her course--// --back to the Navy yard in Brooklyn. Most of the crew had the rest of the day free, especially those with families they had not seen since last April. / On Wednesday, New York City gives them all the traditional ticker-tape parade.

In Lebanon today, rebel leaders demanded representation in the new government to be formed by President-elect ~~Fuad~~ FUAD Chehab. The demand was drawn-up at a meeting of some 30 rebel chieftains, held in the Moslem quarter of Beirut. //

U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold leaves New York tonight...on A two-week "peace mission" to the Middle East. // Beirut will be his first stop.

In metropolitan France, the most serious outbreak of sabotage since the start of the Algerian revolt. // with rebel terrorists' setting fire to oil storage tanks in Marseilles, Toulouse and Arbonne. // Tonight in Marseilles, a tank... ignited earlier in the day...exploded. [redacted] And other oil storage tanks in the area are a SEA of flame. (IT NOW APPEARS THAT NO ONE DIED IN THIS INCIDENT. BUT THREE GENDARMES WERE killed in Paris, where the underground struck with fire-bombs. / And another policemen slain near Paris, // during an attempt to blow up an ammunition plant. // Not all the casualties are on one side. Police killed at least four saboteurs in the course of these incidents, which MAY be related to Premier DeGaulle's African trip. // ~~DeGaulle is trying to win support for his new constitution, due to be voted on next month. There's speculation that the violence was timed to hurt his campaign.~~

In New York politics, the Republicans and Democrats are holding state conventions. No doubt about the nominees for governor---the Republican ~~choice~~ Nelson Rockefeller and, FOR the Democrats ~~the Democratic~~ incumbent Averill Harriman--both due to be nominated by acclamation tonight.

~~The candidates for U.S. Senate uncertain in both parties....~~ with the Republicans REPORTEDLY leaning toward Representative Kenneth B. Keating, and the Democrats turning to New York's Mayor Wagner, ~~although Wagner~~ Former AG Lefkowitz is still very much in the race. ~~indicated he does not want to run.~~

Well

Even if Red China is bluffing in the Formosa strait, one thing is certain... The Chinese COMMUNISTS WANT a bigger voice in the affairs of Asia, and Soviet Russia is going to help They get it..

There's no doubt now, that these dangerous thrusts in the direction of the nationalist-held off-shore islands, are a direct outcome of the recent four days of talks between Premier Kruschev and Mao Tse Dung, talks made in the presence of their top military advisors..//

The massiveness of the bombardment of the Quemoy group of islands, is almost unprecendented. Except perhaps for certain 24-hour periods in world war one, when both sides hurled fantastic numbers of shells at each other...But it appears likely that the 80 thousand shells poured into BIG AND LITTLE QUEMOY over the weekend, was the greatest massing of artillery by ONE side, in the grim and bloody history of warfare..

It is noteworthy that the Nationalist's have not responded in Kind, although they are not short of ammunition. Presumably they have been cautioned by the United States, not to be drawn into what has every appearance of being a test of American intentions..

Not to mention the fact that its military common-sense to save your gun-powder until the potential invader presents a massed target..

There are as yet no signs, that the Chinese communists have massed the number of men or invasion craft necessary for an all-out assault on Formosa...In fact, recently available intelligence, indicates the opposite is true... But its manifest that the communists have now emplaced enough guns on the mainland, to keep everybody's heads-down on the offshore islands..

Still, despite the massiveness of the communist artillery assault in these past four days, the red chinese activities thus far bear all the ear-marks of what military men call a "reconnaissance in force". an attempt to find-out what the enemy has, and what he intends to do with it..

The United States is doing its best to keep the chinese communists in the dark, regarding OUR intentions, if the off-shore islands should be invaded... and Red China runs the risk of all-out war, if this country decides to become involved..

But only recently, this country pulled-off a calculated risk in the Middle East..And the Chinese military may now be thinking along similar lines..

During those weeks when the U.S. Mediterranean fleet was patrolling off Lebanon, the State Department called in certain, friendly Middle East diplomats and asked for their educated guess as to what Russia would do if we intervened.. The consensus was that the Russian's would do nothing---except protest..that they were too involved with problems at home and in Eastern Europe..At any rate, Russia's interest in the Middle East had waned perceptibly in the months before our Lebanese intervention. So.The United States took the calculated risk, and finally got enough troops into Lebanon so that they couldn't be over-run, by anything short of full-scale war..The reinforced division now in Lebanon can hold off almost anything, until reinforcements arrived from the american mainland..

[redacted]

Altho its comparatively quiet now in the Middle East, both Britain and the United States are still deeply entangled there.. And this fact, naturally, did not escape the attention of Kruschyev and Mao-tse-Dung when they met with their military men in Bayping..

It's true that The U.N. Middle East settlement came with dramatic suddeness, perhaps sooner than the Russian had counted upon..But we still have our troops there, and they'll probably remain until sometime near that magic date of September 23rd.

when pro-american Chamoun goes out...and the new President of Lebanon goes IN---with a probably call for our withdrawal..

The Chinese communists must be figuring they have up to about four weeks, to take their own calculated risks..risks that may serve to mark them as the major power in Asia, whether they're in the U.N. or not...With the U.S. [redacted] and Britain involved in their major foreign interest-The Middle EAST Oil [redacted]t...China MAY ACT at the expense of her major Asian rivals..Japan and India...

A calculated Red Chinese risk NOW if she can pull it off.. might go a long way to ensure that she'll be invited to any future summit conference..

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News... First a word from/. Bill Mauldin

Admiral Hyman Rickover, who surmounted a Navy SNUB [redacted],

TO BECOME [redacted] the President's special representative to greet the Nautilus, got his greatest tribute today from the submarine's crew..

The men gathered in the wardroom of the atomic sub, and negro steward

Walter Harvey of Pascagoula Mississippi presented Rickover with a priceless trophy../..a chunk of ice on a silver tray..

[redacted] We were all sorry you couldn't be along," Said Harvey, so we brought BACK TO YOU - a piece of the Polar ice-cap, [redacted]."

"Thanks" said Rickover solemnly--//-But must I swallow it?"

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

(1)

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Governer FAWBUS went before a special session of the Arkansas legislature. AND asked it to save the public schools of Arkansas from integration not of ITS choosing. For a direct report on the Faubus speech, we switch to Little Rock and CBS Newsman Neal Strawser.

(Tape runs 3:30
Ends on cue: "--to CBS News inNY."

The U.S. Supreme Court convenes on Thursday.

(9)

An estimated 40-thousand voters...going to the polls in Alaska to say whether they want their territory to become the 49th state. Because of the remoteness of some polling places above the Arctic Circle, the final vote may not be tabulated for a week. But statehood is expected to be APPROVED, by a margin of at LEAST 2-to-1.

In Mississippi today, a Democratic primary...with Senator Stennis unopposed for re-nomination.

And here in New York State, the Republican and Democratic parties in convention...choosing their nominees for the U.S. Senate, after nominating the gubernatorial candidates last night. For the governor's race, the Democrats picked ~~[illegible]~~ incumbent Averell Harriman, the Republicans Nelson Rockefeller. At the REPUBLICAN state convention today, Representative Keating agreed to accept the senatorial nomination, after receiving a personal call from Vice President Nixon. Keating had wanted to stay in the House of Representatives, where he is the ranking Republican on the powerful ~~[illegible]~~ Judiciary Committee. But after Mr. Nixon called...and said President Eisenhower would like to see him run for the Senate...Keating agreed to make the race. He was promptly nominated, (BY ACCLAMATION.) On the Democratic side,

(3)

New York City's
Who will run for the Senate? Mayor Wagner the big question remains: [redacted] appears---by a strong statement---to have eliminated himself from a possible
[redacted]
draft. Six other Democrats...including onetime Air Force secretary
A.E.C. MEMBER THOMAS E. Murray
Thomas Finletter and former p[redacted]y...are SEEKING the nomination.

The Republican National Committee opened a two-day meeting in Chicago today, to map strategy for the 1958 political campaign. Chairman Meade Alcorn said Republican leaders are preparing for victory, // not defeat...predicted "the greatest upset since Harry Truman stumped the experts in 1948." // Spencer Olin, chairman of the G.O.P. finance committee, said a sort of "brain-washing" operation is going on, to the effect that the Republican Party "doesn't have a chance to win control of Congress." He called this an "insidious" campaign of indoctrination, waged by Democrats. // The "truth," he said, is that "we have all the elements of victory."

(4)

Chairman Butler...of the DEMOCRATIC National Committee...issued a statement today, blaming the opposition of business groups like the N.A.M. AND the Administration for the failure of Congress to pass the Kennedy-Ives labor reform bill. // President Meany of the AFL-CIO made the same charge in a separate statement...said his organization did not approve EVERYTHING in the bill, but that it WOULD have helped unions "eradicate the last vestiges of corruption from the labor movement." Meany called on Congress to give the legislation "top priority" next year.

The Senate Rackets Committee investigators charged today that a teamsters union vice president "bought control" of a St. Louis local for 78-thousand dollars in 1949. The union vice president was identified as Harold Gibbons...and DESCRIBED as "an apparent associate of underworld characters." A former executive officer of the local, Lawrence Camie, DENIED that the local was "sold" to Gibbons. // said the money was paid him--Camie--and other officers in a "salary" settlement.

The Board of Monitors...appointed to "keep watch" on the Teamsters Union... has asked President James Hoffa to explain,..within 48 hours...what he had in mind last week...when he appointed his own "anti-racketeering commission." Hoffa named the three-man commission to look into charges brought against him in the Senate Rackets Committee. The three were former Senator Bender of Ohio; Joseph Donohue, former president of the District of Columbia board of commissioners, and Ira W. Jayne, a retired Detroit judge.

→

(5)

(6)

Today, Premier DeGaulle reached Dakar...on his barn-storming tour of French Africa. And he ran into his COOLEST reception ~~so far~~ THUS. DeGaulle is trying to win support for his new constitution, due to be voted on next month. While speaking today in Dakar...on the west coast of Africa... a group of students tried to shout him down. But later in his speech, when he said "those who want independence have only to take it," he was CHEERED.

In France itself, special security precautions are being taken... following the most serious outbreak of sabotage since the start of the Algerian revolt. All police leaves have been cancelled in Paris, and the government MAY move to have the terrorists who are seized tried by military, instead of civil courts. It's estimated that 4-million gallons of gasoline went up in ~~smoke~~...in fires set yesterday in Southern France. An Algerian rebel source in Cairo claims that this loss will have "a practical and evident effect" on the situation in Algeria in the next few days.

(7)

Dispatches from Moscow../.passed by the Soviet censor../.quote diplomatic sources as predicting /that Russia will ACCEPT President Eisenhower's proposal for/a suspension of nuclear/weapons tests. These sources feel, however, /that the Kremlin will attach conditions.// ~~For example, it may ask for the suspension of ALL tests.// Mr. Eisenhower had suggested that nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes,// such as harbor excavations--~~ ~~be [illegible] from any test [illegible].~~

(Brumley)

The latest Weather Bureau /advisory /places Hurricane Daisy /200 miles off Cape Canaveral, Florida.../.drifting north at about /4/ miles an hour. Its highest winds ~~are~~ now estimated at 85 miles an hour. The Weather Bureau says: "Hurricane Daisy is expected to ~~[illegible]~~ move north at a very slow rate during the next 12 hours, /with a slow increase in forward speed /thereafter. All interests /in coastal areas of Georgia and the Carolinas should keep in touch /with all future advisories /for the next one or two days." Swells from the storm /will cause /rough seas /close to shore.

weeks

With the massed artillery of communist china beating a drum-fire on the offshore island of Kimmoy, the fears of Far Eastern Diplomats in this country, come as something of a paradox...They suspect that the greatest danger to Chiang Kai Shek's Formosa, is that of "indirect aggression."

They believe that one of the results of the political and military talks between Premier Krushchev, AND MAO TSE DUNG held when we got ourselves involved in the Middle-East, was an agreement that communist China should go after a limited military objective...Not in the hopes of getting into the United Nations, since YOU CAN'T shoot your way into a Peace organization, but to further Communist China's self-interests, while at the same time ensuring her an invitation to any future summit conference..

The artillery preparation for what may be an invasion of the off-shore islands of the Formosa strait, comes at a time of Bayping's own CHOOSING..When this country, the protector of Nationalist China, is militarily and politically entabgled in the Middle-East, as well as HAVING larges forces tied-down in West Germany and Korea..

The United States is bound by treaty to help defend Formosa, if the communists try to invade across the hundred miles of open sea that separate it from the mainland. But there's no specific American committment to defend Matsu and Kimmoy. Secretary Dulles is trying HARD to keep the communists guessing as to our intentions. While Senator Morse loudly insists that the Pentagon has already told congressmen [redacted] that Matsu and Kimmoy are not eseential to the defense of Formosa..

But the plainest fact is, that the Red Chinese can batter Kimmoy with 80 thousand shells in a week-end. And no ship of the [redacted] Seventh, or any other fleet could survive in those narrow waters... [redacted] even tactical air bombardment might find it impossible to silence all the communist batteries that have been POUNDING Kimmoy [redacted] for the past eight years.. The communists have had plenty of time to emplace their guns in solid concrete... It's likely that nothing could [redacted] short of atom bombs [redacted] knock them out.

The United States and Britain acted in their mutual self-interest in the Middle-East. But WE PART COMPANY POLITICALLY [redacted] over Nationalist China... [redacted] Britain could hardly be expected to help us defend Kimmoy and Matsu. So If we decide to defend them, we face the prospect of going it alone..

As for the Chinese Nationalists, their objections to giving up the off-shore islands, are probably more political than military... They abandoned the Dachen islands after heavy communist air bombardment in 1955. But Kimmoy has become a symbol of [redacted] resistance to Communism. and the loss or abandonment of its 50 thousand people, might well demoralize the Nationalist Forces..//

[redacted] who can forget the suddeness of the Bagdad coup, after Syria joined the Nasser Camp.? Certainly, Chiang Kai Shek [redacted] CAN'T FORGET IT!.

This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news.. First

Thirty years ago tomorrow.. fifteen nations meeting in Paris, signed the Kellogg-Briand Pact, outlawing War. [redacted] arbitration to [redacted] disputes..//

The treaty culminated long negotiations between the U.S. Secretary of State, Frank Kellogg, and France's Aristide Briand...So hungry was the world for peace after world war one, that 62 nations, including the United States, ratified the [redacted] anti-war pact the [redacted] year.. Following

The first hostilities broke out two years later when Japan overran Manchuria. And six years later Hitler denounced the Versailles Treaty, began [redacted] and [redacted].

This is Larry LeSueur----Good Nite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, August 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EDT

STRAWSER: Matters appear to be rushing headlong toward a showdown between Federal and State power here in Arkansas, to head off any new integration order which may come from the Supreme Court, Gov. Faubus today laid before a special session of the Legislature his own anti-integration package. It may become State law within the next two days and almost certainly will result in the closing of Little Rock Central High school if the Court orders integration resumed there. Then, may come a new showdown test between Federal Courts and State law. Faubus laid down the gauntlet today before the shouting applauding legislature. Faubus condemned what he called the unseemly haste in pushing for integration. He said "Arkansas does not have integration in some areas - which will continue, but he condemned the district and court of appeals orders for integration in Little Rock on grounds that the principle of integration he said, "was being put beyond all other considerations."

FAUBUS: It matters not how the bad the conditions that may exist, it matters not if 100 ~~hungry~~ people are slain in the streets or the corridors of a schoo; it matters not how great the destruction of property; it matters not whether the parents know that their children may return home grieviously wounded because of disorders, or ~~x~~ whether they may return at all. Integration is paramount to these considerations. Gentlemen, to these extreme views, I cannot subscribe. (Applause)

STRAWSER: Faubus then spelled out a six point program which would allow him to close Central High School or any other school if violence threatens or if the government attempts to force integration there with troops. Within 30 days the voters of the school district would vote for or against integration. But, according to the wording of the Bill submitted following his speech, the voters would vote on whether all schools in the district would be integrated not just for instance whether Central High would be integrated. The continued closing of Central High would be almost a certainty in that case and under Faubus' measures state funds would then finance transfers to other schools for the students. Such measures in some formor other are standard in many southern states. And these, or anyother set may soon bring a Supreme Court ruling. Faubus's program looks beyond the possible adverse Supreme Court, ruling, however, with a bill which contains these innocuous sounding words.

FAUBUS: Also a measure ~~this~~ which provides that no student shall ever be denied the right to enroll (indistinct) and receive instruction in any course in any public school in the state by reason of his or her refusal to attend classes with a student of another or different race.

STRASWER: This measure, as ~~p~~ explained to this reporter, would allow whites to attend segregated classes if they chose even if negros shared the hallways of the school by court order. It may cause still more litigation and another test of state vs federal rights. Both Houses of the Arkansas Legislature have already pushed these anti-integration bills through their first and 2nd readings today and fast passage is expected. Since the legislators hold out almost no hope that the SUpreme Court will allow Federal Judge Lemley's 2½ year cooling off period to stand. Still, school officials dutifully went off to Washington today to argue for this stay. After turning down under that Lemley decision, the applications of three more negros to attend white schools.

Back now to CBS News in New York.

PT/n.m.

Good evening, everyone.. Here's what happened today:

The Arkansas legislature gave Governor Faubus power to close any public school in the state, rather than submit to forcible integration. This was the KEY measure among six, passed by the State Senate and House in rapid order, to keep integration from being resumed at Central High School next month. The school-closing measure was approved by the Senate UNANIMOUSLY. In the lower chamber, there was ONE dissenting vote.... cast by Ray Smith, representative from Hot Springs. Mr. Smith said in his opinion the authority of local school districts was being abrogated and turned over to the governor. The bill DOES allow a majority of qualified voters..where the governor closes a school..to pass on the action within 30 days. The choice, in case of such a vote, is between keeping the school closed or re-opening it to integration. Another measure...passed today...would allow school-aid money provided by the state to be transferred from closed schools to schools that are open. There is also provision...should it become necessary...for segregation of classes within an integrated school. That is, for Negro and white students to attend the same school but in different classrooms. // The whole legislative "package" is expected to be ready for Governor Faubus' signature tomorrow. So that ~~when~~ WHEN the Supreme Court meets in special session tp consider the Little Rock crisis the anti-segregation statutes ~~which~~ MAY have become state law.

→

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that there will be no "great divergence" between his views in the Little Rock case...and the view reflected in the brief to be filed at tomorrow's Supreme Court session by the Justice Department. // A reporter...at the news conference...asked Mr. Eisenhower about an article in the current issue of Newsweek Magazine. The article quotes the President as telling friends that he...personally...wished the Supreme Court had never handed down its decision in 1954, erable quantities of [illegible] rencies, currencies that can not be used in international trade.

→

Now, it is possible, if we can help out through an association such as this, by getting these soft currencies and, possibly, a small amount of hard money, that loans that otherwise would be impossible to make, but which have a very worthy project, would have a very beneficial effect, why, they could take place.

So, this new international development association is the name, and it is only in the study period, as my letter made very clear, we are studying it to see what can be done, but it would have no effect whatsoever on the other groupments.

4 MRS. MAY CRAIG of The Press Herald, Portland, Me.—As you know, Mr. President, the Congress is so hostile to any discussion of a possible surrender by the United States in a nuclear war, they forbade spending any military money for study of it. In your opinion, can the United States be defeated in an all-out first-blow nuclear war, and is it your position that we must take the first blow?

A.—Well, you say we must take the first blow. Wars have a way of coming about in circumstances that have not been foreseen by humans. For example, the Pearl Harbor attack is a case in point. Of all the places in the Pacific that apparently the planners and the political leaders thought might be attacked, that was probably the last one.

Now, I dont see any reason, therefore, for saying we necessarily have to take the first blow, but I do say this, always, we must be alert, and I think it is silly to say that we can be defeated in a first-blow attack, for the simple reason that we have so much strength, retaliatory strength, that any nation foolish to resort to the kind of an effort, that is, the exchange of nuclear attacks, it would itself be destroyed. There is no question in my mind.

5 CHARLES W. ROBERTS, Newsweek—Sir, do you feel that the record of the Democratic-controlled Eighty-fifth Congress will be a help or a hindrance to your party this fall, and what do you think the outcome of the elections will be this fall? [Laughter].

A.—It was one that I didn't, of course, I expected, but I didn't hope for. [Laughter]. Actually, there are still 200 pieces of legislation, many of them rushed through in the last hours of Congress, that I have not yet had a chance to examine. Quite manifestly, I couldn't go over the record of this Congress.

I would say, though, generally, in the foreign field, it did a constructive job. My largest, my greatest disappointment was in the amount in which they cut down my estimates for the mutual se[illegible] of the free world; and moy and Matsu have been considerably beefed up. Some people are reading Secretary Dulles' statement of last Saturday as indicating that this means we consider the islands more important than ever to the defense of Formosa itself. Would you comment on that?

A.—Well, they have this increased importance: what we call the Chinese, the Nationalist Chinese, have now deployed about a third of their forces to certain of these islands west of the Pescadores, and that makes a closer interlocking between the defense systems of the islands with Formosa than was the case before that. Before that, I think, they were largely thought of as outposts, strongly held but outpost positions, but, nevertheless, outposts. Now, apparently the thing, the philosophy is that to hold the whole thing it is part of the territory from which they hope to make their living, so there is a closer relationship than there was before.

Q.—Does that affect, sir, your judgment or any judgment that you might have to make under the Formosa resolution? A.—Mr. Roberts, you simply cannot make military decisions until after the event reaches you. Now, it might affect it if, under a whole series of circumstances — but there are all sorts of permeations and combinations of these factors, and I would say you couldn't make any arbitrary answer to that.

7 FELIX BELAIR of The New York Times—Could you tell us, Mr. President, what is the area of discretion of local commanders in the use of tactical atomic weapons, if they have any discretion? A.—No, I think not. I think that there can be no atomic—that there are, it is promising to leave town. [laughter]. Do you think, sir, that such a move would be justified under the circumstances?

A.—I would like to answer with one "if." If the National, I mean if the Nationals here, the American League club here, would have a club that had a fighting chance, on the average, of getting into the first division, I, for one, would be down at a good number of their evening games to see them, and I would be one of their customers. Now, unfortunately, because of my present position, I am not a paying customer [laughter] and, therefore, I can't help keep this club here. But if we could only have that, I am practically certain this city would demand that they stay here, and I think they should. But I think they should have a little bit better club. [laughter].

9 DAVE BURNHAM of the Lincoln Journal—Mr. President, I notice Secretary Benson is taking a very active part in the, or perhaps a more active part than any high Government official, in the Congressional campaign this fall. In your mind, is he the kind of man you would like to see in one of the top places in the 1960 race? [laughter].

A.—The men that are going to be in the top places are going to be selected by a convention. Now, I can give you a whole list of men who, in my opinion, are capable of carrying very heavy responsibilities, and in line with the great middle-of-the-road philosophy that I believe is logical for this country, particularly for the Republican party, and so any of those men, if selected by the convention, would have my support.

10 RAY L. SCHERER of the National Broadcasting Company—Mr. President, News Conference in Brief

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—President Eisenhower made the following main points at his news conference today:

School Integration—He hints desire for a "slower" approach to integration of the races in public schools, but has never said, even privately, that it might have been better had not the Supreme Court given its opinion ending segregation. He also thinks it would be "terrible" if schools were closed in attempts to circumvent integration. [Questions 1, 10, 14, 20, 21 and 23, this page.]

National Defense—Any "gap" or deficiency in guided missile development is amply compensated by long-range bombers. Thus, it is silly to talk about the possibility of a United States defeat by the first blow in an all-out nuclear war because any nation attempting it would itself be destroyed by American retaliatory strength. [Questions 4, 7 and 25.]

Quemoy and Matsu Islands—These defensive outposts of Formosa have assumed increased importance in the context of the United States pledge to defend the Chinese Nationalists, because about a third of the Formosan defense force has been deployed in the islands. There is thus a closer relationship between the outpost islands and the American pledge to help protect Formosa. [Questions 6 and 12.].

Foreign Policy—He would be happy to join in an understanding with the Soviet Union barring intervention in each other's internal affairs if it were possible to agree on [illegible] affairs. However, in connection the slaughter bill? [Laughter

A.—Well, someone told me was going to be up before m in a day or two. I haven got all the recommendation
Q.—Midnight tonight is th deadline. A.—What's that
Q.—Midnight tonight is th deadline. A.—Midnight to night? Well, then I have t work this afternoon, don't I

12 JOHN SCALI of The As sociated Press—To re turn to the Far East for moment, Sir, how seriously d you view the stepped-up Chi nese Communist artillery at tacks in the Quemoy area along with the air bombard ment and, secondly, do yo see any danger at this time that American forces migh get involved, in keeping with our desire to help protect For mosa and the Pescadores?

A.—Well, again, you talk t a certain extent in hypotheti terms. Quite naturally we are supporting the Nation alist regime, and we still rec ognize it and, as a matter o fact, it is still a member o the Security Council in the United Nations. So we are not going to desert our re sponsibilities or the state ments we have already made and I think that about the best thing that can be said at this moment is the Secretary's letter of about a week ago or something of that kind.

13 ALVIN SPIVAK of United Press Internation al—Mr. President, is there any one key point that you believe Republican candidates for Congress could stress, in their campaigns for election this year? A.—Well, I will tell you what I am going to stress, if that is enough or good enough: Getting down these deficits and keeping our money sound so that America can have a good, healthy, thriving, progressive economy.

14 THOMAS V. KELLY of
The Washington Daily
News—Mr. President, Arling ton, Va., looks like it will have to close its schools in the integration crisis and, at any rate, the state money is going to be cut off. They may let the counties run the schools on their own. The Federal Government contrib utes money to the support of the schools there because of the great number of Federal workers in the area. I was wondering if you would favor increasing, in case they do, the counties are left to run the schools, increasing the Federal contribution to bring it up to its current budget level?

A.—I couldn't give you an answer right off from the hip, shooting from the hip that way, on that one. I hadn't thought of it, but I'll say this:
Whatever we would do in any other area, it seems to me, would have to be done by the Federal area, by the Federal Government, in any other area, and there, regardless of local action, I think the Fed eral Government must be,
must observe an equality of treatment any place.

15 SARAH McCLENDON

...well, the principle of the policy has not been abandoned at all. Now, we did say this: That in order to facilitate the possibility of negotiations in this field, that if both sides would accept this report and would each agree to begin instantly to meet with, I think we said Oct. 1—Oct. 31 is the date we mentioned—to start negotiations for measures that would lead further, then we would do for one year, we would not make any more tests.

But we did couple that with our—the policy we went through too that we believe in, that the cessation of tests must be related to the cessation of production of this material for weapons purposes, and even further on to that eventually.

Q.—What I had in mind, Sir, was if we were going to talk on Oct. 31, have we revised the policy, for example, brought it up to date, on the new inspections findings in Geneva and the new developments in rocketry?

A.—No. I think there is no change because we have believed—maybe I don't understand your question exactly. We said you cannot have an agreement on cessation of tests unless there can be technical methods that will make certain each to the other that we are acting in good faith. Now, that is the thing that the technical experts were deciding is: Is it possible, and if it is possible, what is the minimum system that will do it?

We say, "all right, we are accepting that now; let's move on to the next negotiation," And, while we are doing that, that negotiation is the actual establishment of this system. That being done, now you have got it with that much of a testing, it looks like you have a step made into penetrating both these countries on an official basis, a good many stations in Eurasia, a good many stations here.

Now, it would seem, there ought to be another step. But I think that each one of the things that still has to be negotiated out, we have not changed our general program or plan.

19 DON OBERDORFER of The Charlotte Observer—Mr. President, over 100 American cities have applications stacked up over at the Urban Renewal Administration for funds to help clear out their slum areas. The agency doesn't have any money available for these because the Congress did not pass the housing bill. However, they tell us that the Administration has an authorization of $100,000,000 which is available to be released at your discretion for this purpose. Would you tell us whether you have given any thought to releasing this money under this emergency situation, and what you think about it?

[The President confers with Mr. Hagerty.]

...der study.

Despite his comment about "slower" integration, there was nothing in his manner to suggest that he had undergone any change of heart about his frequently expressed conviction that the duties of the Presidency required him to uphold court orders once they were given.

Under questioning, the President said there would be no "great divergences" between his own views on the Little Rock case and the position of the Government, which will be argued before the court tomorrow by J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General. [Question 1.]

Rogers Hints at View

Some hint of the Government's official view was supplied by William P. Rogers Jr., the Attorney General, in an address before the American Bar Association in Los Angeles today. Mr. Rogers dwelt upon the duty of the states not to impede integration decrees of the Federal courts and upon the power of the states to insure that court decrees can be carried out while law and order are maintained.

Besides Mr. Rankin, the court will also hear argument tomorrow by Richard C. Butler, representing the Little Rock school board, and Thurgood Marshall, of the N. A. A. C. P. who will represent the Little Rock Negro students.

Mr. Marshall filed a brief with the court today, arguing that unless integration was permitted to continue immediately

Stay Held Unjustified

The stay could not be justified as an exercise of the traditional function of preserving the status quo while an appeal is pending, the brief said, for the stay, in fact, would disrupt a status quo established with last year's integration program.

"It is clear," Mr. Marshall wrote, "that the procedural device of granting or denying a stay cannot be employed where the result will be to delay or nullify the exercise of clearly determined rights."

Another brief was submitted by Senator J. W. Fulbright, Democrat of Arkansas. He supported Judge Lemley's decision.

Senator Fulbright, a lawyer and former college instructor in law as well as former president of the University of Arkansas, asked the Supreme Court to consider his views because he was "deeply concerned."

The Senator argued that the Appeals Court's action in overturning Judge Lemley's ruling suggested that its members were "not familiar" with the Southern way of life and traditions.

Mr. Fulbright said that there was a "Southern mind" and that it was a grave error not to realize this.

The integration problem in Arkansas, he said, "is more likely to yield to the slow conversion of the human heart than to remedies of a more urgent nature."

Ike wouldn't say at his news conference about his personal views on school integration. He wishes the Supreme Court had never handed down its decision. He also thinks integration should proceed much more slowly. That is what he has told friends in private."

Is that story correct?

A.—No, that story is not correct. But the story is this:

I have said here I think that I would never give an opinion about my conviction about the Supreme Court decisions because such a statement would have to indicate either approval or disapproval, and I was never going to do it about any of their decisions.

Now, with respect to the other one, it might have been that I said something about "slower," but I do believe that we should—because I do say, as I did yesterday or last week—we have got to have reason and sense and education, and a lot of other developments that go hand in hand as this process, if this process is going to have any real acceptance in the United States.

21 GARNETT D. HORNER of the Washington Star—Mr. President, in connection with what you might have said about slow movement toward integration, could you say, without trespassing on your injunction about talking about your conviction, whether you would advise the Justice Department to argue for a delay in the Little Rock case before the Supreme Court, to ...district judge's...

dent has only one recourse, and that is very obvious. So I would assume that any decision would certainly—I mean any brief would try to reflect the views that all of us, so far as I know, have held from the beginning.

22 CHARLES E. SHUTT of Telenews—recently, Secretary [of Treasury Robert B.] Anderson did not rule out a tax cut next year when he appeared before the Senate Finance Committee. In view of the rising costs for our defense and everything else in the budget, do you think this might be a possibility to stop

Creditors to Give India Substantial New Help

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—India will receive substantial additional economic help over the coming year from a group of her creditors, a spokesman of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development said today. He spoke at the conclusion of a meeting here of the creditor nations.

No figures were agreed upon at the three-day meeting. India will work out details of the help in bilateral talks with the United States, Britain, West Germany, Japan, Canada and the International Monetary Fund over the next few weeks.

The meeting had been called by the World Bank to is relative. I think there has been an atmosphere created that may give us a better chance to make progress.

25 WILLIAM H. STRINGER of The Christian Science Monitor—In Senate debate and in Gen. [James M.] Gavin's book, there has been an allusion to the missile gap in the early Nineteen Sixties, where it was said the Soviets would have great numbers of missiles, long-range missiles, and we would have few. Could you comment, without breaching security, on whether you see any peril ahead of that sort?

A.—I say only this: When I came here, you will remember, we were talking about the new look. We were trying to get away from mere reliance upon manpower, and to use the latest in scientific inventions to defend this country, hoping thereby to save manpower.

This took a long study, and after the first months I finally appointed scientific committees, two in succession, and finally there was brought forward a belief that we should go very heavily into ballistic missiles of long range, which had never before been brought to the fore in military planning. I believe—I think I am right—there never was more than $1,000,000 a year used until that year.

But in the spring of 1955, I believe, we—I listened to this latest report, latest scientific report and this went on the very highest authority. That expenditure, expenditures, was to put on a priority higher than that of any other of our defense things.

From that moment on, there has been no place that I can see where there has been any possibility of gaps occurring. Development has been extraordinarily rapid in view of the few years we have had, and while procurement should never go so wild that it wants to purchase great, vast weapons until they are approved, I am quite certain that the Defense Department's programs are not only adequate, but really are generous in making certain that the United States, in this one particular field, is going faster than we could have expected.

I want to bring this out:

Up to this moment, I don't see how you can begin to eliminate the manned carrier, the airplane, merely because there is—it can be demonstrated a capacity for sending a warhead by a guided missile. There is still a long ways to go before the airplane, I would say, is made completely obsolete. So while, if there is any gap, I am quite certain that our enormous strength in fine long-range airplanes is—I say it isn't a "gap"—it is—if the rate of development is not as rapid as you might see it, just if you are talking about money, and money won't do it, in my opinion, the airplane takes care of that deficiency.

MR. ...APPROPRIATE

Today, Chinese Communist artillery CONTINUED its bombardment of the offshore islands held by the Nationalists. And the U.S. Navy announced that the aircraft carrier "Essex"...and four destroyers...are on their way from the Mediterranean to join the U.S. 7th Fleet in the Far East.

The Nationalist Defense Ministry...on Formosa...reports the suspicious movement of small Communist ships southward in the direction of Matsu and Quemoy. The possible prelude to an invasion of those islands, so heavily SHELLED in the past week. The Chinese Nationalist garrisons on Quemoy and Matsu have been greatly reinforced...with our encouragement...in the past two years. President Eisenhower was asked, at his news conference, whether we now consider these offshore islands more important (than ever) to the defense of Formosa itself. He replied:

#2 (Tape runs 50 seconds
Ends on cue: "---so there's closer relationship than there was before."

Later in the news conference, a reporter asked the President if he saw any danger of American forces becoming involved. Mr. Eisenhower said:

#3 (Tape runs 28 seconds
Ends on cue: "---a week ago, or something of that kind."

Mr. Eisenhower was referring to the letter which Secretary Dulles sent to Pennsylvania's Representative Thomas Morgan. In it, Dulles said it would be "hazardpus" to assume that a Chinese Communist attack on the offshore islands could be confined to a "limited" operation.

A reporter asked the President whether...in his opinion... the United States could be defeated by an all-out "first blow" in a nuclear war, and whether it was his position that the United States must accept the first blow. He answered in part:

#4 Tape runs 35 seconds
Ends on cue: "---there's no question in my mind."

Another correspondent, pursuing this subject, asked the President whether he could, without breaching security, comment on reports of a growing missile lag between Russia and the United States. Mr. Eisenhower answered by tracing the development of the American missile program, said it had been on the "very highest" priority basis since the spring of 1955. And then he said:

#5 Tape runs 1:55, ends on cue: "---the airplane takes care of that deficiency."

(6)

The Army tonight launched an intermediate range [redacted] Jupiter missile...over a 15-hundred-mile range. The test...at Cape Canaveral ... WAS a success.

In Beirut today, the U.S. Army refused to bow to a radio "ultimatum" demanding the withdrawal of our tanks, from positions overlooking the rebel-held BASTA quarter of the Lebanese capital. Major General Adams, commander of the u.s. ground forces in Lebanon, said his men and tanks would remain where they were placed Monday to secure communications from rebel harassment. "If fired upon," said General Adams, in a statement read to correspondents," the u.s. troops will return the hostile fire in sufficient volume to stop-it at its source."

This firm american stand was announced as Dag Hammarshuld passed silently through Bayrout, en route to Amman, Jordon...The arrival of the U.N. Secretary General on his two-week peace-making mission, started a scuffle at the airfield, when Lebanese Security Forces refused to permit news photographers to take pictures...and drove them off the airfield at gun-point.

Hammarshuld made no statement on his arrival in Amman, either. The U.N. chief will start his talks with King Hoosayn tomorrow..

Alaskans have snapped-up the offer of statehood by an enthusiastic five-to-one-vote,. With about half of the territory's 297 precincts reporting, the unofficial count is some 22 thousand for, and about 4 thousand against. ..Opposition to statehood came largely from residents who feared it would bring higher taxes.

Now only the formality of a Presidential proclamation is needed to add Alaska's star to the flag. This will probably come in LATE December..

General De Gaulle having less success selling the French Union to its North African colonies. The French Premier flew unannounced into Algiers today, on the last lap of his 12 thousand-mile tour of French Africa. ..De Gaulle's third trip to Algeria since he became Premier was not disclosed for reasons of security..

The French Premier was shouted down by defiant Senegalese in Dakar yesterday..and while throngs of Algerians hailed him today, the Algerians rebels also stepped up their terrorist activities in the 24 hours preceding his carefully-guarded arrival there.

(9)

The crew of the submarine Nautilus Today got that ticker tape parade they were promised ...with a quarter of a million New Yorkers cheering Them as they rode up Lower Broadway to City Hall. There, Mayor Wagner congratulated them for Them polar achievement...saying they had done some thing Mankind had dreamed of FOR over 400 years."

And that storm "Daisy"...400 miles off St. Augustine, Florida... is now classified as a "severe hurricane", with a peak wind velocity of 115 miles an hour. Small craft are warned to stay near protected places from the Virginia Capes southward to Jacksonville.

This is Larry Lesueur - Ill be back in a moment with a footnote to the news - First

Bill Mauldin

Footnote

Work finally started today, on the long-planned rebuilding of the East front of the U.S. capitol in Washington. The time-worn sandstone, ~~bearing 35 coats of paint applied over the years,~~ will be replaced by enduring marble.

Congress authoritzed the job, two years ago, but contraversy raged around it ever since. Opponents contended, it was desecration of a national shrine. But backers of the idea, argued that it was necessary to correct an architectural error. Seems there's no visible support for the imposing dome atop the capitol.

This is Larry LeSueur---Good-nite.

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., Aug. 28, 1958

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

The Supreme Court met in extraordinary session to hear arguments in the Little Rock school-integration dispute. For a direct report, we switch to Washington and CBS News correspondent Charles Von Fremd.

(Tape runs 2:28
(Ends on cue: "--to CBS Newsin N.Y."

In Little Rock today, the legislature voted "final" approval of the program...giving Governor Faubus power to close the public schools against forced integration. Included in the legislative "package" was a law which would postpone the opening of Central High School for another week---from September 8th to September 15th. This is the postponement measure to which which Von Fremd just referred. However, CBS News Correspondent Dan Schorr in Little Rock talked with Governor Fawbus late today. And the governor said he is considering opening the school on a segragated basis on September 8th, as scheduled...and NOT on the fifteenth. All Fawbus would have to do would be to leave that particular bill unsigned. In fact, he is expected to sign FEW of the measures passed today, until the Supreme Court makes a ruling. In that way, he CAN DECIDE WHAT HE WANTS to do.

→

Today...in Charlottesville, Virginia...a judge issued a temporary injunction, forbidding the Charlottesville School Board from assigning any pupil---white OR negro---to a city school. The school board HAS already been ordered by a U.S. District Court to assign SOME negroes to white schools. Today's restraining order was issued by a STATE judge, and thus the school board finds itself faced with conflicting orders from state and federal courts. The board meets tonight, to consider its dilemma. It may seek to put-off a showdown by delaying the opening of city schools, scheduled for next Tuesday.

Peiping radio said today that a Communist landing on Quemoy is "imminent". A possible invasion fleet has been sighted on the China coast, north of Quemoy. And the Nationalist garrison on the island has been warned by the Reds that its situation is hopeless...that it should surrender and "not sacrifice itself for Chiang Kai-shek." Chinese Nationalist leaders on Formosa say they "KNOW" the Communists will invade Quemoy. But they predict the invasion will be smashed. The Nationalists insist that the fortifications of the island are intact, despite heavy shelling which continued today for the SIXTH straight day. In a display of unity, American and Nationalist aircraft flew over the Formosa coast today in a joint defense exercise. The Nationalist minister of defense said his warplanes will bomb the mainland, if necessary. but added that the question was not entirely up to him him to decide. A reference, presumably, to the advisory role being played by the United States.

The State Department this afternoon took the unusual step of replying, in effect, to the Peiping broadcast. It said...in a formal statement...that the [redacted] radio threat and the massive bombardment of Quemoy come as "stark reminders of Peiping's militarism and aggressive expansionism." These actions, it said, are in direct contrast to Comminist China's repeated professions of peaceful intentions. The department repeated Secretary Dulles' warning that it would be "highly hazardous" for anyone to assume that a Communist attempt to seize Quemoy could be a limited operation. But a department spokesman declined to say whether this country would go to war to defend the offshore island. The United States IS committed to defend Formosa.

—)

[redacted] Today's Peiping Radio broadcast said Red China is "determined" to "liberate" Formosa, as well as the off-shore islands. But the warning of IMMINENT invasion was addressed to the Nationalist forces on Quemoy.

A curfew was imposed tonight on Taipei, [redacted] capital of Formosa. The action was taken WITHOUT prior announcement. [redacted] Armed soldiers suddenly appeared throughout the city, halting all traffic and ordering people off the streets.

The U.S. Weather Bureau has ordered hurricane warnings posted along the NEW ENGLAND COAST from Provincetown, [redacted], to Block Island. A hurricane watch // already in effect for Connecticut and Eastern Long Island, and people in that area are urged to keep in touch with later advisories and bulletins during the night. Gale warnings ON DISPLAY [redacted] all the way from Portland, Maine, to Moorehead City, North Carolina. // Hurricane Daisy is now about a hundred miles northeast of Cape Hattaras, moving [redacted] slightly east of due north at about 22 miles an hour. // She is still a severe hurricane.../..packing a wallop, near the center, of 125 miles an hour. And shipping in its path is urged to exercise extreme caution. The Weather Bureau also warns of the danger of FLOOD tides. //

President Eisenhower had planned to leave Washington at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning for his Rhode Island vacation. The White House now says the storm places the time of his departure in doubt. He and Mrs. Eisenhower are scheduled to fly.

(6)

The U.N. secretary general...Dag Hammarskjold..|.conferred today with the premier of Jordan,| on the second day of his Middle East "peace mission." Informed sources say |the premier made it clear: British troops will be asked to STAY in Jordan.|..until the security of the country |is assured. Hammarskjold plans to see King Hussein (HOOSAYN) again tomorrow--(-he has already seen the young monarch twice--)-then fly to Geneva| to attend the international conference on |peaceful uses of atomic energy. | After Geneva, the secretary-general |will resume his peace mission...making new stops| in Cairo and Beirut.| He must report back to the U.N.| by the end of next month.

(7)

In London...secret talks concluded tonight between British military leaders and Simon Peres, director-general of the Israeli ministry of defense. No details. There's speculation, however, that Britain MAY have agreed to help Israel expand its navy in face of the naval build-up by Nasser's United Arab Republic. //

Archbishop Makarios said today that the time has come for "substantial" U.N. intervention in the Cyprus dispute. // The Greek Cypriot leader told a news conference in Athens that he cannot go along with the British plan // in which Greece and Turkey would collaborate with Britain in governing the island. // Said, further deterioration in Cyprus could threaten peace in the whole area. // Makarios advocated the sending of U.N. observers or troops.

Its a long way from Bagdad to Kimmoy, but the results of what the state department called "indirect aggression" in the Middle East, and today calls "aggressive expansionism" in the Formosa Strait, may amount to the same thing..//

President Eisenhower disclosed at his news conference this week, that with the encouragement of this country, the Chinese Nationalists have STATIONED ALMOST A THIRD OF THEIR Combat FORCES on the 50-square-mile island of Kimmoy, in order to defend it..//

Today the Chinese communist radio said an invasion of the Kimmoy group was imminent, and called upon the Nationalist forces to surrender. It would appear that if the Red forces can over-run Kimmoy, they will capture a substantish portion of Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek's CRACK troops..

Should that event transpire, it would be a demoralizing blow to the remaining Nationalist forces on Formosa itself... For Kimmoy has become a symbol of nationalist resistance to communism, and its capture or surrender, might have fatal consequences to the morale of Chiang Kai Shek's Formosa stronghold..

Under the Formosa resolution adopted by Congress, in 1955, the U.S. formally committed itself to the defense of Formosa and the nearby Pescadores, but not to the islands just off the red mainland. Thus, in 1955, Matsu and Kimmoy, were not regarded a vital to Formosa's defense. But in his public warning to the chinese communists last saturday, Secretary Dulles carefully noted that Formosa's ties with [redacted] The OFFSHORE ISLANDS [redacted], have become closer over the past four years, and their interdependence has increased."

The Nationalist government probably regards the defense of Kimmoy as a matter of life and death for its cause...and may VEHEMENTLY [redacted] demand American assistance. But President Eisenhower has declined to let the communists smoke-out U.S. [redacted] intentions regarding an invasion of the offshore islands. The only way The Reds [redacted] can find out [redacted] is to try..

Yet one fact is VERY hard to ignore. If the Chinese communists can plaster Kimmoy with 80 thousands shells in a weekend no ship of the Seventh or any other fleet could survive in those NARROW waters. And nothing short of atom bombs could silence all the [redacted] concrete-emplaced batteries, that the communists have built-up in the past eight years..//

This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news--- first a world from Ford [redacted].

The daughter of the chief forecaster of the Miami weather Bureau became the first woman to fly into the eye of a trppical hurricane. Fair-haired Kristine Dunn, made the flight yesterday with Navy Hurricane hunters from Jacksonville.

Miss Dunn is also a reporter for the Miami News, and she wrote-up the hurricanes heqrt in the best women's page style.

SW Described the sea at the hurricane's center, as "white except for slashes of aqua green." and the wave-tops, she said, looked like "dotted swiss organdie."

This is Larry LeSueur--- GOOD NITE [redacted]..

XXX [redacted].

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Thursday, August 28, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EDT

LESUEUR: ... and, CBS News correspondent, Charles Von Fremd.

VON FREMD: After listening to three hours of conflicting testimony, the Supreme Court lat this afternoon decided to wait two weeks before ruling on whether integration should be resumed at Little Rock Central High school. The high tribunal heard the Justice Department and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People urge that all legal barriers to immediate integration at Little Rock be swept aside. While the Little Rock school board pleaded for a cooling off period, before negros be allowed to attend Central High. The decision to postpone a decision developed when the Court learned that the opening date of Central High had been delayed until September 15th. Chief Justice Warren announced that the Court will adjourn until September 11th, when it will again meet in special session to consider the Little Rock situation.

At the same time, Warren set September 8th, as the deadline for theschool board to present its appeal from an 8th Circut Court of Appeals ruling which refused to postpone integration at Central High. Solictor Gen. J. Lee Rankin, and NAACP counsel Thurgood Marshall, who had called for an immediate integration ruling, declined comment after the postponement. Virgil Blossom, the superintendent of schools at Little Rock, told reporters he was glad that his group would have an opportunity to present its case. There was general agreement among observers that the school board had scored at least a temporary victory by winning a postponement. The Court had met in extraordinary session to hear the Justice Department and the NAACP urge an immediate integration decision. The postponement was a distinct anti-climax after a dramatic day. Attorneys Marshall, Rankin and Richard Butler, spokesman for the school board had voiced their cases in eloquent language in the cool quiet marble sanctuary. From time to time the black robed Justices interrupted the attorneys asking for clarification. The atmosphere was at once solemn and intense. Hundreds of observers waited in line for hours, hoping for a brief glimpse of what they obviously thought would be an historic moment. Instead, the history making was put off to a future day. The 11th of September or latdr. To many who watched an interesting side bar was the Justice Department's all out recommendation that integration be ordered at once. A requestthat followed by less then 24 hours, Pres. Eisenhower's remark that integration should take place more slowly. But, White House News Secretary Hagerty insisted that the Chief Executive and the Justice Department were not in disagreement on how to deal with the controversial problem.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

PT/n.m.

(1)

Good evening, everyone./.Here's what happened today:

Soviet Premier Khrushchev agreed on October 31st./.as a date for opening talks with the United States and Britain//on a possible suspension of nuclear weapons tests.// Khrushchev's agreement was in response to the Anglo-American proposal.//.of just a week ago./..that a one-year suspension of tests go in effect as soon as the negotiations get under way. We specified that the negotiations must deal./.not only with a cessation of tests../but with the establishment of an international control system. Great Britain, in a separate note,/ suggested/ that the talks be held, here in New York./ Tonight, Khrushchev said he thought Geneva would be more suitable.

—)

And he added: "The talks must be aimed at the conclusion of an agreement for the banning forever of all tests of nuclear weapons by all countries." The United States and Britain had suggested October 31st as a suitable date for the opening of talks...after scientists from the East and West, meeting in Geneva, agreed that detection of tests under a worldwide control system was PRACTICABLE.

Khrushchev's statement was issued...in Moscow...only a few hours after the United States announced a new series of atomic blasts in the Nevada desert. The announcement came from the Atomic Energy Commission. It said the tests would be on a small scale... that there would be ten in all. And that they would all be over by the end of October. In other words, they would be completed BEFORE October 31st--the date proposed for the three-power meeting. As for the nature of the Nevada tests, the commission SAYS several of them WILL be conducted in underground tunnels....others from balloons or towers.

2A

For the first time in Virginia history, a school board approved public school integration. The school board in Norfolk bowed to the order of a federal judge...said it would assign 17 negroes to six white schools on September 8th. But Virginia has a state law...which prescribes that when a school is integrated, it is automatically closed. The next step may well be a new round of federal litigation over the constitutionality of the state law. In fact, at the same time that the Norfolk School Board said it would assign some negro students to white schools, it asked U.S. District Judge Walter Hoffman to allow a delay in the actual ENROLLMENT of the negroes until September, 1959. Judge Hoffman has taken no action on this request. Indications are that he will wait until the Supreme Court rules in the Little Rock case. The high tribunal decided yesterday to put off a decision...until after hearing further oral arguments on September 11th.

In the Far East crisis.//.these developments:

Chinese Communist artillery/pounded the offshore islands/held by the Nationalists/for the SEVENTH/straight day.//.with the HEAVIEST fire concentrated/on the small islands of Tatan and Ehrtan,/in the Quemoy group. Yesterday, a Peiping broadcast called the Red invasion of Quemoy "imminent". And it was shelled/again today, although Tatan and Ehrtan took the brunt of the attack.//THESE two islands/were hit with more than 7-thousand shells in 60 minutes.// The area of the islands/is so small/that this figures out to more than 50 shells per acre..//.making it the most concentrated bombardment since the start of hostilities/four years ago/in the Formosa Strait.//The Nationalist defense ministry./.on Formosa...says/676/soldiers and civilians/have been killed in the Communist shelling since last Saturday--//--not including casualties/which may have been/incurred today.

In Taipei, the capital of Formosa, some government offices are being moved/into the suburbs/as a precaution against possible AIR RAIDS.

The United States/has ordered the aircraft carrier Midway to leave Honolulu./.and join the already beefed-up Seventh Fleet, guarding the Formosa Strait. The Navy reveals that the heavy cruiser Los Angeles left California for Formosa last Wednesday. With the Midway and the carrier Essex (now on its way to Formosa from the Mediterranean) the Seventh Fleet will have six carriers. Also in the fleet are three heavy cruisers and forty destroyers.

—7

There are reports from Washington that American jet pilots now have permission to fly "somewhat closer than formerly" to the China mainland, in pursuing Communist aircraft over the Formosa Strait. These reports are based on so-called "authoritative sources" [redacted].

In London, the British Foreign Office calls the situation in the Formosa Strait "serious but not critical". The British are said to have concluded that a GENERAL war in the area is not imminent.

Secretary of State Dulles is away from Washington on vacation. This morning, President Eisenhower conferred with the ACTING secretary, Christian Herter, on the Formosa SITUATION. He also signed 42 pieces of legislation, passed in the last days of the 85th Congress...including the major foreign aid and social security measures. The social security bill increases benefits by 7 percent AND also the taxes to pay for the higher benefits.

—7

The President played a round of golf.../.then took off for Newport, Rhode Island for HIS vacation. | His departure was delayed six hours | by "Hurricane Daisy," which had made a morning flight | hazardous.

But when Mr. Eisenhower arrived in Rhode Island,// the sun was shining. // Not a sign of Hurricane Daisy,// which had moved out into the North Atlantic,// sparing the New England coast. //

The Agriculture Department reports | that prices received by farmers.../.in the ~~month~~ MONTH ending August 15th.../.declined BY one percent. /At the same time, the farmers' cost of production | ALSO declined, but only | by ONE-THIRD | of one percent.

Wildcat strikes.../.in the auto industry.../.began to cut into the production of new-model cars TODAY. G.M. was forced | to cut-back | its operations at the Buick | engine plant | in Flint, Michigan.../.and CLOSE DOWN its Buick assembly plant in Flint, due to shortage of parts.// Unauthorized walkouts EARLIER | crippled Ford and Chrysler production | in Cleveland and Detroit.

Russia announces: It has fired a rocket/..with two dogs/..280 miles into space/and brought them back alive! \ According to Moscow radio,/ the experiment was carried-out/on Wednesday...as part of Russia's program/for the International Geophysical Year. The two dogs...specially trained./..were placed in a\hermatically-sealed/cabin/and shot into the stratosphere/in a one-stage rocket. The cabin/was equipped with an air-purifying/system. Also/instruments for registering/the dogs' biological functions//.such as respiration/and heart beat...and a movie camera/for recording their behavior.// Moscow says/that...altogether./..the cabin and its contents weighed 3-thousand, 725 pounds.// And it claims/that when the dogs/got back to earth,/they were in "good shape". / The dogs, incidentally, were named Belyanka (which means "white") and Pestrava (which means "brindle".) Like the dog Laika, who was a pioneer before them, they were both GIRLS! But they reached an altitude/ only about a FOURTH/as/great as Laika. They were NOT placed in orbit. It was not/that kind of experiment.// Last month, the United States sent a mouse TWICE/as high as the two dogs.// But the mouse/--though it survived the trip into space/--never was found.

Nobody is more of an expert on amphibious invasions, then President Eisenhower himself. // Those who remember D-Day in the English Channel, recall that General Eisenhower made his greatest military decision, when he gambled with bad weather, in order to hit the moon and tide conditions, right on the nose for his D-Day armada..

Its just possible that this long labor day weekend may provide us with an answer to the mystery of the Formosa strait..Whether the communists intend to invade the off-shore islands, or TRY TO bluff them into surrender..

The chinese nationalist ministry of defense believes the long and massive communist bombardment of the islands in Amoy Bay, are softening-up preparations for an invasion.. If so, this is certainly one of the longest and heaviest artillery preparations in the history of modern warfare.. //

The Chinese Nationalists say they've even pin-pointed the places where the red invasion will start. // Against Tatan and Ehrtan, the small twin Kimmoy islands at almost the very entrance to Amoy Harbor.

They say one or both OF these islands will get another heavy shelling in three to five days, and then the communists will invade because that's when the moon and tide will be just right.

If it doesn't occur then, these military experts think an invasion might have to be postponed for several weeks, until the moon and tide conditions are favorable again..

It appears that our invasion expert, President Eisenhower, is doing his best to discourage the Chinese Communists, by trying to frustrate their time-table. The President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Army, have all spoken out... But they've never said positively just what this country would do, if Red China invades those off-shore islands. But privately its known that President Eisenhower feels there's no use appeasing Red China, that ever since the Korean War, Peyping must be made to realize that any aggression will be met with american strength and resolution.

United States policy is perfectly clear on where we stand toward Chiang Kai Shek's stronghold of Formosa and the Pescadores.. This country is pledged to defend them by treaty. If they should fall to the Chinese reds, our big base at Okinawa would be outflanked... And if Okinawa fell, Japan itself would be vulnerable..

But whether the U.S. would help Chiang Kai Shek defend the islands in Amoy Harbor, may depend largely on whether the President thinks an invasion of them, is part of a general attempt against Formosa itself

Baypin g's broadcasts to the effect that Kimmoy is marked for invasion, were coupled with boasts that this was part of an over-all "Liberation" of Formosa.// In other words, the chinese communists have gone out their way to give Eisenhower a basis for ordering american forces [redacted] into action..//

This could be regarded as a rather transparent provocation.. The off-shore islands of course are hostages to fortune.. No matter how well defended they are, the communists [redacted] can always get at least a foothold,.. on them...Either by water-borne invasion [redacted] or air-borne landings.. Or they can merely shell them, as they have done for the past [redacted] WEEK.. But the only way the Nationalists, and behind them, the United States, can retaliate, is by bombing the chinese mainland itself...Then there would be nothing to prevent Soviet Russia from bringing charges of outright aggression against us at the United Nations.//.Perhaps providing the wedge for communist china's entry there..

Yesterday the Chinese Nationalist chief of staff, General Wang Shu-ming, warned that if the communist shelling of the offshore islands didn't CEASE, he would bomb the RED [redacted] batteries on the mainland.. But he admitted that the decision was not entirely up to him.. Thus, underscoring the role of the U.S. military advisors to Formosa.

There are now more than 50 [redacted] american warships in the vicinity of Formosa, reinforced today by the giant carrier MIDWAY and the heavy cruiser LOS ANGELES.. and reports have been permitted to circulate in Washington, without confirmation or denial, that american pilots would be permitted to exercise the right of "hot pursuit"...that is, to deny the chinese communists planes, any such "priviledged sanctuary" [redacted] as they enjoyed during the Korean War, when our planes broke-off combat short of the chinese [redacted] airbases over the Yalu.River..

Its becoming increasing clear that what President Eisenhower is trying to do, is to sway the chinese communists out of an invasion, by keeping them guessing about our intentions, while at the same time, emphasizing our determination to honor our treaty pledges..

Mr. Eisenhower is also refusing to be provoked into retaliation against the chinese mainland.. But the President must continue to keep [redacted] as sharp an eye on our nationalist allies, as he does on their communist enemies..

This is Larry LeSueur...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news....First a word from Bill Manton

The Beasts of Bapping that Kimmoy is marked for invasion.

CONTRARY TO The protestations of the Iraq government [redacted] that they are not considering joining-up with President Nasser's United Arab Republic, a significant event took place in Bagdad today..

The crowds that howled their support for President Nasser when King Faisal was overthrown AND SLAIN in the July 14TH [redacted] coup d'etat, got at least one of their wishes granted. [redacted]

Bagdad's broad King Feisal street was renamed today... It's now President Nasser street..

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite.

Lesueur for Murrow Mon., Sept. 1, 1958

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Traffic took a grim toll. Three hundred and 32 persons have now died in highway accidents since the start of the long Labor Day week-end, Friday night. In these last hours of the holiday, the National Safety Council appeals to motorists for "common sense, patience" and what it calls "old fashioned courtesy."

Down in the Caribbean, Hurricane Ella gained new strength tonight... with gale winds sweeping well-inland in Cuba.

The storm is moving northwest at 20 miles an hour. Its winds...at the center...have a force of 115 miles an hour. And the weather bureau warns all interests in the Southern Bahamas to keep in touch with the latest advisories.

In most parts of THIS country, Labor Day weather was ideal...with cool Canadian air blanketing the northern states, from the Great Lakes to New England. In Chicago, it was almost "football weather"...as the American Legion staged its FORTIETH annual parade, with 50-thousand marchers altogether, including members of the armed forces. The float from Alaska...featuring a sourdough prospector...drew enthusiastic acclaim.

In Rhode Island...where he is vacationing...President Eisenhower played 18 holes of golf in weather which NEWS correspondents described as "glorious". Again...yesterday...Mr. Eisenhower's companions on the golf course were his good friend, George E. Allen, Howard Cushing, president of the Newport Country Club, and the gold pro, Norman Palmer. In the afternoon, he did some [redacted] fishing in Narragansett Bay.

Mr. Eisenhower kept in touch with the Far East situation...conferred by telephone with General Goodpaster, the White House staff secretary, who relayed the latest reports from the State Department, the Pentagon, and the Central Intelligence Agency. There was a suggestion that the President might be in Newport long enough to take in the finals of the America's Cup yacht races, which start on September 20th. But this

(29)

~~is NOT definite. Mr. Eisenhower DOES plan a quick trip back to Washington next Saturday, to be host at a White House reception for the American Association of Universities. Among university leaders attending will be the President's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, head of Johns Hopkins.~~

In the Formosa Strait today, Nationalist artillery on Quemoy fired on a flotilla of small Communist ships a short distance offshore. According to the Nationalist communique, eleven Communist vessels were sunk---three gunboats and EIGHT motorized junks. Quemoy itself was the object of Communist bombardment for the TENTH straight day. But the shelling was light.

Secretary of the Army Brucker arrived in Hong Kong today...after three days on Formosa...and denied reports that U.S. military advisers have been evacuated from Quemoy. Even in the event of invasion, he said, the American advisers will stay at their posts. Brucker said the Communists should not underestimate the warnings...by President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. Both have said it would be "highly hazardous" for the Reds to assume that a Communist invasion of the offshore islands could be a "limited" operation.

-7

The British Foreign Office said today that it is "anxious" about the situation in the Formosa Strait...and that Britain is consulting with the United States.

In Tokyo, the Socialist Party urged Japan's conservative government NOT to become involved. And the Philippines government is examining a report---not confirmed---that the United States will defend Quemoy, if it is invaded by the Chinese Reds.

A naval skirmish off the coast of Iceland//.with skill of maneuver| and cameras|taking the place of guns.| The "action" began early today, when Iceland's|new 12-mile limit|went into effect-//-all foreign craft prohibited|by Iceland from fishing|closer than 12 miles to shore. [redacted]. ||Britain calls the extension of this limit|illegal... a violation of the "freedom of the seas." //So today a fleet of British trawlers,|escorted by four naval frigates,|defied Iceland...crossed the line|and went about the business of fishing, [redacted] Iceland quickly responded|by sending out six Coast Guard vessels./.and a seaplane./..to chase the British out. ||But every time|an Islandic Coast Guard ship|bore down on a fishing trawler,||a British frigate/ came up at full steam| and intervened.//.placing itself directly|between the trawler and the Coast Guard vessel. ||A reporter for United Press International./..who watched from the air./.says|it looked like "a gigantic chess game"//..the ships checking each other,/ moving to new positions/ and checking each other all over again. //In| at least ONE instance, the ships converged with guns manned|and crews at battle-stations| but not a shot was fired. Iceland officials say|there WILL be no shooting...that sooner or later, the British trawlers will be forced to take shelter in Islandic ports to escape the winter storms. THEN, they say, they will arrest the offending skippers...using as evidence the photographs taken of their ships INSIDE the 12-mile limit. Other countries...including Denmark... also disagree with Iceland's attempt to enforce a 12-mile limit...but have not sent their fishing boats into the disputed area.

→

NATO diplomats, meanwhile, are trying to reach a compromise in the dispute...which was touched off by Britain's dispatch of warships to Iceland.

The British Foreign Office said today that Great Britain wants an agreement. Denmark has expressed a desire for an emergency meeting of the NATO Council. But a NATO spokesman says there are no IMMEDIATE plans to call a special meeting...indicates that the NATO Council will take up the FISHING question at its next regular session on September 10th.

(1)

The second international "atoms for peace" conference opened in Geneva today with a speech by U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold [redacted] His theme was cooperation in [redacted] use of the atom for Man's betterment. People in many countries, he said, are asking more and more: WHEN can atomic energy contribute to their standard of living?

Yesterday, President Eisenhower sent the conference a tape-recorded message pledging that the United States would continue to share its resources and knowledge with other countries. And today a message from Soviet Premier Khrushchev saying that cooperation in atomic science would in his phrase be of "incomparably greater use" if ALL nuclear weapons were [redacted] banned. Thus, he injected a political note since a nuclear weapons ban is not on the agenda.

Russia's chief delegate to the conference said tonight that the Soviet Union is completely de-classifying the entire range of its fusion research--that is, the research aimed at harnessing the H-bomb for industrial [redacted] use. He said, "We have de-classified all the work we have done so far." Day before yesterday, the United States and Britain announced THEY had removed all artificial barriers in such research. Right now, the main topic at the conference is this one of thermo-nuclear experiment. And for a direct report, we switch to Geneva and CBS News Correspondent Lou Cioffi.

→

(Tape runs 3:10
Ends on cue: "---to CBS News in N.Y."

A new outbreak of racial violence tonight.//.in London, England.

Gangs of teenagers /STORMED through a section of London/inhabited largely by Negroes...throwing rocks through the windows of scores of homes.

Some Negroes fought back//..throwing bottles/from the roofs of their homes./.until police restored order.// The crowd of hoodlums is estimated at more than 2-thousand.// It was the THIRD race riot/in London in three nights./ Earlier in the day, five white men./..who took part in similar disorders/in Nottingham/..were jailed for three months./ In London, forty-two persons/have been placed/under arrest.

Icelanders are snapping pictures of British Fishermen, in that Herring War, up where the Arctic Ocean ~~meets~~ MERGES WITH the Atlantic, and the moves and counter-moves of the escorted fleets, are not ~~designed~~ CALCULATED to bring many fish to the nets..

But the problems ~~serve~~ There to underscore so many similar ones that trouble this ~~[redacted]~~ rapidly-shrinking PLANET.//.It's well-known,of course, that the traditional three-mile limit of sovrenty over coastal waters, was based on what used to be considered ~~a~~ The absolute range of a shore-based cannon...

Even now the question of air-space over a nation,is pragmatically reckoned on how high, a gun or anti-aircraft device can shoot... in order to bring down a foreign offender...

But even the international lawyers and politicians, shrugged-off the coming of the earth satellite.//.To this day, neither the United States nor Russia, has ever lodged a complaint about the prescense of each other's earth satellites, orbiting their way through the skies, over rival parts of the globe...//

The Reason is more fundamental that the fact that they were launched during the International Geophysical year.// Thus far, it just isn't possible for either side ~~to bring~~ SHOOT DOWN the other's satellite, [redacted].

The High-altitude jet-plane, the guided missle, and the explosive rocket thrust that [redacted] made it possible to orbit a man-made satellite, have also made man's international laws completely obsolete..

This country has lost a number of planes shotdown far outside [redacted] Soviet Russia's three or even 12-mile coastal limit. And it might be expected that a similar fate would befall a Russian [redacted] aircraft, if it ventured unannounced near the [redacted] coasts of the United States...

When a plane fifty to a [redacted] Hundred miles off the coast might just be starting its bomb-run with a guided missile, it's plain that new international concepts are waiting to be enunciated..

And with the prospect that Television-equipeed earth-satellites may soon be spying out all the secrets of the globe, if not the moon, [redacted], then international lawyers may have to stretch their brains considerably to figure out the [redacted] legal rights of nationalist-minded politicians..

Even little Iceland's [redacted] efforts to extend control of its coastal fishing grounds, have already been out-stripped by faster-moving technology... [redacted]

As most people know, many modern trawlers possess radar equipment. THEY can spot a shoal of herring UNDERwater, farther than a whaling ship can see a sperm whale spout..

It's no trick at all for a modern high-speed trawler to make the run from Scotland to Iceland, and come BACK with a drag-net full of glittering herring..It would take more gunboats than Iceland can afford, to prevent such poaching, even within its self-proclaimed 12-mile limit.. Three times 12 miles might be more realistic to stop poaching, but even the Icelanders know they couldn't Hope to make that stick..

The Norwegians and the Danes also disagree with Icelands attempt to enforce a 12-mile limit, although they haven't made a mass protest like Britain..The Danes have an agreement covering the [redacted] Danish-owned Faroes island. AND it should run till 1967, but the Danes figure that if the Icelanders get away with THUS, they themselves will have to ask for more exclusive [redacted] room around the [redacted] Faroes. Thus the Danes Think There should be [redacted] an emergency session of the NATO council..

At the bottom of the trouble is Both a growing shortage of Herring.. AND AN INCREASING [redacted], the growing population IN Northern Europe.. [redacted]

The Germans and the Belgians fish the mouth of the English Channel, driving the British fishermen further NORTH ...The Russians poach in Norwegian waters. The appetite for smoked [redacted] and pickled herrings knows no national boundaries..

What is obviously needed NOW is an international agreement to prevent the over-fishing of the waters, and perhaps an agreement not to to turn the extra herrings into cheap fertilizer...

The Russians are not only big herring eaters, they're politically minded...They've bought up most of Iceland's surplus fishing CATCH, mainly because no-one else, including the United States would buy it..

So The RUSSIANS support Icelands position today..

This country has remained politically aloof from this Herring War, but we MAY not be able to do so for long...Not if we want to preserve our military base at Keflavik, Iceland..

FOR in the absence of international agreements covering air-space or outer-space, Iceland has become strategically important. It sits atop the curvature of the world, where our projected anti-missile-missile COULD fire in a flat-enough trajectory to knock down Russian rockets, before they could MISS over the United States..

[redacted]..

And NOW here's a footnote to the News...

Red China has problems---over-population, under-nourishment, ruthless dictatorship and the situation in the Formosa strait...

But by tomorrow she may be adding a new one...

The New China News Agency reports that Communist China's first Television Station will start ~~broadcasting~~ BROADCASTING tomorrow from Bayping..

This is Larry LeSueur----Goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Monday, September 1, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Right now the main topic at the conference is this one of thermonuclear experiment, and for a direct report we switch to Geneva, and CBS News correspondent Lou Cioffi.

CIOFFI: Dr. Francis Perrin of France, this morning rapped his gavel twice and called to order the second International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy. Seated before him was the largest group of scientists ever assembled under one roof, meeting together in what appears to be a new atmosphere of international cooperation, in a field which holds both the hope and the terror of the world.

For two weeks technical papers will be submitted and discussed. But even after the first day there was not much doubt that the United States has prove it is the leader in the atomic field. We have transplanted four actual research machines from home and brought them to the atoms-for-peace exhibition. Our exhibit there as a whole is the largest; the most complete; and the most impressive. Our top men are here: Dr. van Atta; Dr. Teller; Dr. Libby; Dr. Tuck - many others, a who's who of American science. And these scientists are convinced that the United States is ahead of any nation in the search for control of thermonuclear power: fusion, the power of the hydrogen bomb; the power of (indistinct). They point out that the Russians have brought only a scale model of their research equipment. But from what we have seen proves that our methods for solving this problem are better adapted to a solution.

The scientists love to explain about neutrons (indistinct) - in the simplified terms they put it this way: Six years ago, the United States began work on solving the mystery of controlling fusion for peaceful purposes. It was admitted then that the problem was a difficult one; maybe even impossible. And so we have been trying several different approaches; four to be exact. The Russians, on the other hand, appear to have put all their eggs in one machine. They're taking a bigger gamble. Scientists are the only people who refuse to brag. But the Americans will say that so far the Russians have shown us nothing new. At least in the thermonuclear field. There are some allied theories which our physicists find interesting and plan to study.

The scientists also have high praise for the results of the British-American cooperation in the thermonuclear field. They say we have learned some things and the exchange of information has been valuable. But, they insist, the main direction of our research effort has not changed. Even in the field of fission, atomic reactors which are a reality today, we apparently have much to learn. And the scientists of the Western powers, at least, say that it will be some time before the underdeveloped countries of the world will be able to have power generated by the atom. At present, the machines are too expensive. It would be cheaper and better, they say, for these nations to construct the traditional power plants, to build up their industrial complexes to the point where a nation could support atomic power. And some of the smaller nations are disagreeing with this theory. And there will undoubtedly be discussions and arguments back-and-forth. But the main thing is that an atmosphere of free exchange is being generated here. The Russians seem willing to cooperate in every way possible. It's a new atmosphere, one in which science can work for peace.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: A new outbreak of racial violence tonight in London England.

Ed. trans. _ P. O.

Sept. 2'58

Good evening, every one. Here's what happened today:

Great Britain exploded another nuclear weapon high over Christmas Island in the Central Pacific. It was the second test in Her current Nuclear series, which the British have promised to conclude as soon as possible. There was no official announcement as to the type of device touched-off today, but it's believed the weapon was a hydrogen bomb.

The U. N's "Atoms For Peace" conference is continuing IN Geneva -- and today a top Soviet nuclear physicist renewed Russia's appeal for international cooperation in the drive to harness the power of the H-Bomb for peaceful purposes. Professor L.A. Artsimovitch said that such cooperation would "undoubtedly shorten the time needed for us to arrive at our ultimate goal." Doctor Edward Teller -- the man often referred to as the "Father of the H-Bomb" -- told the scientific delegates from 66 nations that "clean" hydrogen explosions could be used to do everything from blasting out new harbors to creating electric power from steam trapped in deep holes underground.

15

But while he spoke optimistically of peaceful uses for the t[redacted]e weapon he helped develop, Doctor Teller was pessimistic about the success of any ban on nuclear weapons testing. He told a news conference he doubts any such agreement would hold-up for long -- even if it can be worked out.

A proposal for international cooperation in another area -- the vast EXPANSE of outer space -- was put forward today by this country's U.N. ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge, in an address to the annual convention of the American Legion in Chicago. Lodge said that President Eisenhower has instructed him to make such a proposal at the next regular session of the General Assembly -- within a few weeks. Lodge gave no details of the OUTER SPACE plan -- but said it is designed to benefit the world's entire population through international cooperation on peaceful exploration of outer space.

President Eisenhower late today summoned Secretary of State Dulles to COME to the Presidential vacation retreat at Newport, Rhode Island, this Thursday morning -- for conferences on the situation in the Far East.

White House News Secretary Hagerty, in making the announcement, [redacted], characterized the situation in the Far East as serious. Today, the President and the Secretary of State donferred twice by telephone. And in Washington, Dulles met for more than an hour-and-a-half behind closed doors with top military men.

After the meeting, two members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other military leaders who were present would say only that the conference was in the nature of a briefing for Dulles, who had just returned from vacation. //

Also in Washington, Nationalist China's ambassador, Hollington Tong, paid a call at the State Department // and said afterwards that he BELIEVES the United States would help defend the offshore Quemoy islands against a Red Chinese attack. //

IN the Far East today, the Nationalist Chinese tried to land reinforcements COMPRISING some 500 troops and ammunition ON KIMMOY FROM a TROOP SHIP. CBS News correspondent, Peter Kalischer, who was aboard the TRANSPORT, reports the ship was able to put ashore only about 30 soldiers -- plus a number of newsmen // before it was driven off by Communist GUN fire from the nearby Communist-held mainland batteries. The LSM was forced back to Formosa // and Kalischer SAYS that the Communists have temporarily, but effectively, managed to cut off Quemoy ISLAND from reinforcements. He reports also that the LSM and its escort vessels fought a two-hour naval battle with Communist WARSHIPS // during which he saw one Nationalist patrol-boat hit and two Communist gunboats sunk.

17

The Nationalists later claimed 11 Communist vessels were sunk. The Red China news agency retorted with a claim that "two" Nationalist VESSELS were damaged. The Nationalists also claim that a Red invasion fleet is massing for a move against the offshore islands. And it was announced in Taipei that U.S. Marine air units have arrived on Formosa -- for joint maneuvers with Nationalist forces in the southern part of the big island, starting this Saturday.

Governor Orval Faubus of Arkansas told a news conference in Little Rock today that he has information the federal government is assembling a force of deputy marshals to enforce integration at Central High School -- if ordered to do so by the Supreme Court, when the school OPENS on September 15th. Faubus admitted such federal action was "proper" -but said he is bound by "state law" to resist any attempt at forced integration of Central High. If necessary, he said, he would close the school. The Supreme Court is now considering arguments on whether Central High MUST BE "INTEGRATED" Little Rock immediately.

55555

In Alexandria, Virginia, today, Federal District Judge Albert Bryan heard arguments for and against the admission of 30 negro children to schools in Arlington County, just across the Potomac River from Washington. An attorney for the Virginia pupil placement board argued that when the applications of the 30 children for admission to white schools were rejected, it was NOT on the basis of race, but because of a variety of other factors. An attorney representing the negro children contended that race IS the governing factor in the board's decisions. The case is seen as a major test of Virginia's Pupil Placement Law -- which has been used to place negro pupils in segregated schools, despite federal integration rulings.

In Capetown, South Africa, today, the ruling Nationalist Party chose an extreme advocate of white supremacy, Hendrik FER-VOORD, as South Africa's new Prime Minister. The 56-year-old Fer Voord will be sworn in tomorrow to succeed Johannes STRAYDOM, who died in August. The Super Segregationist

14

There was MORE racial violence in London AGAIN tonight -- but nothing compared to the outbreaks of last night and early today, when a mob of more than two-thousand whites, most of them teen-agers, went on a rampage for The 3rd Nite running against negro residents of the SLUM AREA. With property damage and injuries widespread, police have warned SIGHT-SEE-ERS to stay out of the area -- and Scotland Yard and Home Office officials will confer tomorrow on strategy to curb the race rioting.

ICELAND SENT ANOTHER NOTE OF PROTEST TO BRITAIN Today - (ABOUT TWO INCIDENTS IN The waters OFF ICELAND. The note complained the crew of an unidentified British trawler beat off a boarding attempt by Icelandic Coast Guardsmen. Another trawler, the Northern Foam, was actually boarded and captured by the Icelanders, but a British frigate steamed to its rescue, liberated the trawler, and took the Icelandic Coast Guardsmen into custody aboard the frigate. With feelings running high between Britain and Iceland over the clashes, the next move is in doubt, as Iceland attempts to enforce its new rule that no foreign vessels may fish within 12 miles of its shores. The Icelanders extended the old four-mile limit to 12 miles two days ago. The British have said they will ignore the ruling.

18

The President also signed [redacted] the 887-Million-dollar federal "aid-to-education" bill -- but said it does not do "all" that needs to be done [redacted] in an increasingly-scientific world.

7777777

The Senate Rackets Committee in Washington today heard testimony from St. Louis Teamster official Harold Gibbons, a right-hand man of Teamster President James Hoffa. [redacted] Gibbons denied charges that he used union funds to buy control of a Teamster local in St.Louis, and he rejected the testimony of earlier witnesses that he has rigged union elections and frequently used violence as a strike weapon. When Committee Counsel Robert Kennedy (THEN) read a long list of alleged hoodlums and criminals in the Teamster locals under Gibbons command [redacted] the Teamster leader replied: "If employers hire these people, we're stuck with them."

President Eisenhower today signed into law an excise tax revision bill that will cost the government 42-million dollars a year in revenues. The revisions, which include reductions of taxes on movie [redacted] tickets and whisky distilling [redacted], go into effect next [redacted] July first. // Also today, the President signed the measure raising the federal debt limit to 288-Billion dollars, [redacted] highest level in the nation's peacetime history.

// [redacted] (HURRICANE) Ella, after a passage over the mountains of Cuba, has weakened so much she has been demoted to [redacted] the status of a tropical storm. Ella is now located about 280 miles south of Miami, where she's said to pose NO immediate threat to the U.S. mainland.

19

This summer's headlines have compelled attention on the Middle East and the Far East...Yet the major prize in the political struggle between communism and the free world, is still the great industrial complex, that is GERMANY... artificially partitioned between East and West...And so for the story of Germany today, here's CBS NEWS correspondent Ernest Leiser in Bonn, West Germany.

THE U-S PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE HAS WARNED THAT THE POLIO SEASON STILL ISN'T OVER.

THE SERVICE SAID THAT A LATE-SEASON UPSWING IN PARALYTIC POLIO SHOWS EPIDEMICS STILL ARE POSSIBLE AMONG THE 40-THOUSAND AMERICANS WHO HAVE NOT HAD ANTI-POLIO INOCULATIONS. //

THE REPORT [illegible] THAT IN EACH OF THE PAST THREE WEEKS THE NUMBER OF CASES HAS BEEN HIGHER THAN THE PRECEDING WEEK...IT ALSO HAS BEEN HIGHER THAN DURING THE COMPARABLE WEEK OF 1957.

THE SERVICE SAID [illegible] ENDING AUGUST 23RD THERE WERE 144 CASES AS COMPARED TO 89 CASES IN THE SAME WEEK IN 1957.

THE HEALTH SERVICE ADDED, HOWEVER, THAT THE CURRENT NUMBER OF CASES IS SMALL BY COMPARISON WITH THE YEARS BEFORE THE SALK VACCINE WAS AVAILABLE.

That was my colleague Ernest Leiser, in Bonn Germany---[redacted]

NOW--here's a footnote to today's news..

Thos 52 american beauties vying for the title of Miss America, will make their first official public appearance tonite, in a papade down Atlantic City's famed boardwalk.. The actual competition won't start until tomorrow nite, when the girls will be judged in three categories.. Bathing suit, evening gown and talent..Their personalities will be rated later in interviews with a panel of eleven judges..

The girls represent 46 states, the cities of New York and Chieggo, the district of Columbia, Canada, and,of course, Hawaii and Alaska..

The climax of the contest comes on Saturday nite, when the judges select the successor to Marilyn Van derbur, of Denvery Colorado Miss America, 1958.

Until then, the contestants must obey the rule... forbidding them to talk to any man, including their fathers, unless acompanied by an official pageant hostess..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (LARRY LESUEUR SUBSTITUTING)

Tuesday, September 2, 1958
7:45 - 8:00

LESUEUR: And, so for the story of Germany today, here's CBS News Correspondent Earnest Leiser in Bonn, West Germany.

LEISER: Active and sometimes desperate unrest has reached a higher pitch in Eastern Germany today then at any time since the Soviets crushed the Hungarian revolution in 1956. This does not mean that a bloody uprising of the kind that swept East Berlin in Russia's German Zone back in 1953, three years before Hungary, is once again in sight. The police controls imposed by German Communist boss Walter Ulbricht seem far too tight for that now. But what it does mean, is that failing all other opportunities to demonstrate their disaffection a new wave of East Germans is streaming over the border to the West. This, despite the fact that border controls are harsher then ever before, and despite the fact that Ulbricht subordinates have also sharply reduced the legal travel that they allow from East Germany to the West German Republic. Perhaps the best measure of that unrest is the public admission by a member of the Communist Central Committee in East Berlin that the flight of intellectuals from East Germany had reached what he called "intolerable proportions." The official, Kurt Hager, party Secretary for Educational matters said that "No state can sustain such an intellectual bloodletting over the long run." Hager said that a 166 professors and instructors had fled East German universities for the West and 631 doctors had left the zone since the beginning of 1958. It may be assumed that his figures are conservative. The most prominent figure to flee the zone is the Rector or President of the University of Jena, Professor Joseph Hansel, who came West just 10 days before he was to preside at a 400th birthday anniversary of his university. The celebration was being widely publicized by the Communists as a symbol of the East Zone's continuation of the old German academic tradition. Hamel's flight therefore was a stunning blow to the Communists. I listened to him explain the reasons for his diffection after seven years at the universities head. It was clear that he left reluctantly. Two things apparently decided him to make the dramatic move: First, the way the Communists had taken over the celebration as a propaganda forum and second, a new administrative reform at the university that had made functionaries of the Communist Party, the Communist Youth Organization and the Communist Trade Union's voting members of the University Senate. One report from Berlin says that the Soviets havenow advised their East German associates to adopt a more elastic policy toward bourgeois intellectuals in order to stem the tide of deffection. Although based on pretty reliable information obviously this report cannot be confirmed. But, if true, it's not without irony. The pressure on intellectuals has been a direct response to what the East German leadership - ever obedience, thinks that the Russians want. Still some remedial action obviously has become urgent in East Germany. It's not only the intellectuals who are fleeing now in larger numbers, there has been a growing wave of deffection among the highly paid factory managers too, for reasons not altogether clear. Farmers are also coming West in greater quantities for a reason quite pelear - very intense new pressures for more rapid collectivization of agriculture. And, there's a fairly steady flow of the young people whom the East Germans need so badly to invigorate their labor force. A week ago an unusual appeal was issued to East German housewives to volunteer to work on the harvest and in stores - a pretty pelear sign of present labor shortages. Early this year, the flow of refugees had declined as travel controls were tightened and as the economic situation in East Germany showed a perceptable improvement. It's worth noting that life economically is still getting better in the Soviet Zone, but apparently the heavy hand of new Stalinism or Mao Tse-tungism or whatever ypu choose to call it, has become intolerable - even to the groups which have been granted special economic privilege in East Germany.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: That was my colleague Earnest Leiser in Bonn, Germany.

PT/n.m.

7:45 p.m. net LeSueur-Murrow 01-9.3.58
stone

Sept. 3, '58

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

Communist shore batteries on the China mainland poured another rain of shells on to the Nationalist island of Quemoy. It's been four years to the day since the Red Chinese began their vest-pocket shooting war over the Nationalist-held offshore islands in the Formosa Strait. ALSO TODAY The heaviest storm of the year, Typhoon Grace, roared over Formosa; the winds and heavy seas it carries with it have apparently delayed for the time being any threat of a Communist invasion to the offshore islands. But the threat is still there -- and growing -- and the tense situation is having a reaction around in the world.

In Washington, Defense Secretary McElroy told a news conference that if the Red Chinese are "wise" they WILL BE DETERRED in the Far East. But he added that this country has still not definitely "committed" itself to defending the offshore islands. McElroy ACKNOWLEDGED That U.S. air and naval reinforcements are being moved to the Formosa area, but said he had no comment on a statement made earlier today by the American commander in Formosa, Admiral Roland Smoot.

17

Admiral Smoot said flatly that American help is coming to The Nationalists to overcome "the current situation" of Communist pressure on the offshore islands. When asked if he thought the Communists could blockade or capture the islands, Smoot said: "I think they can do NOTHING." And he added: "We will lick them". But he did not say what he meant by this -- nor did he go into details as to the type of American help he referred to.

At the Presidential vacation Headquarters in Newport, Rhode Island, White House News Secretary Hagerty refused comment on Admiral Smoot's statements. // In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles summoned representatives of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization countries to a meeting that was described as an "exchange of views" on the situation around Formosa. // Also in Washington, the Air Force announced // that Air Force Vice-Chief of Staff, General Curtis LeMay, will leave for Formosa tomorrow morning aboard a jet transport plane. // No announcement of the nature of LeMay's mission, but it is known he is considered as a strategic bombing expert.

Great Britain announced that a battalion of troops is being transferred from Singapore to Hong Kong. → (MORE)

The official reason is to give the troops a "change of scene". But most observers think the transfer is a precautionary MOVE against Red China's threatening actions in the FAR EAST.

In Cairo today, President Nasser of the United Arab Republic made a radio broadcast sharply accusing the U.S. of "direct aggression" against Red China in the skirmishing off Formosa. Nasser went on to defend Peiping's claim to Formosa, saying that anyone who "HAS STUDIED geography" -- [redacted] -- knows that Formosa always belonged to China. The U.A.R. President delivered his anti-western Broadcast just as UN Secretary-General Hammarskjold arrived in Cairo for conferences dealing with his Middle-East mission.

There was a new sign of decreasing tension in Lebanon today. Opposition leaders announced a partial end to the 115-day-old general strike in Beirut -- and said that, beginning tomorrow, stores and other businesses may stay open during the mornings. But they'll still have to shut-down in the afternoons. The opposition called the general strike last May, at the height of the anti-government violence -- and shop-keepers who refused to go along with it were subjected to terrorist attacks.

16

The American Legion's annual convention in Chicago today heard three speakers call for strengthening the free world's defenses against Communism. Former President Harry Truman told the legionnaires the Eisenhower administration is "misleading" the American people about the state of our military power -- and called for a build-up in that power "to surpass any potential enemy of the free world." The Truman position was seconded by AFL-CIO leader George Meany, who said the United States must become so strong that it can "convince the Soviet war lords that aggression against us will not pay."

A third speaker, Madame Chiang Kai-Shek, wife of the Chinese Nationalist generalissimo, said the Communists are trying to "ride" rough-shod over the ramparts of the free world". And she added: "if this state of affairs is allowed to continue, and the foreign policy pronouncements of the United States are made to look "ridiculous" in the eyes of the world, then Communist tyranny" will eventually overpower the ENTIRE world.

~~The State Department today announced a series of changes in its list of items embargoed for trade with the Communist world. Some items were made easier to trade and some were clamped down on -- as part of a continuing adjustment based on the war-strategic value of various items.~~ items.

19

55555

United Automobile Workers President Walter Reuther announced in Detroit today that next Tuesday, his union will make a "public" report on its long-drawn-out contract talks with the Big Three auto makers. The auto workers have been on the job without a contract since last May, when the old agreement expired --and negotiations since then have MADE little progress. The UAW is expected soon to announce a strike deadline and the name of the manufacturer at which THE STRIKE will be directed.

~~Teamster Union~~ Vice-President Harold Gibbons of St. Louis, told the Senate ~~Rackets Committee~~ today that he likes to try to ~~rehabilitate~~ hoodlums and ~~criminals. And this, he said, is the reason~~ so many of them have positions of trust in the ~~locals~~ he commands. Gibbons also ~~testified~~ that in 1952 and 1953, he allowed his St. Louis staff to carry guns -- in what he called an ~~effort to~~ "clean the hoodlums" out of Teamster operations there. And he said that former Teamster President Dave Beck approved the campaign. The ~~Rackets Committee has been looking into the background of~~ repeated waves of violence -- which it claims accompanied Gibbons's rise to power in St. Louis -- ~~and as a number one assistant to Teamster President~~ James Hoffa.

17

Teamster Union Vice-President Harold Gibbons today faced a direct challenge from the Senate Rackets Committee as to his control of union locals in St. Louis. Gibbons admitted that when he was elected President of the St. Louis Teamsters Council last January, he MIGHT have done so in violation of the union's constitution. And he said he would be willing to have a new election. But he said he would NOT allow a number of VOTES CHALLENGED in the first election to be thrown out IF THEY achieved the election of his rival. Earlier, Gibbons testified that the reason so many hoodlums hold positions of trust in the locals he commands is that he likes to try to "rehabilitate" such men. And he said that in 1952 and 1953, he allowed his St. Louis staff to carry guns - in what he called an effort to "clean the hoodlums" out of Teamster operations there.

566666

Racial integration proceeded without incident in a number of southern schools today -- while legal maneuvers were carried ON, aimed at blocking it in segregationist strongholds. Negroes attended white schools without incident -- or with only minor demonstrations -- today in parts of North Carolina, Kentucky, and Arkansas. // In Alexandria, Virginia, Federal District Judge Frederick Bryan heard a second day of arguments ON the admission of 30 negro students to Arlington County schools. The case is a major test of Virginia's "Pupil Placement Law," which allows the state to dodge the integration rulings of federal courts by assigning pupils to segregated schools. The state is trying to prove that the question of RACE does not affect its assignments of pupils. // In Norfolk, Virginia, Federal District Judge Walter Hoffman rejected the local school board's appeal FOR A delay until next year in school integration. But Judge Hoffman said he may reconsider his ruling if the Supreme Court grants a delay in integration to Little Rock's Central High school. // That case is now under consideration by the high court. // And in Arkansas, the federal government is reported recruiting deputy U.S. marshals for possible use at Central High in case it reopens on an integrated basis.

18

Racial violence spread today to new parts of LONDON, ENGLAND.

It was the fifth straight day of anti-negro demonstrations in London, carried out in spite of THE mobilization of 12-hundred policemen to meet the emergency. Prime Minister MacMillan MET TONITE with Home Secretary Richard Butler and later MacMillan announced there would be a severe crackdown on lawless elements stirring up the racial-discord.

The Prime Minister also indicated that Britain would review its immigration policies but did not go into detail.

British trawlers continued to fish in THOSE troubled waters inside Iceland's new 12-mile territorial limit. There were no new incidents TODAY, but in London, Britain rejected Iceland's protest against the protection of BRITISH TRAWLERS BY GUNBOATS.

And, in a diplomatic note, the British again refused to recognize Iceland's new claim of extended territorial waters. The angry Icelanders are reported determined to continue their STRUGGLE. Icelandic newspapers CALL Britain a "robber nation".

The French Cabinet today gave its final approval to Premier DeGaulle's proposed constitution for a Fifth Republic - strengthening the powers of the French Presidency and downgrading the National Assembly.

(MORE)

88888888

DeGaulle will present the draft constitution to the nation in a BROADCAST tomorrow. It's expected the document will be approved in a referendum by the people of France and her overseas territories on September 28th.

At the atoms-for-peace Congress in Geneva today, American and Russian delegates read papers predicting tremendous advances for industry, agriculture, and medicine, through the use of radioactive isotopes. A great deal of hitherto secret data on peaceful uses of the atom was made public by representatives of each of the major nuclear powers. U.S. Atomic Energy Commissioner Willard Libby told the Congress, that this country wants to reserve the right to set off peacetime nuclear explosions // in the event an East-West ban on nuclear weapons testing // is agreed upon.

30 secs

At the United Nations today, this country's UN ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge formally asked for prompt General Assembly consideration of a four-point U.S. program for peaceful control of outer space -- when the Assembly opens its regular session later this month. The Soviet Union is preparing a rival space plan // which will also be laid before the Assembly.

16

999999999

30

Tropical storm Ella whirled out of western Cuba late today, and the weather bureau in Miami predicts that Ella will regain the strength of a full-fledged hurricane sometime tonight over the Gulf of Mexico. The big storm, which has left at least five dead and seven injured in Cuba, is NOW located some 400 miles southwest of Miami, and is spreading squally weather and gale winds over a wide area from southern Florida through Cuba. Ships in the gulf of Mexico and residents of the northern shore of the Gulf have been [redacted] told to keep close in touch with advisories on the progress of the storm. //

8

(1)

The white caps now kicking up the seas around Formosa and the off-shore islands, as advance billing for Typhoon Grace, may yet prove more of a deterrent to the Chinese communists. // then the repeated warnings from Washington, // that they'd better watch their step..

[redacted]

This country is still keeping the Chinese communists guessing as to whether we will go to war over [redacted] Kimmoy and the close-in islands, while at the same time warning the [redacted] mainlanders, that an attack will endanger peace. //. But [redacted] President Eisenhower has cryptically refused to say at what point this country would fight..

[redacted] thus far, these warnings have failed to stop the Red Chinese MOVES [redacted] around the off-shore islands...And they may go on probing until they strike american steel..

Tomorrow, Secretary of State Dulles, after a full briefing on the Far East, by the joint chiefs of staff, will fly to Newport, Rhode, Island for a heart-to-heart talk with the President. //. Mr. Dulles has already said TWICE, that a communist invasion attempt on the off-shore islands would be a hazardous move //..that might not be confined to limited war..

Presumably the Dulles-Eisenhower conference tomorrow may produce a more direct warning to the communists, t[redacted]o [redacted]....But there's [redacted] no indication [redacted] that even THAT will stop the Chinese communists from practicing their form of "Brinksmanship". This [redacted] country is not treaty-bound to protect the off-shore islands, so nobody knows where the BRINK, [redacted] really is..

Among [redacted] the problems of the United States is not just Red China's implacable hatred, but the lukewarmness of our European allies, over fighting a war for Chiang Kai Shek and Formosa..

That's not to say that Australia and New Zealand might "not" automatically support any american action against a common Pacific enemy, But Britain's attitude in the past has been strongly against any [redacted] dissipation of [redacted] American blood and energy in [redacted] Chiang Kai Shek's cause..

[redacted] Some of the facts in the Formosa strait are outstripping the U.S. warnings [redacted] to the communists [redacted].. President Eisenhower has disclosed that with american encouragement, Chiang Kai Shek has now stationed a third of his combat troops on the off-shore islands.. [redacted]

Their loss would obviously have a demoralizing effect on the Formosa stronghold.// But american correspondents, among them Peter Kalisher of CBS NEWs, have disclosed that the nationalists are now having a difficult, if not impossible time, trying to re-inforce their troops on Kimmoy with new infusions of men and ammunition.. Their convoys from Formosa have been successfully interdicted, by communist shore and naval fire.// And Mao Tse Dung is probablyNOW encouraged to think that he's been successful thus far--- in process which he hopes will lead to the collapse of Formosa.

So aside from ANY more direct U.S. warning to Bayping, that may emanate from Dulles-Eisenhower conference, tomorrow, some possible military courses of action will have to come under STUDY discussion, to save what now appears to be a deteriorating situation around the well-defended, but temporarily isolated off-shore islands..

There are a number of possible courses open to the United States.. Mainly concerned with keeping open the nationalist communications with their big garrisons on Kimmoy and Matsu..

The United States may resort to a move similar to the Kind we made early in world war two--

That IS

The armed escorting by american warships of convoys to the offshore islands... Hitler protested against it when we started escorting British convoys to Iceland in 1941, a U-Boat even sank one of our destroyers. But neither the U.S. nor Germany went to war over that...

This country might go further and take part in the defense of Kimmoy itself. This could involve the use of american aircraft and artillery to defend the island, at the same time avoiding counter-ATTACKS on the COMMUNIST mainland..

If the Off-shore islands were still in danger of being over-run, this country might then attack the immediate source of the trouble and bomb the chinese mainland ports, airfields and artillery positions. But its still a question whether these positions, reinforced by concrete over the past eight years, could be KNOCKED-OUT BY conventional WEAPONS... In that extreme case the U.S. might have to use the tactical and small atomic weapons, that we have long threatened to employ in any new war... But before that happens--there'll probably be hundreds of conferences for a Summit conference..

This is Larry LeSueur--- And NOW here's a footnote to the News..

Like many a fisherman, President Eisenhower found out it always pays to ask the locals what bait to use. The President went trolling today off Block Island in a navy cutter... After two unsuccessful hours,

He asked the Navy to find out what bait a successful local boat was using. The ANNA F. of noank, connecticutt recommended small white lures...The President radioed to the Navy to ask for some, AND said be sure to pay for them." The answer came back.."Lures obtained-- but payment refused.." The President Then proudly caught a fish.

The President then requested the name of the skipper, and B.F.

Rathbun of The ANNA F. may get a letter in a day or two..

Good Nite

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., Sept, 4, 1958

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

Red China was warned that American forces will help defend Quemoy, IF a Communist attack on the island is ~~deemed~~ DEEMED by President Eisenhower to constitute a threat to Formosa itself. This applies...not only to Quemoy...but to ALL the Nationalist-held offshore islands. The warning was contained in a special, 1-thousand-word statement...written by Secretary of State Dulles and authorized by the President. It was issued at the vacation White House...in NEWPORT Rhode Island...after Mr. Eisenhower and the secretary of state conferred for almost two hours. [redacted] the statement does not spell-out the FORM which American intervention might take... says simply that if the President finds Formosa is imperiled, the United States will take such action as is "timely and effective." It was emphasized that President Eisenhower has "not yet reached" the conclusion that Formosa is threatened. Said Dulles: "The President and I earnestly hope that the Chinese Communist regime will not again as in the case of Korea defy the basic principle upon which world order depends--- namely, that armed force should not be used to achieve territorial ambitions." Dulles said the "naked use of force" by Communist China would forecast a widespread use of force, which would endanger vital Free World positions and the security of the United States. The statement called on Peiping...again...to join the United States in a mutual renunciation of force, except in cases of self-defense. The statement added, THAT IT IS "apparent" that Nationalist forces...with the "substantial" being provided by the United States...CAN contain the logistical support [redacted] Communists, if they do attack.

→

The crowd of reporters...who heard Mr. Dulles read the statement... were then briefed by "a high American official". The official requested That his name NOT be used. But for a first-hand report on what HE said, we switch to CBS News Correspondent Robert Pierpoint in Newport, Rhode Island.

Tape runs
Ends on cue: "---to CBS News in N.Y."

The announcement that Red China is extending its territorial limits to twelve miles at sea...abandoning the old three-mile limit...was made this morning by Radio Peiping. It specifically mentions Quemoy and Matsu... said they fall WITHIN the new limit. The announcement reiterated that Formosa belongs to mainland China...declared the waters around Formosa, as well as around the offshore islands, to be Red territory...said foreign military vessels and planes can transverse this territory ONLY with the CONSENT of the Peiping government.

President Garcia of the Philippines said today that his country is ready to comply with its treaty obligations to the United States--- particularly those contained in their mutual defense pact. Garcia expressed "deep concern" for peace in the Pacific...said, at the same time, that events in the Formosa Strait do not "presently" appear to HOLD "cause for alarm." The Philippines president made THIS statement after reviewing the Far East situation with his National Security Council.

An undisclosed number of U.S. Air Force jet fighters arrived in the Philippines today, at Clark Field. The field is headquarters for the 13th Air Force. Advance elements of the 13th Air Force are NOW on Formosa.

In Washington, the Defense Department announces: No more dependents of American servicemen will be allowed to go to Formosa "under the present circumstances." The department calls this "a normal precautionary measure."

Madame Chiang Kai-shek, wife of the Nationalist leader, told the American Legion convention in Chicago today that the future of Asia "can well be sealed" according to what happens in the Formosa Strait. And the chain reaction, she said, "may decide the destiny of mankind for the millennium."

The American Legion... at its closing session today elected Preston J. Moore of Stillwater, Oklahoma, as its new national commander.

In Detroit, the United Auto Workers Union has summoned its 23-man executive board to a meeting next Wednesday...at which it may set a strike deadline against one of the "big three" auto companies. Due to a stalemate in negotiations, union members have been working without a contract since Memorial Day. In calling The meeting of the Executive Board, Union President Walter Reuther said the U.A.W. "recognizes that a strike is a serious matter and should be authorized only as a last resort." [redacted], WHPN all methods HE SAID of reaching an honorable agreement WITHOUT a strike have been exhausted." Reuther said that worker councils...representing Ford, General Motors and Chrysler...HAD asked for authority to strike last month...but that the decision had been delayed in hopes OF a settlement. The big auto companies are about to go into production on their new 1959 models.

→

A new ruling on public school integration. THIS time, in Arlington County, Virginia...just across the Potomac River from Washington. U.S. District Judge Albert Bryan [redacted] today authorized Arlington County to open its schools next Monday on a SEGREGATED [redacted] basis. However, he said this authorization is to be without prejudice to the applications of thirty Negro children who want to enter white schools in the county. The judge has not made his final decision...says he wants to wait first until the Supreme Court has acted in the Little Rock case; the high court will hear more arguments in that case a week from today. Judge Bryan said that...in the meantime...he wants to give [redacted] his own case "very meticulous study."

Tonight, the Justice Department took its first court action...under the Civil Rights Act passed by Congress last year. The department filed suit in the [redacted] U.S. District Court in Columbus, Georgia...accused officials of Terrell County, Georgia, of "discriminatory practices" in refusing to register Negroes to vote. The suit says the Negroes had demonstrated themselves to be qualified to register...and it seeks an injunction, prohibiting the voting registrars from barring the Negroes ---three teachers and a civilian employe of the Marine Corps--from registering.

In Alabama...[redacted] James Wilson, the Negro sentenced to die for robbing an elderly white woman of a dollar and 95 cents, has won an indefinite stay of execution. He WAS scheduled to die in the electric chair tomorrow morning. [redacted] He won a stay when the Alabama [redacted] Supreme Court said no decision would be handed down today on his request for a rehearing. That automatically put the electrocution off.

The latest weather advisory on Ella [redacted] places the storm in the Gulf of Mexico...450 miles [redacted] south of Biloxi, Mississippi. SHE IS [redacted] moving to the northwest at 12 to 14 miles an hour. No longer a hurricane, Ella's highest winds are estimated at between 40 and 70 miles an hour. Small craft from B rownsville, Texas to Pensacola, Florida are warned to stay in port. Although Hila is not a hurricane now, the Weather Bureau SAYS that [redacted] conditions are still favorable for her to regain hurricane force during the next 24 hours. //

ONE minute

[The U.S. Embassy in Beirut announces an American gift of two and a half million [redacted] dollars to the Lebanese Government, "to help it maintain 'essential' government services."

And Great Britain tonight announced that it will grant India [redacted] 112-million dollars in aid during the next seven months to help India carry-out its five-year development program.]

In France today, [redacted] the French [redacted] FIFTH republic. MOVED CLOSER TO REALITY. —

For a direct report on that story, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

(Tape runs 4:32 [redacted]
(Ends on cue: "--to CBS News in N.Y."

7/5 3:15

And this is Larry Lesueur - Now here's a a footnote to the news:

Dogs and mice have been going up in rockets, and now even WHALES are flying..

A Six-foot, seven inch whale flew into New York today from California, had a comfortable trip on a cargo plane, resting on a foam rubber mattress.. Bertha, the flying whale is one-year-old and is destined to become an attraction at the New York acquairium. Doctor Carlton Ray, the assistant acquarium director held her flipper in flight, and said he frequently cooled her off with about 15 gallons of sea water from her home town--The Pacific Ocean..

Goodnite.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Thursday, September 4, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... The crowd of reporters who heard Mr. Dulles read the statement, were then briefed by a high American official. The official requested that his name not be used. But for a first-hand report on what he said we switch to CBS News correspondent Robert Pierpoint in Newport, Rhode Island.

PIERPOINT: That background briefing here today by a high ranking American official made it clear that there are several conditions under which the United States might have to fight Communist China. Only one of them is an attack on Quemoy or Matsu. If, for example, Formosa were attacked from Communist Chinese airfields the official says the United States might bomb Communist mainland concentrations. With the Communists building more and more airfields opposite Formosa and bringing in more and more Russian-built planes, this is a distinct possibility. Here's another possibility: America is now convoying supplies to the beleaguered Nationalist island of Quemoy by U.S. Navy escort. As the Communists gain greater air control over Quemoy and as their surface ships make bolder forays toward the Nationalist positions, these U.S. Navy ships run the risk of attack by the Communists. This is even more true after today's announcement by Radio Peking that Communist China is extending its territorial limits from three miles off the mainland to a distance of twelve miles offshore. This move places all of Quemoy inside Chinese territorial waters and gives the Communists further excuse to attack American naval convoys headed to Quemoy. But that high official declared today that the United States would refuse to recognize this unilateral extension of territory and would continue to send naval convoys to Quemoy. If the Communists hit those convoys the U.S. would react, said the official, very much as we do when American aircraft are attacked in international air space, namely, we would fight back. Finally, there's the question of what America would do if the Communists launched an assault against Quemoy or Matsu. Here the high ranking official went further than the statement by Secretary of State Dulles. He seemed to commit the United States to taking direct military action if the Chinese Nationalists found they could not hold out on Quemoy or Matsu by themselves. However, the official added that he did not want to qualify or subtract or add to the statemsnt authorized by the President, which merely says the President has not yet determined whether we shall defend Quemoy or Matsu. This, of course, leaves the situation somewhat confused, which is very likely the effect that the Administration hopes to achieve. Since the Taichan Islands evacuation three years ago, the U.S. Government has purposely refused to state what it would do if the Communists invaded Quemoy or Matsu. It has several times, and in several ways, indicated we might fight. But it has never quite committed us to do so. Up until now this strategy has worked; at least the Communists have not attacked. Whether this was because they were not sure of our reaction if they did or simply that they were not ready to attack we cannot tell. If things continue to heat up in the Formosa Straits, however, we may soon find out which side, if either, is bluffing. Both Mr. Dulles and the President say they earnestly hope the Communists will not attack.

This is Bob Pierpoint in Newport and now back to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: ... In France today, the Fifth French Republic moved closer to reality, and for a direct report on that story we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: Premier Charles de Gaulle opened the referendum campaign for a new constitution here in Paris today, in an unusually unspectacular and, indeed, disappointing show. Whether one is for or against de Gaulle one can generally expect an exciting and excited appearance, for the General is a colorful and controversial figure and his brainstrust includes some highly successful and imaginative stage managers. But, today, this show was a flop. Not only as a spectacle, but more importantly, as evidence of a lack of enthusiasm for the constitution itself. Before we examine that historic document on this birthday of the Fifth Republic of France, let's get an eye witness report on the ceremony itself, from CBS News correspondent Lou Cioffi who watched it from the reporters' stand right in front of de Gaulle's platform.

CIOFFI: The reaction of the people of Paris to the de Gaulle speech depended on where you stood. If you were near the center of the Place de la Republique, where the speech took place, the people were shouting "Vive de Gaulle" and "yes" to the constitution. If you happened to be in the crowd much further back, behind lines of helmeted policemen, then the reaction was "no" to de Gaulle and to the constitution. It was a curious spectacle. Three police lines had been set up around the square. Those with special passes, issued by the government, were allowed closest to where de Gaulle spoke. The second space was reserved for the members of various veterans' organizations. And back behind the last barrier were the remainder of the people of Paris, many of them Communists. The group in front cheered de Gaulle's name, cheered his speech, but not as enthusiastically as might be hoped. The second group spent most of their time with their backs to the speakers trying to shout down the cries of "no" and "Down with de Gaulle" with the singing of the "Marseillaise". Flying squads of war veterans, wearing arm bands on which were printed the Cross of Lorraine, moved through the crowds. They viciously attacked one small group of people who smuggled themselves into the second tier, with a sign that said: "No." At the rear there was some scuffling between the crowds and the police, but not too much. The crowd was estimated by the police to be about 150,000 people. This reporter believes it was closer to 25,000. A small crowd for such a big day.

Now, back to David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The speech was small too, just like the crowd. It was short, running about 25-minutes; at least half was devoted to a review of the history of the four republics that preceded this fifth one. De Gaulle went to great pains to explain that the republican form of government was the true guarantor of freedom and progress for France. And this sounded strange to American ears, for, of course, the republican form of government is the guarantor of freedom, why should it be necessary to argue this point in the year 1958 in France, the European cradle of the republic. Is it because Frenchmen are not yet convinced of this? Or is it because de Gaulle is sensitive to charges that he himself is an autocrat rather than a republican.

The whole performance was strange and rang throughout with an unreal tone. De Gaulle blamed the death of the Fourth Republic on the anarchy of the political parties. Yet no republic is possible without free political parties. De Gaulle spoke of the people of Paris and France who had come to the square today. But the police were obviously afraid of the people and were keeping them away from de Gaulle. There were thousands of riot troops to keep them away. The square itself, the Square of the Republic, was almost empty and perhaps that's why the words spoken there echoed so hollowly. A painful moment to watch and hear was the moment in the speech when de Gaulle spoke of the new community of overseas France that his constitution would create. A vote "yes" he said would bring that community into existence and give a better life for the once subject peoples. "But," said de Gaulle, "those peoples are free to vote "no" if they wish and to be independent." As these words were spoken, there was complete silence in the crowd. De Gaulle's historic offer evoked nothing but pained embarrassment on the part of his supporters, who do not favor independence. De Gaulle thus finds himself criticized by the opposition for not going far enough, for not extending the offer of independence to Algeria, for example, while his supporters are unhappy that he's extended it to the rest of Africa. Like most men in the middle, he's made no one very happy today. The good ship Constitution was launched but it doesn't look like a very Bon Voyage ahead.

Now, back to CBS News in New York.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

Concern over the Formosa situation was expressed by two prominent members of Congress--Montana's Senator Mike Mansfield and Oregon's Senator Wayne Morse. BOTH are Democrats. Senator Mansfield said that President Eisenhower should [redacted] summon Democratic and Republican leaders back to Washington...and consult with them before deciding whether to defend the Nationalist-held offshore islands...such as Matsu and Quemoy. Circumstances, said Mansfield, have changed since 1955...when Congress gave the President authority to fight for areas he deemed related to Formosa's defense. The Montana senator contended that the small offshore islands...like Quemoy...are of little military value...and that American defense of them would be a question of psychology and saving face. "I hope," said Mansfield, "that we will not be carried away by such factors." He referred to Secretary Dulles' statement yesterday...that if Mr. Eisenhower deemed Quemoy vital to the defense of Formosa, such determination would be followed by action "both timely and effective." "The situation," said Mansfield, "may be coming to a head." He felt that any consultation with Congressional leaders by the President should include the chairmen and ranking members of the House and Senate armed services and foreign affairs committees.

→

Senator Morse proposed that the Formosa dispute be submitted by the United States to the International Court of Justice at the Hague. He referred to a recent speech by Attorney General Rogers, advocating that more disputes be taken to the International Court...said he heartily agreed and that the principle should now be applied to the situation in the Formosa Strait. Senator Morse said that if the International Court of Justice finds that it does not have jurisdiction, then we should try to get a political settlement through the U.N. (Mansfield, incidentally, doesn't think the question SHOULD be taken to the U.N. says THAT would, in a sense, be giving Communist China recognition.)

Senator H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey said today that he believes the Administration WILL get in touch with Congressional leaders, if the Formosa situation gets much worse. Smith is the ranking Republican member of the Senate Far East Subcommittee. He saw Secretary of State Dulles today for about half an hour. .said afterward that the United States "definitely" will defend Quemoy, if the Chinese Communists try to invade. But Senator Smith declined, under reporters' questioning, to say whether Mr. Dulles had told him this was a firm decision.

Under-secretary of State Christian Herter said in a speech tonight that Red China is "likely to be greatly mistaken", if it expects to find a weak spot in the Formosa Strait. There is also, he said, "a real possibility" that the Chinese Communists may use force against South Korea and the new countries of Southeast Asia.

On Formosa, the foreign minister of Nationalist China says the United States has made its stand "very clear." [redacted] He told a news conference that, by making "certain military dispositions," the United States had demonstrated its "readiness to deal with any further Chinese Communist adventure by timely and effective counter-blows." Earlier, a Nationalist spokesman of lower rank had called for more clear-cut assurance than was afforded by Dulles' statement yesterday. Apparently the foreign minister wanted to off-set this earlier, critical remark.

A spokesman for the Nationalist Navy said today that his supply line to Quemoy.../.and the other offshore islands.../.is now threatened. "There is," he said, "a limit beyond which we alone will not be able to solve the problem."// He surprised reporters by saying that the Nationalist garrison on Quemoy now numbers 100-thousand men.

CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reported today...in a broadcast from Taipei.../.that the United States will soon have Ajax-Nike missiles on Formosa, to bolster the island's anti-aircraft defense. Kalischer said // that these missiles.../.which carry CONVENTIONAL warheads...will for the time being, at least, be in the hands of U.S. troops.

Matsu had an air raid alert today, but no bombs were dropped. Quemoy was shelled again by Communist artillery, though not on the scale of the bombardment earlier in the week.

[redacted]

In Washington this afternpon, a top Administration official said that Communist air bases on the mainland would be bombed almost immediately, if they were used for launching an air attack on Quemoy. The official declined use of his name. He hinted that Chinese Nationalist planes would carry out these raids on the mainland. U.S. fighters and bombers would take part only after President Eisenhower had ordered the action as essential to Formosa's defense.

In Russia, the entire Soviet press and radio levelling a drumfire of denunciation at the United States. The party newspaper Pravda warns this country "not to risk a test of strength and expect an easy victory." "The Soviet Union," it says, "will not calmly look at military preparations in the Pacific, which washes its shores." The Army newspaper Red Star, calls all Communist armies "invincible"...says only "lunatics" would provoke them. And tonight the Moscow radio says that Russia, if necessary, will come to Red China's aid with "all necessary strength".

The British Foreign Office said today that Great Britain "fully shares" America's concern over "any attempt to impose territorial changes by use of force in the Far East." Sidney Smith, foreign secretary of Canada, told the → Canadian House of Commons that his government has advised the United States of the great need for restraint in the present situation. He said, in reply to questions, that Canada has made no commitment in respect to any conflict which may break out in the Formosa Strait.

At the vacation White House, President Eisenhower was again briefed by telephone on the Formosa situation. // News Secretary Hagerty announced that the President will fly back to Washington tomorrow morning for a series of White House conferences. // Mr. Eisenhower will have lunch with Secertary Dulles.. and he will also confer with Attorney General William Rogers. Hagerty said that in seeing Rogers, the President will "discuss various matters before the courts on the subject of integration." He declined further details. // Mr. Eisenhower is due back in Newport tomorrow night.

Today...in Montgomery, Alabama...the Reverend Martin Luther King was fined 10 dollars and costs in City Court. The Negro integration leader had been convicted of refusing...earlier this week... to obey a police order, directing him to move from outside the City Hall courtroom. King told the JUDGE he could not conscientiously pay the fine for an offense which, he said, he did not commit. And he elected → to go to jail instead. At that moment, a person who ~~chooses to remain anonymous~~ paid the fine. And King was released.

In VanBuren, Arkansas, today, about fifty white students continued their boycott of the high school to which 13 Negroes have been assigned. They milled around outside the school, and none of the Negro students showed up for class. The effigy of a Negro was burned on the school grounds last night. Today, the striking students sent a telegram to Governor Faubus...asking for help. "Things are getting serious here," the telegram said. "We need help immediately." The KIND of help they wanted was not specified.

Governor Faubus said in an interview ~~tonight~~ Thursday...in HIS opinion...the feeling against forced school integration in Little Rock is stronger than it was a year ago.

High winds from the tropical storm "Ella" struck inland tonight, along the ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ upper Texas coast. Winds in Galveston ranged up to 48 miles an hour...with blinding rain squalls at other coastal points. But the forcasters now say that Ella is NOT likely to regain hurricane force. Tides, however, will continue to rise along the upper Texas coast, ~~XXXX~~ reaching 4 to 6 feet from Corpus Christi to Sabine, Texas. Three to → four-foot tides are expected elsewhere on the Texas and Louisiana coasts. All small craft from Brownsville to New Orleans are warned to stay in port.

Communist East Germany today proposed that the Big Four powers...AND West Germany...meet to discuss a World War Two peace treaty for all of Germany. The East German proposal was made in separate notes to the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union...as well as to West Germany. The meeting...as envisaged by East Germany...would be exploratory. It would decide "on what basis and in what manner the two Germanies could take part in the talks." No specific date...or place...for a meeting was suggested. The West does not recognize East Germany. And, in the past, such notes from the East German regime have been ignored.

Cairo newspapers say that the talk which U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold had with President Nasser last night was "useful and frank." Hammarskjold was to see Nasser again today...and then fly tomorrow to Israel...the next stop on his Middle East peace mission.

Well. the Labor Day full-moon and tide period, that the Chinese Nationalists predicted WAS favorable to a communist invasion of the off-shore islands, HAS come and gone. Interrupted, of course, by the high winds of Typhoon Grace, which definitely upset any potential invasion time-table..

If the D-Day experiences in Normandie are any criterion for amphibious operations, Red China probably wouldn't consider another attempt until the moon is again full and the tides, high... The dark of the moon, of cours would conceal an attacker, but darkness cuts down ~~the~~ GNV efficiency of of an invader, striking out over strange territory, even more than it does GN A defender... And doubtless the defenders of the off-shore islands have erected so many underwater barricades against invasion craft in the past few years, that the communists would need exceptionally high tides, to land their men and tanks anywhere near the beaches..

But whether or not their invasion time-table was upset--the chinese communists have NOW resorted to legalisms, to maintain their initiative.. But their declaration of a 12 mile territorial limit from their coasts, doesn't change the physical situation, one Whit..

(2)

A one-sided drawing of dotted lines on a map, means absolutely nothing, unless the communists can control the extended area... Iceland, for example, simply doesn't have enough gun-boats to control its one-sided extension of exclusive fishing grounds to 12 miles...But the Icelanders haven't even thought of upsetting international precedents by extending their territorial limits to 12 miles, [redacted]...Icelands territorial limits, remain where theu have been for a long time, at four miles...

Actually, of course, there is NO international agreement on the question...Nations have been arguing about it for years, and still are. [redacted] Exclusive fishing claims run all the way from Three to 200 miles by some south american nations...And Soviet bloc countries claim 12 miles..

Last Spring, an international conference was held in Geneva among 86 nations in the hopes of getting international agreement on [redacted] coastal limits...It was fruitless... It broke down completely without a two-thirds majority for any proposal..

It may be, that because of the possible up-setting of their invasion time-table, the Chinese communists aimed their 12-mile legal declaration at Britain..

Certainly Britain now has cause to worry about its off-shore crown colony of Hong Kong.// Altho London recognizes Bayping, British reluctance to let the United States down, has been principally responsible for the absence of an all-out brawl at the United Nations over who should represent China.//..For several years now, the British have supported what has become a traditional american proposal, not to consider the subject, during the current U.N. Assembly session...And the voting margins against debating the subject of Chinese representation have never even been close... The Subject is on the U.N. Assembly agenda again this year, and if the British continue to disregard Bayping's pressure, the results are likely to be THE same...The Arab League, under Nasser's leadership, might cast a unified vote in favor of such a debate although the United States is still confident that its now customary proposal for a moratorium on Chinese representation will carry the day..

But in the event of the U.S becoming involved in war with Red China the United Nations might not be the most favorable place for a debate...It might prrove most embarrassing to our friends and allies, if Russia hailed us Before the U.N. on charges of aggression against Red China../

In that case, the usual U.S. moratorium on a discussion of chinese representation, might break down under the pressure..

Red China's invasion time-table for the off-shore islands may or may not have been upset by Typhoon Grace..The Facts are that the communists seem to be provoking this country into some kind of attack. Their isolation of the big nationalist garrison on Kimmoy, by shore and naval fire, is bringing us ever closer to the point where we may have to help Formosa, reinforce those troops..Its a known fact that troop morale always crumbles when they think they're cut-off.. And nobody is capable of taking sustained shell-fire forever, especially if all the noise is being made by the enemy..During the early days of the London Blitz for example, the British sent destroyers up the Thames to London Bridge, not because their [redacted] guns were capable of knocking-down the high-flying german NITE bombers, but becuase their drum-fire was deemed a necessity to the morale of the citizens of London..

[redacted] No matter what stringent security precautions the chinese nationalists employ over their Kimmoy Troops, they must be reinforced and encourageed, or eventually they'll crack.. It may eventually be necessary for the 7th fleet to escort Nationalist warships through the communist ring of fire around Kimmoy and Matsu... This is Larry

SO

LeSueur

Now here's a foot note to the News..

There was one time the United States did obtain authority beyond the traditional three-mile limit. All our coasts - It was during the prohibition era. Treaties were negotiated with neighboring countries to allow jurisdaction against foreign vessels anchored in rum-row, for the purpose of preventing smuggling...

Even in this case, however, some of the treaties were careful to restate the fundamental United Stztes recognition of the three-mile Limit...

Goodnite/

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Sept. 8, 1958

This is the news:

Premier Khrushchev today warned the United States, that an attack on Communist China, would be regarded as an attack on the Soviet Union. #

Khrushchev's warning was contained in a note to President Eisenhower, delivered at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow. ~~A State Department spokesman says the note has been received...and that it is being forwarded to the President at the vacation White House in Newport, Rhode Island.~~

The Moscow radio quotes Khrushchev as saying that United States action in the Far East constitutes "an open provocation." Khrushchev ~~says~~ calls Communist China "a great friend, ally and neighbor"...and that for this reason, an attack on China is "tantamount to an attack against ~~him~~ Russia." ~~Moscow Embassy~~ A stable peace in the Far East, he says, is "unthinkable" until American military forces are withdrawn from Formosa and from the Formosa Strait. / Khrushchev says that mankind "is again confronted with a direct threat of war." He urges the United States to display "reasonableness." And he proposes that the Formosa question be discussed in the United Nations. Khrushchev refers to "the practice of rushing U.S. naval and air force units from one end of the world to the other." The United Nations, he says, "should require naval and air force units to be kept within national boundaries."

—7

The vacation White House...in Newport, Rhode Island...has been quick to issue a statement in response to the Khrushchev note. / The statement blames "unprovoked military action" by the Chinese Communists for the development of the present dangerous situation. / It says, "The President earnestly hopes that the Chinese Communist regime will not again, as in the case of Korea, use armed force to achieve territorial ambitions." The White House statement...issued by News Secretary Hagerty...calls on Russia to restrain Communist China from invading the Nationalist-held offshore islands. "The United States," it says, "would welcome the Soviet government's concerning itself with this aspect of the matter."

—>

Hagerty told reporters the President would make such reply to Khrushchev "as seems appropriate"...after he has had a chance to study the note more fully.

The Khrushchev message came only a few hours after a new statement by Mao Tse-tung, Communist China's chief of state. Mao attacked the United States according to the usual Communist line. He denounced "U.S. imperialism". And he predicted that the United States "monopoly capitalist group" will eventually be "hanged" by the people of the world...if, in his phrase..., "it persists in carrying out its policy of aggression and war." On the other hand, Mao said he is "optimistic" about the possibility of talks on the ambassadorial level between Communist China and the United States. He said the talks might lead to "some results", provided they are sincere. Ambassadorial talks between the two countries were suspended in Geneva last December. The Communist premier, Chou En-lai, suggested on Saturday that the talks be resumed. And the White House issued a statement, saying that the United States was willing to negotiate. Both sides laid down conditions. Chou En-lai called for negotiation of "defense of peace" in the Formosa Strait. He said there could be no negotiation as to Red China's claim to Formosa. And the United States said it [illegible] → would not be a party to any arrangement which would "prejudice" the rights of Nationalist China.

The British Foreign Office said today that it "welcomes the readiness of the governments of the Peoples' Republic of China and the United States to resume their talks."

Premier Khrushchev's note to President Eisenhower marks the first time that Khrushchev has intervened...personally...in the Formosa crisis. Russian newspapers, however, have been carrying such warnings for several days...and today the party newspaper Pravda made a strong attack on Secretary of State Dulles. After accusing Dulles of being "eager for a fight," it said, "Those who like to play with fire risk losing not only their hands but their heads."

The President and Mr. Dulles conferred twice today by telephone.

Quemoy...and the 13 small islands immediately surrounding it...were hit today by nearly 5-thousand Communist shells an hour for 11 hours. This is the heaviest artillery bombardment to which the Quemoy complex has ever been subjected. Worse than the barrage of 41-thousand shells on August 23rd. Two direct hits were scored on an ammunition ship. The Nationalists say none of the Communist fire was directed at American warships in the vicinity.

American cruisers and destroyers of the 7th Fleet have been convoying Nationalist supply ships to a point three miles from Quemoy. / We do not recognize the new Communist territorial limit of twelve miles.

The Nationalists say seven Communist Migs were destroyed in a dogfight early today, south of Quemoy...and that two other Migs were damaged. According to the Nationalists, all of their aircraft returned from the fight. / The Nationalist defense ministry denies that any of their planes have bombed the China mainland.

Today...on the southern coast of Formosa...U.S. Marines joined Nationalist troops for the first time in an amphibious war exercise." / The exercise is continuing through the night.

In Taipei, the capital of Formosa, General LeMay...vice chief of staff of the U.S. Air Force...conferred with Chiang Kai-shek.

Pope Pius has issued an encyclical condemning Communist China's persecution of Catholicism. / The Pope scored the "criminal" practice of consecrating Roman Catholic bishops without Vatican approval. / Under Church law, the choice of bishops is reserved for the Pope. / A Vatican source said today that there are only 25 "real" bishops in Red China...and that 11 of them are in prison. Fourteen have been consecrated without papal approval. The Pope urged Chinese Catholics "to remain unflinching in their faith."

—)

The Atomic Energy Commission today announced the completion of its 1958 series of nuclear tests in the Pacific. The announcement says the tests were successful, "and contributed to further development of improved weapons for the defense of the United States and the Free World." It says the "danger area" around the Eniwetok proving ground...which was established last April...has been "dis-established". Fourteen nuclear blasts from the Eniwetok-Bikini area were reported between April and the end of July. Details of the experiments have not been divulged.

The United States plans to conduct other, small-scale tests in the Nevada desert before the end of next month. After that, the West may confer with Russia on a possible one-year suspension of nuclear weapons tests. The State Department today sent Russia a formal note on the disarmament question. It requested a reply to the American proposal for an East-West meeting on how to set up inspection safeguards against surprise attack.

Heavy voting is reported from Maine...where the polls have closed after that state's last pre-November balloting. After this year, Maine will elect its members of Congress...and its governor...in November as do other states. And the slogan, "so goes Maine", no longer will apply. Early scattered returns show Democratic Governor Muskie trailing Republican Senator Payne in the race for U.S. Senate. These returns are inconclusive....only a small fraction of the precincts have reported so far. The same is true of the contest for governor. In that race, the Republican nominee, Horace Hildreth is leading the Democratic candidate, Clinton A. Clauson. Only about 50 of the 632 precincts have reported.

Edward R. Murrow: September 8, 1958. 7.45 pm.

The calculated obscurity that has hung over the possibility of war in the Formosa area now hangs over the possibility of peace. There was a time, in which both the United States and Red China pushed relentlessly toward the brink of war, as though each expected to impel the other to back away. Now, apparently a new phase has begun. Both sides are airing a willingness to negotiate rather than fight. But the talk of negotiation so far has a hollow sound. The United States has stressed that it will not discuss anything that prejudices the rights of Nationalist China. But any solution acceptable to Red China would call for Nationalist sacrifices. So all that is in evidence is a professed willingness to talk, while strictly speaking there is little that can be talked about. Mr. Dulles calls again for a renunciation by Red China of the use of force to achieve its objectives. But Red China still claims that Formosa is a domestic question. If it is going to renounce force, it wants to know what it can get out of negotiations. Hints from Washington suggest that the United States might ultimately advise Chiang Kai-Shek to give up the off-shore islands in return for a promise by Red China not to ~~fight for~~ attack Formosa itself. But before this can happen, it is stated, Red China must drop its aggressiveness. Since the Communist government has ordered the mobilization of the whole nation -- whatever that means -- and proclaims that 111,600,000 Chinese took part in anti-American demonstrations over the week end, an immediate change-over to peacefulness would be quite a feat, even for a dictatorship.

It seems unlikely that Red China would agree to be peaceable, simply to get the off-shore islands. It has bigger objectives. It wants membership in the United Nations, with a seat on the Security Council. It wants to share with the Soviet Union a much more aggressive leadership of communist elements throughout the world. It wants to be a party in any disarmament discussions. And the basic design of the present crisis suggests that it was carefully plotted by Mao Tse-tung and Khrushchev in their secret meeting in Peiping last month.

The General Assembly of the United Nations meets next week in New York. It hardly will have organized itself before it must deal with an Indian proposal to seat the Communist government of China as representing the Chinese people. This is a perennial Indisn proposal. The United States has succeeded in getting postponement of the issue by previous assemblies. Presumably a majority for such an American motion for postponement exists in the present one. But this is not comfortably certain any more. An unofficial count, made before the crisis sharpened last week, gave the United States a majority of seven. Last year the majority was twenty-seven. The majority of seven may evaporate before a vote is taken. So long as Red China was being belligerent the American majority seemed safe. Chou En-lai's proposal of negotiations has improved Red China's chances.

There is also a possibility that some country may bring the Formosa crisis before the Security Council, charging the United States with aggression. Khrushchev appears to threaten to do just that in his latest letter to Eisenhower. However flimsy the case, it could be exploited by the communists. U.N. rules would require an invitation to Red China to send representatives to New York. This happened in 1950, andthe Red Chinese delegate, General Wu, was given a platform from which to put the communist case to the world. The General turned out to be a surly spokesman, not looking for friends or making any. This time a Chinese communist might score a substantial success. The American policy in Formosa has little support among our European allies, and less among neutralists and the Afro-Asian bloc.

The British and French particularly, remember that two years ago we didn't regard Suez as being worth our support. We not only failed to keep hands off, but with Russian help opposed them actively and effectively in the United Nations. They are not now likely to consider the off-shore islands as being of any real importance to them.

Three years ago President Eisenhower won both national and world affection by standing up to the elements in this country that were pressing for a showdown with Red China. He was hailed for having courageously proved himself a man of peace. Today the President seems to be overshadowed by Secretary Dulles, who showed himself able last week to say flatly that the President had not made up his mind on what action to take about Quemoy, and then, hiding behind the anonymity of a so-called "Administration spokesman", making it clear that the President was already committed. This may have been good brinkmanship. It may even be technically arguable that Mr. Dulles was not contradicting Mr. Eisenhower. But it was a strange way to run a government.

My "Word for Today" I owe to the historian Allan Nevins. On the subject of leadership, Nevins once remarked, "In nine instances out of ten, the highest type of democratic leader is made--not born. And he proves his leadership, rather in anticipating a crisis, than in rising out of one."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Premier Khrushchev today warned the United States that an attack on Communist China would be regarded as an attack on the Soviet Union. Khrushchev's warning was contained in a note to President Eisenhower, delivered at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow. The Moscow radio quotes Khrushchev as saying that United States action in the Far East constitutes "an open provocation." Khrushchev calls Communist China "a great friend, ally and neighbor"...and that for this reason, an attack on China is "tantamount to an attack against Russia." A stable peace in the Far East, he says, is "unthinkable" until American military forces are withdrawn from Formosa and from the Formosa Strait. Khrushchev says that mankind "is again confronted with a direct threat of war." He urges the United States to display "reasonableness." And he proposes that the Formosa question be discussed in the United Nations. Khrushchev refers to "the practice of rushing U.S. naval and air force units from one end of the world to the other." The United Nations, he says, "should require naval and air force units to be kept within national boundaries."

The vacation White House...in Newport, Rhode Island...has been quick to issue a statement in response to the Khrushchev note. The statement blames "unprovoked military action" by the Chinese Communists for the development of the present dangerous situation. It says, "The President earnestly hopes that the Chinese Communist regime will not again, as in the case of Korea, use armed force to achieve territorial ambitions." The While House statement...issued by News Secretary Hagerty....calls on Russia to restrain Communist China from invading the Nationalist-held offshore islands. 'The United States," it says, "would welcome the Soviet government's concerning itself with this aspect of the matter." Hagerty told reporters the President would make such reply to Khrushchev

"as seems appropriate"...after he has had a chance to study the note more fully.

The Khrushchev message came only a few hours after a new statement by Mao Tse-tung, Communist China's chief of state. Mao attacked the United States according to the usual Communist line. He denounced "U.S. imperialism." And he predicted that the United States "monopoly capitalist group" will eventually be "hanged" by the people of the world...if, in his phrase..."it persists in carrying out its policy of aggression and war." On the other hand, Mao said he is "optimistic" about the possibility of talks on the ambassadorial level between Communist China and the United States. He said the talks might lead to "some results," provided they are sincere. Ambassadorial talks between the two countries were suspended in Geneva last December. The Communist premier, Chou En-lai, suggested on Saturday that the talks be resumed. And the White House issued a statement, saying that the United States was willing to negotiate. Both sides laid down conditions. Chou En-lai called for negotiation of "defense of peace" on the Formosa Strait. He said there could be no negotiation as to Red China's claim to Formosa. And the United States said it would not be a party to any arrangement which would "prejudice" the rights of Nationalist China.

The British Foreign Office said today that it "welcomes the readiness of the governments of the Peoples' Republic of China and the United States to resume their talks."

Premier Khrushchev's note to President Eisenhower marks the first time that Khrushchev has intervened...personally...in the Formosa crisis. Russian newspapers, however, have been carrying such warnings for several days...and today the party newspaper Pravda made a strong attack on Secretary of State Dulles. After accusing Dulles of being "eager for a fight," it said, "Those who like to play with fire risk losing not only their hands but their heads."

The President and Mr. Dulles conferred twice today by telephone.

Quemoy...and the 13 small islands immediately surrounding it...were hit today by nearly 5-thousand Communist shells an hour for 11 hours. This is the heaviest artillery bombardment to which the Quemoy complex has ever been subjected. Worse than the barrage of 41 thousand shells on August 23rd. Two direct hits were scored on an ammunition ship. The Nationalists say none of the Communist fire was directed at American warships in the vicinity. American cruisers and destroyers of the 7th Fleet have been convoying Nationalist supply ships to a point three miles from Quemoy. We do not recognize the new Communist territorial limit of twelve miles.

The Nationalists say seven Communist Migs were destroyed in a dogfight early today, south of Quemoy...and that two other Migs were damaged. According to the Nationalists, all of their aircraft returned from the fight. The Nationalists defense ministry denies that any of their planes have bombed the China mainland.

Today...on the southern coast of Formosa...U.S. Marines joined National Nationalist troops for the first time in an amphibious "war exercise." The exercise is continuing through the night.

In Taipei, the capital of Formosa, General LeMay...vice chief of staff of the U.S. Air Force...conferred with Chiang Kai-shek.

Pope Pius has issued an encyclical condemning Communist China's persecution of Catholicism. The Pope scored the "criminal" practice of consecrating Roman Catholic bishops without Vatican approval. Under Chruch law, the choice of bishops is reserved for the Pope. A Vatican source said today that there are only 25 "real" bishops in Red China...and that 11 of them are in prison. Fourteen have been consecrated without papal approval. The Pope urged Chinese Catholics "to remain unflinching in their faith."

The Atomic Energy Commission today announced the completion of its 1958 series of nuclear tests in the Pacific. The announcement says the tests were successful "and contributed to further development of improved weapons for the defense of the United States and the Free World." It says the "danger area" around the Eniwetok proving ground..which was established last April...has been "dis-established." Fourteen nuclear blasts from the Eniwetok-Bikini area were reported between April and the end of July. Details of the experiments have not been divulged.

The United States plans to conduct other, small-scale tests in the Nevada desert before the end of next month. After that, the West may confer with Russia on a possible one-year suspension of nuclear weapons tests. The State Department today sent Russia a formal note on the disarmament question. It requested a reply to the American proposal for an East-West meeting on how to set up inspection safeguards against surpise attack.

Heavy voting is reported from Maine..where the polls have closed after that state's last pre-November balloting. After this year, Maine will elect its members of Congress...and its governor...in November as do other states. And the slogan, "so goes Maine," no longer will apply. Early scattered returns show Democratic Governor Muskie trailing Republican Senator Payne in the race for U.S. Senate. These returns are inconclusive...only a small fraction of the precincts have reported so far. The same is true of the contest for governor. In that race, the Republican nominee, Horace Hildreth is leading the Democratic candidate, Clinton A. Clauson. Only about 50 of the 632 precincts have reported.

The calculated obscurity that has hung over the possibility of war in the Formosa area now hangs over the possibility of peace. There was a time, in which both the United States and Red China pushed relentlessly toward the brink of war, as though each expected to impel the other to back away. Now apparently a new phase has begun. Both sides are airing a willingness to negotiate rather than fight. But the talk of negotiation so far has a hollow sound. The United States has stressed that it will not discuss anything that prejudices the rights of Nationalist China. But any solution acceptable to Red China would call for Nationalist sacrifices. So all that is in evidence is a professed willingness to talk, while strictly speaking there is little that can be talked about. Mr. Dulles calls again for a renunciation by Red China of the use of force to achieve its objectives. But Red China still claims that Formosa is a domestic question. If it is going to renounce force, it wants to know what it can get out of negotiations. Hints from Washington suggest that the United States might ultimately advise Chiang Kai-Shek to give up the off-shore islands in return for a promise by Red China not to attack Formosa itself. But before this can happen, it is stated, Red China must drop its aggressiveness. Since the Communist government has ordered the mobilization of the whole nation - whatever that means - and proclaims that 111,600,000 Chinese took part in anti-American demonstrations over the week-end, an immediate change-over to peacefulness would be quite a feat, even for a dictatorship.

It seems unlikely that Red China would agree to be peaceable, simply to get the off-shore islands. It has bigger objectives. It wants membership in the United Nations, with a seat on the Security Council. It wants to share with the Soviet Union a much more aggressive leadership of communist elements throughout the world. It wants to be a party in any disarmament discussions. And the basic design of the present crisis suggests that it was carefully plotted by Mao Tse-tung and Khrushchev in their secret meeting in Peiping last month.

The General Assembly of the United Nations meets next week in New York. It hardly will have organized itself before it must deal with an Indian proposal to seat the Communist government of China as representing the Chinese people. This is a perennial Indian proposal. The United States has succeeded in getting postponement of the issue by previous assemblies. Presumably a majority for such an American motion for postponement exists in the present one. But this is not comfortably certain any more. An unofficial count, made before the crisis sharpened last week, gave the United States a majority of seven. Last year the majority was twenty-seven. The majority of seven may evaporate before a vote is taken. So long as Red China was being belligerent the American majority seemed safe. Chou En-lai's proposal of negotiations has improved Red China's chances.

There is also a possibility that some country may bring the Formosa crisis before the Security Council, charging the United States with aggression. Khrushchev appears to threaten to do just that in his latest letter to Eisenhower. However flimsy the case, it could be exploited by the communists. U.N. rules would require an invitation to Red China to send representatives to New York. This happened in 1950, and the Red Chinese delegate, General Wu, was given a platform from which to put the communist case to the world. The General turned out to be a surly spokesman, not looking for friends or making any. This time a Chinese communist might score a substantial success. The American policy in Formosa has little support among our European allies, and less among neutralists and the Afro-Asian bloc.

The British and French particularly, remember that two years ago we didn't regard Suez as being worth our support. We not only failed to keep hands off, but with Russian help opposed them actively and effectively in the United Nations. They are not now likely to consider the off-shore islands as being of any real importance to them.

Three yaars ago President Eisenhower won both national and world affection by standing up to the elements in this country that were pressing for a showdown with Red China. He was hailed for having courageously proved himself a man of peace. Today the President seems to be overshadowed by Secretary Dulles, who showed himself able last week to say flatly that the President had not made up his mind on what action to take about Quemoy, and then, hiding behind the anonymity of a so-called "Administration spokesman," making it clear that the President was already committed. This may have been good brinkmanship. It may even be technically arguable that Mr. Dulles was not contradicting Mr. Eisenhower. But it was a strange way to run a government.

My "Word for Today" I owe to the historian Allan Nevins. On the subject of leadership, Nevins once remarked, "In nine instances out of ten, the highest type of democratic leader is made---not born. And he proves his leadership rather in anticipating a crisis than in rising out of one."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Sept. 9, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles hinted today...at a news conference...that the United States might make some concessions, if Communist China agreed to renounce the use of force in the Formosa Strait./ He said if there were a "meaningful" renunciation of force, that would "alter the situation in a great many respects, and probably have consequences."/ He did not say what concessions the United States might make./ Mr. Dulles revealed that the United States has sent Communist China a note...offering to begin talks, whenever Peiping is ready, on the ambassadorial level./ The talks would take place in Warsaw./ Dulles confirmed that he was the "high American official", who said last week, that the United States, if necessary, would help repel a Communist invasion of Matsu or Quemoy. / But he insisted that no "definitive" decision to defend the offshore islands has been made. He said the President could not make that decision in advance of the facts. But he also said that Matsu and Quemoy are not "just two pieces of real estate." "What's involved here," he said, "is the whole position of the free world in the Western Pacific...and the vital interests of the United States." / Dulles said the United States might allow Nationalist bombers to hit Communist airfields on the mainland, if the fields were used for air raids on Quemoy. The Administration did not oppose the decision of Chiang Kai-shek to deploy one-third of his troops on the offshore islands. / But, said Dulles, this does not mean Chiang was urged to disperse his forces in that fashion. / A reporter asked what would happen if an American warship...in the Formosa Strait...were subjected to attack. He "imagined" that if the attack was carried out deliberately in international waters, the warship would "reply".

→

Russia today recognized Communist China's action extending its territorial waters to 12 miles. The Soviet government told Peiping...in a formal note...that it "acknowledges that no warship may enter into the territorial waters without the permission of the Chinese Peoples' Republic." The United States does not recognize the 12-mile limit. And American destroyers and cruisers have been convoying Nationalist supply vessels to within three miles of the Quemoy coast.

→

Tonight, Communist guns resumed their heavy bombardment of Quemoy after a day in which relatively few shells were fired. The heavy attack came as the Nationalists were reported supplying the island by means of an airdrop. The report of an airdrop is not confirmed.

Admiral Beakley said today that the U.S. Seventh Fleet is the "largest integrated naval force ever deployed in peacetime by any nation." He said the Seventh Fleet (which he commands) is twice the present size of the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean...and that it comprises 125 ships, a Marine division and air group. Altogether, 65-thousand men.

The Chinese Communist premier, Chou En-lai, said in a speech today that Red China has "every right" to liberate its own territory, "by all suitable means at a suitable time." He warned President Rhee of South Korea not to launch "a new provocation" against North Korea, saying that such an adventure would come to "a disastrous and ignominious end." Chou En-lai said the warning also applies to "American imperialists" whom he claimed are Rhee's "masters".

White House News Secretary Hagerty said today that yesterday's Democratic victory in Maine may make people in the Republican Party "work harder" to win in the national elections in November. / When Hagerty was asked about President Eisenhower's reaction, he said, "The President feels the same way I do---that the Republican Party took a beating, and there is no way disguising it." Democratic Governor Muskie defeated Republican Senator Payne, in the race for the U.S. Senate, by a majority of better than 3 to 2. / And in the gubernatorial contest, the Democratic nominee...Clinton A. Clauson... upset former Republican governor Hildreth by a relatively large margin. The Democrats also picked up a seat in the House of Representatives. The Democratic national chairman, Paul Butler, says the vote shows---in his words---that the people are "sick of drift and indecision" in government and want "firm leadership". / Republican National Chairman Alcorn denies this...but says what happened in Maine "should alert every Republican in the land to the urgency of an all-out effort on November fourth." (I should like to examine the Maine election further in a few minutes).

The Justice Department today offered the authorities in Little Rock, Arkansas, its full cooperation...in preventing any disorder which might arise, should integration be resumed at Central High. Attorney General Rogers made the offer in separate letters to Dean Dauley, the city manager of Little Rock, and to Wayne Upton, president of the Little Rock School Board. Rogers recalled...in his letter to Upton...that the Circuit Court of Appeals had criticized the school board for never seeking an injunction against those who fought the board's integration program through violent demonstrations. The attorney general suggested that the board gave consideration to seeking an injunction against anyone who opposes any integration order by unlawful acts.

In his letter to the city manager, Rogers said it "seemed desirable" that careful plans be made by responsible officials to prevent disorder and violence, should the Supreme Court refuse to allow any delay in integration at Central High School. He said the Justice Department, the United States attorney and the United States marshal would cooperate fully with the local authorities, "within the limits of our respective responsibilities." Arrangements, he said, had been made for the "temporary expansion" of the present staff of the U.S. marshal's office in Little Rock. But he said it is the primary responsibility of the state...and its local subdivisions...to maintain peace and order.

The Supreme Court hears oral arguments in the Little Rock case this Thursday.

In Virginia today, Federal Judge John Paul ordered the integration of all elementary and high schools in Charlottesville. He ordered the admission to classes of 10 Negro applicants. Twenty-four had applied.

In London today, eight Negroes and two white men were sent to trial...on charges of "unlawful fighting" in West London a week ago. In Birmingham, England, two youths who threw eggs at a West Indian medical student were jailed for two months. Lord Mancroft, a cabinet minister without portfolio, said in a speech in London today that it would be "a disaster"...if Britain should ever restrict immigration on grounds of race, color or creed.

The British Air Ministry today confirmed the first delivery in Britain of an American-made Thor missile. The Thor is a ballistic weapon of intermediate range, capable of delivering a hydrogen warhead. About 60 of these missiles are due to arrive in Britain by the end of the year. The launching sites will be manned by British troops. But according to agreement, the nuclear warheads will remain under American control.

United Nations Secretary-General Hammarskjold has arrived in Lebanon, after conferring earlier in the day with Jordanian leaders in Amman. Earlier on his "peace mission", Hammarskjold saw President Nasser in Cairo, and visited Israel and Iraq. He must report on his mission to the General Assembly not later than September 30. Dispatches from Amman say that

→

Nasser refused to give guarantees...considered adequate by Jordan...that the United Arab Republic will not interfere in its internal affairs.

The Baghdad Radio says tonight that Nasser did agree to admit a United Nations observer into Syria...according to Baghdad, "to watch over the alleged threat to Jordan." /But the Baghdad Radio says Nasser refused to admit an observer to Egypt on grounds that Egypt and Jordan do not have a common frontier. / Hammarskjold is expected to fly back to New York on Friday.

Secretary of State Dulles told his news conference today that while the Middle East situation is improved, it is still too early to say when American troops will be pulled out of Lebanon.

The government reports that unemployment in August dropped by 600-thousand, to a seven-month low./ Unemployment normally declines this time of year, and the government says the improvement shown between July and August was less than the seasonal rate. The drop in unemployment, it explains, "occurred primarily among young workers who found jobs, and students who withdrew from the labor market."/ There was no "significant" change in the number of unemployed adult workers. Farm employment was steady./ Employment in the auto industry was at its lowest point in 10 years...due in part to the change-over to new models.

Reports from Detroit say a break is imminent in the deadlocked negotiations between the United Auto Workers, and the "Big Three" car manufacturers. G.M. and the union resumed negotiations today, with both sides expressing some optimism.

Edward R. Murrow: September 9, 1958. 7.45 p.m.~~XXX~~

If the United States were not in the throes of a crisis in the Farr East, the election result in Maine yesterday would have been the most sensational political news of many a day. It would have stunned and startled politicians and public alike, not because the Democrats won, but because they won so heavily. / No one believes any more that "as Maine goes, so goes the nation". / However, the size of the Republican vote in Maine has been a fair indicator for the country as a whole, not always accurate, but always suggestive.

But yesterday's result was unprecedented. / A victory for Governor Muskie running for the Senate against Senator Payne had been rated as better than possible, if not a good probability. / But the Republicans were confident they would recapture the governorship and carry at least two of the three Congressional seats. / When the count was in, Muskie had swamped Payne by nearly 60,000, and become the first Maine Democrat to be elected to the Senate by popular vote. / An unprepossessing Democratic candidate for governor had beaten a Republican twice elected governor in the past, and a recent United States ambassador to Pakistan. / He was in by more than ten thousand votes. And the Republicans had saved only one congressional seat.

What this means nationally is obvious. / It forecasts a Democratic sweep in the congressional elections. / There is nothing sensational in that. Everyone expected it, Republicans and Democrats alike. / What is sensational, is the strength of the Democratic tide. It now begins to look as though the Democrats might have a hard time to lose in 1960, even though the presidential election will turn as much on the personality of the candidate as on his party.

However, the Maine result does not bear too closely on the 1960 election. Governor Muskie was careful not to antagonize Republican voters. The recession played some part in the result, more perhaps than it will in 1960, when it may have receded in memories. / What Maine observers are sure about, is that the Goldfine case had something to do with the outcome. / Governor Muskie did not campaign on it. / Bernard Goldfine had given Senator Payne favors, including a still-outstanding interest-free loan of $3,500. / But the Democrats did not speak about these things, on the theory that the facts should speak for themselves - which apparently they did. The Lebanon crisis took Goldfine off the front pages, but he affected a lot of votes.

What makes it unsafe to speak positively about 1960, despite the sensational Democratic tide, is the uncertainty about what the school integration issue will do to the Democratic party. Northern Democrats now are determined not to be held back by Southern Democrats on civil rights. Already in 1956 many northern Democrats played with the idea of breaking with the South altogether, arguing that they stood to gain more than they could lose. The formula that has held Democrats together in national elections has been the compromise which gave the North the choice of the presidential candidate while the South kept the important congressional chairmanships.

Now an interesting possibility lies ahead. Southern Democrats, if they find the next national convention turning too liberal for them to stomach, may desert the Democratic ticket. They might vote in November for uncommitted presidential electors, who then would cast enough votes for an independent southern candidate to keep either party from having a majority in the electoral college. That would throw the election into the House of Representatives, where the states would vote as units, and the South could make a deal. This would not be a third-party move. It would be a desperate gamble to unite enough southern votes on a single southern personality to win the South some political power.

The odds against such a gamble are long. A study of past elections shows that this strategy would have thrown only one election since 1920 into the House of Representatives. That was in 1948. For the gamble to succeed, the race between the Republican and Democratic candidates in the North must be very close. And the solid south - the states of the one-time confederacy - would have to elect its full quota of 128 electoral votes. No one can guarantee either a close race in the north, or that all southern states will desert the Democratic ticket. But the possibility is in many minds, particularly of those leading the fight on school integration. And it is a warning to Democrats that 1960 is not yet in the bag.

Word for Today

The surprise in the Maine election is the strength of the Democratic tide. Back in 1920, the Democratic presidential candidate, James Cox, was overwhelmed at the polls by Warren G. Harding. And after the vote was in, a friend said to Cox...consolingly..."Well, governor, it looks like the people have spoken." "Yes," was Cox's grim rejoinder, "but they didn't have to speak so loud." That could be the word for today.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles hinted today...at a news conference...that the United States might make some concessions, if Communist China agreed to renounce the use of force in the Formosa Strait. He said if there were a "meaningful" renunciation of force, that would "alter the situation in a great many respects and probably have consequences." He did not say what concessions the United States might make. Mr. Dulles revealed that the United States has sent Communist China a note...offering to begin talks whenever Peiping is ready on the ambassadorial level. The talks would take place in Warsaw. Dulles confirmed that he was the "high American official" who said last week that the United States, if necessary, would help repel a Communist invasion of Matsu or Quemoy. But he insisted that no "definitive" decision to defend the offshore islands has been made. He said the President could not make that decision in advance of the facts. But he also said that Matsu and Quemoy are not "just two pieces of real estate." "What's involved here," he said, "is the whole position of the free world in the Western Pacific...and the vital interests of the United States." Dulles said the United States might allow Nationalist bombers to hit Communist airfields on the mainland, if the fields were used for air raids on Quemoy. The Administration did not oppose the decision of Chiang Kai-shek to deploy one-third of his troops on the offshore islands. But, said Dulles, this does not mean Chiang was urged to disperse his forces in that fashion. A reporter asked what would happen if an American warship...in the Formosa Strait...were subjected to attack. He "imagined" that if the attack was carried out deliberately in international waters, the warship would "reply."

Russia today recognized Communist China's action extending its territorial waters to 12 miles. The Soviet government told Peiping...in a formal note...that it "acknowledges that no warship may enter into the territorial waters without the permission of the Chinese Peoples' Republic." The United States does not recognize the 12-mile limit. And American destroyers and cruisers have been convoying Nationalist supply vessels to within three miles of the Quemoy coast.

Tonight, Communist guns resumed their heavy bombardment of Quemoy after a day in which relatively few shells were fired. The heavy attack came as the Nationalists were reported supplying the island by means of an airdrop. The report of an airdrop is not confirmed.

Admiral Beakley said today that the U.S. Seventh Fleet is the "largest integrated naval force ever deployed in peacetime by any nation." He said the Seventh Fleet (which he commands) is twice the present size of the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean...and that it comprises 125 ships, a Marine division and air group. Altogether, 65 thousand men.

The Chinese Communist premier, Chou En-lai, said in a speech today that Red China has "every right" to liberate its own territory "by all suitable means at a suitable time." He warned President Rhee of South Korea not to launch "a new provocation" against North Korea, saying that such an adventure would come to "a disastrous and ignominious end." Chou En-lau said the warning also applies to "American imperialists: whom he claimed are Rhee's "masters."

White House News Secretary Hagerty said today that yesterday's Democratic victory in Maine may make people in the Republican Party "work harder" to win in the national elections in November. When Hagerty was asked about President Eisenhower's reaction, he said, "The President feels the same way I do---that the Republican Party took a beating and there is no way disguising it." Democratic Governor Muskie defeated Republican Senator Payne, in the race for the U.S. Senate, by a majority of better than 3 to 2. And in the gubernatorial contest the Democratic nominee...Clinton A. Clauson...upset former Republican governor

Hildreth by a relatively large margin. The Democrats also picked up a seat in the House of Representatives. The Democratic national chairman, Paul Butler, says the vote shows---in his words---that the people are "sick of drift and indecision" in government and want "firm leadership." Republican National Chairman Alcorn denies this...but says what happened in Maine "should alert every Republican in the land to the urgency of an all-out effort on November fourth." (I should like to examine the Maine election further in a few minutes.)

The Justice Department today offered the authorities in Little Rock, Arkansas, its full cooperation...in preventing any disorder which might arise, should integration be resumed at Central High. Attorney General Rogers made the offer in separate letters to Dean Dauley, the city manager of Little Rock, and to Wayne Upton, president of the Little Rock School Board. Rogers recalled...in his letter to Upton...that the Circuit Court of Appeals had criticized the school board for never seeking an injunction against those who fought the board's integration program through violent demonstrations. The attorney general suggested that the board give consideration to seeking an injunction against anyone who opposes any integration order by unlawful acts. In his letter to the city manager, Rogers said it "seemed desirable" that careful plans be made by responsible officials to prevent disorder and violence, should the Supreme Court refuse to allow any delay in integration at Central High School. He said the Justice Department, the United States attorney and the United States marshal would cooperate fully with the local authorities, "within the limits of our respective responsibilities." Arrangements, he said, had been made for the temporary expansion of the present staff of the U.S. marshal's office in Little Rock. But he said it is the primary responsibility of the state...and its local subdivisions..to maintain peace and order. The Supreme Court hears oral arguments in the Little Rock case this Thursday.

In Virginia today, Federal Judge John Paul ordered the integration of all elementary and high schools in Charlottesville. He ordered the admission to classes of 10 Negro applicants. Twenty-four had applied.

The British Air Ministry today confirmed the first delivery in Britain of an American-made Thor missile. The Thor is a ballistic weapon of intermediate range capable of delivering a hydrogen warhead. About 60 of these missiles are due to arrive in Britain by the end of the year. The launching sites will be manned by British troops. But according to agreement, the nuclear warheads will remain under American control.

United Nations Secretary-General Hammarskjold has arrived in Lebanon, after conferring earlier in the day with Jordanian leaders in Amman. Earlier on his "peace mission," Hammarskjold saw President Nasser in Cairo and visited Israel and Iraq. He must report on his mission to the General Assembly not later than September 30. Dispatches from Amman say that Nasser refused to give guarantees... considered adequate by Jordan...that the United Arab Republic will not interfere in its internal affairs. The Baghdad Radio says tonight that Nasser did agree to admit a United Nations observer into Syria...according to Baghdad, "to watch over the alleged threat to Jordan." But the Baghdad Radio says Nasser refused to admit an observer to Egypt on grounds that Egypt and Jordan do not have a common frontier.

The government reports that unemployment in August dropped by 600 thousand to a seven-month low. Unemployment normally declines this time of year, and the government says the improvement shown between July and August was less than the seasonal rate. The drop in unemployment, it explains, "occurred primarily among young workers who found jobs and students who withdrew from the labor market." There was no "significant" change in the number of unemployed adult workers. Farm employment was steady. Employment in the auto industry was at its lowest point in 10 years...due in part to the change-over to new models.

Reports from Detroit say a break is imminent in the deadlocked negotiations between the United Auto Workers and the "Big Three" car manufacturers. G.M. and the union resumed negotiations today, with both sides expressing some optimism.

If the United States were not in the throes of a crisis in the Far East, the election result in Maine yesterday would have been the most sensational political news of many a day. It would have stunned and startled politicians and public alike, not because the Democrats won, but because they won so heavily. Noone believes any more that "as Maine goes, so goes the nation." However, the size of the Republican vote in Maine has been a fair indicator for the country as a whole, not always accurate, but always suggestive.

But yesterday's result was unprecedented. A victory for Governor Muskie running for the Senate against Senator Payne had been rated as better than possible, if not a good probability. But the Republicans were confident they would recapture the governorship and carry at least two of the three Congressional seats. When the count was in, Muskie had swamped Payne by nearly 60,000 and become the first Maine Democrat to be elected to the Senate by popular vote. An unprepossessing Democratic candidate for governor had beaten a Republican twice elected governor in the past, and a recent United States ambassador to Pakistan. He was in by more than ten thousand votes. And the Republicans had saved only one congressional seat.

What this means nationally is obvious. It forecasts a Demoratic sweep in the congressional elections. There is nothing sensational in that. Everyone expected it, Republicans and Democrats alike. What is sensational, is the strength of the Democratic tide. It now begins to look as though the Democrats might have a hard time to lose in 1960 even though the presidential election will turn as much on the personality of the candidate as on his party.

However, the Maine result does not bear too closely on the 1960 election. Governor Muskie was careful not to antagonize Republican voters. The recession played some part in the result, more perhaps than it will in 1960, when it may have receded in memories. What Maine observers are sure about is that the Goldfine case had something to do with the outcome. Governor Muskie did not campaign on it. Bernard Goldfine had given Senator Payne favors, including a still-outstanding interest-free loan of $3,500. But the Democrats did not speak about these things, on the theory that the facts should speak for themselves - which apparently they did. The Lebanon crisis took Goldfine off the front pages, but he affected a lot of votes.

What makes it unsafe to speak positively about 1960 despite the sensational Democratic tide is the uncertainty about what the school integration issue will do to the Democratic party. Northern Democrats now are determined not to be held back by Southern Democrats on civil rights. Already in 1956 many northern Democrats played with the idea of breaking with the South altogether, arguing that they stood to gain more than they could lose. The formula that has held Democrats together in national elections has been the cmmpromise which gave the North the choice of the presidential candidate while the South kept the important congressional chairmanships.

Now an interesting possibility lies ahead. Southern Democrats if they find the next national convention turning too liberal for them to stomach, may desert the Democrat ticket. They might vote in November for uncommitted presidential electors, who then would cast enough votes for an independent southern candidate to keep either party from having a majority in the electoral college. That would throw the election into the House of Representatives, where the states would vote as units, and the South could make a deal. This would not be a third-party move. It would be a desperate gamble to unite enough southern votes on a single southern personality to win the South some political power.

The odds against such a gamble are long. A study of past elections shows that this strategy would have thrown only one election since 1920 into the House of Representatives. That was in 1948. For the gamble to succeed, the race between the Republican and Democratic candidates in the North must be very close. And the solid south - the states of the one-time confederacy - would have to elect its full quota of 128 electoral votes. No one can guarantee either a close race in the north, or that all southern states will desert the Democratic ticket. But the possibility is in many minds, particularly of those leading the fight on school integration. And it is a warning to Democrats that 1960 is not yet in the bag.

The surprise in the Maine election is the strength of the Democratic tide. Back in 1920, the Democratic presidential candidate, James Cox was overwhelmed at the polls by Warren G. Harding. And after the vote was in, a friend said to Cox...consolingly..."Well, governor, it looks like the people have spoken." "Yes," was Cox's grim rejoinder, "but they didn't have to speak so loud." That could be the word for today.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Sept. 10, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will make a nationwide broadcast tomorrow night, on the crisis in the Far East. White House News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower will set forth the situation in the Formosa Strait "as it has developed and now exists." The President will fly to Washington early tomorrow afternoon...speak from his White House office in the evening...and fly back to Newport on Friday. CBS Radio will carry the broadcast at 10 p.m. tomorrow, Eastern Time.

Quemoy was shelled again today...although not on a massive scale. Shells, however, did fall on the main town on the island. Convoy operations are being hampered by bad weather...as well as by Communist artillery...and medical supplies on Quemoy are reported getting low.

The Nationalists say that another, smaller town on Quemoy was deliberately hit by the Communists on Monday...and that seven civilians were killed.

Communist China today accused the United States of violating its territory...in sending two aircraft over, or near, the coast of Fukien Province. / This is the province directly opposite Formosa. And the Peiping radio...quoting the foreign ministry...calls the alleged action "a deliberate war provocation."

Secretary of Defense McElroy said today that both anti-aircraft missiles---the Nike-Hercules and the Bomarc---will be kept in our defense arsenal. / The Bomarc belongs to the Air Force, and the Nike-Hercules is an Army weapon. / Congress has cut down on funds for their production, and there was speculation that, for economy reasons, one of the missiles might be dropped. As a result, the Army and Air Force have been arguing over the respective merits of the two weapons. / McElroy said he had passed the word that the "scrapping" between the two services should be stopped.

The summer White House today denied published reports that Sherman Adams is resigning as assistant to the President. / News Secretary Hagerty told reporters in Newport that no resignation has been submitted "in any shape, form, or manner." With reference to a report in the Laconia, New Hampshire Evening Citizen, that Adams had resigned, Hagerty said, "The only part of the story I saw that was truthful is that Governor Adams is on a Canadian fishing trip." / United Press International today quoted an unidentified "Administration figure" as saying that ...in his opinion...Sherman Adams, for practical purposes, was through. / The Administration official is quoted as saying, "I think the question of a resignation is over and done with. I don't think he is coming back."

Republican Representative Keating of New York said today that Adams "ought" to resign. Keating is running for the U.S. Senate. He cited the Democratic sweep in Maine...where ~~[illegible]~~ Senator Payne lost his bid for a second term. / Like Adams, Payne acknowledged receiving gifts from ~~New England~~ Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine.

The United Auto Workers today authorized a strike against the Ford Motor Company, unless agreement is reached on a new contract by a week from today. / Negotiations between the U.A.W. and the Big Three auto companies have been deadlocked for months. / The decision to strike against Ford, unless a settlement is reached, was taken by the union's executive board, meeting in Detroit. / A union spokesman said that reports of an "agreement in principle" with General Motors, are "false".

The Civil Rights Commission today ordered an investigation, into complaints that Negroes in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida have been denied their voting rights. / Commission Chairman Hannah said investigators already are at work in one of the states, but he declined to say which one...on grounds that their work might be made more difficult.

The Supreme Court will again hear oral arguments tomorrow in the Little Rock case. Little Rock Central High School is scheduled to open next Monday. Governor Faubus said today, that he has the power to order the school closed before it actually opens...and said he may do that, if United States marshals are used to enforce integration. / He claimed that use of the marshals would amount to "a second occupation." The Justice Department said yesterday that if marshals were employed, they would cooperate with the local authorities.

The United States announces that another battalion of Marines---about 17-hundred men---will be withdrawn from Lebanon on Monday./ This would leave some 10-thousand American soldiers and Marines in Lebanon. The first Marine battalion was pulled out on August 14.

Tonight's announcement comes as United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold is conferring with Lebanese leaders.

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, reports from Paris that the United States has decided to recognize the full sovereignty of Morocco over all air bases in that country, and accept the Moroccan demand that we recognize the "principle of evacuation". This decision, says Schoenbrun, opens the door to the possible evacuation of all foreign troops from Morocco, including the large French and Spanish garrisons...and may provoke a difficult situation for France and Spain, and their relations with the United States. Schoenbrun describes the French as "extremely upset" by the American decision...since it undercuts their position in the midst of negotiations with the Moroccans, on the future of their former colonial bases. For the U.S. Strategic Air Force, and the United States Navy, this is also a sensitive question---and, says Schoenbrun, a big gamble. By recognizing the "principle of evacuation," we expose ourselves to the possible removal of our costly...and important...air and naval bases in Morocco. It is hoped that our recognition of the "principle" of evacuation will enable the pro-American conservative elements in Morocco to fight off [redacted] left-wing Arab demands, that we get out at once. Our aim, Schoenbrun reports, is to arrange a slow-phased withdrawal...or even to re-negotiate a new arrangement for maintaining our present bases. The → United States has a complex of four air bases in Morocco...built at a cost of roughly half a billion dollars.

Premier DeGaulle today received support for the new French constitution from Jean Monnet, father of the European Community and one of the most respected men in France. Monnet announced...publicly...that he would vote for the constitution in the referendum later this month.

French police arrested more than 200 Algerians today...in raids throughout France. The arrests are part of the French effort to smash the Algerian terrorist movement...which has resulted in the sabotage of French oil installations and several deaths.

The French government has reiterated its position that the Algerian revolt is an internal French problem. The information minister, Jacques Soustelle, said after a cabinet meeting today that France will boycott any United Nations debate on the Algerian problem.

Iceland said today that it would like the United Nations General Assembly to settle the dispute with Britain over its new 12-mile fishing limits. British trawlers have been operating in their accustomed fishing grounds...inside the 12-mile zone...ever since Iceland unilaterally proclaimed the new limit last month. There have been several encounters between British gunboats and the Islandic coast guard, but no casualties. Iceland complains that in the past 24 hours two British trawlers tried to run down its patrol boats to avoid arrest. The General Assembly meets here in New York on Tuesday.

→

In Florida today, United States agents intercepted a 60-foot cabin cruiser...which they say was headed for Cuba with reinforcements for rebel leader Fidel Castro. A quantity of ammunition was confiscated. Thirty-three persons on board the vessel were placed under arrest. According to U.S. Customs agents, all 33 wore arm bands or other insignia indentifying them either as followers of Castro...or of former President Prio of Cuba, who fled to this country in 1952. Many of those arrested were heavily armed.

The weather bureau in Miami today pronounced tropical storm "Fifi" no longer a threat to the United States coast. The storm is now in the open Atlantic, 400 miles southwest of Bermuda. Its highest winds are an estimated 55 miles an hour.

The Agriculture Department predicts the biggest harvest this year in history. The estimated corn crop is three and a half billion bushels---up three percent from the August forecast...and five percent above last year. The forecast for wheat is 1-billion, 466-million bushels...a new record. And livestock feed grain is expected to surpass last year's record yield by ~~many~~ nearly six percent.

→

Edward R. Murrow: September 10, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Since the United States still stands close to the brink of war over the offshore islands in the Formosa Strait, the ordinary citizen is entitled to all the help he can get to understand why. What he is getting from Secretary Dulles does not go the whole way. Mr. Dulles himself admits this. In his news conference yesterday he said: "I am aware of the fact that the elements that go into making final decisions are so delicate, oftentimes not subject to public appraisal, that there lies a responsibility upon the President and his principal advisers that cannot be shared with the general public." Maybe President Eisenhower intends to go further than his Secretary of State in his broadcast tomorrow night.

Mr. Dulles said that the elements in the situation are essentially the same as they were four years ago. But in 1955 the Chinese Nationalists evacuated the Tachen Islands, and Mr. Dulles was asked why that action did not threaten our position in the Pacific as he considers the loss of Quemoy and Matsu would do today. He replied that: "The facts speak for themselves that our analysis of that situation was correct. I believe" he said, "that our analysis of the present situation also is correct." This hardly qualifies as an explanation. And if the parallel between the Tachen Islands and Quemoy and Matsu is examined further, the difference between them grows smaller. Four years ago, Quemoy and Matsu were not considered strategically vital to the defense of Formosa. Their value was not defensive, it was offensive. They would be stepping stones for a Nationalist invasion of the mainland. / But today the value of Quemoy and Matsu has become defensive. The President himself has said so. / The reason is not geographic. It is simply that Chiang Kai Shek has put a third of the Nationalist army on them. If these men are lost, the defense of Formosa obviously is jeopardized.

Four years ago, we would not have gone to war over Quemoy and Matsu as such, and Congress did not include the offshore islands in the American gurantee. / Today we might go to war over them. / And the huge difference in American policy is the result of Chiang's decision to weaken his defense of Formosa by putting so many of his best troops on the islands. / In other words, Nationalist China increased the obligation of the United States. / It may be that Chiang was encouraged to do so by elements in this country. / But it is certain he was not dissuaded from doing it, as surely he might have been. Now Mr. Dulles feels entitled to say, that the threat of aggression against Quemoy and Matsu is a threat to the whole Western World, comparable to the threat in Korea and the Berlin blockade. Mr. Dulles spoke with so much conviction about this that one can be sure it is crystal clear to him. But the public would benefit from further clarification.

At the time our Formosa policy was spelled out in the Congressional resolution, the idea was that a Communist assault on the offshore islands might be part of a campaign to regain Formosa. Under these circumstances, the President was authorized to do what he felt necessary, that is, defend the islands. Today, however, there is no evidence that Red China is preparing a massive assault on Formosa. Quemoy is vital to Formosa, not by something the Communists now are threatening to do, but by something Chiang has done. In other words, Chiang has been allowed to make our present Quemoy policy for us.

It is only fair to Mr. Dulles to point out that if he has presented an obscure case for United States policy, it may be due in part to his inability to talk freely about a Nationalist withdrawal from Quemoy and Matsu at this juncture. One is entitled to assume that he wants it, if it can be linked with a Communist pledge not to use force to regain Formosa. But that must come as the fruit of negotiation. And as he said yesterday, the Communists "have not yet exposed their hand". / There are several specific results that can follow a Communist pledge not to use force. But Mr. Dulles cannot be asked to lay his cards on the table at this time. Bargaining with Communists is sure to be tedious, tough and exasperating. / However, to get to the bargaining table must be the basic United States policy, as Mr. Dulles himself stresses. And everything that Mr. Dulles and the President have to say about it can only be crystal clear if it explains that we really are doing our utmost to get there.

Word for Today

The word for today might be the quotation...attributed to Abraham Lincoln...by my ~~mmm~~ friend Carl Sandburg. "I fear," said Lincoln, "explanations explanatory of things explained."

Good Nite & good luck —

9/10/58

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will make a nationwide broadcast tomorrow night on the crisis in the Far East. White House News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower will set forth the situation in the Formosa Strait "as it has developed and now exists." The President will fly to Washington early tomorrow afternoon...speak from his White House office in the evening...and fly back to Newport on Friday. CBS Radio will carry the broadcast at 10 P.M. tomorrow, Eastern Time.

Quemoy was shelled again today...although not on a massive scale. Shells, however, did fall on the main town on the island. Convoy operations are being hampered by bad weather...as well as by Communist artillery...and medical supplies on Quemoy are reported getting low.

The Nationalists say that another, smaller town on Quemoy was deliberately hit by the Communists on Monday...and that seven civilians were killed.

Communist China today accused the United States of violating its territory...in sending two aircraft over, or near, the coast of Fukien Province. This is the province directly opposite Formosa. And the Peiping radio...quoting the foreign ministry...calls the alleged action "a deliberate war provocation."

Secretary of Defence McElroy said today that both anti-aircraft missiles---the Nike-Hercules and the Bomarc---will be kept in our defense arsenal. The Bomarc belongs to the Air Force, and the Nike-Hercules is an Army weapon. Congress has cut down on funds for their production, and there was speculation that for economy reasons one of the missiles might be dropped. As a result, the Army and Air Force have been arguing over the respective merits of the two weapons. McElroy said he had passed the word that the "scrapping" between the two services should be stopped.

The summer White House today denied published reports that Sherman Adams is resigning as assistant to the President. News Secretary Hagerty told reporters in Newport that no resignation has been sumbitted "in any shape, form, or manner." With reference to a report in the Laconia, New Hampshire Evening Citizen that Adams had resigned, Hagerty said, "The only part of the story I saw that was truthful is that Governor Adams is on a Canadian fishing trip." United Press International today quoted an unidentified "Administration figure" as saying that...in his opinion... Sherman Adams for practical purposes was through. The Administration official is quoted as saying, "I think the question of a resignation is over and done with. I don't think he is coming back."

Republican Representative Keating of New York said today that Adams "ought" to resign. Keating is running for the U.S. Senate. He cited the Democratic sweep in Maine..where Senator Payne lost his bid for a second term. Like Adams, Payne acknowledged receiving gifts from Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine.

The United Auto Workers today authorized a strike against the Ford Motor Company, unless agreement is reached on a new contract by a week from today. Negotiations between the U.A.W. and the Big Three auto companies have been deadlocked for months. The decision to strike against Ford unless a settlement is reached was taken by the union's executive board, meeting in Detroit. A union spokesman said that reports of an "agreement in principle" with General Motors are "false."

The Civil Rights Commission today ordered an investigation into complaints that Negroes in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida have been denied their voting rights. Commission Chairman Hannah said investigators already are at work in one of the states, but he declined to say which one...on grounds that their work might be made more difficult.

The Supreme Court will again hear oral arguments tomorrow in the Little Rock case. Little Rock Central High School is scheduled to open next Monday. Governor Faubus said today that he has the power to order the school closed before it actually opens...and said he may do that, if United States marshals are used to enforce integration. He claimed that use of the marshals would amount to "a second occupation." The Justice Department said yesterday that if marshals were employed, they would cooperate with the local authorities.

The United States announces that another battalion of Marines---about 17-hundred men---will be withdrawn from Lebanon on Monday. This would leave some 10-thousand American soldiers and Marines in Lebanon. The first Marine battalion was pulled out on August 14th.

Tonight's announcement comes as United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold is conferring with Lebanese leaders.

My colleague, David Schoenbrun reports from Paris that the United States has decided to recognize the full sovereignty of Morocco over all air bases in that country and accept the Moroccan demand that we recognize the "principle of evacuation." This decision, says Schoenbrun, opens the door to the possible evacuation of all foreign troops from Morocco, including the large French and Spanish garrisons...and may provoke a difficult situation for France and Spain and their relations with the United States. Schoenbrun describes the French as "extremely upset" by the American decision...since it undercuts their position in the midst of negotiations with the Moroccans on the future of their former colonial bases. For the U.S. Strategic Air Force and the United States Navy this is also a sensitive question---and, says Schoenbrun, a big gamble. By recognizing the "principle of evacuation," we expose ourselves to the possible removal of our costly...and important...air and naval bases in Morocco. It is hoped that our recognition of the "principle" of evacuation will enable the pro-American conservative elements in Morocco to fight off left-wing Arab demands that we get out at once. Our aim, Schoenbrun reports, is to arrange a slow-phased withdrawal...or even to re-negotiate a new arrangement for maintaining our present bases. The United States has a complex of four air bases in Morocco...built at a cost of roughly half a billion dollars.

Premier DeGaulle today received support for the new French constitution from Jean Monnet, father of the European Community and one of the most respected men in France. Monnet announced...publicly...that he would vote for the constitution in the referendum later this month.

French police arrested more than 200 Algerians today...in raids throughout France. The arrests are part of the French effort to smash the Algerian terrorist movement...which has resulted in the sabotage of French oil installations and several deaths.

The French government has reiterated its position that the Algerian revolt is an internal French problem. The information minister, Jacques Soustelle, said after a cabinet meeting today that France will boycott any United Nations debate on the Algerian problem.

Iceland said today that it would like the United Nations General Assembly to settle the dispute with Britain over its new 12-mile fishing limits. British trawlers have been operating in their accustomed fishing grounds... inside the 12-mile zone...ever since Iceland unilaterally proclaimed the new limit last month. There have been several encounters between British gunboats and the Islandic coast guard but no casualties. Iceland complains that in the past 24 hours two British trawlers tried to run down its patrol boats to avoid arrest. The General Assembly meets here in New York on Tuesday.

The Agriculture Department predicts the biggest harvest this year in history. The estimated corn crop is three and a half billion bushels---up three percent from the August forecast..and five percent above last year. The forecast for wheat is 1-billion, 466-million bushels...a new record. And livestock feed grain is expected to surpass last year's record yield by nearly six percent.

Since the United States still stands close to the brink of war over the offshore islands in the Formosa Strait, the ordinary citizen is entitled to all the help he can get to understand why. What he is getting from Secretary Dulles does not go the whole way. Mr. Dulles himself admits this. In his news conference yesterday he said: "I am aware of the fact that the elements that go into making final decisions are so delicate, oftentimes not subject to public appraisal, that there lies a responsibility upon the President and his principal advisers that cannot be shared with the general public." Maybe President Eisenhower intends to go further than his Seceetary of State in his broadcast tomorrow night.

Mr. Dulles said that the elements in the situation are essentially the same as they were four years ago. But in 1955 the Chinese Nationalists evacuated the Dachen Islands, and Mr. Dulles was asked why that action did not threaten our position in the Pacific as he considers the loss of Quemoy and Matsu would do today. He replied that: "The facts speak for themselves that our analysis of that situation was correct. I believe" he said, "that our analysis of the present situation also is correct." This hardly qualifies as an explanation. And if the parallel between the Dachen Islands and Quemoy and Matsu is examined further, the difference between them grows smaller. Four years ago, Quemoy and Matsu were not considered strategically vital to the defense of Formosa. Their value was not defensive, it was offensive. They would be stepping stones for a Nationalist invasion of the mainland. But today the value of Quemoy and Matsu has become defensive. The President himself has said so. The reason is not geographic. It is simply that Chiang Kai Shek has put a third of the Nationalist army on them. If these men are lost, the defense of Formosa obviously is jeopardized.

Four years ago, we would not have gone to war over Quemoy and Matsu as such, and Congress did not include the offshore islands in the American guarantee. Today we might go to war over them. And the huge difference in American policy is the result of Chiang's decision to weaken his defense of Formosa by putting so many of his best troops on the islands. In other words, Nationalist China increased the obligation of the United States. It may be that Chiang was encouraged to do so by elements in this country. But it is certain he was not dissuaded from doing it, as surely he might have been. Now, Mr. Dulles feels entitled to say that the threat of aggression against Quemoy and Matsu is a threat to the whole Western World, comparable to the threat in Korea and the Berlin blockade. Mr. Dulles spoke with so much conviction about this that one can be sure it is crystal clear to him. But the public would benefit from further clarification.

At the time our Formosa policy was spelled out in the Congressional resolution, the idea was that a Communist assault on the offshore islands might be part of a campaign to regain Formosa. Under these circumstances, the President was authorized to do what he felt necessary, that is, defend the islands. Today, however, there is no evidence that Red China is preparing a massive assault on Formosa. Quemoy is vital to Formosa, not by something the Communists now are threatening to do, but by something Chiang has done. In other words, Chiang has been allowed to make our present Quemoy policy for us.

It is only fair to Mr. Dulles to point out that if he has presented an obscure case for United States policy, it may be due in part to his inability to talk freely about a Nationalist withdrawal from Quemoy and Matsu at this juncture. One is entitled to assume that he wants it, if it can be linked with a Communist pledge not to use force to regain Formosa. But that must come as the fruit of negotiation. And as he said yesterday, the Communists "have not yet exposed their hand." There are several specific results that can follow a Communist pledge not to use force. But Mr. Dulles cannot be asked to lay his cards on the table at this time. Bargaining with Communists is sure to be tedious, tough, and exasperating. However, to get to the bargaining table must be the basic United States policy, as Mr. Dulles himself stresses. And everything that Mr. Dulles and the President have to say about it can only be crystal clear if it explains that we really are doing our utmost to get there.

The word for today migtt be the quotation....attributed to Abraham Lincoln...by my friend Carl Sandburg. "I fear," said Lincoln, "explanations explanatory of things explained."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Sept. 11, 1958

This is the news:

The Supreme Court heard arguments in the Little Rock school integration case for three and a half hours...then adjourned until noon tomorrow. It is possible that the court will announce its decision at that time. The issue argued today was the same as that argued before the nine justices two weeks ago: May a program of school integration, once in operation, be lawfully suspended because of popular opposition as manifested by acts of violence? Specifically, must integration be resumed at Central High School now...or shall a two and a half year delay granted by a federal district judge be allowed to stand? Richard Butler, attorney for the Little Rock School Board, led off today's argument...stressing the need for delay./ He referred to the phrase, "with all deliberate speed," which appeared in the Supreme Court decision of 1955...ordering the de-segregation of public schools...and said time was needed "to provide a transition from one era to another, and from one set of standards to another."/ Butler spoke for two hours, and used much of the time answering questions from the bench./ Butler...at one point...said the school board was "frustrated" because it was being ordered by the courts to do one thing, and BY the state of Arkansas to do another./ Chief Justice Warren interrupted to say, that the real issue was "not just whether the school board is being frustrated, but whether any agent of the state is preventing students from exercising their constitutional rights."/ The attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Thurgood Marshall, took just 22 minutes. He noted that the Arkansas legislature...at the request of Governor Faubus... had passed a series of bills, giving the governor power to close any schools forcibly integrated. He noted, further, that none of the bills had been signed./ And he said, "I know of no other instance when a governor has tried to hold something over this court."/ When he was finished, no questions were asked./ The summation by the United States solicitor general,

J. Lee Rankin, also was brief. In urging the immediate resumption of integration at Central High...which is scheduled to open next Monday...he said there could be no equality of justice "if the law steps aside even for a moment at the command of force and violence."

In Little Rock today, Governor Faubus said he expects the court to rule for an immediate resumption of integration. He also said it was "very likely" that he would use the legislation...passed two weeks ago...to close down the school. But he refused to be pinned down.

A force of deputy United States marshals has begun arriving in Little Rock to help preserve order should the high court issue a new integration decree.

In Virginia today, the Circuit Court of Appeals refused to stay a lower federal court order...requiring integration of the Warren County high school, starting on Monday. Governor Almond declined to say whether he regards this as a final order...which would serve as a basis for closing the school under Virginia state law.

In Montgomery, Alabama...the state supreme court today rejected the appeal of Jimmy Wilson, a Negro sentenced to die in the electric chair for robbing a white woman of a dollar and 95 cents. In denying Wilson's appeal for a rehearing, the court pointed out that he was convicted of robbery, not theft...that the woman was physically threatened.

President Eisenhower has flown to Washington...from Newport...for his nationwide speech tonight on the crisis in the Far East. The text of the speech has not been released. This afternoon, the President conferred at the White House with Secretary of State Dulles and Neil McElroy, secretary of defense. Earlier in the day, Mr. Dulles had a separate conference with General Twining, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

The Voice of America is broadcasting the President's speech "live" on its international network. And later it will broadcast excerpts in 40 languages, including Russian and Chinese. CBS Radio is carrying the speech at 10 p.m., Eastern Time.

Mr. McElroy said this afternoon that he had not asked the President for any additional authority for U.S. naval forces in the Formosa Strait. American warships escorted another Nationalist convoy to Quemoy today, up to within three miles of the coast. The convoy was able, however, to deliver only a small proportion of its supplies. The Communist artillery on three sides of Quemoy opened up...hitting the island with more than 57-thousand shells/ in five and a half hours. The heaviest bombardment yet in the Formosa Strait./ No American vessel was hit.

Communist China today accused four American warships of "invading" its territorial waters...a reference, presumably, to the fact that the United States has been ignoring its recently proclaimed 12-mile limit./ The State Department said this afternoon, "No U.S.naval vessel has gone beyond what we consider to be international waters."

The United States and Britain have sent formal notes to Moscow, expressing "gratification" that Russia has agreed to meet with them on October 31st, to discuss a ban on nuclear weapons tests. / In proposing such a meeting, the United States and Britain offered to suspend their tests for one year, effective when the three powers sat down to talk. / President Eisenhower suggested that the suspension be continued on a year-to-year basis, so long as progress toward establishment of a control system was being made. The President also expressed hope that the talks would lead to agreement on the broader aspects of disarmament...such as limitation of conventional armament, and a ban on production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes. / Last month, Russia agreed to the October meeting...but disapproved of the suggestion that the test ban be conditional and on a yearly renewal basis. / It wanted the tests halted at once "for all time." We propose, in our new note, that this matter be taken up when the discussions get under way. We agree to the Soviet proposal that the meeting be held in Geneva, instead of in New York.

~~In Washington, the Senate disarmament subcommittee has issued a report...warning that a test ban which does not include inspection in~~

→

Communist China "might present an opportunity for evasions on the part of the Soviet bloc." The subcommittee report...which is unanimous...says that an enforceable agreement on suspending tests would be in our national interest. / But it emphasizes that such an agreement should be recognized for what it would be---only a first step toward an overall disarmament pact. The subcommittee foresees "grave consequences" if the arms race is projected into outer space. / And it wants a United Nations study of possible inspection systems to insure that space is used for purposes of peace.

Britain exploded another nuclear device today in its current test series at Christmas Island. / The device was in the megaton range---which is to say it was a hydrogen bomb. / And it was exploded at high altitude.

India and Pakistan today issued a joint communique...announcing settlement of part of their long-standing frontier dispute. / The communique comes after two days of talks between Prime Minister Nehru of India and Premier Noon of Pakistan. / The settlement calls for an exchange of enclaves---or territorial pockets---on the two countries' eastern frontiers. The prime ministers agreed that, pending a settlement in other frontier areas, there would be "no disturbance of the status quo by force."

President Eisenhower today accepted with regret the resignation of Maxwell Gluck as United States ambassador to Ceylon. The appointment of Gluck to the ambassadorial post a year ago provoked criticism when it became known that...in appearing before a congressional committee... he could not name the prime minister of either Ceylon or India. Gluck, who owns a chain of dress shops, said later he knew the names but could not pronounce them. He told the President he wished to resign because of "personal considerations." The resignation is effective the first of next month.

Communist China announces that it is "relieving" its ambassador to Yugoslavia. The announcement gives no reason for the ambassador's removal. Nor does it give any indication whether he will be replaced. Relations between Yugoslavia and Communist China have been deteriorating for some time because of President Tito's "revisionist policies."

This might be a social note. The Reuters news service carries a report that Soviet Premier Khrushchev is planning to visit the Brussels Fair. No confirmation from Moscow.

President Eisenhower's budget director...Maurice Stans...today issued his mid-year report. / And it shows that the Treasury expects to end up this fisdal year, more than 12-billion dollars in the red. This would increase the public debt to 283-billion dollars. / The budget director told reporters, at a news conference, that he "felt a sense of discouragement." He said the President, and his advisers, must decide within 60 days whether to have the federal tax on gasoline increased next year, so as to bring in another billion dollars in revenue. / And he said, that if the Administration took a "consistent" position, it would ask Congress for another increase in postal rates. / He estimated that despite the recent rate increase, the Post Office Department...this year...will have a deficit of 735-million dollars.

Edward R. Murrow: September 11, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Anyone looking at this country in perspective today, would be struck by two momentous events and the attitude of the public to them. One is the President's address tonight on the Formosa crisis. / The other is the final consideration by the Supreme Court of the Little Rock school issue. / These bear witness to the fact that the United States is in the throes of a foreign crisis of great gravity and unpredictable consequences; and at the same time it is in the throes of a domestic crisis, also grave, and with consequences that also are unpredictable. / American destiny is certain to be affected by both crises. / But the public as a whole can be described as being in a state of calm bordering on apathy. / Is it interested? Moderately so. Is it worried? Only regionally, over the school question. / Is it frightened? Not in the least. / That is not to say that feelings have not been stirred up. Certainly the school issue is highly charged with emotion. / But there is little evidence that Americans as a nation realize that tremendous decisions are being made that will shape and change the future not only for them, but perhaps for the world.

Of the two crises, the one over de-segregation is easier to follow and understand. Both sides have presented their arguments eloquently. Until recently, there was remarkably little dispute outside some areas in the South of the basic issue of ultimate integration. Moderate Southerners didn't like it, but granted it probably was bound to come. The question was not so much whether as when. And that is the way the case was presented to the Supreme Court by the Little Rock school board. It asks for the two-and-a-half years delay granted by Judge Lemley and reversed by the Court of Appeals.

But there is more to the case by now. Harry Ashmore, prize-winning editor of the Little Rock Arkansas Gazette, whose editorials have been so highly praised in the North, has modified his position somewhat. He writes that the issue is now one of cold conflict between State and Federal authority. The massive defiance of the South, he says, is not only holding fast from the Potomac to Dallas, but in some cases is turning back the trend where integration has taken place or is on the verge of coming into effect. He warns that "there is no way at this time to force southern compliance to court orders without doing serious and perhaps irreparable harm to the system of education upon which all our children, colored as well as white, are dependent. No one can doubt" he writes, "the alternative to delay is chaos in education of a duration that no man can foresee."

The recent consolidation of official southern opposition has not softened the arguments of those opposing the Little Rock plea. The brief filed by Thurgood Marshall for the N.A.A.C.P says: "Even if it is claimed that tension will result which will disturb the educational process, this is preferable to the complete breakdown of education which will result from teaching children that courts of law bow to violence." His brief recognizes that two factors give importance to the Little Rock appeal. One is that the case has become a test for the entire nation of the Supreme Court's ruling that "the vitality of constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with them". The other is the argument that unless there is delay, ruffians with or without support from State officials, will again try to prevent enforcement of the court's order. "The case" says the brief" involves the survival of the rule of law." And it tells the court it not only can re-state the urgency of proceeding with de-segregation, but also "the primacy of all constitutional rights over bigots, big and small."

In the welter of legal language which the case has let loose, the brief filed by Senator Fulbright is distinguished by an undeniable literary charm.

He demonstrates that there is such a thing as a "Southern mind" which he says is the legacy of "an ancient and melancholy history." "I would suggest", he pleads "that the problem of school integration is more likely - bearing in mind that flesh-and-blood is weak and frail - to yield to the slow conversion of the human heart than to remedies of a more urgent nature."

~~But since~~ At issue is now the primary principle of the Supreme Court's rulings being accepted as the law of the land, ~~the [illegible] is [illegible] to meet that challenge without equivocation.~~ The answer may come tomorrow. And the definitive statement of our Policy in the Formosa Straits may come 2 hours from now.

Word for Today

I would suggest ~~I propose~~ for the Word for Today, the inscription chiseled into the marble of the Supreme Court building: "Equal justice under law."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Supreme Court heard arguments in the Little Rock school integration case for three and a half hours...then adjourned until noon tomorrow. It is possible that the court will announce its decision at that time. The issue argued today was the same as that argued before the nine justices two weeks ago: May a program of school integration, once in operation, be lawfully suspended because of popular opposition as manifested by acts of violence? Specifically, must integration be resumed at Central High School now...or shall a two and a half year delay granted by a federal district judge be allowed to stand? Richard Butler, attorney for the Little Rock School Board, led off today's argument...stressing the need for delay. He referred to the phrase "with all deliberate speed" which appeared in the Supreme Court decision of 1955... ordering the de-segregation of public schools...and said time was needed "to provide a transition from one era to another and from one set of standards to another." Butler spoke for two hours, and used much of the time answering questions from the bench. Butler...at one point...said the school board was "frustrated" because it was being ordered by the courts to do one thing and by the state of Arkansas to do another. Chief Justice Warren interrupted to say that the real issue was "not just whether the school board is being frustrated, but whether any agent of the state is preventing students from exercising their constitutional rights." The attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Thurgood Marshall, took just 22 minutes. He noted that the Arkansas legislature...at the request of Governor Faubus... had passed a series of bills, giving the governor power to close any schools forcibly integrated. He noted, further, that none of the bills had been signed. And he said, "I know of no other instance when a governor has tried to hold something over this court." When he was finished, no questions were asked. The summation by the United States solicitor general J. Lee Rankin, also was brief. In urging the immediate resumption of integration at Central High...which is scheduled to open next Monday...he said there could be no equality of justice "if the law steps aside even for a moment at the command of force and violence."

In Little Rock today, Governor Faubus said he expects the court to rule for an immediate resumption of integration. He also said it was "very likely" that he would use the legislation...passed two weeks ago...to close down the school. But he refused to be pinned down.

A force of deputy United States marshals has begun arriving in Little Rock to help preserve order should the high court issue a new integration decree.

In Virginia today, the Circuit Court of Appeals refused to stay a lower federal court order...requiring integration of the Warren County high school, starting on Monday. Governor Almond declined to say whether he regards this as a final order...which would serve as a basis for closing the school under Virginia state law.

In Montgomery, Alabama...the state supreme court today rejected the appeal of Jimmy Wilson, a Negro sentenced to die in the electric chair for robbing a white woman of a dollar and 95 cents. In denying Wilson's appeal for a rehearing, the court pointed out that he was convicted of robbery, not theft... that the woman was physically threatened.

President Eisenhower has flown to Washington...from Newport...for his nationwide speech tonight on the crisis in the Far East. The text of the speech has not been released. This afternoon, the President conferred at the White House with Secretary of State Dulles and Neil McElroy, secretary of defense. Earlier in the day, Mr. Dulles had a separate conference with General Twining, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

The Voice of America is broadcasting the President's speech "live" on its international network. And later it will broadcast excerpts in forty languages, including Russian and Chinese. CBS Radio is carrying the speech at 10 P.M., Eastern Time.

Mr. McElroy said this afternoon that he had not asked the President for any additional authority for U.S. naval forces in the Formosa Strait. American warships escorted another Nationalist convoy to Quemoy today, up to within three miles of the coast. The convoy was able, however, to deliver only a small proportion of its supplies. The Communist artillery on three sides of Quemoy opened up...hitting the island with more than 57 thousand shells in five and a half hours. The heaviest bombardment yet in the Formosa Strait. No American vessel was hit.

Communist China today accused four American warships of "invading" its territorial waters...a reference, presumably, to the fact that the United States has been ignoring its recently proclaimed 12 mile limit. The State Department said this afternoon, "No U.S. naval vessel has gone beyond what we consider to be international waters."

The United States and Britain have sent formal notes to Moscow expressing "gratification" that Russia has agreed to meet with them on October 31 to discuss a ban on nuclear weapons tests. In proposing such a meeting, the United States and Britian offered to suspend their tests for one year, effective when the three powers sat down to talk. President Eisenhower suggested that the suspension be continued on a year-to-year basis so long as progress toward establishment of a control system was being made. The President also expressed hope that the talks would lead to agreement on the broader aspects of disarmament such as limitation of conventional armament and a ban on production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes. Last month, Russia agreed to the October meeting...but disapproved of the suggestion that the test ban be conditional and on a yearly renewal basis. It wanted the tests halted at once

"for all time." We propose in our new note that this matter be taken up when the discussions get under way. We agree to the Soviet proposal that the meeting be held in Geneva, instead of in New York.

Britain exploded another nuclear device today in its current test series at Christmas Island. The device was in the megaton range---which is to say it was a hydrogen bomb. And it was exploded at high altitude.

India and Pakistan today issued a joint communique...announcing settlement of part of their long-standing frontier dispute. The communique comes after two days of talks between Prime Minister Nehru of India and Premier Noon of Pakistan. The settlement calls for an exchange of enclaves---or territorial pockets---on the two countries' eastern frontiers. The prime ministers agreed that, pending a settlement in other frontier areas, there would be "no disturbance of the status quo by force."

Ptesident Eisenhower today accepted with regret the resignation of Maxwell Gluck as United States ambassador to Ceylon. He told the President he wished to resign because of "personal considerations." The resignation is effective the first of next month.

Communist China announces that it is "relieving" its ambassador to Yugoslavia. The announcement gives no reason for the ambassador's removal. Nor does it give any indication whether he will be replaced. Relations between Yugoslavia and Communist China have been deteriorating for some time because of President Tito's "revisionist policies."

President Eisenhower's budget director...Maurice Stans...today issued his mid-year report. And it shows that the Treasury expects to end up this fiscll year more than 12-billion dollars in the red. This would increase the public debt to 283-billion dollars. The budget director told reporters at a news conference that he "felt a sense of discouragement." He said the President and his advisers must decide within 60 days whether to have the federal tax on gasoline increased next year so as to bring in another billion dollars in revenue. And he said that if the Administrttion took a "consistent" position, it would ask Congress for another increase in postal rates. He estimated that despite the recent rate increase, the Post Office Department... this year...will have a deficit of 735 million dollars.

Anyone looking at this country in perspective today would be struck by two momentous events and the attitude of the public to them. One is the President's address tonight on the Formosa crisis. The other is the final consideration by the Supreme Court of the Little Rock school issue. These bear witness to the fact that the United States is in the throes of a foreign crisis of great gravity and unpredictable consequences; and at the same time it is in the throes of a domestic crisis, also grave, and with consequences that also are unpredictable. American destiny is certain to be affected by both crises. But the public as a whole can be described as being in a state of calm bordering on apathy. Is it interested? Moderately so. Is it worried? Only regionally, over the school question. Is it frightened? Not in the least. This is not to say that feelings have not been stirred up. Certainly the school issue is highly charged with emotion. But there is little evidence that Americans as a nation realize that tremendous decisions are being made that will shape and change the future not only for them, but perhaps for the world.

Of the two crisis, the one over de-segration is easier to follow and understand. Both sides have presented their arguments eloquently. Until recently, there was remarkably little dispute outside some areas in the South of the basic issue of ultimate integration. Moderate Southerners didn't like it, but granted it probably was bound to come. The question was not so much whether as when. And that is the way the case was presented to the Supreme Court by the Little Rock school boatd. It asks for the two-and-a-half years delay granted by Judge Lemley and reversed by the Court of Appeals.

But there is more to the case by now. Harry Ashmore, prize-winning editor of Little Rock Arkansas Gazette, whose editorials have been so highly praised in the North, has modified his position somewhat. He writes that the issue is now one of cold conflict between State and Federal atthority. The massive defiance of the South he says, is not only holding fast from the Potomac to Dallas, but in some cases is turning back the trend where integration has taken place or is on the verge of coming into effect. He warns that "there is no way at this time to force southern compliance to court orders without doing serious and perhaps irreparable harm to the system of education upon which all our children, colored as well as white are dependent. No one can doubt" he writes, "the alternative to delay is chaos in education of a duration that no man can foresee."

The recent consolidation of official southern opposition has not softened the arguments of those opposing the Little Rock plea. The brief filed by Thurgood Marshall for the N.A.A.C.P. says: "Even if it is claimed that tension will result which will disturb the educational process, this is preferable to the complete breakdown of education wichh will result from teaching children that courts of law bow to violence." His brief recognizes that two factors give importance to the Little Rock appeal. One is that the case has become a test for the entire nation of the Supreme Court's ruling that "the vitality of constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with them." The other is the argument that unless there is delay, ruffians with or wtthout support from state officials will again try to prevent enforcement of the court's order. "The case" says the brief "involves the survival of the rule of law." And it tells the court it not only can re-state the urgency of proceeding with de-segregation, but also "the primacy of all constitutional rights over bigots, big and small."

In the welter of legal language which the case has let loose, the brief filed by Senator Fulbright is distinguished by an undeniable literary charm. He demonstrates that there is such a thing as a "Southern mind" which he says is the legacy of "an ancient and melancholy history." "I would suggest," he pleads "that the problem of school integration is more likely -bearing in mind that flesh-and-blood is weak and frail - to y eld to the slow conversion of the human heart than to remedies of a more urgent nature."

At issue is now the primary principle of the Supreme Court's rulings being accepted as the law of the land. The answer may come tomorrow. And the definitive statement of our policy in the Formosa Strait may come two hours from now.

I would suggest for the Word for Today, the inscription chiseled into the marble of the Supreme Court building; "Equal justice under law."

Goodnight and good luck!

Sept. 12, 1958

(Via Western Union)

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today ordered the resumption of racial integration at Little Rock Central High School. It said...in a unanimous decision... that its judgment "shall be effective immediately." Central High School is scheduled to re-open on Monday. And the Supreme Court said that because of this, "we deem it important to make prompt announcement of our judgment."

TONIGHT, GOVERNOR FAUBUS SIGNED THE BILL, PASSED BY THE Arkansas legislature EMPOWERING HIM TO CLOSE the high school, in the event of such a decision as the high court handed down today. The governor THEN ORDERED THE SCHOOL CLOSED, AS OF 8A.M. MONDAY.

What the Supreme Court did today was affirm last month's judgment by the Circuit Court of Appeals. The appeals court, at that time, reversed a district court order which said that integration at Central High School could be delayed for two and a half years. The Supreme Court also re-instated the lower court orders of 1956 and 1957...upholding the school board's desegration program. Recently, however, the school board had argued that the program was unworkable at this time because of public resistance. This was also the judgment of District Judge Lemley, whose finding is now overruled. The Supreme Court did not say today why it had ordered the resumption of integration at Central High School, except that the order was in compliance with its earlier decisions. The court said that the views supporting its judgment "would be prepared and announced in due course."

(more)

At his vacation headquarters in Newport, President Eisenhower issued a statement appealing to Americans "to avoid defiance of the court's orders in this matter." He said, "I hope that all of us may live up to our traditional and proud boast that ours is a government of laws. All of us," he said, "know that if an individual, a community or a state, is going continuously and successfully to defy the rulings of the courts, then anarchy results."

(more)

Members of Congress from northern states are applauding the Supreme Court action. Senator Javits of New York calls the decision "good news for free people everywhere." Senator McClellan of Arkansas predicts that the decision will do "irreparable harm" to both the public school system and race relations. "Is the Supreme Court," he asks, "saying that it---implemented by federal bayonets---is the supreme power of the land?"

Late word from Little Rock is that the school board, pending word from Governor Faubus, will reopen Central High on Monday and admit seven Negro students. The school board says in a formal statement that it "apparently" has no other choice.

Today, in Front Royal, Virginia, Warren County High School closed its doors... rather than admit Negro students. The action was taken under Virginia state law, after a federal court said the school must be integrated

(more)

Sept. 12, 1958

(4)

(Via Western Union)

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

Lead to come...

The vacation White House announces that President Eisenhower will reply...within 24 hours...to Khrushchev's note demanding the withdrawal of U.S. military forces from Formosa and the Formosa Strait. Khrushchev warned that Russia would regard any attack on Communist China as an attack on Russia itself.

Last night...in his report to the American people...Mr. Eisenhower said that this country cannot be "either lured or frightened into appeasement." He believed that the American people as a whole "do stand ready to defend the principle that armed force shall not be used for aggressive purposes." Does Mr. Khrushchev, he asked, think that we have so soon forgotten Korea? But the President also said that conciliation should never be abandoned in favor of force. "We would welcome," he said. We would welcome, he said, negotiations which in the present circumstances could have "a fruitful result."

(more)

Congressional reaction to the President's speech is mixed. Republican Senate Leader Knowland said Mr. Eisenhower had given the Communists "a forceful reminder that America will not abandom her allies, or her defenses in the Far East." Montana's Democratic Senator Mansfield described the speech as "strong and factual, with an olive branch attached." But Democratic Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts accuses the Administration of making "a deliberately vague and inconsistent response to the crisis in the Formosa Strait." He says all the facts---military and political---"would dictate a contrary policy."

Secretary of Defense McElroy told reporters today that...in his opinion... the Administration had made it clear that we would resist an invasion of Quemoy.

News Secretary Hagerty says that, so far, telegrams received at the White House are running about two-to-one in favor of the position expressed last night by the President.

(more)

Mr. Eisenhower's declaration (naturally) concerned our European allies. For a report on the British reaction, here is my colleague Charles Collingwood, speaking from London. / Tape runs four minutes, ends on cue "to Ed Murrow in New York."/

France...like Britain...is less than enthusiastic over the President's speech. For a summary of the French attitude, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris. / Tape runs two minutes and fifteen seconds, ends on cue "to Edward R. Murrow in New York."/

That was my colleague David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris.

(more)

Reaction from Russia has been sharp. The official Soviet news agency Tass calls the speech "an attempt to justify a policy of military blackmail." Tass says the President was trying to "calm" American public opinion, but that actually he showed American foreign policy to be based on aggressive tendencies which, says Tass," present a serious threat to world peace." Russia accuses Mr. Eisenhower of distortion, in comparing the Communist action against Quemoy to Hitler's move against Czechoslovakia. The truth, it says, is that Chiang Kai-shek provoked Communist China and that the offshore islands are part of China. According to Tass, the President said he welcomes discussion, but disclosed that the United States "wants to talk in the tones of a dictator." The newspaper Soviet Russia took Secretary of State Dulles for its target today, accusing him of "irresponsibility, adventurism and political blindness." It claims that in saying that no Communist government should be regarded as permanent, Dulles "broke all records for absurdity."

On Formosa, the Nationalist foreign minister called Mr. Eisenhower's speech "far-sighted"...but questioned the wisdom of trying to talk with the Chinese Communists. "However," he said, "we take note of repeated assurances that the United States will not be party to any arrangement which would prejudice our rights."

Peiping's ambassador to Poland returned to his post in Warsaw today...and said he is "most anxious" to see progress made toward a peaceful solution of the Formosa dispute. Ambassador Wang will represent his country in the forthcoming talks. Our ambassador to Poland, Jacob Beam, will represent the United States.

The Soviet government today accused the United States of surrounding Russia with radio stations, broadcasting "malacious anti-Soviet propaganda." The charge was made at a special Moscow news conference, called by the state committee for cultural relations with other countries. A committee spokesman said the "only aim" of the American stations was to interfere in the internal affairs of other states, and aggravate the international situation.

It was relatively quiet today in the Formosa Strait. Quemoy was hit by about 200 shells, compared to more than 57-thousand [redacted] shells yesterday.

In Washington, [redacted] Chairman Green of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, [redacted] said tonight that President Eisenhower is duty-bound to call a special session of Congress...if he thinks the Formosa crisis might explode into war.

The Federal Reserve Board said today that industrial production in August jumped by two percent. It said that more than one-half of the decline in production...suffered in the recession...has now been recovered.

The United States Court of Appeals [redacted] handed down a split two-to-one decision today, affecting civilians employed by the armed [redacted] services overseas. The court ruled that such civilians cannot be tried by military courts in peacetime.

(more)

The United States has been reminded...once more...that it has allies whose views do not always coincide with our own. Many centuries ago, Virgil said, "Whatever the issue, we shall share one common danger, one safety." And again...in ancient times...it was Plutarch who warned, "All power is feeble, unless it is united."

Goodnight and good luck.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, September 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... For a report on the British reaction, here is my colleague Charles Collingwood speaking from London.

COLLINGWOOD: Quemoy and Matsu are a political issue in Britain today. This is due to two factors: One, British public opinion - and most political commentators - believe that the United States' decision to defend Quemoy and Matsu is mistaken and that for Britain to get involved in the situation would be an even greater mistake; two, on the other hand, Prime Minister Macmillan's government is deeply committed to the American alliance and is exceedingly loathe to follow on any subject a line which would put it it outright opposition to American policy. The result is that the British government feels it must make gestures suggesting its approval of the moral position of the United States in order to satisfy the conditions of the alliance, but that it should not commit Britain to any positive action which would set off a storm of public protest within the country.

The government was getting along pretty well with this line until yesterday when Mr. Randolph Churchill, who is not only the son of Sir Winston, but a potent journalist in his own right, wrote an article which sat the cat among the pigeons. Randolph Churchill had gone to see the Prime Minister to show him the gift that he was taking to Sir Winston and Lady Churchill's fiftieth wedding anniversary celebration, in the south of France. He thereupon wrote an article for a newspaper in which he said that Prime Minister Macmillan won't rat on his allies. "I was lucky enough to see the prime minister," said Randolph Churchill, "and am happy to be in the position to tell the world that Britain will stand by the United States. Some people feel," he went on, "that the United States let us down over Suez. We ain't going to let the United States down over Quemoy and Matsu."

Now, if Mr. Churchill felt that he was lucky to have seen Mr. Macmillan, Mr. Macmillan definitely felt that he was unlucky to have seen Mr. Churchill, for although Mr. Macmillan doesn't want to rat on the United States, he is almost as anxious - in the present state of British public opinion - not to have to associate himself with American Far Eastern policy in any definite, clearcut way. So the ink was still not dry on Mr. Churchill's article when No. 10 Downing Street issued a statement not only disavowing Churchill but emphasizing that Britain has no commitment with the United States over the Far Eastern situation. Even that wasn't good enough for Britain's opposition Labor party, which, scenting a good political issue, jumped in to demand a definite government statement, saying that Britain has no secret deal with the United States to join in the defense of Quemoy and Matsu. It's a measure of how strong British feeling is about this issue that the Foreign Office went a considerable way toward saying just that this afternoon. "No commitment," said the Foreign Office, "no obligation of any kind to take military action for the defense of Quemoy, Matsu or Formosa." The Foreign Office spokesman went on to endorse President Eisenhower's hope that Ambassadorial talks or UN action might ameliorate the crisis. "We hope the talks will begin speedily," he said, and this certainly represents the majority view in Britain, which is appalled by the possibility of military action over the offshore islands and welcomes anything that holds out the prospect of avoiding it.

Meanwhile, Randolph Churchill, from his parents' golden wedding anniversary celebration in France, said blandly that the prime minister is right, what he wrote only represented his own opinion and no more than that of the situation. "If that is so," one paper remarks tonight, paraphrasing a famous remark of Churchill, Sr., "if that is so, then he has an idea of the Queen's English up with which we will not put." The paper suggests that from now on Mr. Macmillan confine his chats with his old friend's son to safe topics like the weather or golden wedding anniversaries. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: France, like Britain, is considerably less than enthusiastic over the President's speech. For a summary of the French attitude, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: It is rare to find the French in unanimous agreement on any issue but there is such unanimity today on the issue of Quemoy and Matsu. Left, Right and center are critical of American policy. There is also some criticism of China for endangering world peace by using force to win its case, but there's also a good deal of sympathy for Chinese exasperation at the occupation of these islands just off their coast. The French say that no power worthy of its name can tolerate a hostile force within gun range of its coastal defenses. As for Quemoy and Matsu being essential to the defense of Formosa, there's not one military authority here in France who endorses that argument. Thus, neither politically nor militarily does the defense of the offshore islands evoke any support over here. The French press is outspoken in its criticism of the American position, which it denounces as a prime example of brinkmanship. Editorial comment today on President Eisenhower's address to the nation is generally unfavorable although some hope is found in the President's mention of the United Nations as an eventual arbiter of the dispute. Most of the headlines stress Eisenhower's no war pledge with evident relief. A new and particularly interesting comment on America's China policy appears this evening in the influential paper L'Monde. L'Monde argues that there's a basic contradiction between State Department policy on Quemoy and the U.S. Senate resolution calling for China's participation in atomic test ban. "How," asks L'Monde," can Washington remain intransigent on Quemoy and at the same time deal with China on cessation of atomic tests." The French argue that it's unrealistic to expect China to agree to renounce atomic weapons while atomic-equipped American forces are cruising off Chinese coasts. China might not agree to renounce testing under any conditions. But, the French say, there's little hope of expecting responsible behavior from China just so long as avowed enemies are at her gates while she's black-balled from the only organization where a nation can be brought to face the court of world opinion. That's the view held here in Paris tonight. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in N. Y.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today ordered the resumption of racial integration at Little Rock Central High School. It said...in a unanimous decision...that its judgment "shall be effective immediately." Central High School is scheduled to re-open on Monday. And the Supreme Court said that because of this, "we deem it important to make prompt announcement of our judgment." Tonight, Governor Faubus signed the bill, passed by the Arkansas legislature empowering him to close the high school, in the event of such a decision as the high court handed down today. The governor then ordered the school closed, as of 8 A.M. Monday.

What the Supreme Court did today was affirm last month's judgment by the Circuit Court of Appeals. The appeals court, at that time, reversed a district court order which said that integration at Central High School could be delayed for two and a half years. The Supreme Court also re-instated the lower court orders of 1956 and 1957...upholding the school board's desegregation program. Recently, however, the school board had argued that the program was unworkable at this time because of public resistance. This was also the judgment of District Judge Lemley, whose finding is now overruled. The Supreme Court did not say today why it had ordered the resumption of integration at Central High School, except that the order was in compliance with its earlier decisions. The court said that the views supporting its judgment "would be prepared and announced in due course."

At his vacation headquarters in Newport, President Eisenhower issued a statement appealing to Americans "to avoid defiance of the court's orders in this matter." He said, "I hope that all of us may live up to our traditional and proud boast that ours is a government of laws. All of us," he said, "know that if an individual, a community or a state, is going continuously and successfully to defy the rulings of the courts, then anarchy results."

Members of Congress from northern state are applauding the Supreme Court action. Senator Javits of New York calls the decision "good news for free people everywhere." Senator McClellan of Arkansas predicts that the decision will do "irreparable harm" to both the public school system and race relations. "Is the Supreme Court," he asks, "saying that it---implemented by federal bayonets---is the supreme power of the land?"

Today, in Front Royal, Virginia, Warren County High School closed its doors...rather than admit Negro students. The action was taken under Virginia state law, after a federal court said the school must be integrated.

The vacation White House announces that President Eisenhower will reply...within 24 hours...to Khrushchev's note demanding the withdrawal of U.S. military forces from Formosa and the Formosa Strait. Khrushchev warned that Russia would regard any attack on Communist China as an attack on Russia itself.

Last night...in his report to the American people...Mr. Eisenhower said that this country cannot be "either lured or frightened into appeasement." He believed that the American people as a whole "do stand ready to defend the principle that armed force shall not be used for aggressive purposes." Does Mr. Khrushchev, he asked, think that we have so soon forgotten Korea" But the President also said that conciliation should never be abandoned in favor of force. We would welcome, he said, negotiations which in the present circumstances could have "a fruitful result."

Congressional reaction to the President's speech is mixed. Republican Senate Leader Knowland said Mr. Eisenhower had given the Communists "a forceful reminder that America will not abandon her allies, or her defenses in the Far East." Montana's Democratic Senator Mansfield described the speech as "strong and factual, with an olive branch attached." But Democratic Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts accuses the Administration of making "a deliberately vague and inconsistent response to the crisis in the Formosa Strait." He says all the facts--military and political---"would dictate a contrary policy."

Secretary of Defense McElroy told reporters today that in his opinion, the Administration had made it clear that we would resist an invasion of Quemoy.

News Secretary Hagerty says that, so far, telegrams received at the White House are running about two-to-one in favor of the position expressed last night by the President.

Mr. Eisenhower's declaration naturally concerned our European allies. For a report on the British reaction, here is my colleague Charles Collingwood, speaking from London.

COLLINGWOOD: Quemoy and Matsu are a political issue in Britain today. This is due to two factors: One, British public opinion - and most political commentators believe that the United States' decision to defend Quemoy and Matsu is mistaken and that for Britain to get involved in the situation would be an even greater mistake; two, on the other hand, Prime Minister Macmillan's government is deeply committed to the American alliance and is exceedingly loathe to follow on any subject a line which would put it at outright opposition to American policy. The result is that the British government feels it must make gestures suggesting its approval of the moral position of the United States in order to satisfy the conditions of the alliance, but that it should not commit Britain to any positive action which would set off a storm of public protest within the country.

The government was getting along pretty well with this line until yesterday when Mr. Randolph Churchill, who is not only the son of Sir Winston, but a potent journalist in his own right, wrote an article which sat the cat among the pigeons. Randolph Churchill had gone to see the Prime Minister to show him the gift that he was taking to Sir Winston and Lady Churchill's fiftieth wedding anniversary celebration, in the south of France. He thereupon wrote an article for a newspaper in which he said that Prime Minister Macmillan won't rat on his allies. "I was lucky enough to see the prime minister," said Randolph Churchill, "and am happy to be in the position to tell the world that Britain will stand by the United States. Some people feel," he went on, "that the United States let us down over Suez. We ain't going to let the United States down over Quemoy and Matsu."

Now, if Mr. Churchill felt that he was lucky to have seen Mr. Macmillan, Mr. Macmillan definitely felt that he was unlucky to have seen Mr. Churchill, for although Mr. Macmilland doesn't want to rat on the United States, he is almost as anxious - in the present state of British public opinion not to have to associate himself with American Far Eastern policy in any definite, clearcut way. So the ink was still not dry on Mr. Churchill's article when No. 10 Downing Street issued a statement not only disavowing Churchill, but emphasizing that Britain has no commitment with the United States over the Far Eastern situation. Even that wasn't good enough for Britain's opposition Labour Party, which, scenting a good political issue, jumped in to demand a definite government statement, saying that Britain has no secret deal with the United States to join in the defense of Quemoy and Matsu. It's a measure of how strong British feeling is about this issue that the Foreign Office went a considerable way toward saying just that this afternoon. "No commitment," said the Foreign Office, "no obligation of any kind to take military action for the defense of Quemoy, Matsu or Formosa." The Foreign Office spokesman wnet on to endorse President Eisenhower's hope that ambassadorial talks or UN action might ameliorate the crisis. "We hope the talks will begin speedily," he said, and this certainly represents the majority view in Britain, whieh is appalled by the possibility of military action over the offshore islands and welcomes anything that holds out the prospect of avoiding it.

Meanwhile, Randolph Churchill, from his parents' golden wedding anniversary celebration in France, said blandly that the prime minister is right, what he wrote only represented his own opinion and no more than that of the situation. "If that is so," one paper remarks tonight, paraphrasing a famous remark of Churchill, Sr., "if that is so, then he has an idea of the Queen's English up with which we will not put." The paper suggests that from now on Mr. Macmillan confine his chats with his old friend's son to safe topics like the weather or golden wedding anniversaries. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: France, like Britain, is considerably less than enthusiastic over the President's speech. For a summary of the French attitude, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: It is rare to find the French in unanimous agreement on any issue but there is such unanimity today on the issue of Quemoy and Matsu. Left, Right and center are critical of American policy. There is also some criticism of China for endangering world peace by using force to win its case, but there's also a good deal of sympathy for Chinese exasperation at the occupation of these islands just off their coast. The French say that no power worthy of its name can t olerate a hostile force within gun range of its coastal defenses. As for Quemoy and Matsu being essential to the defense of Formosa, there's not one military authority here in France who endorses that argument. Thus, neither politically nor militarily does the defense of the offshore islands evoke any support over here. The French press is outspoken in its criticism of the American position, which it denounces as a prime example of brinkmanship. Editorial comment today on President Eisenhower's address to the nation is generally unfavorable, although some hope is found in the President's mention of the United Nations as an eventual arbiter of the dispute. Most of the headlines stress Eisenhower's no war pledge with evident relief. A new and particularly interest, comment on America's China policy appears this evening in the influential paper LeMonde. Le Monde argues that there's a basic contradiction between State Department policy on Quemoy and the U.S. Senate resolution calling for China's participation in atomic test ban. "How," asks Le Monde, "can Washington remain intransigent on Quemoy and at the same time deal with China on cessation of atomic tests." The French argue that it's unrealistic to expect China to agree to renounce atomic weapons while atomic-equipped American forces are cruising off Chinese coasts. China might not agree to renounce testing under any conditions. But, the French say, there's little hope of expecting responsible behavior from China just so long as avowed enemies are at her gates while she's black-balled from the only organization where a nation can be brought to face the court of world opinion. That's the view held here in Paris tonight. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris.

Reaction from Russia has been sharp. The official Soviet news agency Tass calls the speech "an attempt to justify a policy of military blackmail." Tass says the President was trying to "calm" American public opinion, but that actually he showed American foreign policy to be based on aggressive tendencies which, says Tass, "present a serious threat to world peace." Russia accuses Mr. Eisenhower of distortion, in comparing the Communist action against Quemoy to Hitler's move against Czechoslovakia. The truth, it says, is that Chiang Kai-shek provoked Communist China and that the offshore islands are part of China. According to Tass, the President said he welcomes discussion, but disclosed that the United States "wants to talk in the tones of a dictator." The newspaper Soviet Russia took Secretary of State Dulles for its target today, accusing him of "irresponsibility, adventurism and political blindness." It claims that in saying that no Communist government should be regarded as permanent Dulles "broke all records for absurdity."

On Formosa, the Nationalist foreign minister called Mr. Eisenhower's speech "far-sighted"..but questioned the wisdom of trying to talk with the Chinese Communitss. "However," he said, "we take note of repeated assurances that the United States willnot be party to any arrangement which would prejudice our rights."

Peiping's ambassador to Poland returned to his post in Warsaw today... and said he is "most anxious" to see progress made toward a peaceful solution of the Formosa dispute. Ambassador Wang will represent his country in the forthcoming talks. Our ambassador to Poland, Jacob Beam, will represent the United States.

The Soviet government today accused the United States of surrounding Russia with radio stations, broadcasting "malacious anti-Soviet propaganda." The charge was made at a special Moscow news conference, called by the state committee for cultural relations with other countries. A committee spokesman said the "only aim" of the American stations was to interfere in the internal affairs of other states, and aggravate the international situation.

It was relatively quiet today in the Formosa Strait. Quemoy was hit by about 200 shells, compared to more than 57 thousand shells yesterday.

In Washington, Chairman Green of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said tonight that President Eisenhower is duty-bound to call a special session of Congress...if he thinks the Formosa crisis might explode into war.

The Federal Reserve Board said today that industrial production in August jumped by two percent. It said that more than one-half of the decline in production...suffered in the recession...has now been recovered.

The United States Court of Appeals handed down a split two-to-one decision today, affecting civilians employed by the armed services ovrrseas. The court ruled that such civilians cannot be tried by military courts in peacetime.

The United States has been reminded...once more...that it has allies whose views do not always coincide with our own. Many centuries ago, Virgil said, "Whatever the issue, we shall share one common danger, one safety." And again... in ancient times...it was Plutarch who warned, "All power is feeble, unless it is united." Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Sept. 15, 1958

This is the news:

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors today opened their talks in Warsaw on the crisis in the Formosa Strait. The United States ambassador to Poland, Jacob Beam, said he hoped the discussion would lead to "constructive results". Chinese Ambassador Wang said that he, too, hoped the talks would be fruitful. Their first session lasted two hours and forty minutes, and another meeting is scheduled for Thursday.

This marks the resumption of marathon talks conducted last year on the ambassadorial level in Geneva. The United States is asking Peiping...again... to renounce the use of force in seeking to carry put its Formosa policy.

We have promised that the rights of Nationalist China will not be compromised in the course of these discussions.

Russia today served notice that it will press for a debate on Formosa, at the United Nations General Assembly meeting, which opens tomorrow here in New York. The Moscow radio said, "The whole world is alarmed by the threat of war, provoked by the adventurist policies of the United States." Moscow promised a new effort to seat Communist China.

Nationalist cargo planes made another successful airdrop of supplies today over Little Quemoy...the second in two days. But a new attempt to supply the larger island of Quemoy by sea, is reported to have failed. The Nationalist Defense Ministry says the attempt was blocked by Communist artillery fire. Yesterday, a Nationalist L.S.T. was able to unload all its cargo on Quemoy beach...although it was crippled during the bombardment, and had to be towed back to port.

The Communist shelling of Quemoy today was relatively light.

Military authorities on Formosa have issued an order, prohibiting reporters from going to Matsu or Quemoy, or to the Pescadores Islands. American and Nationalist officers said they were issuing the order "for reasons of military security." They said the copy filed by reporters already on Quemoy would be "checked". They did not use the word "censored".

The United States Air Force has bolstered its striking power on Formosa with a contingent of Starfighter jets...a supersonic aircraft, which holds the world's record for both altitude and speed. / The number of Starfighters arriving on Formosa is not disclosed.

The Defense Department announces that a Nike-Hercules missile battalion is being sent to "the Pacific area." / The department declines to say whether the missile outfit is being assigned to Formosa, but a crash program to build launching sites there, for this anti-aircraft weapon, already has been reported under way. / The Nike-Hercules has an estimated range of between 75 and 100 miles...and is capable of carrying either a conventional or atomic warhead.

The State Department says standby plans are being made to evacuate American dependents from Formosa, in case evacuation becomes necessary. / No general evacuation has been ordered.

In Britain tonight, the leaders of the Labour Party asked the Conservative Government to declare...publicly...that Britain will not join in a war over Quemoy. The opposition party said also that it was the duty of the Conservative Government "to dissuade the United States from engaging in such a war." / The demand of the Labour Party leaders was made in → the form of a letter to Prime Minister Macmillan. Mr. Macmillan already has said that Britain is not "militarily" involved with the United States in the Formosa dispute.

Twenty-eight bodies have been recovered...in the wreck of the Jersey Central train, carrying commuters to New York City. It is feared that the death toll may reach 40. Thirty-three persons are reported injured. The five-car train went through a stop signal, warning of an open drawbridge. The first two cars...and two Diesel locomotives...plunged into the waters of Newark Bay. And throughout the day, rescue workers have been trying to raise these two coaches and recover the bodies of other victims, believed trapped in the wreckage. A third car teetered on the edge of the open bridge, and fell into the bay two and a half hours later. There was no immediate explanation of how the accident occurred. An automatic "trip" device did derail the train before it reached the bridge, but the train's momentum carried the cars on over the edge. The engineer of the train is dead. A number of passengers say they could hear him apply his brakes. There are believed to have been about a hundred passengers on the train. None of them, fortunately, was riding in the first coach.

In Little Rock, Arkansas...the four high schools scheduled to open today remained closed...under the edict issued last Friday by Governor Faubus. / The governor told a news conference today that the schools may stay closed until October 7. On that date, the people of the Little Rock school district will vote...in a special referendum...on whether they want segregated schools, or are willing to see them integrated.

The United States district judge in Little Rock has ordered the federal grand jury into session tomorrow morning. / It had been scheduled to meet two weeks from today. / There is no official indication that this is because of the Little Rock school crisis. / The U.S. attorney requested the earlier date because of "the heavy load of routine matters."

A Negro was enrolled at the University of Florida law school today for the first time. There was no disturbance.

And in Versailles, Kentucky...seven Negro students attended a formerly all-white elementary school without incident. They were admitted under order of the Woodford County Board of Education.

Russia tonight accepted...with modifications...the American proposal for new East-West talks, looking toward the prevention of surprise attacks. Moscow agreed to a meeting of experts in Geneva...and proposed November 10th as the starting date.

In France, bodyguards for all cabinet ministers have been reinforced following the attempt to assassinate the minister of information, Jacques Soustelle. The would-be assassins opened fire on Soustelle's car in broad daylight, as he was being driven to his Paris office. The car was sprayed with pistol and submachine gun fire, but Soustelle escaped with minor cuts due to flying glass. Four passers-by were wounded, and later one of them died in a hospital. At least three suspects are under arrest. At a news conference...after the shooting...Soustelle blamed the attack on the Algerian National Liberation Front. He also accused the Communists of helping the Algerians in an organized campaign of sabotage.

Later dispatches tell of a bomb exploding today in a police headquarters in Marseilles. "Several" policemen are reported hurt.

In Lebanon, U.S. Marines of the First Battalion, Eighth Regiment, boarded ship today...in preparation for their return to the United States later this week. Eight hundred Marines of the Second Battalion, Eighth Regiment, are scheduled to board another troop transport tomorrow and Wednesday. This will leave about 9 thousand American soldiers and Marines on Lebanese soil.

Today...in Baghdad...Premier Kassem told the Iraqi people that they will be allowed to choose the kind of government they want by means of a plebiscite. Kassem came to power in the military coup of July 14, which precipitated the present Middle East crisis. He did not say when a plebiscite would be held...but called, in the meantime, for "national unity."

The "Big Three" auto manufacturers today submitted new contract proposals to the United Auto Workers Union./ The U.A.W. has called a strike against Ford for this Wednesday./ Union President Reuther, says the new proposals are "deficient in many respects"...but allows that they pave the way for further negotiations at this time./ And bargaining is continuing tonight. The auto manufactuers reportedly offered a three-year contract, carrying a wage increase of 24 to 30 cents an hour over that period, plus supplemental pension and unemployment benefits.

Edward R. Murrow: September 15, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

A good strategist in any kind of war will supplement his estimate of his own chances by trying to see how things look to his opponent. / Right now the East-West conflict is centered in Quemoy. / This is where the Communists decided to apply the pressure against the West. / Whether or not they ever expected to take Quemoy by force, they were testing Western unity, as well as the mettle of the United States. / They found the Eisenhower Administration tougher about Quemoy than it was four years ago. / Thereupon they proposed negotiations. At first glance this looks like a reward for a tough policy.

But the strategist who tries to see things through the eyes of his opponent will have to look beyond Quemoy. / The main Communist policy for some years has not been to capture real-estate, but to break down Western unity. / Once this has succeeded, the Communists can proceed to achieve world domination. / As the Communists see it, the pressure on Quemoy promises to be a huge success. / It has developed a Western disunity that no amount of persuasion by Washington is likely to heal. / Our European allies may concur in condemning Red China for the use of force. / But they will not help us defend the offshore islands, and they are horrified by the thought that a local war there might spread and engulf everybody. / They do not agree that the offshore islands are comparable with the Sudetenland when Hitler wanted it, or Ethiopia when Mussolini wanted it, or Korea when Russian and Chinese Communists wanted it. / Many of them who believe Red China is not entitled to Formosa think it should have the offshore islands.

The history of the Communist policy to develop Western weaknesses shows one success after another. The West is not united at this moment with any solidarity save in Europe, and not too much can be said of the firmness in Europe. / None of our European allies likes our tough policy toward communism. NATO still stands, and European unity may have been strengthened by yesterday's meeting between Premier De Gaulle and Chancellor Adenauer. / But the unity of Europe would crumble if De Gaulle failed to solve the Algerian crisis, or if he gave way to a military dictatorship.

The West has no united policy in the Middle East, and its strength there is at a low ebb, notwithstanding the American troops in Lebanon and the British troops in Jordan. We may be able to keep our bases in Saudi Arabia, but not if Nasser's influence rises much higher. / We may manage to keep our bases in Morocco for a few years, but only by promising to give them up ultimately. In both countries we seem to be on the way out. Syria is lost to the West, Iraq is going neutralist, and so is probably Lebanon.

All this is not due to outright Communist initiative, but it is the fruit of astute Soviet policies -- the arms deals, the support of Arab nationalism, and stepped-up economic and cultural activities. / The last chance the West had to hold its own in the Middle East was over Suez. / But it was lost because it called for violence, and it broke Western unity. / In Africa, the West also has no united policy. / If the rise of Soviet influence is to be met, there must be a far-flung economic plan, a consistent and sympathetic support for African nationalism, linked with strong cultural and educational features.

To come back to the Chinese crisis, though the Communist pressure seems to be at Quemoy, a more important battlefield is right here in New York, where the United Nations General Assembly meets tomorrow. / We believe we have a safe majority to defeat the Indian resolution which would accept Communist China as representing the Chinese people. / But our majority is safe only because the voting is open. We MIGHT WELL lose heavily in a secret ballot.

This may be the last year when we can muster a majority in an open vote. We also hope we can muster a majority to censure Red China's use of force at Quemoy. But this time Communists may try getting us condemned at the U.N. for aggression. If they cite us, Red China would be entitled to be heard, and the debate would be anything but one-sidedly in our favor.

The Communists can hardly expect to see Red China voted into the U.N. this year, or to get us condemned for aggression. But the more they press, the weaker the unity of the West can be shown to be. Even if we get a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait, and a promise by Red China not to take Formosa by force, the disunity of the West will not have been repaired ~~from~~ FROM the Communist standpoint, the strategy at Quemoy stands to win handsomely. [A change of status for Red China before the world is in the offing. And whatever the Communists gain, the West loses. That is the arithmetic of the rivalry for power.]

FILL

The Peiping radio said tonight that the Chinese Communists are prepared to spend "five, or even ten years," negotiating with American diplomats, if that it what it takes to settle the problems outstanding between Red China and the United States. The broadcast says...further... that no matter what comes, the Chinese Communists will not give up their claim to Formosa.

Word for Today

At Quemoy, the Communists...again...are putting allied unity to the test. They want to divide us from our allies, and we would do well to keep this everlastingly in mind. The Word for Today may well have been spoken by Goethe long ago, when he said: "In the works of Man, as in Nature, it is really the motives that merit attention."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors today opened their talks in Warsaw on the crisis in the Formosa Strait. The United States ambassador to Poland, Jacob Beam, said he hoped the discussion would lead to "constructive results." Chinese Ambassador Wang said that he, too, hoped the talks would be fruitful. Their first session lasted two hours and forty minutes, and another meeting is scheduled for Thursday. This marks the resumption of marathon talks conducted last year on the ambassadorial level in Geneva. The United States is asking Peiping...again... to renounce the use of force in seeking to carry out its Formosa policy. We have promised that the rights of Nationalist China will not be compromised in the course of these discussions.

Russia today served notice that it will press for a debate on Formosa at the United Nations General Assembly meeting, which opens tomorrow here in New York. The Moscow radio said, "The whole world is alarmed by the threat of war provoked by the adventurist policies of the United States." Moscow promised a new effort to seat Communist China.

Nationalist cargo planes made another successful airdrop of supplies today over Little Quemoy...the second in two days. But a new attempt to supply the larger island of Quemoy by sea is reported to have failed. The Nationalist Defense Ministry says the attempt was blocked by Communist artillery fire. Yesterday, a Nationalist L.S.T. was able to unload all its cargo on Quemoy beach although it was crippled during the bombardment and had to be towed back to port.

The Communist shelling of Quemoy today was relatively light.

Military authorities on Formosa have issued an order, prohibiting reporters from going to Matsu or Quemoy or to the Pescadores Islands. American and Nationalist officers said today they were issuing the order "for reasons of military security." They said the copy filed by reporters already on Quemoy would be "checked." They did not use the word "censored."

The United States Air Force has bolstered its striking power on Formosa with a contingent of Starfighter jets...a supersonic aircraft which holds the world's record for both altitude and speed. The number of Starfighters arriving on Formosa is not disclosed.

The Defense Department announces that a Nike-Hercules missile battalion is being sent to "the Pacific area." The department declines to say whether the missile outfit is being assigned to Formosa, but a crash program to build launching sites there for this anti-aircraft weapon already has been reported under way. The Nike-Hercules has an estimated range of between 75 and 100 miles...and is capable of carrying either a conventional or atomic warhead.

In Britain tonight, the leaders of the Labour Party asked the Conservative Government to declare...publicly...that Britain will not join in a war over Quemoy. The opposition party said also that it was the duty of the Conservative Government "to dissuade the United States from engaging in such a war." The demand of the Labour Party leaders was made in the form of a letter to Prime Minister Macmillan. Mr. Macmillan already has said that Britain is not "militarily" involved with the United States in the Formosa dispute.

Twenty-eight bodies have been recovered...in the wreck of the Jersey Central train, carrying commuters to New York City. It is feared that the death toll may reach 40. Thirty-three persons are reported injured. The five-car train went through a stop signal, warning of an open drawbridge. The first two cars and two Diesel locomotives...plunged into the waters of Newark Bay. And throughout the day, rescue workers have been trying to raise these two coaches and recover the bodies of other victims, believed trapped in the wreckage. A third car teetered on the edge of the open bridge and fell into the bay two and a half hours later. There was no immediate explanation of how the accident occurred. An automatic "trip" device did derail the train before it reached the bridge, but the train's momentum carried the cars on over the edge. The engineer of the train is dead. A number of passengers say they could hear him apply his brakes. There are believed to have been about a hundred passengers on the train. None of them, fortunately was riding in the first coach.

In Little Rock, Arkansas...the four highschools scheduled to open today remained closed...under the edict issued last Friday by Governor Faubus. The governor told a news conference today that the schools may stay closed until October 7. On that date, the people of the Little Rock school district will vote...in a special referendum...on whether they want segregated schools or are willing to see them integrated.

The United States district judge in Little Rock has ordered the federal grand jury into session tomorrow morning. It had been scheduled to meet two weeks from today. There is no official indication that this is because of the Little Rock school crisis. The U.S. attorney requested the earlier date "because of the heavy load of routine matters."

A Negro was enrolled at the University of Florida law school today for the first time. There was no disturbance.

And in Versailles, Kentucky...seven Negro students attended a formerly all-white elementary school without incident. They were admitted under order of the Woodford County Board of Education.

Russia tonight accepted...with modifications...the American proposal for new East-West talks looking toward the prevention of surprise attacks. Moscow agreed to a meeting of experts in Geneva...and proposed November 10th as the starting date.

In France, bodyguards for all cabinet ministers have been reinforced following the attempt to assassinate the minister of information, Jacques Soustelle. The would-be assassins opened fire on Soustelle's car in broad daylight as he was being driven to his Paris office. The car was sprayed with pistol and submachine gun fire, but Soustelle escaped with minor cuts due to flying glass. Four passers-by were wounded, and later one of them died in a hospital. At least three suspects are under arrest. At a news conference... after the shooting...Soustelle blamed the attack on the Algerian National Liberation Front. He also accused the Communists of helping the Algerians in an organized campaign of sabotage.

Today...in Baghdad...Premier Kassem told the Iraqi people that they will be allowed to choose the kind of government they want by means of a plebiscite. Kassem came to power in the military coup of July 14th, which precipitated the present Middle East crisis. He did not say when a plebiscite would be held...but called, in the meantime, for "national unity."

The "Big Three" auto manufacturers today submitted new contract proposals to the United Auto Workers Union. The U.A.W. has called a strike against Ford for this Wednesday. Union President Reuther says the new proposals are "deficient in many recpects"...but allows that they pave the way for further negotiations at this time. And bargaining is continuing tonight. The auto manufacturers reportedly offered a three-year contract carrying a wage increase of 24 to 30 cents an hour over that period, plus supplemental pension and unemployment benefits.

A good strategist in any kind of war will supplement his estimate of his own chances by trying to see how things look to his opponent. Right now the East-West conflict is centered in Quemoy. This is where the Communists decided to apply the pressure against the West. Whether or not they ever expected to take Quemoy by force, they were testing Western unity as well as the mettle of the United States. They found the Eisenhower Administration tougher about Quemoy than it was four years ago. Thereupon they proposed negotiations. At first glance this looks like a reward for a tough policy.

But the strategist who tries to see things through the eyes of his opponent will have to look beyond Quemoy. The main Communist policy for some years has not been to capture real-estate, but to break down Western unity. Once this has succeeded, the Communists can proceed to achieve world domination. As the Communists see it, the pressure on Quemoy promises to be a huge success. It has developed a Western disunity that no amount of persuasion by Washington is likely to heal. Our European allies may concur in condemning Red China for the use of force. But they will not help us defend the offshore islands, and they are horrified by the thought that a local war there might spread and engulf everybody. They do not agree that the offshore islands are comparable with the Sudetenland when Hitler wanted it, or Ethiopia when Mussolini wanted it, or Korea when Russian and Chinese Communists wanted it. Many of them who believe Red China is not entitled to Formosa think it should have the offshore islands.

The history of the Communist policy to develop Western weaknesses shows one success after another. The West is not united at this moment with any solidarity save in Europe, and not too much can be said of the firmness in Europe. None of our European allies likes our tough policy toward communism. NATO still stands, and European unity may have been stengthened by yesterday's meeting between Premier De Gaulle and Chancellor Adenauer. But the unity of Europe would crumble if De Gaulle failed to solve the Algerian crisis, or if he gave way to a military dictatorship.

The West has no united policy in the Middle East, and its strength there is at a low ebb, notwithstanding the American troops in Lebanon and the British troops in Jordan. We may be able to keep our bases in Saudi Arabia, but not if Nasser's influence rises much higher. We may manage to keep our bases in Morocco for a few years, but only by promising to give them up ultimately. In both countries we seem to be on the way out. Syria is lost to the West, Iraq is going neutralist, and so is probably Lebanon.

All this is not due to outright Communist initiative, but it is the fuuit of astute Soviet policies - the arms deals, the support of Arab nationalism, and stepped-up economic and cultural activities. The last chance the West had to hold its own in the Middle East was over Suez. But it was lost because it called for violence, and broke Western unity. In Africa, the West also has no united policy. If the rise of Soviet influence is to be met, there must be a far-flung economic plan, a consistent and sympathetic support for African nationalism, linked with strong cultural and educational features.

To come back to the Chinese crisis, though the Communist pressure seems to be at Quemoy, a more important battlefield is right here in New York, where the United Nations General Assembly meets tomorrow. We believe we have a safe majority to defeat the Indian resolution which would accept Communist China as representing the Chinese people. But our majority is safe only because the voting is open. We might well lose heavily in a secret ballot.

This may be the last year when we can muster a majority in an open vote. We also hope we can muster a majority to censure Red China's use of force at Quemoy. But this time Communists may try getting us condemned at the U.N. for aggression. If they cite us, Red China would be entitled to be heard, and the debate would be anything but one-sidedly in our favor.

The Communists can hardly expect to see Red China voted into the U.N. this year, or to get us condemned for aggression. But the more they press, the weaker the unity of the West can be shown to be. Even if we get a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait, and a promise by Red China not to take Formosa by force, the disunity of the West will not have been repaired from the Communist standpoint, the strategy at Quemoy stands to win handsomely. A change of status for Red China before the world is in the offing. And whatever the Communists gain, the West loses. That is the arithmetic of the rivalry for power.

The Peiping radio said tonight that the Chinese Communists are prepared to spend "five or even ten years" negotiating with American diplomats, if that is what it takes to settle the problems outstanding between Red China and the United States. The broadcast says...further...that no matter what comes, the Chinese Communists will not give up their claim to Formosa.

At Quemoy, the Communists...again...are putting allied unity to the test. They want to divide us from our allies, and we would do well to keep this everlastingly in mind. The Word for Today may well have been spoken by Goethe long ago, when he said, "In the works of Man, as in Nature, it is really the motives that merit attention."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Sept. 16, 1958

This is the news:

Attorney General Rogers says that the Justice Department is taking no legal action...at this time...on the closing of schools in Virginia and Arkansas. Rogers issued the statement in Newport, after conferring with President Eisenhower on the school integration problem. Schools have been closed in Front Royal, Virginia, and in Little Rock, Arkansas, under state law. Rogers said there are indications that the "serious impact" of what it means to have these schools closed "is beginning to be keenly felt and its significance more fully appreciated." He said parents are bringing pressure to bear on responsible state officials to have the schools reopened. In the meantime, the Justice Department is adopting a wait-and-see policy.

Governor Faubus of Arkansas today advanced from October seventh...to September twenty-seventh...the date for a referendum in the Little Rock school district, on whether its high schools should be re-opened on a segregated or de-segregated basis. / Faubus said the issue needed to be resolved as soon as possible, "so we can find some means of educating the children." / He denied moving up the referendum date, because he felt public sentiment for re-opening the schools (which he closed last Friday) to be increasing. / He called the opposition he faced "no greater than usual."

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Baltimore today took under advisement the request, by two schools in Charlottesville, Virginia, that they be allowed to delay the integration process. / The two schools are scheduled to ppen next Monday. / The chief judge of the circuit court, Judge Simon Sobeloff, is expected to hand down his ruling within the next few days. / If he rules that the schools must integrate, it is almost certain that they will not open. / Integrated school attendance is prohibited under Virginia state law.

The United Nations General Assembly convened for its 13th regular meeting today...and elected Charles Malik, foreign minister of Lebanon, to serve as president. Malik had the support of the United States and most of the other Western powers. His opponent, Foreign Minister Mahgoub of the Sudan, had the backing of the Soviet bloc and the Arab League. Until today, the Russian-sponsored candidate for president of the Assembly had been the delegate from Czechoslovakia. Although the Soviet bloc threw its nine votes to Mahgoub at the last minute, Malik won with the taking of just one ballot--45 to 31.

→

The outgoing president, Sir Leslie Monroe of New Zealand, told the Assembly it was the supreme task of the United Nations "to see that transitions in human affairs in any part of the world are not determined by force."

As the session opened, Russia passed up the opportunity to press for the admission of Red China. It is expected to do so later...perhaps tomorrow.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko submitted a memorandum...requesting that the General Assembly debate the question of a ban on nuclear weapons tests. An American spokesman noted that Russia already has agreed to discuss this issue in talks due to start in Geneva the end of next month. Consequently, he said, the Russian move to have the matter taken up

~~in the Assembly "has the appearance of bad faith." / He expressed hope that~~

~~the Soviet Union does not plan "to negotiate by propaganda."~~

The Formosa crisis is bound to come up in the current General Assembly meeting, but no one brought up the subject today.

Russia has sent a formal note to Japan...warning it not to allow the United States to use Japanese territory as a base for "aggressive action against the Peoples' Republic of China." / The Soviet note said that if Japan did permit the use of its territory for such a purpose, Russia would regard Japan "a party" to the American action.

A State Department spokesman calls the Soviet note "an attempt to divert public opinion from the support Russia is giving the Chinese Communists in their current aggression in the Formosa Strait." The spokesman was asked about a report that the United States has offered to hold high-level talks with Communist China, in return for a Formosa cease-fire. He called the report "unfounded speculation". / Talks with Red China on the ambassadorial level opened yesterday in Mmm Warsaw.

The foreign policy debate continued today in Britain. The leader of the Labour opposition, Hugh Gaitskell, demanded that the Conservative government state---in plain, unmistakable terms---that it would not join → the United States in a war to defend Quemoy. Gaitskell said that in his view the "obscurity" of the British position was "dangerous to the Atlantic alliance." Prime Minister Macmillan said yesterday that it would be playing into the hands of the Communists to say more than that his government agreed with the United States that the Formosa dispute should not be settled by force.

The Nationalists succeeded in delivering supplies to the Quemoy complex today by both sea and air. Another air drop was carried out successfully over Little Quemoy, and a ship was able to unload all its supplies on Quemoy beach, apparently with the help of amphibious vehicles. The entire unloading operation was carried out in just twenty minutes. This, despite heavy Communist bombardment.

The premier of Nationalist China said today that if Quemoy is ever completely blockaded, it would mean "extending the war." This is taken to mean that the Nationalists would want to bomb the Communist gun positions.

At Cape Canaveral today, the Navy failed in an attempt to launch another Vanguard rocket. This time, the rocket would have carried a 20-inch, 21 and one-half pound satellite. The cause of the malfunction has not yet been determined.

The Defense Department announces that a Regulus II missile was launched for the first time today from the deck of a submarine...and that the launching was a success. The test was conducted off the California coast. The Regulus II has a range of better than a thousand miles.

In Detroit, representatives of the United Auto Workers Union and Ford have gone into a night bargaining session with the strike deadline against Ford less than 24 hours away. ~~Yesterday, Ford and the other two major auto manufacturers---G.M. and Chrysler---submitted new contract proposals which U.A.W. President Walter Reuther said were not good enough. Several thousand Ford workers already have walked off their jobs.~~

In Washington today...an investigator for the Senate Rackets Committee accused Teamsters President James Hoffa of "taking" five thousand dollars in union expense funds in 1953. Hoffa said the money was spent for "union organizing". But he admitted that he had listed it as income on his tax report.

In Hudson County, New Jersey...an autopsy report indicates that a heart attack...suffered by the engineer... PRECEDED the train wreck which yesterday claimed an estimated 40 lives.

The bodies of 21 victims have been recovered from the waters of Newark Bay. According to the medical examiner, the engineer "suffered from heart disease," although it still is not definite that he died at the controls of the train.

Edward R. Murrow: September 16, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The Quemoy crisis is widely believed to be easing, now that talks between the American and Chinese ambassadors are underway in Warsaw. / The assumption seems to be that when talks begin, both sides have decided not to fight. / The assumption is comforting, but it is unjustified. / At issue in Warsaw is a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. That is what the United States needs immediately. / The Communists may agree, but they are tough, patient bargainers and are sure to insist on stiff terms. The least they are expected to demand is that the offshore islands are not to receive ammunition or military re-enforcement after the cease-fire. / They can insist on much more -- that the islands be given to them by the Nationalists - that American forces in the Formosa area be withdrawn, and that the United States agree to their admission to the United Nations. / The easiest of these terms - that no more military supplies go to the island - needs the agreement of Chiang Kai-Shek's government. Maybe we could persuade him to do it, but maybe we couldn't. / Both Chiang and his Foreign Minister have been saying that the mainland must be attacked soon, if the blockade continues. / To forbid the military supply of the islands after a cease fire would be to continue the blockade. Chiang might agree if he wanted peace. But what he wants is to liberate the mainland from Communist rule. And his only chance of doing that is as a result of war. And he has no chance of winning such a war without our complete participation.

If a cease-fire is not to be had, either because the Chinese Communists reject our terms, or we reject theirs, the United States will face the ~~bravest~~ gravest decision since the beginning of the Korean war, and the consequences might be far more frightful. We must decide whether to break the blockade of the islands by active intervention. This would involve heavy bombing of the mainland to silence the guns now shelling the islands. The Chinese Nationalists are not strong enough to knock out the land batteries alone. The Communists have superior air power. The shore batteries cannot be silenced by naval shelling. So if the blockade is to be broken, the United States will have to do it. It is ~~XXXXXX~~ reliably reported that a decision to do that, if the fighting continues, has not been reached in Washington.

The obvious consequence of such an action would be to place us at war with Communist China. And there is an added hazard, for the Soviet Union has said in pretty solemn terms that an attack by us on China would be regarded as an attack on Russia, and we cannot expect the Kremlin not to honor this pledge.

In Washington, Ambassadors from Communist countries are reported to have warned us - off the record - that Red China has the power to wipe out the Seventh Fleet in a matter of hours - before it could go into nuclear action. This implies that Soviet nuclear weapons are now stationed in China, probably staffed by Russians and on the alert.

For our part, we have built up our nuclear power in the area. Our Matadors can reach the mainland with nuclear warheads. We have greatly beefed up our air power on Formosa, bringing in planes from California, the Philippines and Japan. And it is disclosed that Nike Hercules missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads, have been sent to the Pacific.

So both sides are continuing to flex their muscles.

A local war is possible. A general, unlimited war could occur. If we become involved in a war of whatever magnitude over Quemoy, we would have very few friends. It would be a lonely operation.

[illegible]

Presumably both sides are building up the pressure and increasing their power to influence negotiations, those in Warsaw and any that may follow. So some of the grimness of the situation can be put down to psychological warfare. But there is nothing psychological in the warfare being experienced by the civilians and the garrison on Quemoy.

If we get out of this situation without shooting - if we get an acceptable cease-fire - then the question will be asked with added insistency: How did we get ourselves into this fix where even our closest allies won't go with us?

U.P. International in a despatch from Washington says that several Army and Air Force Generals accurately predicted more than four years ago the present course of the Quemoy-Formosa crisis. These men knew that the island could be blockaded by Communist coast artillery, and therefore was of little use for either offensive or defensive purposes. No one appears to know just why Chiang decided to lock up a third of his effectives on the islands; but it is apparent that if we tried to dissuade him from doing so we didn't try very hard. He had a fondness for this kind of strategy during the civil war, and it repeatedly failed to work. If Chiang is to be extricated from this situation, we will have to do it, either through diplomacy or force. Our allies will help a little with the diplomacy, but if it comes to force we will have to be prepared to go it alone.

Back in a moment. -

Now George Bryan - With a word about the weather.

Word for Today

In our approach to the problem of Communist China, tough decisions are going to have to be made. The goal is to resolve the problem without resort to force. As Professor Fairbank says in his new book on China "The challenge is plain. The century during which the Chinese had to live in our Western world is past. Now we both have to learn to live on the same planet."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Attorney General Rogers says that the Justice Department is taking no legal action...at this time...on the closing of schools in Virginia and Arkansas. Rogers issued the statement in Newport after conferring with President Eisenhower on the school integration problem. Schools have been closed in Front Royal, Virginia and in Little Rock, Arkansas under state law. Rogers said there are indications that the "serious impact" of what it means to have these schools closed "is beginning to be keenly felt and its significance more fully appreciated." He said parents are bringing pressure to bear on responsible state officials to have the schools reopened. In the meantime, the Justice Department is adopting a wait-and-see policy.

Governor Faubus of Arkansas today advanced from October seventh...to September twenty-seventh...the date for a referendum in the Little Rock school district on whether its high schools should be re-opened on a segregated or de-segregated basis. Faubus said the issue needed to be resolved as soon as possible "so we can find some means of educating the children." He denied moving up the referendum date because he felt public sentiment for re-opening the schools which he closed last Friday to be increasing. He called the opposition he faced "no greater than usual."

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Baltimore today took under advisement the request by two schools in Charlottesville, Virginia that they be allowed to delay the integration process. The two schools are scheduled to open next Monday. The chief judge of the circuit court, Judge Simon Sobeloff, is expected to hand down his ruling within the next few days. If he rules that the schools must integrate, it is almost certain that they will not open.

Integrated school attendance is prohibited under Virginia state law.

The United Nations General Assembly convened for its 13th regular meeting today...and elected Charles Malik, foreign minister of Lebanon, to serve as president. Malik had the supportof the United States and most of the other Western powers.

As the session opened, Russia passed up the opportunity to press for the admission of Red China. It is expected to do so later...perhaps tomorrow.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko submitted a memorandum...requesting that the General Assembly debate the question of a ban on nuclear weapons tests. An American spokesman noted that Russia already has agreed to discuss this issue in talks due to start in Geneva the end of next month.

The Formosa crisis is bound to come up in the current General Assembly meeting, but no one brought up the subject today.

Russia has sent a formal note to Japan...warning it not to allow the United States to use Japanese territory as a base for "aggressive action against the Peoples' Republic of China." The Soviet note said that if Japan did permit the use of its territory for such a purpose, Russia would regard Japan "a party" to the American action.

A State Department spokesman calls the Soviet note "an attempt to divert public opinion from the support Russia is giving the Chinese Communists in their current aggression in the Formosa Strait." The spokesman was asked about a report that the United States has offered to hold high-level talks with Communist China, in return for a Formosa cease-fire. He called the report "unfounded speculation." Talks with Red China on the ambassadorial level opened yesterday in Warsaw.

The foreign policy debate continued today in Britain. The leader of the Labour opposition, Hugh Gaitskell, demanded that the Conservative government state---in plain, unmistakable terms---that it would not join the United States in a war to defend Quemoy. Gaitskell said that in his view, the "obscurity" of the British position was "dangerous to the Atlantic alliance." Prime Minister Macmillan said yesterday that it would be playing into the hands of the Communists to say more than that his government agreed with the United States that the Formosa dispute should not be settled by force.

The Nationalists succeeded in delivering supplies to the Quemoy complex today by both sea and air. Another air drop was carried out successfully over Little Quemoy, and a ship was able to unload all its supplies on Quemoy beach.

At Cape Canaveral today, the Navy failed in an attempt to launch another Vanguard rocket. This time, the rocket would have carried a 20 inch, 21 and one-half pound satellite. The cause of the malfunction has not yet been determined.

The Defense Department announces that a Regulus II missile was launched for the first time today from the deck of a submarine...and that the launching was a success. The test was conducted off the California coast. The Regulus II has a range of better than a thousand miles.

In Detroit, representatives of the United Auto Workers Union and Ford have gone into a night bargaining session with the strike deadline against Ford less than 24 hours away.

In Washington today...an investigator for the Senate Rackets Committee accused Teamsters President James Hoffa of "taking" five thousand dollars in union expense funds in 1953. Hoffa said the money was spent for "union organizing." But he admitted that he had listed it as income on his tax report.

In Hudson County, New Jersey...an autopsy report indicates that a heart attack...suffered by the engineer...preceded the train wreck which yesterday claimed an estimated 40 lives. The bodies of 21 victims have been recovered from the waters of Newark Bay. According to the medical examiner, the engineer "suffered from heart disease," although it still is not definite that he died at the controls of the train.

The Quemoy crisis is widely believed to be easing, now that talks between the American and Chinese ambassadors are underway in Warsaw. The assumption seems to be that when talks begin, both sides have decided not to fight. The assumption is comforting, but it is unjustified. At issue in Warsaw is a cease fire in the Formosa Strait. That is what the United States needs immediately. The Communists may agree, but they are tough, patient bargainers and are sure to insist on stiff terms. The least they are expected to demand is that the offshore islands are not to receive ammunition or military re-enforcement after the cease fire. They can insist on much more -that the islands be given to them by the Nationalists - that American forces in the Formosa area be withdrawn, and that the United States agree to their admission to the United Nations. The easiest of these terms - that no more military supplies go to the island - needs the agreement of Chiang Kai-Shek's government. Maybe we could persuade him to do it, but maybe we couldn't. Both Chiang and his Foreign Minister have been saying that the mainland must be attacked soon, if the blockade continues. To forbid the military supply of the islands after a cease fire would be to continue the blockade. Chiang might agree if he wanted peace. But what he wants is to liberate the mainland from Communist rule. And his only chance of doing that is as a result of war. And he has no chance of winning such a war without our complete participation.

If a cease fire is not to be had, either because the Chinese Communists reject our terms, or we reject theirs, the United States will face the gravest decision since the beginning of the Korean war, and the consequences might be far more frightful. We must decide whether to break the blockade of the islands by active intervention. This would involve heavy bombing of the mainland to silence the guns now shelling the islands. The Chinese Nationalists are not strong enough to knock out the land batteries alone.

The Communists have superior air power. The shore batteries cannot be silenced by naval shelling. So if the blockade is to be broken the United States will have to do it. It is reliably reported that a decision to do that, if the fighting continues, has not been reached in Washington.

The obvious consequence of such an action would be to place us at war with Communist China. And there is an added hazard, for the Soviet Union has said in pretty solemn terms that an attack by us on China would be regarded as an attack on Russia, and we cannot expect the Kremlin not to honor this pledge.

In Washington, Ambassadors from Communist countries are reported to have warned us - off the record - that Red China has the power to wipe out the Seventh Fleet in a matter of hours - before it could go into nuclear action. This implies that Soviet nuclear weapons are now stationed in China probably staffed by Russians and on the alert.

For our part, we have built up our nuclear power in the area. Our Matadors can reach the mainland with nuclear warheads. We have greatly beefed up our air power on Formosa, bringing in planes from California, the Philippines and Japan. And it is disclosed that Niki Hercules missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads, have been sent to the Pacific.

So both sides are continuing to flex their muscles.

A local war is possible. A general, unlimited war could occur. If we become involved in a war of whatever magnitude over Quemoy, we would have very few friends. It would be a lonely operation.

Presumably both sides are building up the pressure and increasing their power to influence negotiations, those in Warsaw and any that may follow. So some of the grimness of the situation can be put down to psychological warfare. But there is nothing psychological in the warfare being experienced by the civilians and the garrison on Quemoy.

If we get out of this situation without shooting - if we get an acceptable cease fire - then the question will be asked with added insistency: How did we get ourselves into this fix where even our closest allies won't go with us?

If Chiang is to be extricated from this situation, we will have to do it, either through diplomacy or force. Our allies will help a little with the diplomacy, but if it comes to force we will have to pe prepared to go it alone.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In our approach to the problem of Communist China, tough decisions are going to have to be made. The goal is to resolve the problem without resort to force. As Professor Fairbank says in his new book on China, "The challenge is plain. The century during which the Chinese had to live in our Western world is past. Now we both have to learn to live on the same planet."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Sept. 17, 1958

This is the news:

The Ford Motor Company and the United Auto Workers Union reached agreement today on a new three-year contract. Under the settlement, Ford employes will get increased pensions, unemployment pay over a longer period, severance pay, and an immediate wage boost...said to amount in the case of skilled workers to eight to ten cents an hour. U.A.W. President Reuther said he could give no figure at once for the entire "package"...but that he regards it as "considerably better" than Ford's previous offer of a two-year contract and a wage increase amounting to 16 cents an hour. Agreement was reached this afternoon, after 30 hours of continuous bargaining...and after Ford's 98-thousand workers had walked off their jobs, as this morning's strike deadline passed without a settlement. Reuther says the strike is over...and that the union hopes to get operations back to normal "at the earliest possible date." / The U.A.W. will now try for similar agreements with General Motors and Chrysler.

The teamsters executive board today authorized the holding of a new union convention in February. [Some teamster union members have charged that the convention which elected James Hoffa president a year ago was "rigged". This rank-and-file group took the issue to court, and...last January... Federal Judge Dickinson Letts set up a board of monitors to oversee the union and recommend reforms. / The chief monitor, Martin O'Donoghue, says these reforms to guarantee fair union elections and bar criminals from office have not been carried out. / And late today the board of monitors filed suit in Judge Letts' court...asking him to compel Hoffa to comply. The suit also calls for cancellation of plans for a union convention in February.

In Atlantic City today, the United Steelworkers Convention beat down a move to limit the appointive powers of the steelworkers president, David McDonald. McDonald won the test after nearly three hours of floor debate.

In Little Rock today, a corporation was set up for the purpose of reopening the high schools, and operating them as private institutions. The incorporation papers were filed by a group of six white citizens...and signed by Circuit Judge Mitchell Cockrill. The incorporators plan...presumably...to run the schools on a segregated basis. / They said in their petition that as private institutions, the schools would have "the highest educational standards"...and that students would be furnished the same extra-curricular activities, such as football, as they would enjoy in regular public schools. / According to the petition, the "private schools" would be financed by various loans and grants, and monthly tuition fees to be paid by each student. / The school buildings would be "leased". The petition does not say whether the corporation intends to reopen all four high schools closed by Governor Faubus (one of them is a Negro institution) but the petition uses the word "schools"---plural. The non-profit organization, set up to run the schools, is entitled "The Little Rock Private School Corporation." And its first meeting is scheduled (for tomorrow. The constitutionality of today's action is expected...eventually...to be tested in the courts.

Here in New York, a spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says that---for the present---his organization is adopting a wait-and-see attitude.

In Alexandria, Virginia, Federal Judge Albert Bryan, today directed the Arlington County School Board to admit four Negro students, effective in January. / January marks the start of the next semester at Stratford Junior High School, to which all four Negroes had applied. / Judge Bryan said that, in his opinion, the four-month (delay...until January...would "not be hurtful". "Indeed," he said, "if the basic problem can be solved by time, the price is not too dear." / At the same time that he ordered the admission of these four students in January, Judge Bryan upheld the school board's action in refusing to admit 26 other Negro students. / The school board had rejected the applications of these 26, on grounds of low academic (accomplishment, lack of adaptability, and residence outside the specific school area. The judge's decision today, was based on three days of hearings early this month.

Today...in Baltimore...Chief Judge Sobeloff of the Circuit Court of Appeals said that the integration of two public schools in Charlottesville, Virginia, cannot be further delayed. / S Judge Sobeloff thus affirmed a lower court order requiring two all-white schools in Charlottesville to admit 12 Negro students. The two schools ARE scheduled to open on Monday. Now they are expected to remain closed, under the Virginia law prohibiting integrated school attendance.

Attorney General Rogers today attacked the belief held, he said, by some persons opposed to school integration, that a decision of the Supreme Court, interpreting the Constitution of the United States, "is something less than an authoritative expression of the law." That, he said, is "an unsound notion which causes misunderstanding and confusion." Rogers said in a Washington speech that individuals may not determine for themselves when they will obey the decrees of the courts. He pointed out that persons who disagree with those decrees have available the orderly process of constitutional amendments. The aircraft carrier Essex has joined the U.S. 7th Fleet.

In the past 24 hours, Quemoy...and the small islands immediately surrounding it...have been hit by more than 7-thousand shells. Despite the shelling, the Nationalists succeeded in delivering to Quemoy the cargoes of two more L.S.T.'s.

Moscow Radio today accused the United States of writing off in advance any prospect of reaching a settlement in the Warsaw talks. Moscow claimed →

Moscow claimed this is demonstrated by the "intensification" of American military operations in the Formosa area. The negotiations in Warsaw, between the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors, resume tomorrow.

Here in New York today, the United Nations General Assembly was in recess. And the steering committee, postponed for 24 hours, its debate on whether the Assembly should consider the admission of Red China.

Secretary of State Dulles will [redacted] speak before the General Assembly tomorrow. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, is covering the United Nations. So let's have his report.

(Tape runs 5:10
Ends on cue: "Now back again to Ed Murrow."

In Cuba, the rebel radio says Fidel Castro's forces have expanded their hold on Oriente Province, by sending six columns up to the border of Camahuey Province, to the west. The rebel broadcast did not say how many men were involved in the action.

Former President Truman made an attack on the Administration today, accusing "the Republicans in Washington" of following economic policies designed to prevent full production. "They want a little unemployment," he told the steelworkers convention. "It helps keep labor in its place." Mr. Truman said there is great rejoicing because the steel industry is now operating at more than 60 percent of capacity. "Think of it," he said. "Nearly 40 percent of the strength of a basic industry like steel going to waste...and people telling us the recession is over." He said it is not over for the 5-million men who are still unemployed.

The vacation White House announces that President Eisenhower will return to Washington next Tuesday, to be host at a luncheon for the foreign ministers of twenty Latin American countries. / Whether this will mark the end of Mr. Eisenhower's Newport vacation is not decided.

New Secretary Hagerty said again today that Sherman Adams has not submitted his resignation as assistant to the President. An Adams resignation has been reported imminent.

Mr. Eisenhower today did accept, "with great personal regret", the resignation of Walter Williams as under-secretary of commerce. Williams has held the Commerce Department position since the beginning of the Eisenhower Administration. / A Seattle banker, he said he was resigning for personal reasons.

The government reports that...in July...savings and loan associations across the country, placed 1-billion, 200-million dollars in mortgage loans. This is 21 percent above the figure for July a year ago, and a record for any single month.

The government also reports that, in the second quarter of the year, the profits of manufacturers...after taxes...increased 15 percent over the first quarter. Over-all manufacturing sales were up 3 percent.

The word for today might be that famous observation on the cause of unemployment composed by Calvin Coolidge. "When many people are out of work," he said, "unemployment results."

Goodnight and good luck!

schorr for murrow 7:45 PM sept.17

The strategy of the United States on the Formosa Straights crisis has become a little clearer tonight...and indications of it are expected to be given by Secretary of State Dulles in his speech to the United Nations General Assembly tomorrow.

For the time being, the State Department intends, though without too much hope, to explore the chances for an understanding with the Chinese Communists through the Ambassadorial talks in Warsaw. What the U.S. is seeking is a cease-fire in Formosa Straits--either by agreement, or a cease-fire in fact without an agreement. What the U.S. is prepared to offer in return is being kept deliberately OBSURE for bargaining reasons. BUT The State Department WILL not listen to any proposal involving the surrender of Quemoy or Matsu or any of the offshore islands. It WOULD be willing to consider proposals for demilitarizing these islands, or at least a substantial reduction of the Nationalist forces concentrated on them.

The American position is that a cease-fire is the first requisite.... and that no general political problems can be discussed with the Chinese Communists until the guns stop. But, if there is a cease-fire, SEC DULLES would be willing to open up other subjects for discussion with Bayping... though he regards anything like a foreign ministers' meeting as still very far off. And SEC. DULLES IS UNDERSTOOD TO BE CONFIDENT HE COULD PERSUADE THE NATIONALISTS TO ACCEPT A CEASE-FIRE DESPITE THEIR PROCLAIMED OPPOSITION.

No time limit has been set for the Warsaw negotiations, BUT IF THEY SHOW no early signs of progress the United States is prepared to lay the Formosa Straits issue before the United Nations...with a request that it condemn the use of force by the Chinese Communists to achieve their political aims. It has not yet been decided whether to present the question to the Security Council of the General Assembly, but Sec. Dulles is understood to be inclined towards the veto-proof Assembly. Not that U.N. action would necessarily solve anything--the Chinese Communists have not, in the past, shown any great respect for UN resolutions--but the United States Govt feels there would be some value in bringing world opinion to bear. If the issue is raised in the U.N., the State Dept. feels that the Bayping regime should have an opportunity to send a delegation to state its case...as it did in 1950 on the Korea invasion.

But, before the U.N. could act, other things might happen. For one thing, Nationalist planes might attack Communist shore batteries in an effort to relieve the blockade of Quemoy. American officials feel that the Nationalists are free to take such action despite Chiang Kai-Shek's commitment not to launch any offensive against the mainland without American permission. Such an attack would be regarded as more defensive than offensive.

This is one of the elements that makes Secretary Dulles feel the situation in Formosa Straits to be most dangerous. Soviet Russia has stated it would regard an attack on mainland China as an attack oon itself...and no one knows how Russia would react.

The Soviets have a tendency, in the opinion of some American officials, to overestimate her military strength... She has, perhaps, come to believe her own propaganda that Soviet threats forced Britain and France out of Egypt... and prevented the United States from invading Iraq. In fact, one

HIGH-LEVEL
~~current~~ American estimate is that Russia is at a weaker point militarily, relative to the United States, than at any time in recent years.

THIS IS BASED ON THE CONCLUSION
~~American intelligence has come to the conclusion~~ that the Soviet Union, trying to jump the gap between heavy bombers and ~~the~~ era and the missile era, is short of bombers and not yet effective in missiles.

~~But~~ But the danger, as American officials see it, is that Russia has been building up a myth of military superiority...and that Red China may be motivated by that myth in her actions in Formosa Straits.

~~The Secretary Dulles will~~

The Far Eastern situation will occupy only a brief passage in Dulles' speech tomorrow. The question is not on the agenda...not yet, anyway, though it is much in the minds of the delegates. Dulles is expected to devote more time to denouncing the Russians for the executions in Hungary....to developing proposals for a standby United Nations police force...spelling out ideas for economic development, not only in the Middle East, but in other parts of the world...filling in details of American proposals for international cooperation in Outer Space. And he is expected to call for a return to the ideal of the rule of law, set down in the UN Charter 13 years ago but Dulles feels, forgotten by many nations since. But, behind the brief allusion to Formosa Straits, is the conviction of the Eisenhower Administration that if the Chinese Communists do not agree to a cease-fire...and soon... there may be perilous days ahead.

Now again Edward R. Murrow

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Ford Motor Company and the United Auto Workers Union reached agreement today on a new three-year contract. Under the settlement, Ford employees will get increased pensions, unemployment pay over a longer period, severance pay, and an immediate wage boost...said to amount in the case of skilled workers to eight to ten cents an hour. U.A.W. President Reuther said he could give no figure at once for the entire "package"...but that he regards it as "considerably better" than Ford's previous offer of a two-year contract and a wage increase amounting to 16 cents an hour. Agreement was reached this afternoon, after 30 hours of continuous bargaining...and after Ford's 98-thousand workers had walked off their jobs, as this morning's strike deadline passed without a settlement. Reuther says the strike is over...and that the union hopes to get operations back to normal "at the earliest possible date." The U.A.W. will now try for similar agreements with General Motors and Chrysler.

The teamsters executive board today authorized the holding of a new union convention in February. Some teamster union members have charged that the convention which elected James Hoffa president a year ago was "rigged." This rank-and-file group took the issue to court, and...last January...Federal Judge Dickinson Letts set up a board of monitors to oversee the union and recommend reforms. The chief monitor, Martin O'Donoghue, says these reforms to guarantee fair union elections and bar criminals from office have not been carried out. And late today the board of monitors filed suit in Judge Letts' court...asking him to compel Hoffa to comply. The suit also calls for cancellation of plans for a union convention in February.

In Atlantic City today, the United Steelworkers Convention beat down a move to limit the appointive powers of the steelworkers president, David McDonald. McDonald won the test after nearly three hours of floor debate.

In Little Rock today, a corporation was set up for the purpose of reopening the high schools and operating them as private institutions. The incorporation papers were filed by a group of six white citizens...and signed by Circuit Judge Mitchell Cockrill. The incorporators plan...presumably...to run the schools on a segregated basis. They said in their petition that as private institutions, the schools would have "the highest educational standards" and that students would be furnished the same extra-curricular activities such as football as they would enjoy in regular public schools. According to the petition, the "private schools" would be financed by various loans and grants and monthly tuition fees to be paid by each student. The school buildings would be "leased." The petition does not say whether the corporation intends to reopen all four high schools closed by Governor Faubus (one of them is a Negro institution) but the petition uses the word "schools"---plural. The non-profit organization set up to run the schools is entitled "The Little Rock Private School Corporation." And its first meeting is scheduled for tomorrow. The constitutionality of today's action is expected...eventually...to be tested in the courts.

Here in New York, a spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says that---for the present---his organization is adopting a wait-and-see attitude.

In Alexandria, Virginia, Federal Judge Albert Bryan today directed the Arlington County School Board to admit four Negro students, effective in January. January marks the start of the next semester at Stratford Junior High School, to which all four Negroes had applied. Judge Bryan said that in his opinion, the four-month delay...until January...would "not be hurtful." "Indeed," he said, "if the basic problem can be solved by time,the price is not too dear." At the same time that he ordered the admission of these four students in January, Judge Bryan upheld the school board's action in refusing to admit 26 other Negro students. The school board had rejected the applications of these 26 on grounds of low academic accomplishment, lack of adaptability, and residence outside the specific school area. The judge's decision today was based on three days of hearings early this month.

Today...in Baltimore...Chief Judge Sobeloff of the Circuit Court of appeals said that the integration of two public schools in Charlottesville, Virginia, cannot be further delayed. Judge Sobeloff thus affirmed a lower court order requiring two all-white schools in Charlottesville to admit 12 Negro students. The two schools are scheduled to open on Monday. Now they are expected to remain closed, under the Virginia law prohibiting integrated school attendance.

Attorney General Rogers today attacked the belief held, he said, by some persons opposed to school integration that a decision of the Supreme Court, interpreting the Constitution of the United States, "is something less than an authoritative expression of the law." That, he said, is "an unsound notion which causes misunderstanding and confusion." Rogers said in a Washington speech that individuals may not determine for themselves when they will obey the decrees of the courts. He pointed out that persons who disagree with those decrees have available the orderly process of constitutional amendments. The aircraft carrier Essex has joined the U.S. 7th fleet.

In the past 24 hours, Quemoy...and the small islands immediately surrounding it...have been hit by more than 7 thousand shells. Despite the shelling, the Nationalists succeeded in delivering to Quemoy the cargoes of two more L.S.T.'s.

Moscow Radio today accused the United States of writing off in advance any prospect of reaching a settlement in the Warsaw talks. Moscow claimed this is demonstrated by the "intensification" of American military operations in the Formosa area. The negotiations in Warsaw between the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors resume tomorrow.

Here in New York today, the United Nations General Assembly was in recess. And the steering committee postponed for 24 hours its debate on whether the Assembly should consider the admission of Red China.

Secretary of State Dulles will speak before the General Assembly tomorrow. My colleague, Daniel Schorr is covering the United Nations. So let's have his report.

SCHORR: The strategy of the United States on the Formosa Straits crisis has become a little clearer tonight...and indications of it are expected to be given by Secretary of State Dulles in his speech to the United Nations General Assembly tomorrow.

For the time being, the State Department intends, though without too much hope, to explore the chances for an understanding with the Chinese Communists through the Ambassadorial talks in Warsaw. What the U.S. is seeking is a cease-fire in Formosa Straits---either by agreement, or a cease-fire in fact without an agreement. What the U.S. is prepared to offer in return is being kept deliberately obscure for bargaining reasons. But the State Department will not listen to any proposal involving the surrender of Quemoy or Matsu or any of the offshore islands. It would be willing to consider proposals for demilitarizing these islands or at least a substantial reduction of the Nationalist forces concentrated on them.

The American position is that a cease-fire is the first requisite... and that no general political problems can be discussed with the Chinese Communists until the guns stop. But, if there is a cease -fire, Sec. Dulles would be willing to open up other subjects for discussion with Peiping though he regards anything like a foreign ministers' meeting as still very far off. And Secretary Dulles is understood to be confident he could persuade the Nationalists to accept a cease-fire despite their proclaimed opposition.

No time limit has been set for the Warsaw negotiations, but if they show no early signs of progress the United States is prepared to lay the Formosa Straits issue before the United Nations...with a request that it condemn the use of force by the Chinese Communists to achieve their political aims. It has not yet been decided whether to present the question to the Security Council or the General Assembly, but Sec. Dulles is understood to be inclined towards the veto-proof Assembly. Not that U.N. action would necessarily solve anything---the Chinese Communists have not, in the past, shown any great respect for UN resolutions---but the United States government feels there would be some value in bringing world opinion to bear. If the issue is raised in the U.N., the State Department feels that the Peiping regime should have an opportunity to send a delegation to state its case---as it did in 1950 on the Korea invasion.

But, before the U.N. could act, other things might happen. For one thing, Nationalist planes might attack Communist shore batteries in an effort to relieve the blockade of Quemoy. American officials feel that the Nationalists are free to take such action despite Chiang Kai-Shek's commitment not to launch any offensive against the mainland without American permission. Such an attack would be regarded as more defensive than offensive.

This is one of the elements that makes Secretary Dulles feel the situation in Formosa Straits to be most dangerous. Soviet Russia has stated it would regard an attack on mainland China as an attack on itself...and no one knows how Russia would react.

Russia has a tendency, in theopinion of some officials, to over-estimate her military strength...she has, perhaps, come to believe her own propaganda that Soviet threats forced Britain and France out of Egypt...and prevented the United States from invading Iraq. In fact, one high-level American estimate is that Russia is at a weaker point militarily relative to the United States, than at any time in recent years. This is based on the conclusion that the Soviet Union, trying to jump the gap between heavy bomber era and the missile era, is short of bombers and not yet effective in missiles. But the danger, as American officials see it, is that Russia has been building up a myth of military superiority...and that Red China may be motivated by that myth in her actions in Formosa Straits.

The Far Eastern situation will occupy only a brief passage in Dulles' speech tomorrow. The question is not on the agenda...not yet, anyway, though it is much in the minds of the delegates. Dulles is expected to devote more time to denouncing the Russians for the executions in Hungary...to developing proposals for a standby United Nations police force...spelling out ideas for economic development, not only in the Middle East, but in other parts of the world...filling in details of American proposals for international cooperation in Outer Space. And he is expected to call for a return to the ideal of the role of law, set down in the UN Charter 13 years ago, but Dulles feels forgotten by many nations since. But, behind the brief allusion to Formosa Straits, is the conviction of the Eisenhower Administration that if the Chinese Communists do not agree to a cease-fire....and soon...there may be perilous days ahead.

Now again, Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: In Cuba, the rebel radio says Fidel Castro's forces have expanded their hold on Oriente Province by sending six columns up to the border of Camahuey Province to the west. The rebel broadcast did not say how many men were involved in the action.

Former President Turman made an attack on the Administration today, accusing "the Republicans in Washington" of following economic policies designed to prevent full production. "They want a little unemployment," he told the steelworkers convention. "It helps keep labor in its place." Mr. Truman said there is great rejoicing because the steel industry is now operating at more than 60 percent of capacity. "Think of it," he said. "Nearly 40 percent of the strength of a basic industry like steel going to waste...and people telling us the recession is over." He said it is not over for the 5-million men who are still unemployed.

The vacation White House announces that President Eisenhower will return to Washington next Tuesday to be host at a luncheon for the foreign ministers of twenty Latin American countries. Whether this will mark the end of Mr. Eisenhower's Newport vacation is not decided.

News Secretary Hagerty said again today that Sherman Adams has not submitted his resignation as assistant to the President. An Adams resignation has been reported imminent.

Mr. Eisenhower today did accept "with great personal regret" the resignation of Walter Williams as under-secretary of commerce. Williams has held the Commerce Department position since the beginning of the Eisenhower Administration. A Seattle banker, he said he was resigning for personal reasons.

The government reports that...in July...savings and loan associations across the country placed 1-billion, 200-million dollars in mortgage loans. This is 21 percent above the figure for July a year ago and a record for any single month.

The government also reports that in the second quarter of the year the profits of manufacturers...after taxes...increased 15 percent over the first quarter. Over-all manufacturing sales were up 3 percent.

The word for today might be that famous observation on the cause of unemployment composed by Calvin Coolidge. "When many people are out of work," he said, "unemployment results."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Sept. 18, 1958

This is the news:

The United Nations General Assembly heard major speeches today, by Secretary of State Dulles and the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, was at the General Assembly for the opening of general debate, and here is his first-hand report.—

(all last pages)

(Tape runs 3:45
(Ends on cue: "Now again Edward R. Murrow."

The Peiping radio said today, that there is "no question" of a cease-fire, since the United States and Red China are not at war.

The United States and Chinese Communist ambassadors met for two hours in Warsaw today, behind closed doors. / Neither diplomat had anything to say...publicly...except that they would meet again on Sunday. / Communist newspapers in Poland say that both embassadors have received specific instructions from their governments after the first exploratory meeting on Monday.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev is reported to have had secret talks recently with leaders of the European satellite states. / The report is carried by United Press International, which quotes diplomatic sources in London. It says the talks took place during Khrushchev's vacation at Yalta and that they lasted for several days.

A 100-ton Atlas missile...fired at Cape Canaveral today...exploded about a minute and a half after blast-off and fell into the ocean in fragments. The Atlas ballistic missile had been launched previously in 12 tests---seven of them successful. / But this reportedly was the first time the Air Force had planned to send the rocket its full intercontinental range---more than 6-thousand miles to a point near Ascension Island in the South Atlantic. An Air Force announcement says simply, "The vehicle exploded and destroyed itself. The cause of the malfunction is not yet known."

—)

President Eisenhower will confer separately...at Newport tomorrow... with Secretary of Defense McElroy and General Twining, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. News Secretary Hagerty described the conferences as "routine".

McElroy announced today that he will leave, on September 27, for a five-week tour of United States military installations in the Far and Middle East. The inspection trip will include a visit to the 7th Fleet, which is patroling the Formosa Strait.

Communist China charges that on six occasions yesterday, American warships violated its territorial waters. It said the United States action constitutes "serious armed provocation". The Chinese Communists recently proclaimed an extension of their territorial waters from three to twelve miles. The United States still recognizes the three-mile limit.

The Chinese Nationalists say they destroyed five Communist Migs today, in a two-hour air battle over the Formosa Strait. The victory was scored, they say, without the loss of a single Nationalist plane. The Reds, however, claim a Nationalist Sabrejet shot down over Fukien Province, on the East China coast.

→

The Nationalist Air Force was "beefed up" today, by the arrival of six F-100 Super-sabre jets...with more to come. Until now, the Nationalists have been flying F-86 Sabrejets and F-84 Thunderjets. The new F-100 is rated equal to the Russian-built Mig 17.

A U.S. military spokesman on Formosa said today that if American pilots are provoked by Communist aircraft, the Americans "might just" chase them back to mainland China. / But he emphasized that the American fliers would have to be "provoked". / They are not there, he said, "to make war."

More supplies were delivered by sea today, to the Nationalist garrison on Quemoy. Bombardment of the island was less intense.

Terrorist gunmen today wounded an American vice consul in Nicosia, the capital of Cyprus. / The vice consul, John Wentworth, was struck by three bullets, as he stood in the garden outside his house. His condition, at the British military hospital, is described as "serious".

Newspapers in Cairo (SAY ~~said today~~) that an Algerian "government-in-exile" will be proclaimed tomorrow, throughout the Arab world. Such a government would be headed by leaders of the Algerian revolt, some of whom already are prisoners of France. A spokesman for the National Liberation Front confirms that a statement will be issued tomorrow. / But he declined to give details.

→

President Nasser today issued a decree releasing the French property confiscated in 1956..[when Egypt was attacked by Britain and France.] The decree was a formality. An agreement for release of the property and French compensation to Egypt for damage done during the Anglo-French intervention was reached in Geneva last month.

The Lebanese government is reported...unofficially...to have smashed a plot by a high Army officer to seize power. / The report appeared in Beirut newspapers today...but, so far, no such announcement by the government. / The Army officer in question is under house arrest for having "illegal political contacts."

The Senate Rackets Committee today ended seven weeks of hearings on the activities of the international teamsters union and its president, James Hoffa. The committee...in its final session...heard testimony that the union in effect lost hundreds of thousands of dollars, because of the way that welfare money was handled by two insurance men who were Hoffa's friends. The testimony was promptly challenged by Hoffa's counsel, who said the (evidence) was not complete. / At the conclusion of today's hearing, a member of the committee...Senator Ives of New York...said the American people "should rise up and demand that this thing be corrected."

→

Governor Almond of Virginia today ordered two schools in Charlottesville closed under the state law prohibiting school integration. The governor told a news conference that if the people of Virginia should change their mind about the state's "massive resistance" program, he and other state officials ~~mmmhm~~ "would bow to their will." At the same time, he challenged the Eisenhower Administration to move for a constitutional amendment, defining the authority of states in operating their schools.

A federal judge today granted an injunction against interference with the integration of public schools in Norfolk, Virginia.

In Little Rock today, the private corporation...set up yesterday for the purpose of operating the four closed high schools on a segregated basis.. said it will make no effort to re-open them until after the school referendum, a week from Saturday.

Back in a moment -

Joint Jorge Bryan With a word about the Weather -

The United Auto Workers Union is following up its new contract agreement with Ford by turning its primary attention to General Motors. The U.A.W. also resumed its negotiations today with Chrysler. But union officials indicated that, right now, they are concentrating on G.M. G.M. officials declined comment today on the Ford contract...which includes the first severance pay plan ever agreed to by any of the Big Three auto companies.

schorr for murrow sept.18 7:45 PM

America's John Foster Dulles and Russia's Andrei Gromyko stood figuratively toe to toe before the United Nations Assembly today and traded blows...on Formosa Straits...on the Middle East...and on disarmament . Secretary Dulles spoke for just a half hour this morning...Foreign Minister Gromyko for an hour and a half this afternoon...getting slightly more applause. But when it was over, neutral delegates found nothing in either speech which opened any escape hatches from today's international deadlocks. As an Indonesian put it, "They just continued the Cold War."

On Formosa Straits, Dulles demanded a prompt cease-fire from Red China. Gromyko demanded prompt American evacuation from Formosa and the offshore islands. Dulles accused the Communists of aggression; Gromyko accused the Americans of "international piracy."

On the Middle East, Dulles said the course of events so far was reassuring--presumably a reference to the reported agreement of the Middle Eastern countries to stationing of a UN watchdog committee--and said American troops would withdraw from Lebanon soon.

Gromyko demanded that Americans in Lebanon--and Britons in Jordan--withdraw right away, and threatened to raise the issue in this Assembly to spur them on.

On disarmament, Dulles reviewed American proposals for a conditional ban on nuclear testing...for prevention of surprise attack...and proposed the Assembly appoint a committee to study international cooperation on outer space. Gromyko demanded an un-conditional ban on nuclear testing...said Russia would agree on peaceful use of space only if the United States gave up its foreign military bases. And he suggested a 10 to 15 per cent cut in military budgets, part of the proceeds to be given to underdeveloped countries--a proposal that most delegates said was not new or original with Russia.

The pageant of stating fixed positions, enacted before the magnificent backdrop of the ultra-modern UN Assembly hall, disclosed

Indeed, little in this pageantry of restating fixed positions seemed new or original, or ~~[illegible]~~ APPEARED to stir the delegates. ~~[illegible]~~ Gromyko ~~[illegible]~~ got some of his paper work done while Dulles talked. Dulles doodled while Gromyko talked. Most of the delegates listened patiently and impassively.

~~In fact, there was only one incident today that seemed~~ to stir the delegates. Yesterday Assembly President Charles Malik. .reportedly at India's request...got the Assembly steering committee to hold over until today action on the Indian request to put admission of Red China on the Assembly agenda. The United States, sure it has the votes, as in the past, to block the move, wanted quick action. Today, at the close of Gromyko's speech, Malik announced that because of the late hour the Steering Committee meeting would be postponed until tomorrow. And the Irish delegation started a move to delay a vote until after the Warsaw negotiations. An American spokesman, with some irritation, said the United States had not been consulted about the postponement...and opposed any delay.

An American delegation member said this evening to a

In fact, there was only one incident today that seemed to stir the delegates, and that involved some backstage maneuvering.

The United States is trying to get a quick vote in the Assembly's steering committee on India's proposal to put on the agenda the question of admitting Red China into the UN. The U.S. has been successful in previous years in getting the issue shunted aside...and is sure, at this point, it has the votes to keep Red China off the agenda again.

Yesterday, the Assembly's President, Charles Malik, who was elected with strong American support, postponed a vote on the China question until today...reportedly at India's request. Today, at the close of Gromyko's speech, Malik announced that, because of the late hour, the Steering Committee meeting would be postponed until tomorrow. And the Irish delegation started a move to delay a vote until after the Warsaw talks end...perhaps with the thought that failure of the Warsaw negotiations would change some minds about the admission of Red China into U.N.

An American delegation spokesman, with some irritation, said the United States had not been consulted by Malik about the postponement of the meeting....And said the U.S. opposes any delay in voting on the question.

This evening an American delegation member said to a UN Secretariat official, "I have some comments to make about your president." The UN man replied to the American, "What do you want from me? You elected him."

Now again Edward R. Murrow.

Word for Today

Secretary of State Dulles used no strong invectives today in his speech before the United Nations General Assembly. He expressed the policy of his government, but his language was mild. Mr. Dulles in this may have been abiding by the definition coined by William Jennings Bryan, who said, "Diplomacy is the art of keeping cool."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The United Nations General Assembly heard major speeches today by Secretary of State Dulles and the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko. My colleague, Daniel Schorr was at the General Assembly for the opening of general debate, and here is his first-hand report.

SCHORR: America's John Foster Dulles and Russia's Andrei Gromyko stood figuratively toe to toe before the United Nations Assembly today and traded blows...on Formosa Straits...on the Middle East...and on disarmement. Secretary Dulles spoke for just a half hour this morning...Foreign Minister Gromyko for an hour and a half this afternoon...getting slightly more applause. But when it was over, neutral delegates found nothing in either speech which opened any escape hatches from today's international deadlocks. As an Indonesian put it, "They just continued the Cold War."

On Formosa Straits, Dulles demanded a prompt cease-fire from Red China. Gromyko demanded prompt American evacuation from Formosa and the offshore islands.. Dulles accused the Communists of aggression; Gromyko accused the Americans of "international piracy."

On the Middle East, Dullle said the course of events so far was reassuring---presumably a reference to the reported agreement of the key Mildle Eastern countries to stationing of a UN watchdog committee---and said American troops would withdraw from Lebanon soon. Gromyko demanded that Americans in Lebanon---and Britons in Jordan---withdraw right away, and threatened to raise the issue in this Assembly to spur them on.

On disarmament, Dulles reviewed American proposals for a conditional ban on nuclear testing...for prevention of surprise attack...and proposed the Assembly appoint a committee to study international cooperation on outer space.

Gromyko demanded an unconditional ban on nculear testing...said Russia would agree on peaceful use of space only if the United States gave up its foreign military bases. And he suggested a 10 to 15 percent cut in military budgets, part of the proceeds to be given to underdeveloped countries---a proposal that most delegates said was not new or original with Russia.

Indeed, little in this pageantry of restating fixed positions seemed new or original or appeared to stir the delegates. Gromyko got some of his paper work done while Dulles talked. Dulles doodled while Gromyko talked. Most of the delegates listened patiently and impassively.

In fact, there was only one incident today that seemed to stir the delegates, and that involved some backstage maneuvering.

The United States is trying to get a quick vote in the Assembly's steering committee on India's proposal to put on the agenda the question of admitting Red China into the UN. The U.S. has been successful in previous years in getting the issue shunted aside...and is sure, at this point, it has the votes to keep Red China off the agenda again.

Yesterday, the Assembly's President, Charles Malik, who was elected with strong American support, postponed a vote on the China question until today... reportedly at India's request. Today, at the close of Gromyko's speech, Malik announced that, because of the late hour, the Steering Committee meeting would be postponed until tomorrow. And the Irish delegation started a move to delay a vote until after the Warsaw talks end...perhaps with the thought that failure of the Warsaw negotiations would change some minds about the admission of Red China into U.N.

An American delegation spokesman, with some irritation, said the United States had not been consulted by Malik about the postponement of the meeting..and said the U.S. opposes any delay in voting on the question.

This evening an American delegation member said to a UN Secretariat official, "I have some comments to make about your president." The UN man replied to the American, "What do you want from me? You elected him."

Now again, Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: The Peiping radio said today that there is "no question" of a cease-fire since the United States and Red China are not at war.

The United States and Chinese Communist ambassadors met for two hours in Warsaw today behind closed doors. Neither diplomat had anything to say... publicly...except that they would meet again on Sunday. Communist newspapers in Poland say that both ambassadors have received specific instructions from their governments after the first exploratory meeting on Monday.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev is reported to have had secret talks recently with leaders of the European satellite states. The report is carried by United Press International, which quotes diplomatic sources in London. It says the talks took place during Khrushchev's vacation at Yalta and that they lasted for several days.

A 100 ton Atlas missile...fired at Cape Canaveral today...exploded about a minute and a half after blast-off and fell into the ocean in fragments. The Atlas ballistic missile had been launched previously in 12 tests---seven of them successful. But this reportedly was the first time the Air Force had planned to send the rocket its full intercontinental range---more than 6 thousand miles to a point near Ascension Island in the South Atlantic. An Air Force announcement says simply, "The vehicle exploded and destroyed itself. The cause of the malfunction is not yet known."

President Eisenhower will confer separately...at Newport tomorrow... with Secretary of Defense McElroy and General Twining, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. News Secretary Hagerty described the conferences as "routine."

McElroy announced today that he will leave on September 27th for a five-week tour of United States military installations in the Far and Middle East.

The inspection trip will include a visit to the 7th Fleet, which is patroling the Formosa Strait.

Communist China charges that on six occasions yesterday American warships violated its territorial waters. It said the United States action constitutes "serious armed provocation." The Chinese Communists recently proclaimed an extension of their territorial waters from three to twelve miles. The United States still recognized the three-mile limit.

The Chinese Nationalists say they destroyed five Communist Migs today in a two-hour air battle over the Formosa Strait. The victory was scored, they say, without the loss of a single Nationalist plane. The Reds, however, claim a Nationalist Sabrejet shot down over Fukien Province on the East China coast.

The Nationalist Air Force was "beefed up" today by the arrival of six F-100 Super-sabre jets...with more to come. Until now, the Nationalists have been flying F-86 Sabrejets and F-84 Thunderjets. The new F-100 is rated equal to the Russian-built Mig 17.

A U.S. military spokesman on Formosa said today that if American pilots are provoked by Communist aircraft, the Americans "might just" chase them back to mainland China. But he emphasized that the American fliers would have to be "provoked." They are not there, he said, "to make war."

More supplies were delivered by sea today to the Nationalist garrison on Quemoy. Bombardment of the island was less intense.

Terrorist gunmen today wounded an American vice consul in Nicosia, the capital of Cyprus. The vice consul, John Wentworth, was struck by three bullets as he stood in the garden outside his house. His condition, at the British military hospital, is described as "serious."

Newspapers in Cairo say that an Algerian "government-in-exile" will be proclaimed tomorrow throughout the Arab world. Such a government would be headed by leaders of the Algerian revolt, some of whom already are prisoners of France. A spokesman for the National Liberation Front confirms that a statement will be issued tomorrow. But he declined to give details.

President Nasser today issued a decree releasing the French property confiscated in 1956...when Egypt was attacked by Britain and France. The decree was a formality. An agreement for release of the property and French compensation to Egypt for damage done during the Anglo-French intervention was reached in Geneva last month.

The Lebanese government is reported...unofficially...to have smashed a plot by a high Army officer to seize power. The report appeared in Beirut newspapers today...but, so far, no such announcement by the government. The Army officer in question is under house arrest for having "illegal political contacts."

The Senate Rackets Committee today ended seven weeks of hearings on the activities of the international teamsters union and its president, James Hoffa. The committee...in its final session...heard testimony that the union in effect lost hundreds of thousands of dollars, because of ihe way that welfare money was handled by two insurance men who were Hoffa's friends. The testimony was promptly challenged by Hoffa's counsel, who said the evidence was not complete. At the conclusion of today's hearing, a member of the committee...Senator Ives of New York...said the American people "should rise up and demand that this thing be corrected."

Governor Almond of Virginia today ordered two schools in Charlottesvillle closed under the state law prohibiting school integration. The governor told a news conference that if the people of Virginia should change their mind about the state's "massive resistance" program, he and other state officials would bow to their will." At the same time, he challenged the Eisenhower Administration to move for a constitutional amendment, defining the authority of states in operating their schools.

A federal judge today granted an injunction against interference with the integration of public schools in Norfolk, Virginia.

In Little Rock today, the private corporation...set up yesterday for the purpose ofoperating the four closed high schools on a segregated basis... said it will make no effort to re-open them until after the school referendum a week from Saturday.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

MURROW:The United Auto Workers Union is following up its new contract aggeement with Ford by turning its primary attention to General Motors. The U.A.W. also resumed its negotiations today with Chrysler. But union officials indicated that right now they are concentrating on G.M. G.M. officials declined comment today on the Ford contract...which includes the first severance pay plan ever agreed to by any of the Big Three auto companies.

Secretary of State Dulles used no strong invective today in his speech before the United Nations General Assembly. He expressed the policy of his government, but his language was mild. Mr. Dulles in this may have been abiding by the definition coined by William Jennings Bryan, who said, "Diplomacy is the art of keeping cool."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Sept. 19, 1958

This is the news:

Khrushchev warned the United States again tonight to withdraw its armed forces from Formosa and the Formosa Strait. / The withdrawal of American forces, he said, is the only basis for a stable peace in the Far East. And he said that if the Americans do not withdraw, the Peoples' Republic of China would have no alternative but to expel them. / Khrushchev said Red China would not be intimidated by "nuclear blackmail." / Russia, he said, fully supports the policy of Communist China. / And he repeated his warning that Russia would regard any attack against the Chinese mainland as an attack against itself. These warnings are contained in a new message to President Eisenhower, replying to the President's letter to Khrushchev last week-end. In that letter, Mr. Eisenhower urged the Soviet leader to persuade Red China to call off its attacks on the Nationalist-held offshore islands....and to negotiate a settlement./ Mr. Eisenhower said the United States "welcomed" the ambassadorial talks in Warsaw. /The United States, he said, hopes that there "will be no resort to the use of force."/ He also said the present state of tension had been created directly by the action of Communist China (in bombarding the offshore islands "without provocation." (I should like to discuss this situation further, in a few minutes).

2A

The State Department said tonight that it is investigating the [redacted] explusion...from Formosa...of N.B.C. Correspondent James Robinson. A Nationalist government spokesman has [redacted] accused Robinson of showing "an unfriendly attitude". N.B.C. News says his reporting has been both "objective and fair."

Here in New York today, the steering committee of the United Nations General Assembly shelved for another year, the question of admitting Communist China to the world organization. / Krishna Menon of India urged, in the committee debate, that the question whether to seat Red China be discussed fully on the Assembly floor. / United States Ambassador Lodge replied that this year..."of all years"...is not the time to consider the ousting of Nationalist China from the United Nations. / He made no direct reference to the Communist attack on Quemoy, but spoke only of "recent developments in the Far East." The Soviet representative, Valerian Zorin, said the United States was "afraid" to have the issue debated by the full General Assembly. / But the motion...submitted by Ambassador Lodge for postponing floor debate for at least another year...was passed by a committee vote of 12 to 7. Two members of the steering committee---Greece and Mexico---abstained. / Although this decision now goes to a plenary session of the Assembly, it is almost certain to be upheld.

President Eisenhower did not confer today with Secretary of Defense McElroy and General Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as was originally planned. The conference...which the vacation White House had described as "routine"...will take place in Washington next Tuesday. The President will be in Washington that day in order to preside at a luncheon to be attended by the foreign ministers of twenty Latin American states.

The Greek underground on Cyprus said today that it was "not responsible" for the shooting yesterday of John Wentworth, a United States vice consul in Nicosia. Doctors say that Wentworth now has a good chance of recovery. / American authorities say the shooting probably was a case of mistaken identity.

Algerian rebel leaders today proclaimed the formation of a government-in-exile. The proclamation was issued simultaneously in Egypt, Tunisia and Morocco...with the temporary seat of government yet to be decided. / The new provisional government has been recognized, so far, by the United Arab Republic, Yemen, Libya, and Iraq. / In Cairo, the announcement was made at the National Liberation Front headquarters by Ferhat Abbas, who...as prime minister...heads a 16-member cabinet. / Five cabinet members are prisoners of the French. And these include the deputy prime minister, Ben Bella, and four ministers of state. The information minister told a news conference in Cairo that the provisional government considers itself in a state of war with France, under international law. / In Paris, the French Foreign Ministry says there is "no precedent in history of a provisional government being formed in peacetime." (France has never recognized the four-year revolt in Algeria as a war). / The Foreign Ministry spokesman calls the new Algerian regime "an artificial organization" drawn up for the purpose of promoting terrorism and assassination. France, he says, will consider recognition of the regime by any other country to be "an unfriendly act." / The Foreign Ministry spokesman says that if the United States should recognize the Algerian rebels, France would be obliged to reconsider its position in the North Atlantic alliance. But, he hastens to say, he does not think that such a situation is likely to arise. / In Washington, the State Department has declined formal comment. At least, up to this hour. Department officials, however, have not concealed their disappointment in the rebel proclamation. The action, they feel, is a setback to moderates in the rebel movement...who want some kind of compromise settlement. In London, a Foreign Office spokesman says that Great Britain has "no intention" of recognizing the provisional government. However, recognition by Russia and other Communist countries is anticipated. / ~~There is also heavy Arab pressure on~~ Morocco and Tunisia ~~to grant~~ have granted recognition to the New Govt in Exile.

→

~~The French Navy announces that Algerian rebel "frogmen" have tried~~ to sink two warships at the Toulon naval base, in Southern France. The frogmen reportedly were intercepted in the water as they were approaching France's only battleship, the Jean Bart, and a destroyer which was moored alongside. / The port of Toulon is in a state of alert...and two men have been placed under arrest. Their identity was not immediately announced.

The French information minister, Jacques Soustelle, flew to Algiers today for a tour of inspection...which had been planned for some time. Only five days ago...in Paris...he narrowly escaped assassination.

The United States exploded an atomic device today in the Nevada desert---the first in a series of 10 nuclear tests. / Today's "first shot" involved a comparatively small device, suspended from a balloon 500 feet over Yucca Flat. / The cloud, after the explosion, did not take the usual mushroom shape, but looked (in the words of one reporter) like "a ball of yarn sitting up there over the desert." / The Atomic Energy Commission says that if there is any radioactive fall-out beyond the test site, it should be only in "trace amounts". The nickname for this series of tests...in Nevada...is "Operation Deadline". / The shots must be completed by October 31...when the United States and Britain are due to join Russia in talks concerning a nuclear test ban. / The United States has offered to stop testing for one year, when the talks begin. Hmm It has indicated willingness...if progress continues to be made toward agreement... to extend test suspension on a year to year basis. And so the current series of tests could...conceivably...be the last conducted by this country for military purposes.

The cost-of-living declined in August, for the first time in two years. The decline amounted to two-tenths of one percent. A government spokesman says, however, that this is not the beginning of a "downward trend". Rather, that the consumer price index is "tending to stabilize." / The decline in August reflected lower food prices, due to heavy marketing of fruits, vegetables and meats. It is predicted that food prices will decline somewhat further this month---then level off. / Clothing prices last month dipped an average of one-tenth of one percent. Housing and transportation costs were up.

A federal judge today refused to suspend an order he issued more than a year ago, for the integration of six schools in Norfolk, Virginia. / The Norfolk board of education then postponed the opening of the schools for one week, while it made an appeal.

Today a member of the Virginia legislature...John C. Webb, representing Fairfax County...urged Governor Almond to call a special session, for the purpose of repealing the state law which automatically closed down integrated schools. He argued that the policy of "massive resistance" would destroy Virginia's public school system.

The United States Public Health Service reports 399 cases identified as polio in the past week. / One hundred and ninety-three of these cases are paralytic. / Fewer polio cases have been reported so far this year, than a year ago. / But the incidence of the disease, in its paralytic form, is slightly higher than last year.

Edward R. Murrow: September 19, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

On Sunday we may get some idea whether the Chinese Communists will agree to a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. / That is when Communist Ambassador Wang meets American Ambassador Beam again in Warsaw. / No purpose is served by speculating on the course of the conversations thus far; but if we judge from Russian and Chinese statements to their own people, and at the United Nations, there is very little chance indeed that the Chinese will agree to a cease fire. / And again if we judge by the statements ~~of~~ American spokesmen, there is no chance at all of our agreeing to the conditions laid down by the Chinese Communists.

The brink of war is a phrase somewhat glibly used in discussing the cold war, but it becomes increasingly clear that we are getting a good close look at a big brink. / If war should come, it will not be like the Korean War, which was fought by the United Nations and was kept localized. The United Nations would not join us in a war over the offshore islands, and such a war could probably not be kept local. / We have been warned in the bluntest possible fashion that if we attack the Chinese mainland, the Soviet Union will enter the war against us. / And we have been told, privately by Iron Curtain diplomats, that the first attack would be against our Eastern seaboard. / These warnings may be mere bluff, a psychological build-up designed to influence negotiations. This may be merely more of Russia's "ballistic blackmail," but it is necessary to remember that during the Korean War, the Indian Ambassador in Peiping told us that if our forces reached for the Yalu River, Communist China would enter the war. We didn't believe the warning; we reached and they entered.

With Nuclear Weapons.

In this present position both sides are comitting themselves more and more firmly. The pressure is increasing. In the last three weeks we have rushed one-and-a-half times as much military gear to Formosa as the total annual program for Nationalist China. Our missiles and our nuclear air power are being concentrated there, and we are taking pains to see that the world knows about it. We have set up our own command organization on Formosa, and announced it. We have broadcast the decision to allow hot pursuit back over the mainland to American pilots attacked by Communist planes. This means that war between the United States and China can depend on the discretion of a single Chinese pilot, and on the split-second decision of an American pilot. Chiang Kai-Shek may decide to try to take out the coastal batteries with his own air force, which he cannot do alone. If we help him we then face another threat from Khrushchev, repeated today, that such action will be considered an attack on the Soviet Union. Khrushchev, in his message to Eisenhower today, again demanded that American military forces be withdrawn from the Formosa area; and he went on to say "should the United States not do this now, the People's Republic of China would have no other way except the expulsion of enemy forces from its territory, on which a base is being created for an attack on the People's Republic of China." It would seem that Khrushchev is talking tougher than the Chinese , who have been aiming their oral and artillery fire primarily at the offshore islands.

What we want is a cease-fire, with or without formal agreement; but there appears to be little chance of our getting it without making major concessions. In the absence of an agreement the immediate problem is to break the blockade. A big air drop might do it temporarily, and buy us some time. But to be effective it would involve flying American planes over waters where we would not send American ships. We have heretofore observed the three-mile limit off Quemoy in the Navy's convoy work. If the air drop failed, we would then be confronted with the formal decision whether to silence the shore batteries ourselves. That decision has not yet been taken in Washington. Chiang Kai-Shek could largely take the decision out of our hands by sending his own planes after the shore batteries. Under his treaty with us he is entitled to do that. Technically such an operation need not involve us, but the Communists may not be aware that there is any difference. And three or twelve-mile limits are bound to be violated by super-sonic jets.

The leaders on both sides in this situation are like civilians stomping through a minefield looking for a road to peace. They may think they know where they can step safely. Maybe they do. But this is not an altogether satisfactory way to be looking for peace.

Word for Today

It was two thousand years ago...almost to this exact date...that Publilius Syrus said very wisely "Danger strikes the sooner when it is despised."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Khrushchev warned the United States again tonight to withdraw its armed forces from Formosa and the Formosa Strait. The withdrawal of American forces, he said, is the only basis for a stable peace in the Far East. And he said that if the Americans do not withdraw, the Peoples' Republic of China would have no alternative but to expel them. Khrushchev said Red China would not be intimidated by "nuclear blackmail." Russia, he said, fully supports the policy of Communist China. And he repeated his warning that Russia would regard any attack against the Chinese mainland as an attack against itself. These warnings are contained in a new message to President Eisenhower, replying to the President's letter to Khrushchev last week-end. In that letter, Mr. Eisenhower urged the Soviet leader to persuade Red China to call off its attacks on the Nationalist-held offshore islands...and to negotiate a settlement. Mr. Eisenhower said the United States "welcomed" the ambassadorial talks in Warsaw. The United States, he said, hopes that there "will be no resort to the use of force." He also said the present state of tension had been created directly by the action of Communist China in bombarding the offshore islands "without provocation." (I should like to discuss this situation further in a few minutes.)

The State Department said tonight that it is investigating the expulsion... from Formosa...of N.B.C. Correspondent James Robinson. A Nationalist government spokesman has accused Robinson of showing "an unfriendly attitude." N.B.C. News says his reporting has been both "objective and fair."

Here in New York today, the steering committee of the United Nations General Assembly shelved for another year the question of admitting Communist China to the world organization. Krishna Menon of India urged in the committee debate that the question whether to seat Red China be discussed fully on the Assembly floor.. United States Ambassador Lodge replied that this year...."of all years".... is not the time to consider the ousting of Nationalist China from the United Nations.

He made no direct reference to the Communist attack on Quemoy, but spoke only of "recent developments in the Far East." The Soviet representative, Valerian Zorin, said the United States was afraid to have the issue debated by the full General Assembly. But the motion...submitted by Ambassador Lodge for postponing floor debate for at least another year...was passed by a committee vote of 12 to 7. Two members of the steering committee---Greece and Mexico---abstained. Although this decision now goes to a plenary session of the Assembly, it is almost certain to be upheld.

President Eisenhower did not confer today with Secretary of Defense McElroy and General Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as was originally planned. The conference....wh ich the vacation White House had described as "routine"...will take place in Washington next Tuesday. The President will be in Washington that day in order to preside at a luncheon to be attended by the foreign ministers of twenty Latin American states.

The Greek underground on Cyprus said today that it was "not responsible" for the shooting yesterday of John Wentworth, a United States vice consul in Nicosia. Doctors say that Wentworth now has a good chance of recovery. American authorities say the shooting probably was a case of mistaken identity.

Algerian rebel leaders today proclaimed the formation of a government-in-exile. The proclamation was issued simultaneously in Egypt, Tunisia and Morocco... with the temporary seat of government yet to be decided. The new provisional government has been recognized, so far, by the United Arab Republic, Yemen, Libya, and Iraq. In Cairo, the announcement was made at the National Liberation Front headquarters by Ferhat Abbas, who....as prime minister....heads a 16-member cabinet. Five cabinet members are prisoners of the French. And these include the deputy prime minister, Ben Bella, and four ministers of state. The information minister told a news conference in Cairo that the provisional government considers itself in a state of war with France, under international law. In Paris, the French Foreign Ministry says there is no precedent in history of a provisional government being formed in peacetime.

(France has never recognized the four-year revolt in Algeria as a war). The Foreign Ministry spokesman calls the new Algerian regime"an artificial organization" drawn up for the purpose of promoting terrorism and assassination. France, he says, will consider recognition of the regime by any other country to be "an unfriendly act." The Foreign Ministry spokesman says that if the United States should recognize the Algerian rebels, France would be obliged to reconsider its position in the North Atlantic alliance. But, he hastens to say, he does not think that such a situation is likely to arise. In Washington, the State Department has declined formal comment. At least, up to this hour. Department officials, however, have not concealed their disappointment in the rebel proclamation. The action, they feel, is a setback to moderates in the rebel movement...who want some kind of compromise settlement. In London, a Foreign Office spokesman says that Great Britain has "no intention' of recognizing the provisional government. However, recognition by Russia and other Communist countries is anticipated. Morocco and Tunisia have granted recognition to the new government in exile.

The French information minister, Jacques Soustelle, flew to Algiers today for a tour of inspection...which had been planned for some time. Only five days ago....in Paris....he narrowly escaped assassination.

The United States exploded an atomic device today in the Nevada desert -- the first in a series of 10 nuclear tests. Today's "first shot" involved a comparatively small device, suspended from a balloon 500 feet over Yucca Flat. The cloud after the explosion did not take the usual mushroom shape but looked in the words of one reporter like "a ball of yarn sitting up there over the desert." The Atomic Energy Commission says that if there is any radioactive fall-out beyond the test site, it should be only in "trace amounts". The nickname for this series of tests....in Nevada....is "Operation Deadline". The shots must be completed by October 31....when the United States and Britain are due to join Russia in talks concerning a nuclear test ban.

The United States has offered to stop testing for one year when the talks begin. It has indicated willingness.....if progress continues to be made toward agreement...to extend test suspension on a year to year basis. And so the current series of tests could.....conceivably....be the last conducted by this country for military purposes.

The cost-of-living declined in August for the first time in two years. The decline amounted to two-tenths of one percent. A government spokesman says, however, that this is not the beginning of a "downward trend". Rather, that the consumer price index is "tending to stabilize." The decline in August reflected lower food prices, due to heavy marketing of fruits, vegetables and meats. It is predicted that food prices will decline somewhat further this months---then level off. Clothing prices last month dipped an average of one-tenth of one percent. Housing and transportation costs were up.

A federal judge today refused to suspend an order he issued more than a year ago for the integration of six schools in Norfolk, Virginia. Norfolk board of education then postponed the opening of the schools for one week, while it made an appeal.

Today a member of the Virginia legislature....John C. Webb, representing Fairfax County....urged Governor Almond to call a special session, for the purpose of repealing the state law which automatically closed down integrated schools. He argued that the policy of "massive resistance"would destroy Virginia's public school system.

The United States Public Health Service reports 399 cases identified as polio in the past week. One hundred and ninety-three of these cases are paralytic. Fewer polio cases have been reported so far this year than a year ago. But the incidence of the disease in its paralytic form is slightly higher than last year.

On Sunday we may get some idea whether the Chinese Communists will agree to a cease fire in the Formosa Strait. That is when Communist Ambassador Wang meets American Ambassador Beam again in Warsaw. No purpose is served by speculating on the course of the conversations thus far; but if we judge from Russian and Chinese statements to their own people, and at the United Nations, there is very little chance indeed that the Chinese will agree to a cease fire. And again if we judge by the statements of American spokesmen, there is no chance at all of our agreeing to the conditions laid down by the Chinese Communists.

The brink of war is a phrase somewhat glibly used in discussing the cold war, but it becomes increasingly clear that we are getting a good close look at a big brink. If war should come, it will not be like the Korean war, which was fought by the United Nations and was kept localized. The United Nations would not join us in a war over the offshore islands, and such a war could probably not be kept local. We have been warned in the bluntest possible fashion that if we attack the Chinese mainland, the Soviet Union will enter the war against us. And we have been told, privately by Iron Curtain diplomats, that the first attack would be against our Eastern seaboard with nuclear weapons. These warnings may be mere bluff, a psychological build-up designed to influence negotiations. This may be merely more of Russia's "ballistic blackmail" but it is necessary to remember that during the Korean War, the Indian Ambassador in Peiping told us that if our forces reached for the Yalu River, Communist China would enter the war. We didn't believe the warning; we reached and they entered.

In this present position both sides are comitting themselves more and more firmly. The pressure is increasing. In the last three weeks we have rushed one-and-a-half times as much military gear to Formosa as the total annual program for Nationalist China. Our missiles and our nuclear air power are being concentrated there, and we are taking pains to see that the world knows about it. We have set up our own command organization on Formosa, and announced it.

We have broadcast the decision to allow hot pursuit back over the mainland to American pilots attacked by Communist planes. This means that war between the United States and China can depend on the discretion of a single Chinese pilot, and on the split-second decision of an American pilot. Chiang Kai-Shek may decide to try to take out the coastal batteries with his own air force, which he cannot do alone. If we help him we then face another threat from Khrushchev, repeated today, that such action will be considered an attack on the Soviet Union. Khrushchev, in his message to Eisenhower today, again demanded that American military forces be withdrawn from the Formosa area; and he went on to say "should the United States not do this now, the People's Republic of China would have no other way except the expulsion of enemy forces from its territory, on which a base is being created for an attack on the People's Republic of China". It would seem that Khrushchev is talking tougher than the Chinese, who have been aiming their oral and artillery fire primarily at the offshore islands.

What we want is a cease fire, with or without formal agreement; but there appears to be little chance of our getting it without making major coneessions. In the absence of an agreement the immediate problem is to break the blockade. A big air drop might do it temporarily, and buy us some time. But to be effective it would involve flying American planes over waters where we would not send American ships. We have heretofore observed the three-mile limit off Quemoy in the Navy's convoy work. If the air drop failed, we would then be confronted with the formal decision whether to silence the shore batteries ourselves. That decision has not yet been taken in Washington. Chiang Kai-Shek could largely take the decision out of our hands by sending his own planes after the shore batteries. Under his treaty with us he is entitled to do that. Technically such an operation need not involve us, but the Communists may not be aware that there is any difference. And three or twelve-mile limits are bound to be violated by super-sonic jets.

The leaders on both sides in this situation are like civilians stomping through a minefield looking for a road to peace. They may think they know where they can step safely. Maybe they do. But this is not an altogether satisfactory way to be looking for peace.

It was two thousand years ago...almost to this exact date....that Publilius Syrus said, very wisely, "Danger strikes the sooner when it is despised."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Sept. 22, 1958

This is the news:

Sherman Adams resigned tonight as assistant to the President.

For a direct report, we switch to Washington and CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd.

(Von Fremd runs approx 3:30
(Returns on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

The White House announces that when President Eisenhower returns to Washington tomorrow to attend a diplomatic luncheon, it will mark the end of his vacation. He played a final round of golf at the Newport Country Club this afternpon.

Besides conferring with Sherman Adams, Mr. Eisenhower today talked with Secretary of State Dulles on the telephone "for quite a long time." The conversation related to the statement the United States will make... later this week...on America's aims in the Far East. The statement will be an answer to Khrushchev's charge of American "aggression" against Communist China. News Secretary Hagerty remarked...~~over the week-end~~ yesterday.. that the paper might also contain some "suggestions and recommendations." A State Department spokesman said today he does not think that it will entail any change in basic policy.

Mr. Dulles showed up half an hour late today at a Community Fund rally in the State Department. He said, "I apologize for being late, but these are pretty critical days."

In Warsaw today, the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors talked for an hour and 45 minutes...and scheduled another meeting for Thursday. Neither ambassador would comment. /But the fact they will meet again, preserved the possibility that a Formosa cease-fire agreement might still be reached.

The Russian press today continued its attack on President Eisenhower, for rejecting Khrushchev's latest note. /The White House declared the note unacceptable, because of its "false accusations and abusive language." Pravda said today that the United States refuses to listen to the "grim truth." /The "truth", according to Pravda, is that the United States will have to get out of Formosa, "or be made to get out." / It called the President's action "insolent".

Again today, Communist China accused American air and naval forces of violating its territory. Peiping radio said, "The Chinese Government hereby gives its 10th serious warning on this matter."

On Formosa today, our Pacific commanders held strategy talks with Nationalist military leaders. / Later tonight, the senior American officer, Admiral Felt, is due to confer with President Chiang Kai-shek.

A dispatch from Formosa---not yet confirmed---says that Communist guns have suddenly stopped their bombardment of Quemoy.

The United Nations General Assembly today debated the question, whether it should admit Communist China as a member. / The steering committee already has recommended that consideration of that issue, by the full Assembly, be put off for at least another year. / Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko said American politicians were "dreaming" that Communist China would disappear. / He demanded that the United States withdraw its military power from Formosa, "while it is not too late." / And he repeated the charge that we are aggressors. American Ambassador Lodge denied that the United States had "seized" Formosa...and said, "We never impose our will on another country. It ill becomes the Soviet Union, with its record of slavery, to make accusations against us." / Lodge said the Chinese Communists were "rapidly shooting themselves, and the rest of the world", out of a chance to settle the Formosa question by peaceful means. | The General

→

Asembly is expected...tomorrow...to defeat an Indian resolution, asking that the question of Red China's admission be formally taken up at this session.

Communist China today became the first non-Arab state to recognize the provisional government set up by Algerian rebel leaders last Friday. And France today formally protested to Morocco and Tunisia for their recognition of the rebel regime.

French authorities say that in Algeria they have found a mass grave holding the bodies of more than [illegible] Moslems. The French say the dead are former rebel troops...executed by their compatriots for going over to the French side. They were killed by other rebels.

In Lebanon tonight, there was sporadic shooting...on the eve of the inauguration of a new president. [illegible] persons are reported [illegible].

Governor Collins of Florida said today...at the southern governors' conference in Lexington, Kentucky...that Congress should make the problem of school integration its "first item of business" when it reconvenes in January. Congress, he said, should provide "equitable implementation and safeguarding procedures." Other southern governors showed little enthusiasm for Congressional action. But Collins said, "I refuse to believe that we have passed the point, where men of goodwill can rise above their differences."

→

In Charlottesville, Virginia... a group of white students today circulated petitions, asking Governor Almond to reopen the schools he closed last week to block racial integration.

And eight Negroes returned to class today in Van Buren, Arkansas, without major incident. White students who had threated to boycott the two integrated schools, also went to class.

repeated

President Eisenhower today ordered import restrictions on lead and zinc. / The President acted on a recommendation by the Tariff Commission, that domestic lead and zinc producers be granted relief from foreign competition. / Under the new quota system, imports of the two metals will be limited to four-fifths of the annual average, between 1953 and 1957.

Today, John L. Lewis won a 50-cent-an-hour wage increase for the miners who dig soft coal, sold to the Federal Government. / It was reported...at the same time...that Lewis and the bituminous coal industry are near agreement on a new union contract. / The terms, reportedly, call for a daily wage increase of a dollar and 20 cents, plus an increase in royalties for the union welfare fund, and other improvements.

Contract talks resumed in Detroit today, between General Motors and Chrysler, and the United Auto Workers. / Some progress is reported. Ford and the U.A.W. agreed on a new contract last week.

It was "no contest" today, in the second race for the America's Cup. Both yachts---America's "Columbia" and Britain's "Sceptre"---failed to complete the course in the prescribed five and a half hours, because of lack of wind.

Edward R. Murrow: September 22, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

A counter-revolution has been proclaimed in Soviet education. That is the meaning of Premier Khrushchev's page-long dissertation on the school system in yesterday's Soviet press. He reveals that the system is to be re-organized from the bottom up. Henceforth nobody can even try for a higher education who does not put in two years in a factory or on a farm. And those who then manage to qualify for higher schooling have to put in two more years at manual labor and do their school work at night. The celebrated Soviet ten-year school is to be scrapped.

A comparable system in this country would interrupt all education at the seventh or eighth grade, when all children, boys and girls alike, would take factory or farm jobs. Those who wanted more of an education would have to study nights for two years to get into preparatory school. And if they later passed their college boards, they would have to spend their freshman and sophomore years in farm or factory jobs, while doing all their college work at night for those years.

In Russia, the accent is to be on work and workers. And to make students still more conscious that they are workers, and still more obedient to Communist discipline, the new rule is to be that no one gets into college at all without recommendation from a Communist-controlled trade union or the Young Communist League. This is the end of the boasted Soviet policy that everyone in the Soviet Union can get a higher education who is capable of receiving it.

Probably Marxists will not agree that this is a counter-revolution. On the contrary, they believe that the educational system now to be replaced was proving to be counter-revolutionary. It was creating an upper class, receiving all kinds of privileges denied to the proletariat, and many in it looked down on factory and farm work. Marxists began feeling uneasy at seeing the creation of intellectuals capable of thinking for themselves. So far, these intellectuals were not taking much interest in politics, but the day might not be far off when they did, and when it came, the dictatorship would be in trouble.

Since the Soviet educational system has been offering substantial hope that Russia one day might grow mellow, liberal and more free, the news of the school re-organization dashes cold water on these hopes. Perhaps, of all developments recently in the news - excepting the China crisis - this might change the future more deeply than any other, and not for the better.

Back in a moment. —
First George Bryan with word about the Weather

The Russians have altered their education system drastically.

it.

They know what it can do. President Griswold of Yale once said, "We honor learning, but do not believe in it. We reward it with lengthy obituaries." And it was G.K. Chesterton who said...during the first World War..."We are in a race between education and catastrophe."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, September 22, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Sherman Adams resigned tonight as assistant to the President. For a direct report, we switch to Washington and CBS News correspondent Charles von Fremd.

FREMD: Sherman Adams began his final day as assistant to the President, to all intents and purposes, by flying to President Eisenhower's Newport vacation headquarters. There he conferred with the Chief Executive. Reporters could only speculation the conversation concerned Adams's future. The former New Hampshire governor flew directly back to Washington; the White House requested radio and television time for Adams early this evening.

Adams was at the wheel of his pale blue station wagon when it pulled up before our Washington studio shortly before broadcast time. He was outwardly calm and smiling, corrected one newsman who said "Good afternoon," with a customarily precise, "Good evening." At thirty-five minutes past six, Eastern Time, Adams smiled at the cameras and began a nine-minute statement. He attacked those who testified before a special House committee about his relationship with Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine, as completely irresponsible, deplored what he said was a campaign of vilification aimed at destroying Sherman Adams and embarrassing the President. The flinty little New Hampshire politician added he had done no wrong, did not want to retreat under fire, but he recognized his continued presence at the President's right arm might lead to further repercussions. Then Adams arrived at his personal moment of truth.

ADAMS: Under the circumstances, and in light of the events of the past three months, in which I had been made to be directly concerned, I must ask myself whether my retention in office might conceivably delay or retard, even in small degree, the achievement of those goals of President Eisenhower which yet are ahead. Another factor that I feel I must consider is whether the retention of my services might possibly diminish the chances which my party has of regaining control of the Congress in the November elections. Within the past few days I have reached a decision. Early this morning I flew from Washington to the President's vacation headquarters at Newport, Rhode Island. I conferred with him and in the course of that conference, I have tendered my resignation. This he has accepted, to be effective as soon as an orderly transition can be arranged for the assumptions of my duties and responsibilities. This action of mine is final and unqualified. It is not open to reconsideration.

FRED: In a "Dear Sherman" letter, President Eisenhower told his colleague of six years, he deeply deplored the circumstances that forced Adams to decide to resign. Mr. Eisenhower praised Adams's brilliant performance, emphasized his assistant still has his complete trust, confidence and respect. The President said he accepted the resignation with sadness. So were many people here, including critics of Adams', and they are legioned. Regardless of his impropriety, notwithstanding his crusty personality and controversial actions, the acid-tongued assistant to the President has, for the lifetime of this Administration, been a prime subject of discussion and debate. His enemies, as well as his friends, will notice that something is missing.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: ...

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Democratic national chairman, Paul Butler, charged tonight that it was "political expediency" which caused the resignation of Sherman Adams. Mr. Adams said in his nationwide broadcast last night that he was the victim of "a campaign of vilification" designed to destroy him and embarrass the Administration. Mr. Butler said tonight in radio and television time granted him to make reply that there was no Democratic "plot" to destroy Adams. "The tragedy of Sherman Adams," he said, "was that a man in whose hands the President had placed unprecedented power...and personal trust...did not live up to the standards of conduct which he and the President have prescribed for all in public life from the humblest to the highest." "But," said Butler, "perhaps the greatest tragedy of all is that Sherman Adams is not leaving the White House as the result of a stern but fair moral judgment by his superior. Sherman Adams," said Butler, "is leaving the White House because of a decision based on political expediency."

The Republican national chairman...Meade Alcorn...said today that in August he made a survey among Republican candidates and that he found "a reasonably acute concern" on their part as to the impact the Adams case might have on their chances of election. Alcorn said he made the survey through the Republican National Committee at the request of Sherman Adams. He said he reported his findings both to Mr. Adams and to the President. He never recommended that Adams resign.

Alcorn told the National Press Club in Washington that Republican candidates may do much better in the November elections than the experts think. "The Republican Party," he said, "can win the House if we Republicans do just two things: Campaign vigorously and get out our vote." He predicted a Democratic party split in 1960 on the issue of civil rights.

President Eisenhower ended his Rhode Island vacation today...and flew back to Washington. One of the first things he did...on his return...was confer with Sherman Adams. News Secretary Hagerty says they discussed "plans for an orderly transition of Adams' duties and responsibilities." No indication when... or even whether...the President will appoint a new chief assistant. There has been speculation the job might go to General Gruenther, head of the American Red Cross. Mr. Eisenhower also conferred with Secretary of State Dulles...then presided at a luncheon for the foreign ministers of 21 Latin American states.

There will be no presidential news conference tomorrow. Hagerty says the President does expect to meet reporters a week from tomorrow.

President Eisenhower was accused today...by a Democratic southern governor...of "not carrying out his responsibilities" in the controversy over school integration. Governor Clement of Tennessee said that in his opinion, Mr. Eisenhower should have shown up at the Southern Governors Conference in Lexington, Kentucky. Governor Clement made this accusation at the conference. He conceded that the President had not been invited.

Also at the conference, Governor Faubus said that any federal law calling for public school integration would be unconstitutional. "The field of education," he said, "is reserved for the state." Faubus was referring to the suggestion... made yesterday by Governor Collins of Florida...that the integration issue be resolved by congressional action.

The school board of Norfolk, Virginia today was denied a one-year delay in the integration of six Norfolk schools. Chief Judge Sobeloff of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals said that 17 Negro students must be admitted to the schools...scheduled to open on Monday. Governor Almond is now expected to close the schools, according to state law.

The Little Rock school board today petitioned the United States District Court for a ruling on whether it would be legal to operate the closed high schools there as private, segregated institutions. School Superintendent Blossom said today that more than a quarter of all the students affected in Little Rock have transferred to schools outside the city.

The United Nations General Assembly today voted to bar Communist China from membership in the world organization for at least another year. The vote to postpone consideration of admission of Red China was 44 to 28 with nine abstentions. This is the slimmest margin by which the question of Communist China's admission has ever been tabled. The vote last year to postpone debate on the question was 48 to 27 with six abstentions. Since then, Greece, Austria, Iceland and Iraq have switched over to the position that the issue should be subjected to formal debate by the full Assembly. India's Krisha Menon warned before today's vote was taken that the consequences of not admitting Red China at this time might be very grave.

A State Department spokesman was asked today about reports that Chinese Nationalist bombers...supported by the United States...would bomb the Chinese mainland if Quemoy were about to fall. The spokesman said he knows of "nothing that was not on the public record." He referred, he said, to the speeches and statement made by President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles.

Quemoy was shelled by Communist artillery today. And the supplying of the Quemoy complex...by sea and air...continued.

In Beirut, General Shehab was sworn in as the new president of Lebanon. He emphasized his desire for close cooperation with all Arab states. And he called on the people to turn in their arms as a means of reducing tension. Shehab said the American troops in Lebanon should be withdrawn "as fast as possible."

The retirement of Sherman Adams puts the American people on notice once more that something needs to be done to modernize the office of the President. It is one of the two most powerful offices in the world in its impact on world affairs. Its power over the affairs of this country is stupendous. The presidency shares all the duties and responsibilities of the Federal Govennment with Congress and the Judiciary. The other two branches are far-flung institutions number hundreds of picked men. The presidency is filled by a single individual. He alone is responsible for his office. Many Americans assume that he personally wields all his power, but this he does not and cannot do. The government has become too big and too complex. Even if the President had unbounded vitality he could not do it. President Eisenhower, whose vitality is strictly limited, is able to exercise still less of it. But the rest of the power must be wielded by someone, and until last night that someone was Sherman Adams. Officially he was Assistant to the President. In fact he was Assistant President, or to use another title, the General Manager of an Institutionalized Presidency. As such he worked silently and invisibly; he was a powerful but not a public figure.

The problem of Mr. Adams' retirement is much less his relation with Bernard Goldfine and its ethical ramification than the simple one of filling his place. As Presidential Assistant he had done an exceptionally important work extremely well, and it will be hard to find someone as capable. No one who succeeds him will have had his five years experience of daily contact with President Eisenhower. No one will know as sell how to mesh with the President's ideas, principles and attitudes. When a person of so much power bows out, a vacuum of power has to be filled. And now one of the most interesting tasks in Washington is how to fill it.

It can be done in one of two ways. One is simply to look for another but less experienced Sherman Adams and limp along with him till 1960. The other way is to take this opportunity to complete the modernization of the Office of the President. Mr. Adams had begun it, but did not go as far as he thought necessary. At one time he advocated a division of the presidential functions into three sections, with a chief of staff for each. One would have charge of the ceremonial duties of the office, one would deal with foreign affairs and the third with domestic affairs. He even played with the idea that these three staff heads should be vice presidents, duly elected to their offices and responsible to the people.

Now the thinking has changed, and two assistants to the President are favored, one as Chief of Staff on Foreign Affairs, the other in charge of Domestic Affairs. The idea of a foreign affairs chief of staff came up at the time of Secretary Dulles's operation. General Walter Bedell Smith was about to be given the post when Acting Secretary Herbert Hoover Jr. objected. Mr. Dulles is now well, but the idea persists. For many in Washington are under the impression that foreign policy, which is a function of the presidency, is now being made by Mr. Dulles with less than sufficient opportunity for the White House to study it.

A Chief of Staff for Domestic Affairs might do much to bring the President into close touch with individuals in Congress and public life, and keep him informed about what is being written and said throughout the country. This would avoid the effects of Mr. Adams' astringent regime, which has isolated the President in trying to conserve his strength.

One of the interesting suggestions heard in Washington is that Vice President Nixon now be given an active role in the White House. He is reported to want it, so as to get administrative experience, and it might work in his case. But it could set a dangerous precedent. In future times the Vice President, even though a member of the President's party, could be a bitter rival of his and at odds with him on policy. To assure such a Vice President a powerful place in the White House might lead to disaster.

In view of the importance to everyone of the Presidency, the modernization of the office deserves the widest discussion and the best possible solution. No appointment or appointments M. Eisenhower makes through the rest of his term, can hardly have greater significance or usefulness.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First, George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The office of President has so grown in its power and scope that it needs to be modernized. Even forty years ago, Woodrow Wilson was appalled by the office. "It is," said Wilson, "so much greater than any man could honestly imagine himself to be that the most he can do is look grave enough and self-possessed enough to seem to fill it."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Sept. 24, 1958

This is the news:

The Lebanese government tonight imposed a total curfew on Beirut...after a day of fighting between Christians and Moslems in which 19 persons are said to have died. Between 50 and 60 persons are reported wounded. The violence broke out after the Christian Falangists called a general strike to protest the kidnaping of a Falangist editor. The Falangist Party also is alarmed over reports that the new president of Lebanon, General Chehab, may choose a Moslem rebel leader as premier. Five hours after the fighting started, the Lebanese Army announced...over loudspeakers...that any civilian seen carrying firearms would be shot on sight. U.S. Marines reinforced their guard at the American Embassy...and set up new strongpoints along their lines of communication. American civilians were instructed to stay off the streets. After these steps were taken, the disorders died down.

The Chinese Nationalist Defense Ministry claims 10 Communist jets shot down today over the Formosa Strait. Two other Communist planes probably were destroyed. And the Nationalists say that all of their aircraft returned safely to base. It was the biggest air battle so far. Here, according to the Nationalist Defense Ministry, is what happened: Several groups of Nationalist Sabrejets---32 in all---were flying at different altitudes, ranging from 35-thousand to 50-thousand feet. About a hundred Communist Migs appeared, and tried to place themselves between the Nationalist aircraft and Formosa...in what, the Defense Ministry says, was an obvious attempt to force the Sabrejets over the Communist mainland. A group of 12 Nationalist planes...flying at a higher altitude than any of the rest...then swooped down and destroyed 10 of the Communist aircraft. All 10 "kills" were scored by the American-trained pilots of these 12 planes.

The Chinese Communist radio claims one Nationalist plane shot down during the day, and another damaged. Peiping also charges that two American aircraft violated Communist China's air space today, in the vicinity of Amoy. It says, "The Chinese government gives its 12th warning against these U.S. military provocations."

→

Reporters were allowed to visit Quemoy today for the first time in more than a week. The Associated Press correspondent said that military installations on the island showed "surprisingly little damage", considering the artillery pounding it has taken in the past month. The supply situation did not appear critical.

Admiral Felt, commander of US. forces in the Pacific, said the supply situation is improving---more supplies reached the island today. Felt is quoted as saying, "We are not over-optimistic, but we are also not pessimistic."

In Washington today, Secretary of Defense McElroy held a "routine" conference with President Eisenhower. Reporters asked McElroy...as he was leaving...about the rumor that this country is thinking of releasing the Nationalist Air Force to bomb the China mainland. McElroy said that is "something we would not wish for." He added, "Let's give the Warsaw talks a chance to succeed." The fourth meeting in Warsaw...between the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors...will be held tomorrow.

The Polish Communist leader...Wladyslaw Gomulka...today accused the Roman Catholic Church in Poland of working, "both overtly and secretly", against the government. / Gomulka said the church-state agreement...of two years ago...did not provide for the crucifixes and collective prayers which have appeared in school classrooms. / The state recently ordered these removed, and Gomulka charged today that priests have incited opposition to this order. / No one, he said, who attempts to disturb the work of the schools can count on leniency.

The bodies of six American airmen...whose plane crashed in Soviet Armenia on September second...were turned over to United States authorities today at the Turkish border. There was still no word on the fate of 11 other crewmen, who were aboard the aircraft. / [illegible]

The French government says it will adopt new measures to curb the wave of Algerian terrorism in France, after the constitutional referendum on Sunday. And tonight the information minister, Jacques Soustelle, said that the power of the French Communist Party should be curbed.

A new test version of the Polaris missile was fired at Cape Canaveral today, then destroyed 43 seconds after lamnching when it headed the wrong way. Pieces of the rocket fell on land, but no one was hurt.

CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd reports from Washington that the United States and Italy have agreed in principle to establish intermediate range ballistic missile bases on Italian soil by the end of the year. The I.R.B.M. being sent to Italy is the Army Jupiter. Great Britain already has received its first Thor rocket, developed by the Air Force.

In Lexington, Kentucky...the southern governors have concluded their annual conference---without taking an official stand on the school integration issue. Various resolutions were proposed; none was passed. A governor who asked not to be identified said, "We felt it would do more harm than good to have an open fight."

In Arkansas, a federal judge says he will rule tomorrow...on whether the Little Rock school board can lease public school property for private segregated operation without violating the law.

Three white boys in Little Rock charged today that they were beaten up by a group of young Negroes. Two of the white youths suffered cuts. None of them was hurt seriously.

And in Charlottesville, Virginia...more than 300 white students, who formerly reported to the Venable Elementary School, began attending classes today, in fifteen private homes.

→

And here is a late development---

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, tonight asked the United States District Court to enjoin the Little Rock school board from leasing any school property to a private corporation.

~~formerly reported to the Venable Elementary School~~ began attending classes ~~today in 15 private homes.~~

Chrysler and General Motors were hit by more scattered local strikes today...after the expected settlement with Chrysler last night failed to materialize. The auto workers union is now turning its main attention in negotiating a contract to G.M.

Archbishop Meyer of Milwaukee today was named by Pope Pius to head the Chicago archdiocese of the Roman Catholic Church. He succeeds the late Samuel Cardinal Stritch.

And this afternoon...in the America's Cup race...the American yacht Columbia ~~against defeated~~ the British contender to make it two wins for the United States. The Columbia beat the Sceptre today by about two miles.

Edward R. Murrow: September 24, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

It is typical of a red-hot crisis, like the one in the Formosa Strait, that the news about it should be confusing and contradictory. / If war is to be averted, the moves toward a settlement have to be made in secret. Leaders meet and there is much speculation about what they are saying. But what they say is not published, and it may be quite different from the speculation. Indeed, that is where the hope lies in the Formosa crisis, since much of the speculation has been reeking with belligerence.

Two sets of talk have been going on simultaneously, in Warsaw and Taipeh. What is said in one, bears on what is said in the other. / If, for example, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek should have told Admiral Felt in Taipeh yesterday that he was going to bomb the batteries that are shelling the offshore islands whether the United States sanctioned it or not, that would weaken any proposal Ambassador Beam might make in Warsaw about de-militarizing the islands. / And if Ambassador Wang were echoing in Warsaw Khrushchev's demand , in his letter to Eisenhower, that we withdraw our strength from Formosa now, that would end our hope for the negotiations. / We would rush more strength to the Far East, and encourage Chiang to expect us to act.

But quite probably neither Chiang nor Wang made such statements. Those in a position to know what Chiang said believe that he has been properly co-operative and moderate in his private communications to us. ~~It is true that his Foreign Minister called in our Ambassador in Taipeh and warned him that unless the blockade of the offshore islands was broken, the Nationalist forces would have to attack the shore batteries. However, even this warning did not carry a deadline. Unoficially something was said about two weeks. And two weeks on the timetable of a crisis is a lot of time.~~

There are men in the Chiang regime who are not moderate, and who see no point in giving us a veto over Nationalist air attack on the shore batteries. They know we are committed by treaty to support them. They think that Chiang has only to appear on the mainland with force to produce a revolution that would overthrow the Communist dictatorship. But the most influential men in Chaing's regime are not so extravagant, and favor the acceptance of American leadership and advice.

Joseph Alsop of the New York Herald Tribune, now in Formosa, warns that it is "most unlikely" that we could repeat the success of inducing the Nationalists to evacuate the islands as we did in the case of the Tachen Islands. But in Washington, those who know what Chiang is saying have the impression that he can be trusted not to involve us in war without our consent.

It can be said on excellent authority that our policy rules out any attempt to break the blockade of the islands by aerial attack in the near future. It is vigorously denied that we told the Chinese Communists that the land batteries would be bombed, by us or the Nationalists, if they did not accept a cease-fire. Our policy is still to relieve the blockade, but to do it in ways short of bombing the land batteries. A number of ways still remain to be developed.

Two statements about policy have been made that may be more indicative of the present situation than most of the speculation. One is Washington's decision to take the crisis to the United Nations Assembly if the Warsaw talks fail. It is stated that we will do this in about a month. The mention of a month is particularly encouraging. A crisis that has a month to run is not out of hand.

The other statement was made yesterday by India's Krishna Menon in yesterday's Assembly debate. He recalled his own warning in 1950, received from Chinese Communist sources, that Red China would enter the Korean War if MacArthur advanced toward the Yalu. He then gave another message. He assured the Assembly that Communist China wants a peaceful settlement of the Formosa crisis, but would like the talks in Warsaw to be replaced by negotiations on the Foreign Minister level. It can be reported that a meeting between Mr. Dulles and Chou En-Lai was once considered, and that Mr. Dulles rejected it. He may have thought it came too close to the recognition of the Peiping Government. But Mr. Dulles is now preparing the American case to lay before the United Nations -- and the American people as well. He would weaken it seriously if it were to be shown that he refused to sit down with Communist China's Foreign Minister, after having been urged to do so. For there is no moral or legal difference between such talks and negotiations between Ambassadors.

At any rate, the emphasis on both sides appears to be on keeping up the talks. And that is something of an improvement in the situation over what it looked to be a few days ago.

Back in a moment. —
Just a word from George Bryan about the weather.

Word for Today

There appears to be a disposition...on both sides...to keep talks going in the Formosa dispute. It was Sertorius, who said a long time ago, "Perseverence is more efficacious than violence...and many things which cannot be overcome when they stand together, yield themselves up when taken little by little."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Lebanese government tonight imposed a total curfew on Beirut... after a day of fighting between Christians and Moslems in which 19 persons are said to have died. Between 50 and 60 persons are reported wounded. The violence broke out after the Christian Falangists called a general strike to protest the kidnaping of a Falangist editor. The Falangist Party also is alarmed over reports that the new president of Lebanon, General Chehab, may choose a Moslem rebel leader as premier. Five hours after the fighting statted, the Lebanese Army announced...over loudspeakers...that any civilian seen carrying firearms would be shot on sight. U.S. Marines reinforced their guard at the American Embassy.... and set up new strongpoints along their lines of communication. American civilians were instructed to stay off the streets. After these steps were taken, the disorders died down.

The Chinese Nationalist Defense Ministry claims 10 Communist jets shot down today over the Formosa Strait. Two other Communist planes probably were destroyed. And the Nationalists say that all of their aircraft returned safely to base. It was the biggest air battle so far.

The Chinese Communist radio claims one Nationalist plane shot down during the day and another damaged. Peiping also charges that two American aircraft violated Communist China's air space today in the vicinity of Amoy. It says, "The Chinese government gives its 12th warning aginnst these U.S. military provocations."

Reporters were allowed to visit Quemoy today for the first time in more than a week. The Associated Press correspondent said that military installations on the island showed "surprisingly little damage," considering the artillery pounding it has taken in the past month. The supply situation did not appear critical.

Admiral Felt, commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific, said the supply situation is improving---more supplies reached the island today. Felt is quoted as saying, "We are not over-optimistic, but we are also not pessimistic."

In Washington today, Secretary of Defense McElroy held a "routine" conference with President Eisenhower. Reporters asked McElroy...as he was leaving, about the rumor that this country is thinking of releasing the Nationalist Air Force to bomb the China mainland. McElroy said that is "something we would not wish for." He added, "Let's give the Warsaw talks a chance to succeed." The fourth meeting in Warsaw...between the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors... will be held tomorrow.

The Polish Communist leader...Wladyslaw Gomulka...today accused the Roman Catholic Church in Poland of working "both overtly and secretly" against the government. Gomulka said the church-state agreement...of two years ago...did not provide for the crucifixes and collective prayers which have appeared in school classrooms. The state recently ordered these removed, and Gomulka charged today that priests have incited opposition to this order. No one, he said, who attempts to disturb the work of the schools can count on leniency.

The bodies of six American airmen...whose plane crashed in Soviet Armenia on Sepetmber second...were turned over to United States authorities today at the Turkish border. There was still no word on the fate of 11 other crewmen who were aboard the aircraft.

The French government says it will adopt new measures to curb the wave of Algerian terrorism in France after the constitutional referendum on Sunday. And tonight the information minister, Jacques Soustelle, said that the power of the French Communist Party should be curbed.

A new test version of the Polaris missile was fired at Cape Canaveral today, then destroyed 43 seconds after launching when it headed the wrong way. Pieces of the rocket fell on land, but no one was hurt.

CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd reports from Washington that the United States and Italy have agreed in principle to estallish intermediate range ballistic millile bases on Italian soil by the end of the year. The I.R.B.M. being sent to Italy is the Army Jupiter. Great Britain already has received its furst Thor rocket developed by the Air Force.

In Lexington, Kentucky...the southern governors have concluded their annual conference...without taking an official stand on the school integration issue. Various resolutions were proposed; none was passed. A governor who asked not to be identified said, "We felt it would do more harm than good to have an open fight."

In Arkansas, a federal judge says he will rule tomorrow...on whether the Little Rock school board can lease public school property for private segregated operation without violating the law.

Three white boys in Little Rock charged today that they were beaten up by a group of young Negroes. Two of the white youths suffered cuts. None of them was hurt seriously.

And in Charlottesville, Virginia...more than 300 white students who formerly reported to the Venable Elementary School began attending classes today in fifteen private homes.

And here is a late development---

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People tonight asked the United States District Court to enjoin the Little Rock school b oard from leasing any school property to a private corporation.

Chrysler and General Motors were hit by more scattered local strikes today...after the expected settlement with Chrysler last night failed to materialize. The auto workers union is now turning its main attention in negotiating a contract to G.M.

Archbishop Meyer of Milwaukee today was named by Pope Pius to head the Chicago archidiocese of the Roman Catholic Church. He succeeds the late Samuel Cardinal Stritch.

And this afternoon,..in the America's Cup race...the American yacht Columbia again defeated the British contender to make it two wins for the United States. The Columbia beat the Sceptre today by about two miles.

It is typical of a red-hot crisis, like the one in the Formosa Strait that the news about it should be confusing and contradictory. If war is to be averted, the moves toward a settlement have to be made in secret. Leaders meet and there is much speculation about what they are saying. But what they say is not published, and it may be quite different from the speculation. Indeed, that is where the hope lies in the Formosa crisis, since much of the speculation has been reeking with belligerence.

Two sets of talk have been going on simultaneously, in Warsaw and Taipeh. What is said in one, bears on what is said in the other. If, for example, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek should have told Admiral Felt in Taipeh yesterday that he was going to bomb the batteries that are shelling the offshore islands whether theUnited States sanctioned it or not, that would weaken any proposal Ambassador Beam might make in Warsaw about de-militarizing the islands. And if Ambassador Wang were echoing in Warsaw Khrushchev's demand, in his letter to Eisenhower, that we withdraw our strength from Formosa now, that would end our hope for the negotiations. We would rush more strength to the Far East, and encourage Chiang to expect us to act.

But quite probably neither Chiang nor Wang made such statements. Those in a position to know what Chiang said believe that he has been properly co-operative and moderate in his private communications to us.

There are men in the Chiang regime who are not moderate, and who see no point in giving us a veto over Nationalist air attack on the shore batteries. They know we are committed by treaty to support them. They think that Chiang has only to appear on the mainland with force to produce a revolution that would overthrow the Communist dictatorship. But the most influential men in Chiang's regime are not so extravagant, and favor the acceptance of American leadership and advice.

Joseph Alsop of the New York Herald Tribune, now in Formosa, warns that it is "most unlikely" that we could repeat the success of inducing the Nationalists to evacuate the islands as we did in the case of the Tachen Islands. But in Washington, those who know what Chiang is saying have the impression that he can be trusted not to involve us in war without our consent.

It can be said on excellent authority that our policy rules out any attempt to break the blockade of the islands by aerial attack in the near future. It is vigorously denied that we told the Chinese Communists that the land batteries would be bombed, by us or the Nationalists, if they did not accept a cease-fire. Our policy is still to relieve the blockade, but to do it in ways short of bombing the land batteries. A number of ways still remain to be developed.

Two statements about policy have been made that may be more indicative of the present situation than most of the speculation. One is Washington's decision to take the crisis to the United Nations Assembly if the Warsaw talks fail. It is stated that we will do this in about a month. The mention of a month is particularly encouraging. A crisis that has a month to run is not out of hand.

The other statement was made yesterday by India's Krishna Menon in yesterday's Assembly debate. He recalled his own warning in 1950, received from Chinese Communist sources, that Red China would enter the Korean War if MacArthur advanced toward the Yalu. He then gave another message. He assured the Assembly that Communist China wants a peaceful settlement of the Formosa crisis, but would like the talks in Warsaw to be replaced by negotiations on the Foreign Minister level. It can be reported that a meeting between Mr. Dulles and Chou En-Lai was once considered, and that Mr. Dulles rejected it. He may have thought it came too close to the recognition: of the Peiping government. But Mr. Dulles is now preparing the American case to lay before the United Nations - and the American people as well. He would weaken it seriously if it were to be shown that he refused to sit down with Communist China's Foreign Minister, after having been urged to do so. For there is no moral or legal difference between such talks and negotiations between ambassadors.

At any rate, the emphasis on both sides appears to be on keeping up the talks. And that is something of an improvement in the situation over what it looked to be a few days ago.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: There appears to be a dispostion...on both sides...to keep talks going in the Formosa dispute at Warsaw and later at the U.N. It was Sertorius, who said a long time ago, "Perseverence is more efficacious than violence...and many things which cannot be overcome when they stand together yield themselves up when taken little by little."

Goodnight and good luck!

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles will make a major speech tonight...restating our policy in the Formosa dispute. The text has been released, and what Mr. Dulles will say is as follows: The Chinese Communists are challenging the basic principle of peace, that armed force should not be used for aggression. Admittedly, Quemoy does not constitute an "ideal" defense position, but there are "other facts to which we cannot be blind." Berlin, at the time of the Russian blockade, was not defensible either. "If we are to show indecision, or weakness, in the face of this challenge, we would merely confirm the leaders of Communism in their hope that...by threatening anywhere around them...they can compel surrender." If the Chinese Communists push further in a military way, United States forces may be used "more actively." We will not retreat in the face of armed force, but our position otherwise is "flexible." (I should like to examine the Dulles speech further in a few minutes).

In the United Nations today, Britain joined the United States in calling for a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the General Assembly that Britain hoped the Chinese Nationalists...as well as Communists...would "abstain from military activities." He recalled that Dulles...in addressing the Assembly last week...had spoken of a cease-fire with "equitable conditions".

~~Lloyd said, "The government of the United Kingdom support the United States government in their wish for a peaceful settlement." His emphasis was on the "conciliatory approach." He said nothing of backing up the United States by military means.~~

French Foreign Minister Couve De Murville also argued in the General Assembly against the use of force. France, he noted, has no formal obligation in the Far East. Couve De Murville said that if the Warsaw talks fail, it would be the duty of the United Nations to seek a solution.

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors met in Warsaw today for the fourth time. Another conference was scheduled for next Tuesday. Neither ambassador would comment on the results of today's meeting...which again lasted one hour and forty-five minutes. The United States, presumably, pressed its demand for a cease-fire.

→

The Soviet government newspaper Izvestia charged today that the United States...in demanding a cease-fire...was evading "the really important issue---namely, the withdrawal of American troops from the Formosa area." And the party newspaper Pravda said the day was "inexorably approaching" when Communist China would be admitted to the United Nations.

Red China today again accused the United States of violating its territory with warships and planes. Peiping radio said, "The Chinese government hereby gives its 13th warning against these serious U.S. military provocations."

The Communists bombarded the Quemoy island complex today for the thirty-second time in 34 days. ~~In one 10-minute period, the Communists fired 12-hundred rounds. In other words, about two shells a second.~~

There was another airdrop of supplies to Quemoy today but no convoy arrived by sea. The Nationalists attribute this to bad weather. The chief American adviser on Quemoy...Colonel Douglas Lane...said today that although the supply situation is improving, "there is still room for worry."

British Prime Minister Macmillan said tonight that his government "is willing to secure a settlement of the Formosa dispute by diplomatic negotiation." The United States, he said, has "neither sought nor received promises of military support from us in the Formosa area." Macmillan made his statement after conferring for two hours with leaders of the British Trade Unions.

Senator Kerr of Oklahoma said today that he has found...among the people he has talked to..."a strong undercurrent of uneasiness" about President Eisenhower's handling of the Formosa situation. Kerr is a member of the Senate Democratic Policy Committee. He said that, in his judgment, foreign policy will have an important bearing on the elections in November.

The White House says that President Eisenhower will take an active part in the congressional campaign. It was announced today that he will make political speeches next month in Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco. News Secretary Hagerty indicated that Mr. Eisenhower would make other appearances. The schedule is still being worked out.

President Eisenhower said today that the closing of public schools in Virginia and Arkansas could have "disastrous consequences". The President said that he "deeply regretted" the action taken by those two states, because of the integration orders issued by the Federal Courts. / Mr. Eisenhower said this in a letter to Albert Rolston, of Charlottesville, Virginia. Mr. Rolston is chairman of a committee that is campaigning to keep the schools open, whether they are segregated or not.

In Arkansas today, U.S. District Judge John Miller declined to rule, on whether the Little Rock school board could lease the high schools there, and operate them...legally...on a private, segregated basis. / Judge Miller called this a constitutional question "beyond his jurisdiction", involving state law. / And he suggested it be decided by a three-judge court.

During the day, the Justice Department filed a brief in Judge Miller's court...calling the private school plan a "transparent sham", designed to circumvent the decisions of the Supreme Court.

A federal grand jury today indicted Richard Mack, former member of the Federal Communications Commission, on charges of conspiring to influence the awarding of a television channel. / Indicted with him, on the same charge, was Thurman Whiteside, a Miami attorney. / Mack resigned from the F.C.C. last March. He was accused...at that time...of accepting money from

→

Whiteside, in return for his vote to award Channel 10 in Miami to a subsidiary of National Airlines. / Mack calls the indictment "ridiculous". / Whiteside says the charges are a result of "Washington politics", that his innocence will be proven at any trial.

The Treasury Department announces that it will act next week, to raise some three and a half billion dollars in new cash. / It expects to do this by offering new Treasury notes, and special short-term securities, paying interest of between three and a quarter, and three and a half percent.

~~Treasury officials say they were forced to offer short-term securities, because of the recent decline in the government bond market.~~

In Lebanon today, the new prime minister...Rashid Karami...said that, henceforth, Lebanon will follow a neutralist policy. / He told reporters that the withdrawal of American troops was of "the first importance".

United Press International...quoting informed sources...says the United States has agreed to pull its forces out of Lebanon by the middle of October. There was almost no fighting in Beirut today, between Christian and Moslem extremists.

Hurricane Helene...with top winds of 90 miles an hour...is still moving slowly toward the southeastern coast of the United States. And the → Weather Bureau says its eventual path remains uncertain. It is now about 400 miles east of St. Augustine, Florida. About 1-thousand miles behind, Ilsa also has become a hurricane, with winds of up to 75 miles an hour. It's about 380 miles east of San Juan.

And with a fresh breeze today...off Newport, Rhode Island... the American yacht Columbia again defeated the British challenger, making it three victories in a row. An American win tomorrow would end the series.

Edward R. Murrow: September 25, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

What Mr. Dulles will say on the Formosa crisis in his New York speech tonight can be combed with all care, without turning up any clear change in United States policy that might usher in a relaxation of tensions, and so promote the search for peace. It is not a belligerent speech, neither was the one President Eisenhower made on September 11, of which it is a close copy. It is firm in the face of the Communist Chinese threat, backed by the Soviet Union, to drive the United States out of the Formosa area. And it stresses that the United States' position is otherwise "flexible." It re-states that in any peace negotiations we will not prejudice the rights of the Nationalists. Then it goes on to say that "as far as we are concerned", we would find acceptable anything that was not surrender to force and which eliminated features that might be called provocative or, as President Eisenhower called them, "thorns in the side of peace". The undertaking to be flexible, it should be noticed, hangs on the phrase..."as far as we are concerned." It is not a guarantee that the Chinese Nationalists would accept what we accept.

The thorn in the side of peace is the heavy Nationalist garrison on the offshore islands and the Communist attack on the islands. If this is to be eliminated, the islands will have to be de-militarized. This we are reported to have proposed in Warsaw, to be carried through in stages, but leaving the Nationalist sovereignty unimpaired. The proposal has been reported to have infuriated the Communists, and brought on the stiffer terms that we get out of the whole Formosa area altogether.

Mr. Dulles recalls in his speech that the Communists had tried to take the offshore islands in October 1949 and had landed troops there which the Nationalists threw off. Ever since, the Nationalists have been in possession, and he seems to be trying to justify President Eisenhower's rating of the islands as being as important as Berlin. The significance of Quemoy and Matsu was comparable for the Republic of China with that of Berlin to the West. This time he does not imply they had the same importance for us. But he does argue that since the Communists themselves link the islands with Formosa in their claims, the defense of the islands and Formosa is indivisible, taking into account all factors, moral and material. And he repeats the President's statement that United States forces may be used more actively if the Chinese Communists push a military effort further which they themselves have proclaimed as having Formosa as its goal.

He admits that what the Communists probably hope is that by capturing the islands they can quickly take over Formosa by a subversive coup. But he noted that they announce they will take it, if need be by open force, and that the Soviet Union has offered its help.

Mr. Dulles points out that by the terms of our defense treaty with the Republic of China, the Nationalists have the freedom to take action of an emergency character which is clearly an exercise of the inherent right of self-defense. He stresses that there has been no aggressive or offensive use of force by either the United States or the Republic of China. He compares this record with that of Red China and the Soviet Union, who also have a mutual aid treaty. Under it, the Soviet Union has given vast amounts of military aid to Communist China, but instead of assuring that this shall not be used for aggressive purposes, the Soviet Union, he says, is abetting the use of force for the conquest of territory. The world may judge, he concludes, which has the responsibility for the danger of war.

Though there is to be another meeting of the Ambassadors in Warsaw, this has not raised hopes in Washington that negotiations are going better. It seems that neither side today was willing to assume the responsibility of suspending the talks. But no fresh start was made or suggested at today's meeting that makes another session necessary. Back in a moment — Gordon Brown —

Word for Today

It would seem imperative...in the Formosa situation...that there be some yielding of position on both sides. Edmund Burke said, "Nothing in progression can rest on its original plan. We might as well think of rocking a [redacted] grown man in a cradle." And Ellen Glasgow said, "The only difference between a rut and a grave is their dimensions."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles will make a major speech tonight... restating our policy in the Formosa dispute. The text has been released, and what Mr. Dulles will say is as follows: The Chinese Communists are challenging the basic principle of peace that armed force should not be used for aggression. Admittedly, Quemoy does not constitute an "ideal" defense position, but there are "other facts to which we cannot be blind." Berlin, at the time of the Russian blockade, was not defensible either. "If we are to show indecision or weakness in the face of this challenge, we would merely confirm the leaders of Communism in their hope that...by threatening anywhere around them...they can compel surrender." If the Chinese Communists push further in a military way, United States forces may be used "more actively." We will not retreat in the face of armed force, but our position otherwise is "flexible." (I should like to examine the Dulles speech further in a few minutes.)

In the United Nations today, Britain joined the United States in calling for a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the General Assembly that Britiin hoped the Chinese Nationalists...as well as Communists...would "abstain from military activities." He recalled that Dulles in addressing the Assembly last week...had spoken of a cease-fire with "equitable conditions."

French Foreign Minister Couve De Murville also argued in the General Assembly against the use of force. France, he noted, has no formal obligation in the Far East. Couve De Murville said that if the Warsaw talks fail, it would be the duty of the United Nations to seek a solution.

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors met in Warsaw today for the fourth time. Another conference was scheduled for next Tuesday. Neither ambassador would comment on the results of today's meeting...which again lasted one hour and forty-five minutes. The United States presumably pressed its demand for a cease-fire.

Red China today again accused the United States of violating its territory with warships and planes. Peiping radio said, "The Chinese government hereby gives its 13th warning against these serious U.S. military provocations."

The Communists bombarded the Quemoy island complex today for the thirty-second tmme in 34 days.

There was another airdrop of supplies to Quemoy today but no convoy arrived by sea. The Nationalists attribute this to bad weather. The chief American adviser on Quemoy...Colonel Douglas Lane...said today that although the supply situation is improving, "there is still room for worry."

British Prime Minister Macmillan said tonight that his government "is willing to secure a settlement of the Formosa dispute by diplomatic negotiation." The United States, he said, has "neither sought nor received promises of military support from us in the Formosa area." Macmillan made his statement after conferring for two hours with leaders of the British Trade Unions.

The White House says that President Eisenhower will take an active part in the congressional campaign. It was announced today that he will make political sPeeches next month in Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco. News Secretary Hagerty indicated that Mr. Eisenhower would make other appearances. The schedule is still being worked out.

President Eisenhower said today that the closing of public schools in Virginia and Arkansas could have "disastrous consequences." The President said that he "deeply regretted" the action taken by those two states because of the integration orders issued by the Federal Courts. Mr. Eisenhower said this in a letter to Albert Rolston, of Charlottesville, Virginia. Mr. Rolston is chairman of a committee that is campaigning to keep the schools open whether they are segregated or not.

In Arkansas today, U.S. District Judge John Miller declined to rule on whether the Little Rock school board could lease the high schools there and operate them...legally...on a private, segregated basis. Judge Miller called this a constitutional question "beyond his jurisdiction" involving state law. And he suggested it be decided by a three-judge court.

During the day, the Justice Department filed a brief in Judge Miller's court...calling the private school plan a "transparent sham," designed to circumvent the decisions of the Supreme Court.

A federal grand jury today indicted Richard Mack, former member of the Federal Communications Commission on charges of conspiring to influence the awarding of a television channel. Indicted with him on the same charge was Thurman Whiteside, a Miami attorney. Mack resigned from the F.C.C. last March. He was accused...at that time...of accepting money from Whiteside in return for his vote to award Channel 10 in Miami to a subsidiary of National Airlines. Mack calls the indictment "ridiculous". Whiteside says the charges are a result of "Washington politics", that his innocence will be proven at any trial.

The Treasury Department announces that it will act next week to raise some three and a half billion dollars in new cash. It expects to do this by offering new Treasury notes and special short-term securities paying interest of between three and a quarter and three and a half percent.

In Lebanon today, the new prime minister...Rashid Karami...said that henceforth Lebanon will follow a neutralist policy. He told reporters that the withdrawal of American troops was of "the first importance." United Press International...quoting informed sources...says the United States has agreed to pull its forces out of Lebanon by the middle of October. There was almost no fighting in Beirut today between Christian and Moslem extremists.

Hurricane Helene...with top winds of 90 miles an hour...is still moving slowly toward the southeastern coast of the United States. And the Weather Bureau says its eventual path remains uncertain. It is now abuut 400 miles east of St. Augustine, Florida. About 1-thousand miles behind, Ilsa also has become a hurricane, with winds of up to 75 miles an hour. It's about 380 miles east of San Juan.

And with a fresh breeze today...off Newport, Rhode Island...the American yacht Columbia again defeated the British challenger, making it three victories in a rew. An American win tomorrow would end the series.

What Mr. Dulles will say on the Formosa crisis in his New York speech tonight can be combed with all care, without turning up any clear change in United States policy that might usher in a relaxation of tensions, and so promote the search for peace. It is not a belligerent speech, neither was the one President Eisenhower made on September 11, of which it is a close copy. It is firm in the face of the Communist Chinese threat, backed by the Soviet Union, to drive the United States out of the Formosa area. And it stresses that the United States' position is otherwise flexible. It re-states that in any peace negotiations we will not prejudice the rights of the Nationalists. Then it goes on to say that "as far as we are concerned" we would find acceptable anything that was not surrender to force and which eliminated features that might be called provocative or, as President Eisenhower called them, "thorns in the side of peace." The undertaking to be flexible, it should be noticed, hangs on the phrase..."as far as we are concerned." It is not a guarantee that the Chinese Nationalists would accept what we accept.

The thorn in the side of peace is the heavy Nationalist garrison on the offshore islands and the Communist attack on the islands. If this is to be eliminated, the islands will have to be de-militarized. This we are reported to have proposed in Warsaw, to be carried through in stages, but leaving the Nationalist sovereignty unimpared. The proposal has been reported to have infuriated the Communists, and brought on the stiffer terms that we get out of the whole Formosa area altogether.

Mr. Dulles recalls in his speech that the Communists had tried to take the offshore islandsin October 1949 and had landed troops there which the Nationalists threw off. Ever since, the Nationalists have been in possession and he seems to be trying to justify Preisdent Eisenhower's rating of the islands as being as important as Berlin. The significance of Quemoy and Matsu was comparable for the Republic of China with that of Berlin to the West. This time he does not imply they had the same importance for us. But he does argue that since the Communists themselves link the islands with Formosa in their claims, the defense of the islands and Formosa is indivisible, taking into account all factors, moral and material.

Mr. Dulles admits that what the Communists probably hope is that by capturing the islands they can quickly take over Formosa by a subversive coup. But he noted that they announce they will take it, if need be by open force, and that the Soviet Union has offered its help.

Mr. Dulles points out that by the terms of our defense treaty with the Republic of China, the Nationalists have the freedom to take action of an emergency character which is clearly an exercise of the inherent right of self-defense. He stresses that there has been no aggressive or offensive use of force by either the United States or the Republic of China. He compares this record with that of Red China and the Soviet Union, who also have a mutual aid treaty. Under it, the Soviet Union has given vast amounts of military aid to Communist China, but instead of assuring that this shall not be used for aggressive purposes, the Soviet Union, he says, is abetting the use of force for the conquest of territory. The world may judge, he concludes, which has the responsibility for the danger of war.

Though there is to be another meeting of the ambassadors in Warsaw, this has not raised hopes in Washington that negotiations are going better. It seems that neither side today was willing to assume the responsibility of suspending the talks. But no fresh start was made or suggested at today's meeting that makes another session necessary.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

MURROW: It would seem imperative...in the Formosa situation...that there be some yielding of position on both sides. Edmund Burke said, "Nothing in progression can rest on its original plan. We might as well think of rocking a grown man in a cradle." And Ellen Glasgow said, "The only difference between a rut and a grave is their dimensions."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Sept. 26, 1958

This is the news:

Emergency warnings for Hurricane Helene are now displayed from Savannah, Georgia, to Cape Fear, North Carolina. The "eye" of the hurricane is 140 miles southeast of Charleston and moving speadily northwest at 12 miles an hour. Peak winds near the center of the hurricane range from 90 to 125 miles an hour. The Weather Bureau says, "It cannot be too strongly emphasized that this is a very dangerous hurricane."

It warns that tides...from Cape Fear, North Carolina, to Beaufort, South Carolina...may rise during the night to a height 7 to 10 feet above normal, perhaps higher. Winds along that section of the coast should begin rising within the next few hours...and become destructive with dangerously high tides by 10 o'clock tonight, Eastern Standard Time. Hurricane winds are expected to reach the coast around midnight. The weather bureau stresses that all island, beach and waterfront areas must be completely evacuated, if loss of life is to be avoided. Again, this area to which the weather bureau refers is that along the Atlantic coast, from Savannah to Cape Fear. Hurricane watch warnings are displayed from south of Cape Hatteras to Cape Fear.

The other hurricane...Ilsa...is about 300 miles northeast of San Juan, Puerto Rico. And it is moving toward the northwest at 10 miles an hour. Ilsa has top winds estimated at 115 miles an hour. Ships in its path are warned to exercise extreme caution.

In the Pacific, typhoon Ida has struck Japan...killing at least 80 persons. Ninety thousand persons in the Tokyo area are reported homeless. A late dispatch from Tokyo says that the full extent of disaster is not yet known.

There has been a coup d'etat in Burma. The Army has seized power, and Premier U Nu announced tonight that he will resign next month in favor of the commander of the Burmese armed forces. New general elections are to be held by the end of next April. They had been scheduled for November. The reason for the Army coup is not entirely clear. The action may have been designed to keep the government from coming under Communist control.

But the whole situation is obscure.

In Lebanon, the Falangist forces...which supported former President Chamoun...are demanding a greater voice in the new government. Thousands of Falangists demonstrated in Beirut today, shouting "death" to Rashid Karami, the former rebel leader who is now prime minister. Two civilians were killed in a street fight with security forces.

Chinese Nationalists have landed their first supplies on Quemoy since last Monday. One amphibious vehicle, with eight newsmen aboard, was swamped in the heavy surf...and six of them are missing. None of the correspondents involved was American.

Communist China charges that six American warships violated its territorial waters today. And Peiping has issued what it calls its "14th serious warning against such serious military provocations."

The Navy today fired another Vanguard rocket at Cape Canaveral. The launching was for the purpose of placing a 20-inch satellite in orbit, but...hours after the launching...it was still not known whether this was achieved. Some radio signals were heard. But Dr. John Hagen, director of the Vanguard project, says that "chances are" the satellite did not go into orbit.

President Eisenhower today visited old Fort Ligonier (LIG-O-NEAR), in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania../and said that Americans "should not listen to those who despair of the future." /America, he said, seeks only permanent peace---"a fortress of freedom, to which all mankind can repair."

Mr. Eisenhower spoke briefly at exercises commemorating the 200th anniversary of the fort, which was used in the French and Indian Wars.

The President today appointed Don Paarlberg, an assistant secretary of agriculture, to be his special economic adviser./ Paarlberg succeeds Dr. Gabriel Hauge, who is resigning to become a vice president of the Manufacturer's Trust Company of New York.

An agreement was signed in Washington today, to supply India with 238-million dollars' worth of surplus grain sorghums, corn, and wheat. The United States is to be repaid in Indian rupees.

Voting on the new French constitution began in Algeria today with troops guarding the polling stations against rebel attack. Despite the call... issued by the National Liberation Front...for a boycott of the referendum, Moslems are reported voting in large numbers. According to French authorities, the Algerian rebel leaders ordered a stepped up campaign of terrorism for the period a vote is being taken. (The voting in Algeria will last for three days. In metropolitan France, the referendum will be held only on Sunday). ~~The referendum amounts to a confidence test for~~ General DeGaulle. There is almost no question the constitution will be approved, and the chief interest lies, consequently, in the size of the vote. In a nationwide broadcast tonight, DeGaulle appealed for overwhelming approval "for the sake of France." The fate of France, he said, is at stake. The new constitution is designed to give France a more stable form of government. The role of the National Assembly would be diminished...and the authority of the President greatly increased. The President would appoint the premier...and he would have the power to dissolve Parliament. There was scattered violence today in both Algeria and France proper...but, so far, no major incident.

The United States today took a new lease on the America's Cup it won from Britain in 1851...and has kept ever since. The yacht Columbia outraced the British Sceptre again this afternoon to win the series in four straight.

The British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Derrick Heathcote-Amory, passed through New York today, after attending the two-week Commonwealth Economic Conference in Montreal. And he has done us the large favor of coming to this microphone.

Tape runs 5:20

Ends on cue: "Thank you very much, Mr. Heathcote-Amory."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

(pause) But, first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Mr. Heathcote-Amory used the phrase "more freedom of the flow of trade." And he indicated that if this "flow" were extended beyond the Iron Curtain, it would be a good thing. I am reminded of Cordell Hull, who said: "If nations cannot send goods across their borders, they eventually send soldiers." And one might add, or ballistic missiles.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, September 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: ... and he has done us the favor of coming to this microphone. Well Chancellor you spent in two weeks in Montreal at the Commonwealth Economics Conference. I wonder if I could ask you the impossible question to sum it up in two minutes.?

AMORY: Well, the thing that pleased/I think all of us - most about this conference was first of all, it was a very friendly intimate constructive one in which we were grappling with really practical problems. Throughout the conference the keynote was on expansion. Expansion of what I call the Commonwealth economy as part of an expanding free world economy. We tackled two problems, really: trade and development. And, when we came to trade, the note there was on how we could help one another to not only maintain but increase the level of inter-commonwealth trade and trade between the Commonwealth and the rest of the Free World, in ways which would not be restrictive. We tried to find ways in which ... if any of us got into temporary balance of payments ... or if it is anything else, we wouldn't have to fall back on restrictive measures that we would try to help one another to find ways of not cutting down the volume of that country's trade so as to help maintain the general level of trade. And, we were glad - the United Kingdom that we found ourselves strong enough economically now to take another quite important step in the removal of the restrictions we've had to have on since the war on dollar imports to the United Kingdom and to the colonies because we haven't got the dollars to pay for more goods.

MURROW: I seem to detect a note of shall we say disappointment in the communique about our restrictions on the import of lead and zinc. Is that correct?

AMORY: Well, it did come as a bit of ablow to us there, because we recognized the difficulities, but of course, that solution does rather run contrary to the kind of solution to these problems that we have been trying to find. And so I admit that it came as rather a blow to all of us just at this present time.

MURROW: Your going to improve the communications within the Commonwealth too aren't you?

AMORY: Well that seems a sensible move I think between us all, if we are going to have really efficient, practical close trade and commercial contact, we must have ... we must be able to get in touch with one another quickly.

On the development side, of course, the big problem is how we can help the under developed countries in the Commonwealth to continue to make progress in raising their standards of living. And again there, we were glad those of us who were in the position to do so, to be able to announce ways in which we can give further help - beyond what we're doing at present in ... in helping those countries over temporary difficulities that they may be in through a drop in the prices of the commodities they export and also to help them go steadily ahead with their development programs. And we came to some practical and useful decisions there and again in that direction we find all of us, that we were solidly behind the initiative that the President of the United States had recently taken in his letter to Secretary Anderson in suggesting an expansion of the resources of the international monetary fund and the International Bank. Those two institutions seem to us to have done first rate work in the last ten years and every representative present at this Commonwealth Conference agreed in principle that we should stand behind that idea and see whether we can find ways in which the resources of those two institutions can be expanded.

MURROW: Well then, in laymans language, would you say that what is required in the free world as a whole - not just in the commonwealth is more convertability and more fluidity - more freedom in the flow of trade?

AMORY: I think so. I think I'd say the two things that are wanted, more freedom, as much freedom and convertability of currency as we can possibly get, the removal of as many restrictions as we can find practical and secondly, to expand in any way we can the reserves, the financial reserves on which the trade of the whole free world is done.

MURROW: In the area of the removal of restrictions, would you advocate further removal of restrictions on trade behind the socalled Iron Curtain?

AMORY: Yes, I think so. Of course ... been some positive steps agreed on recently there. And again, I think we think it will be just senseful if we want to find ways penetrating and breaking down that Iron Curtain, one of the obvious ways is to let trade flow as freely as is sensable, between these countries and the free world and our experience of the limited amount of trade ~~is~~ that it does flow at present is that it does help and I believe it will help to bring a breadth of fresh air into those communities.

MURROW: Thank you very much Chancellor Heathcote-Amory. That was the British Chancellor ...

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Emergency warnings for Hurricane Helene are now displayed from Savannah,Georgia to Cape Fear, North Carolina. The "eye" of the hurricane is 140 miles southeast of Charleston and moving steadily northwest at 12 miles an hour. Peak winds near the center of the hurricane range from 90 to 125 miles an hour. The Weather Bureau says, "It cannot be too strongly emphasized that this is a very dangerous hurricane." It warns that tides...from Cape Fear, North Carolina, to Beaufort, South Carolina...may rise during the night to a height 7 to 10 feet above normal, perhaps higher. Winds along that section of the coast should begin rising within the next few hours...and become destructive with dangerously high tides by 10 o'clock tonight, Eastern Standard Time. Hurricane winds are expected to reach the coast around midnight. The weather bureau stresses that all island, beach and waterfront areas must be completely evacuated, if loss of life is to be avoided. Again, this area to which the weather bureau refers is that along the Atlantic coast, from Savannah to Cape Fear. Hurricane watch warnings are displayed from south of Cape Hatteras to Cape Fear.

The other hurricane...Ilsa...is about 300 miles northeast of San Juan, Puerto Rico. And it is moving toward the northwest at 10 miles an hour. Ilsa has top winds estimated at 115 miles an hour. Ships in its path are warned to exercise extreme caution.

In the Pacific, typhoon Ida has struck Japan,..killing at least 80 persons. Ninety thousand persons in the Tokyo area are reported homeless. A late dispatch from Tokyo says that the full extent of disaster is not yet known.

There has been a coup d-etat in Burma. The Army has seized power, and Premier U Nu announced tonight that he will resign next month in favor of the commander of the Burmese armed forces. New general elections are to be held by the end of next April. They had been scheduled for November. The reason for the Army coup is not entirely clear. The action may have been designed to keep the government from coming under Communist control. But the whole situation is obscure.

In Lebanon, the Falangist forces which...supported former President Chamoun...are demanding a greater voice in the new government. Thousands of Falangists demonstrated in Beirut today, shouting "death" to Rashid Karami, the former rebel leader who is now prime minister. Two civilians were killed in a street fight with security forces.

Chinese Nationalists have landed their first supplies on Quemoy since last Monday. One amphibious vehicle with eight newsmen aboard, was swamped in the heavy surf...and six of them are missing. None of the correspondents involved was American.

Communist China charges that six American warships violated its territorial waters today. And Peiping has issued what it calls its "14th serious warning against such serious military provocations."

The Navy today fired another Vanguard rocket at Cape Canaveral. The launching was for the purpose of placing a 20-inch satellite in orbit, but... hours after the launching...it was still not known whether this was achieved. Some radio signals were heard. But Dr. John Hagen, director of the Vanguard project, says that "chances are" the satellite did not go into orbit.

President Eisenhower today visited old Fort Ligonier, in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania...and said that Americans "should not listen to those who despair of the future." America, he said, seeks only permanent peace---"a fortress of freedom to which all mankind can repair." Mr. Eisenhower spoke briefly at exercises commemorating the 200th anniversary of the fort, which was used in the French and Indian Wars.

The President today appointed Don Paarlberg, an assistant secretary of agriculture, to be his special economic adviser. Paarlberg succeeds Dr. Gabriel Hauge, who is resigning to become a vice president of the Manufacturer's Trust Company of New York.

An agreement was signed in Washington today to supply India with 238 million dollars worth of surplus grain sorghums, corn, and wheat. The United States is to be repaid in Indian rupees.

Voting on the new French constitution began in Algeria today with troops guarding the polling stations against rebel attack. Despite the call... issued by the National Liberation Front...for a boycott of the referendum, Moslems are reported voting in large numbers. According to French authorities, the Algerian rebel leaders ordered a stepped up campaign of terrorism for the period a vote is being taken. (The voting in Algeria will last for three days. In metropolitan France, the referendum will be held only on Sunday.)

The United States today took a new lease on the Ameiica's Cup it won from Britain in 1851...and has kept ever since. The yacht Columbia outraced the British Sceptre again this afternoon to win the series in four straight.

British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Derrick Heathcote-Amory, passed through New York today, after attending the two-week Commonwealth Economic Conference in Montreal. And he has done us the large favor of coming to this microphone. Well, Chancellor, you spent two wekks in Montreal at the Commonwaalth Economics Conference. I wonder if I could ask you the impossible question to sum it up in two minutes?

AMORY: Well, the thing that pleased I think all of us - most about this conference was first of all, it was a very friendly, intimate, constructive one in which the keynote was on expansion. Expansion of what I call the Commonwealth economy as part of an expanding free world economy. We tackled two problems, really: trade and development. And, when we came to trade, the note was on how we could help one another to not only maintain but increase the level of inter-commonwealth trade and trade between the Commonwealth and the rest of the Free World, in ways which would not be restrictive. We tried to find ways in which...if any of us got into temporary balance of payments...or if it is anything else, we wouldn't have to fall back on restrictive measures that we would try to help one another to find ways of not cutting down the volume of that country's trade so as to help maintain the general level of trade. And, we were glad - the United Kingdom that we found ourselves strong enough economically now to take another quite important step in the removal of the restrictions we've had to have on since the war on dollar imports to the United Kingdom and to the colonies because we haven't got the dollars to pay for more goods.

MURROW: I seem to detect a note of shall we say disappointment in the communique about our restrictions on the import of lead and zinc. Is that correct?

AMORY: Well, if did come as a bit of a blow to us there, because we recognized the difficulties, but of course, that solution does rather run contrary to the kind of solution to these problems that we have been trying to find. And so I admit that it came as rather a blow to all of us just at this present time.

MURROW:You're going to improve the communications within the Commonwealth too, aren't you?

AMORY: Well that seems a sensible move I think between us all, if we are going to have really efficient, practical close trade and commercial contact, we must have... we must be able to get in touch with one another quickly.

On the development side, of course, the big problem is how we can help the under-developed countries in the Commonwealth to continue to make progress in raising their standards of living. And again there, we were glad those of us who were in the position to do so, to be able to announce ways in which we can give further help - beyond what we're doing at present in...in helping those countries over temporary difficulties that they may be in through a drop in the prices of the commodities they export and also to help them go steadily ahead with their development program. And we came to some practical and useful decisions there and again in that direction we find all of us, that we were solidly behind the initiative that the President of the United States had recently taken in his letter to Secretary Anderson in suggesting an expansion of the resources of the international monetary fund and the International Bank. Those two institutions seem to us to have done first-rate work in the last ten years and every representative present at this Commonwealth Conference agreed in principle that we should stand behind that idea and see whether we can find ways in which the resources of those two institutions can be expanded.

MURROW: Well, then in layman's language, would you say that what is required in the free world as a whole - not just in the commonwealth is more convertability and more fluidity - more freedom in the flow of trade?

AMORY: I think so. I think I'd say the two things that are wanted, more freedom, as much freedom and convertability of currency as we can possibly get, the removal of as many restrictions as we can find practical and secondly, to expand in any way we can the reserves, the financial reserves on which the trade of the whole free world is done.

MURROW: In the area of the removal of restrictions, would you advocate further removal of restrictions on trade behind the so-called Iron Curtain?

AMORY: Yes, I think so. Of course...been some positive steps agreed on recently there. And again, I think we think it will be just senseful if we want to find ways penetrating and breaking down that Iron Curtain, one of the obvious ways is to let trade flow as freely as is sensible, between those countries and the free world and our experience of the limited amount of trade that it does flow at present is that it does help and I believe it will help to bring a breath of fresh air into those communities.

MURROW: Thank you very much Chancellor Heathcote-Amory.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Mr. Heathcote-Amory used the phrase "more freedom of the flow of trade." And he indicated that if this "flow" were extended beyond the Iron Curtain, it would be a good thing. I am reminded of Cordell Hull, who said, "If nations cannot send goods across their borders, they eventually send soldiers." And one might add, or ballistic missiles.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon.,Sept. 29, 1958

This is the news:

The Supreme Court has declared...in a formal, 5-thousand-word opinion... that the constitutional rights of Negro students may not be nullified by a state "through evasive schemes for segregation." The unanimous opinion backs up the Supreme Court ruling...of September 12...that the Little Rock school board must proceed immediately with its integration program. The school board had requested a delay because of public opposition, opposition from the state, and the school board's avowed desire to preserve the public education system. Today's opinion...read by Chief Justice Warren.. credits the school board with acting in good faith. It concedes that the education of all students...white and Negro...will suffer in Little Rock, "if the conditions which prevailed last year are permitted to continue." But, says the court, "the constitutional rights of the Negro children are not to be sacrificed...or yielded...to the violence and disorder which have followed the actions of the governor and legislature. Law and order are not to be preserved by depriving the Negro children of these rights." In denouncing ~~them~~ "evasive" state schemes for circumventing integration, the opinion says, "State support of segregated schools through any arrangement cannot be squared with the Fourteenth Amendment's command that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." ~~It quotes Chief Justice Marshall as saying in a decision 41 years ago that 'if the legislatures of the several states, at will, annul the judgments of the courts of the United States and destroy the rights acquired under those judgments, the Constitution becomes a solemn mockery.'~~ And today's opinion adds: ~~"A governor who asserts a power to nullify a Federal Court order is similarly restrained."~~ ~~According to the opinion, there~~ may be instances where a district court would find it ~~justifiable~~ for not all qualified Negro students to be admitted. ~~In this, however, hostility to de-segregation would not be a relevant factor.~~ And the district court should make sure that arrangements ~~have been made by~~ the school authorities...pointing toward the earliest practicable completion of de-segregation.

→

→

On Saturday, Little Rock voted almost 3-to-1 against school integration. Governor Faubus had called the election as part of his plan to open the four closed high schools on a private, segregated basis. A private corporation was set up to lease the high school buildings from the school board. And early today, the property was leased to the private school corporation as planned.

Now the plan is uncertain. /First came the Supreme Court opinion against it...and then an announcement by the Circuit Court of Appeals in Omaha. /Judge Harvey Johnsen of the Circuit Court said the court was issuing a temporary restraining order...barring the Little Rock school board from trahsferring its property to the corporation. /The restraining order will extend until next Monday, when there will be a hearing on a temporary injunction. /The injunction is being sought by the Natipnal Association for the Advancement of Colored People...which pleaded its case this morning before the Circuit Court. /The temporary restraining order was announced by Judge Johnsen, but Judge Joseph Woodrough also SAT with him on the bench.

There is some confusion in Little Rock on what to do next. / The head of the private school corporation...Dr. Raney...says he still plans to open the schools tomorrow on a segregated basis. / ~~State Attorney General Bruce Bennett points out that the lease has already been signed...but wants to study the text of the Circuit Court order.~~ Wayne Upton, president of the school board, says the school plan "certainly" will have to be reconsidered.

Governor Faubus said, "I haven't surrendered. I am not ready to surrender, and I don't intend to surrender."

In Alabama, Governor Folsom today commuted to life imprisonment the death sentence of Jimmy Wilson, a Negro convicted of robbing ~~a white woman of~~ one dollar and 95 cents. / Folsom said he had no authority to reduce the sentence to less than life imprisonment. / ~~Neither, he said, does the Alabama Supreme Court. In 15 years, Wilson will be eligible to come up for parole.~~

Communist China charged today that Nationalist aircraft are being equipped with American guided missiles. / The Peiping radio said one of its jets was shot down last Wednesday a "Sidewinder" missile, fired from a Nationalist plane. The "Sidewinder" is an air-to-air missile developed by the Navy. / There have been ~~reports~~ stories that the missile had been placed in

→

Nationalist hands. / But this is the first report of it to come from the Chinese Communists. / ~~There has been no official announcement of its use, either from Taipei in Washington or in Taipei.~~ / It was last Wednesday that ~~the Nationalists claimed 10 Communist planes shot down over the Formosa~~ Strait.

No supplies reached Quemoy by sea today, because of rough weather. But the airdrop continued. / CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reports from Taipei that Americans "will virtually take over" the supplying of Quemoy, in less than two weeks. / The operation, Kalischer says, will combine the services of the United States Air Force and Navy, and civilian pilots. Many of the civilian pilots will be American. The Air Force reportedly is bringing in twelve "Flying Boxcars", each with a capacity of five tons. And airdrops, according to present plans, will operate 24 hours a day. Kalishher says he got this information from "a high American military source."

Chiang Kai-shek told a news conference today, that (American ground forces will) ~~[illegible]~~ not be asked to fight in defense of the offshore islands. / He said the Nationalist Air Force "reserves the right" to bomb (the Communist mainland, ~~[illegible]~~) with or without American apprpval. But the time for bombing the mainland, he said, has not arrived. / He said, "I am certain that when the crucial moment arrives, the United States will not fall back on its promises." / Chiang said he based this confidence on the mutual defense treaty and "humanitarian grounds."

→

~~In England, the British Labour Party today demanded the relinquishing of Quemoy and Matsu to the Chinese Communists. / The Labour Party, in annual convention, passed a resolution to this effect.~~

French Premier DeGaulle is acting at once under the mandate given him yesterday by the overwhelming approval of his new constitution. / The French Cabinet will meet tomorrow to draw up plans for new parliamentary elections. / And today DeGaulle served notice on the West African territory of French Guinea that it is henceforth "separated" from France. French Guinea is the only French territory that voted against the new French constitution. / In Metropolitan France, 4 out of 5 voters cast their ballots for the constitution. / And, in Algeria, the "yes" vote was 96 percent, despite the threats made to Moslems by the National Liberation Front. French Guinea is getting its independence, but because it voted "no", France is cancelling its agreements for economic aid.

In Washington, the Labor Department reports a drop in most of the nation's major industrial centers in the past month. Nevertheless, there is what the department calls "a substantial labor surplus" in 89 key production centers.

And starting pitchers have been named for the World Series, which opens on Wednesday. Whitey Ford for the Yankees and Warren Spahn for the Milwaukee Braves.

Edward R. Murrow: September 29, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Last week, signs multiplied that the public is disturbed over the Administration's policy of defending the offshore islands in the Formosa Strait. / Washington correspondents reported that Congressional mail was running from three to four to one against the policy. The mail was light, but it appeared to be spontaneous. That is, it showed no evidence of being the result of organized pressure.

The State Department has a special branch which handles all incoming mail from the public. By the end of last week it had received about five thousand letters, of which eighty percent were adverse to the Quemoy policy, on one ground or another. / This information was published in the New York Times. / This branch has consistently answered questions about the run of the Department's mail. / Usually the mail is favorable, though it was adverse on the subject of foreign aid. Until now, nobody has said anything about the propriety of giving out such information. / This time, however, it drew an angry rebuke from Vice President Nixon, who said he was shocked by "a patent and deliberate effort of a State Department subordinate to undercut the Secretary of State and sabotage his policy."

Mr. Nixon went on to decry any effort to base foreign policy on the weight of the mail, saying it is the duty of a leader to lead public opinion and not to follow it. That is something few would disagree with. The weight of the mail may be always interesting and sometimes significant, but it cannot be decisive in forming policy. Mr. Nixon pointed out that policy "cannot be based on what random letters show the people will support, in the light of minimum and often misleading information available to them." It may be well to add that if the information about foreign policy is misleading or scanty, the fault is not with the public, which judges by what it is told.

Mr. Nixon assumed that a subordinate in the State Department planted the story in the New York Times to sabotage Mr. Dulles's policy. James Reston, head of the Times' Washington Bureau discloses today that the information was requested in a routine way on the initiative of the bureau, and was given out in a routine way, as on previous occasions. That being so, Mr. Nixon's statement falls into two parts. One is the truism that policy cannot be based exclusively on public opinion. The other really deals with the propriety of telling when the mail is running against the Administration.

Had Mr. Nixon been correct about the report being planted by a sabotaging subordinate, his anger would have been justified. But since that was not the case, the question is simply whether it is the duty of Administration officials to suppress bad news about a public mail response. No one doubts that the Administration has a right to tell when the mail is favorable. That is done repeatedly.

Mr. Nixon has not always taken such a dim view of letters and telegrams. During the 1952 campaign, while explaining his expense fund, he urged his viewers to wire and write the Republican National Committee their opinion as to whether he should stay on the ticket or get off. But the important phrase in Mr. Nixon's latest statement is where he implies that the public is receiving "minimum and often misleading information." It would appear on the record that all avenues of communication have been open to the President and to Mr. Dulles, to explain and expound the Administration's policy with regard to the offshore islands.

The State Department is taking no disciplinary action against the employee who gave out the information. Mr. Nixon says a great number of the letters were inspired - were mimeographed. The State Department says the mail has been surprisingly small when compared to that received during other crises.

One thing is clear from this whole episode. There is no overwhelming and informed support for the Quemoy policy in this country. A policy that does not convince a large number of our own people - not to mention our Allies -- may not be wrong on that account. But it can bear re-examination to make sure beyond doubt that it is right.

Back in a moment.—

Just George Bryan Walker a word about the Walker

Word for Today

Public opinion may not always be right...but it is always powerful. Henry Ward Beecher said, "Public opinion is almost omnipotent."

Thomas Jefferson made another observation. "Error of opinion," he said, "may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." And certainly that is what we may reasonably hope for in this democracy today.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Supreme Court has declared...in a formal, 5-thousand-word opinion...that the constitutional rights of Negro students may not be nullified by a state "through evasive schemes for segregation." The unanimous opinion backs up the Supreme Court ruling...of September 12...that the Little Rock school board must proceed immediately with its integration program. Today's opinion...read by Chief Justice Warren...credits the school board with acting in good faith. It concedes that the education of all students...white and Negro will suffer in Little Rock, "if the conditions which prevailed last year are permitted to continue." But, says the court, "the constitutional rights of the Negro children are not to be sacrificed...or yielded...to the violence and disorder which have followed the actions of the governor and legislature. Law and order are not to be preserved by depriving the Negro children of these rights." In denouncing "evasive" state schemes for circumventing integration, the opinion says, "State support of segregated schools through any arrangement cannot be squared with the Fourteenth Amendment's command that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

On Saturday, Little Rock voted almost 3-to-1 against school integration. Governor Faubus had called the election as part of his plan to open the four closed high schools on a private, segregated basis. A private corporation was set up to lease the high school buildings from the school board. And early today, the property was leased to the private school corporation as planned.

Now the plan is uncertain. First came the Supreme Court opinion against it...and then an announcement by the Circuit Court of Appeals in Omaha. Judge Harvey Johnsen of the Circuit Court said the court was issuing a temporary restraining order...barring the Little Rock school board from transferring its property to the corporation. The restraining order will extend until next Monday, when there will be a hearing on a temporary injunction. The injunction is being sought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.. which pleaded its case this morning before the Circuit Court. The temporary restraining order was announced by Judge Johnsen, but Judge Joseph Woodrough also sat with him on the bench.

There is some confusion in Little Rock on what to do next. The head of the private school corporation...Dr. Raney...says he still plans to open the schools tomorrow on a segregated basis. Wayne Upton, president of the school board, says the school plan "certainly" will have to be reconsidered.

Governor Faubus said, "I haven't surrendered. I am not ready to surrender, and I don't intend to surrender."

In Alabama, Governor Folsom today commuted to life imprisonment the death sentence of Jimmy Wilson, a Negro convicted of robbing a white woman of one dollar and 95 cents. Folsom said he had no authority to reduce the sentence to less than life imprisonment.

Communist China charged today that Nationalist aircraft are being equipped with American guided missiles. The Peiping radio said one of its jets was shot down last Wednesday a "Sidewinder" missile, fired from a Nationalist plane. The "Sidewinder" is an air-to-air missile developed by the Navy. There have been stories that the missile had been placed in Nationalist hands. But this is the first report of it to come from the Chinese Communists.

No supplies reached Quemoy by sea today because of rough weather. But the airdrop continued. CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reports from Taipei that Americans "will virtually take over" the supplying of Quemoy in less than two weeks. The operation, Kalischer says, will combine the services of the United States Air Force and Navy and civilian pilots. Many of the civilian pilots will be American. The Air Force reportedly is bringing in twelve "Flying Boxcars," each with a capacity of five tons. And airdrops, according to present plans, will operate 24 hours a day. Kalischer says he got this information from "a high American military source."

Chiang Kai-shek told a news conference today that American ground forces will not be asked to fight in defense of the offshore islands. He said the Nationalist Air Force "reserves the right" to bomb the Communist mainland, with or without Americanapproval. But the time for bombing the mainland, he said, has not arrived. He said, "I am certain that when the crucial moment arrives, the United States will not fall back on its promises." Chiang said he based this confidence on the mutual defense treaty and "humanitarian grounds."

French Premier De Gaulle is acting at once under the mandate given him yesterday by the overwhelming approval of his new constitution. The French Cabinet will meet tomorrow to draw up plans for new parliamentary elections. And today De Gaulle served notice on the West African territory of French Guinea that it is henceforth "separated" from France. French Guinea is the only French territory that voted against the new French constitution. In Metropolitan France, four out of five voters cast their ballots for the constitution. And, in Algeria, the "yes" vote was 96 percent, despite the threats made to Moslems by the National Liberation Front. French Guinea is getting its independence, but because it voted "no", France is cancelling its agreements for economic aid.

In Washington, the Labor Department reports a drop in most of the nation's major industrial centers in the past month. Nevertheless, there is what the department calls "a substantial labor surplus" in 89 key production centers.

And starting pitchers have been named for the World Series, which opens on Wednesday. Whitey Ford for the Yankees and Warren Spahn for the Milwaukee Braves.

Last week, signs multiplied that the public is disturbed over the Administration's policy of defending the offshore islands in the Formosa Strait. Washington correspondents reported that Congressional mail was running from three to four to one against the policy. The mail was light, but it appeared to be spontaneous. That is, it showed no evidence of being the result of organized pressure.

The State Department has a special branch which handles all incoming mail from the public. By the end of last week it had received about five thousand letters, of which eighty percent were adverse to the Quemoy policy, on one ground or another. This information was published in the New York Times. This branch has consistently answered questions about the run of the Department's mail. Usually the mail is favorable, though it was adverse on the subject of foreign aid. Until now, nobody has said anything about the propriety of giving out such information. This time, however, it drew an angry rebuke from Vice President Nixon, who said he was shocked by "a patent and deliberate effort of a State Department subordinate to undercut the Secretary of State and sabotage his policy."

Mr. Nixon went on to decry any effort to base foreign policy on the weight of the mail, saying it is the duty of a leader to lead public opinion and not to follow it. That is something few would disagree with. The weight of the mail may be always interesting and sometimes significant, but it cannot be decisive in forming policy. Mr. Nixon pointed out that policy "cannot be based on what random letters show the people will support, in the light of minimum and often misleading information available to them." It may be well to add that if the information about foreign policy is misleading or scanty, the fault is not with the public, which judges by what it is told.

Mr. Nixon assumed that a subordinate in the State Department planted the story in the New York Times to sabotage Mr. Dulles's policy. James Reston, head of the Times' Washington Bureau discloses today that the information was requested in a routine way on the initiative of the bureau, and was given out in a routine way, as on previous occasions. That being so, Mr. Nixon's statement falls into two parts. One is the truism that policy cannot be based exclusively on public opinion. The other really deals with the propriety of telling when the mail is running against the Administration.

Had Mr. Nixon been correct about the report being planted by a sabotaging subordinate, his anger would have been justified. But since that was not the case, the question is simply whether it is the duty of Administration officials to suppress bad news about a public mail response. No one doubts that the Administration has a right to tell when the mail is favorable. That is done repeatedly.

Mr. Nixon has not always taken such a dim view of letters and telegrams. During the 1952 campaign, while explaining his expense fund, he urged his viewers to wire and write the Republican National Committee their opinion as to whether he should stay on the ticket or get off. But the important phrase in Mr. Nixon's latest statement is where he implies that the public is receiving "minimum and often misleading information." It would appear on the record that all avenues of communication have been open to the President and to Mr. Dulles, to explain and expound the Administration's policy with regard to the offshore islands.

The State Department is taking no disciplinary action against the employee who gave out the information. Mr. Nixon says a great number of the letters were inspired - were mimeographed. The State Department says the mail has been surprisingly small when compared to that received during other crises.

One thing is clear from this whole episode. There is no overwhelming and informed support for the Quemoy policy in this country. A policy that does not convince a large number of our own people - not to mention our Allies - may not be wrong on that account. But it can bear re-examination to make sure beyond doubt that it is right.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Public opinion may not always be right...but it is always powerful. Henry Ward Beecher said, "Public opinion is almost omnipotent." Thomas Jefferson made another observation. "Error of opinion," he said, "may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." And certainly that is what we may reasonably hope for in this democracy today.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Sept. 30, 1958

This is the news:

Russia today resumed its nuclear weapons tests. / The Atomic Energy Commission says two detonations were detected. / Both took place North of the Arctic Circle, and were of "moderate-to-high yield." / Moscow announced last March that it was suspending nuclear tests...and called on the United States and Britain to follow suit. / We offered to suspend tests for one year, starting the end of ~~this~~ next month...when talks on a permanent nuclear test ban are due to get under way. / Meanwhile, British and American testing has continued. | The State Department says tonight that the resumption of Soviet tests "seems to confirm the suspicion" that the Russian announcement of last March was "primarily a propaganda exercise." / Nevertheless, it says, the United States is ~~also~~ going ahead with its plans to suspend nuclear tests, as of October 31...~~xxx~~ unless there is more Soviet testing after that date.

~~[redacted]~~

Secretary Dulles said today that Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands should be reduced, if there is a dependable cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. /He was referring to islands close to the mainland like Quemoy. /Mr. Dulles told his news conference, "If there were a cease-fire which seemed to be reasonably dependable, I think it would be foolish to keep large forces on these islands." /~~And he said the cease-fire would have to be reciprocal because there would be no sense in asking the Communists to stop shooting unless the Nationalists did likewise.~~/ Dulles said that State Department subordinates who ~~xxxxxx~~ gave out figures on the number of letters RECEIVED ~~xxxxxxx~~ critical of Administration policy were "ill-advised". He would not say...with Vice President Nixon...that they had "sabotaged" that policy. "That," he said, "could be a matter of opinion." Dulles said if Red China should get the impression ~~that~~ our Formosa policy was about to be changed because of public opinion, it could have serious consequences." He confirmed that the United States has supplied the Nationalist Air Force with Sidewinder missiles. ~~They were delivered, he said, under the regular military aid program. And he implied that delivery of the missile, while the Warsaw talks were going on showed the United States~~ ~~Communist Premier Chou En-lai had changed.~~ (I should like to examine Mr. Dulles' remarks further in a few minutes).

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors conferred in Warsaw today for two hours and fifty minutes. They will meet again on Saturday.

President Eisenhower said today that there will be no "policy of appeasement" in the face of threats to the peace. At the same time, the President said he was confident Nationalist China shares our desire that the aggressive actions of Communist China will not lead to war "as a result of any failure on our part to entertain suggestions for a peaceful settlement." Mr. Eisenhower made the statement in accepting the credentials of the new Chinese Nationalist ambassador, George Yeh.

In a speech tonight in Los Angeles, Vice President Nixon said the real test of Administration policy is whether that policy has kept the peace with honor. "All the criticism in the world," he said, "cannot obscure this solid fact: This Administration got the United States out of one war. It has avoided other wars, and it has kept the peace without surrender of principle or territory."

Adlai Stevenson also spoke in Los Angeles tonight...and said the Eisenhower policy toward the offshore islands should be "reconsidered and restated without delay." Stevenson urged a cease-fire and the evacuation of Nationalist forces from Matsu and Quemoy. At the same time, he said, "we should make it clear that we will fight to defend Formosa." He said there should be a declaration by the United Nations...and all concerned...that the future of Formosa would be decided by its population "at a time, and under conditions, to be determined by the United Nations."

The four high schools in Little Rock remained closed today. / The schools were to have opened today on a segregated basis, under the operation of a private corporation. / The president of the corporation, Dr. T. C. Raney, issued a statement...accusing the Federal Government and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People of "sacrificing the educational opportunities of 4-thousand students to satisfy their consuming desire to mix the races." / The Supreme Court said yesterday...in a formal opinion...that neither direct opposition nor "evasive schemes" could nullify its decision that public school segregation is unconstitutional. / The Circuit Court of Appeals in Omaha also issued an order, restraining the private corporation from opening the schools on a segregated basis. / Governor Faubus said today that if this "injunctive action" is made permanent, "it will make our efforts more difficult but not at all impossible."

In Norfolk, Virginia, the city council today passed a resolution... calling for state operation of the six schools which have been closed in Norfolk.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold today released a report on his recent "peace mission" to the Middle East. / He said the United States and Britain had agreed...conditionally...to pull their forces out of Lebanon and Jordan by the end of October. The condition is that, in the meantime, there is no worsening of the situation. / Hammarskjold said he planned to station Pier Spinelli...a United Nations undersecretary... in the Jordanian capital of Amman as a United Nations representative, with liaison offices in Syria and Lebanon. It is too early, he said, to determine whether the Arab countries will live together as good neighbors, as they have promised.

President Eisenhower has named retired Lieutenant General Elwood Quesada, of the Air Force, to be head of the new federal aviation agency. It is a recess appointment. A formal nomination...subject to Senate confirmation...will go to Congress when it reconvenes. ~~The new agency was created by the last Congress in the interest of greater air safety. It will absorb the Civil Aeronautics Administration and take over some of the functions of the Civil Aeronautics Board. Quesada is serving at present as special assistant to the President on aviation matters. He is resigning his Air Force commission since the law requires the head of the new agency to be a civilian.~~

The Agriculture Department reports that the prices received by farmers for their products went up 2 percent in the month ending September 15th. This marks the end of a three-month decline in farm prices. Farming costs in the past month went up one-third of 1 percent.

AND The United Auto Workers Union and Chrysler are reported near agreement on a new contract. ~~After a marathon bargaining session with Chrysler, U.A.W. President Reuther has turned his main attention to General Motors. The union says it will strike General Motors, if a settlement is not reached by Thursday.~~

Edward R. Murrow: September 30, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles at his news conference today tried to sound conciliatory about the Formosa crisis and succeeded. Though he denied several times that the United States policy had changed, he said frankly that if there were any sign of "give" on the Communist side, it would change. He revealed that the United States had tried to dissuade the Nationalists from building up the defenses on the offshore islands so heavily, and then had acquiesced in their doing so, because of their strong feelings about it. He was unequivocal in saying that if a dependable cease fire were obtained, he would be in favor of the withdrawal of most of the Nationalist forces from the islands. He even said it would be "foolish" to keep them there under those circumstances. He said a cease fire need not be in writing, and that he would be satisfied with one that was de facto if it stuck.

Further, he did not reject the idea of a meeting with Chou En-Lai. Like the President, he said, he would go anywhere to see anybody if it would serve the cause of world peace. But he showed reluctance to give up talks on the ambassadorial level, which he thinks are safer than those on a higher level. Ambassadorial talks can be prolonged indefinitely, whereas talks on a higher level have to be brief, and must reach a climactic conclusion.

Mr. Dulles also agreed that a renunciation of force in the Formosa area has to be binding all around. As though he knew what Chinese Ambassador Tsiang would be saying today in the United Nations, he emphasized that the Nationalists will not get back to the mainland "under their own steam". The only circumstances he could foresee of their getting back, he said, was that they should be invited back by a government set up by a revolution somewhere on the mainland. / Mr. Tsiang told the Assembly that when the Chinese people rise in revolt as the Hungarians had done two years ago, and call for help, the Nationalists will fight side by side with them for their freedom. / "This", said Mr. Tsiang, "is our program of recovery of the mainland, no more and no less". Mr. Dulles went a significant step further in saying the invitation to the Nationalists must come from some government set up by the mainland revolutionaries. / This amounts to a repudiation of the Nationalists' claim to be the legitimate Government of China, and this may have far-reaching consequences in future developments, if or when negotiations get going over a Formosa settlement.

It gives a picture of the situation at present to report -- as this reporter is in a position to do - that the Chinese Communists are perhaps just as eager as we are for a cease fire, and have said in private that the instant there is a sign of reversing the build-up of Quemoy, and even just a beginning of the withdrawal of forces, the mainland guns will cease firing. That is how close the crisis is to a definite easement. / The Communists await an initiative on our side, we wait on theirs. / Neither side is yet ready to act first, but both sides want the shooting to stop.

This is a quite different situation than the one that obtained only a few days ago. / Mr. Dulles himself said today, that he felt there was "a slight tendency toward stabilization, and less likelihood of developments leading to war." He confirmed a report that the United States does not plan to take the Formosa crisis to the United Nations at this moment. / But this, he showed, is not because we are not conciliatory, but because the situation does not yet call for the move. If the level of military action should rise, he said, and the danger of general war appeared greater, then the crisis would have to be taken to the United Nations, which has the duty to preserve the peace.

The question remains whether the Chinese Nationalists will concur in any terms we agree to with the Communists. / Mr. Dulles was asked if he was telling the Nationalists about his present views. / We keep in pretty close touch, he said. / We express our views and they express theirs, and he did not imply that we accepted all of theirs, or they all of ours. But if it came down to a decision which might end the conflict, he was confident that we could reach an agreement with the Nationalists.

Everything that Mr. Dulles said today was carefully noncommittal. No doubt he feels he cannot be precise at this stage of the conflict. But if he wants to create a situation of give-and-take, this would be a way to start. And whether or not there has been a change in policy, there has been a change in temper and tone. And Mr. Dulles said forthrightly that he is ready to change policy if given a fair opportunity to do so.

Back in a moment. -

Just George Bryan with a word about the Weather.

Word for Today

The tone of Mr. Dulles' remarks was conciliatory, but he made no commitments. He left himself room in which to maneuver. George Ade once said, "For parlor use, the vague generality is a life-saver." When the secretary of state faces a news conference, at a time when delicate negotiations are in progress, the same may well hold true.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Russia today resumed its nuclear weapons tests. The Atomic Energy Commission says two detonations were detected. Both took place north of the Arctic Circle and were of "moderate-to-high yield." Moscow announced last March that it was suspending nuclear tests...and called on the United States and Britain to follow suit. We offered to suspend tests for one year starting the end of next month...when talks on a permanent nuclear test ban are due to get under way. Meanwhile, British and American testing has continued. The State Department says tonight that the resumption of Soviet tests "seem to confirm the suspicion" that the Russian announcement of last March was "primarily a propaganda exercise." Nevertheless, it says, the United States is going ahead with its plan to suspend nuclear tests, as of October 31...unless there is more Soviet testing after that date.

Secretary Dulles said today that Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands should be reduced, if there is a dependable cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. He was referring to islands close to the mainland like Quemoy. Mr. Dulles told his news conference, "If there were a cease-fire which seemed to be reasonably dependable, I think it would be foolish to keep large forces on these islands." Dulles said that State Department subordinates who gave out figures on the number of letters received critical of Administration policy were "ill-advised." He would not say...with Vice President Nixon...that they had "sabotaged" that policy. "That," he said, "could be a matter of opinion." Dulles said that if Red China should get the impression our Formosa policy was about to be changed because of public opinion, it could have "serious consequences." He confirmed that the United States has supplied the Nationalist Air Force with Sidewinder missiles.

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors conferred in Warsaw today for two hours and fifty minutes. They will meet again on Saturday.

President Eisenhower said today that there will be no "policy of appeasement" in the face of threats to the peace. At the same time, the President said he was confident Nationalist China shares our desire that the aggressive actions of Communist China will not lead to war "as a result of any failure on our part to entertain suggestions for a peaceful settlement." Mr. Eisenhower made the statement in accepting the credentials of the new Chinese Nationalist ambassador, George Yeh.

In a speech tonight in Los Angeles, Vice President Nixon said the real test of Administration policy is whether that policy has kept the peace with honor. "All the criticism in the world," he said, "cannot obscure this solid fact: This Administration got the United States out of one war. It has avoided other wars, and it has kept the peace without surrender of principle or territory."

Adlai Stevenson also spoke in Los Angeles tonight...and said the Eisenhower policy toward the offshore islands should be "reconsidered and restated without delay." Stevenson urged a cease-fire and the evacuation of Nationalist forces from Matsu and Quemoy. At the same time, he said, "we should make it clear that we will fight to defend Formosa." He said there should be a declaration by the United Nations...and all concerned...that the future of Formosa would be decided by its population "at a time and under conditions to be determined by the United Nations."

The four high schools in Little Rock remained closed today. The schools were to have opened today on a segregated basis, under the operation of a private corporation. The president of the corporation, Dr. T.C. Raney, issued a statement...accusing the Federal Government and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People of "sacrificing the educational opportunities of four-thousand students to satisfy their consuming desire to mix the races." The Supreme Court said yesterday...in a formal opinion...that neither direct opposition nor "evasive schemes" could nuflify its decision that public school segregation is unconstitutional. The Circuit Court of Appeals in Omaha also issued an order, restraining the private corporation from opening the schools on a segregated basis. Governor Faubus said today that if this "injunctive action" is made permanent, "it will make our efforts more difficult but not at all impossible."

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold today released a report on his recent "peace mission" to the Middle East. He said the United States and Britain had agreed...conditionally...to pull their forces out of Lebanon and Jordan by the end of October. The condition is that in the meantime there is no worsening of the situation. Hammarskjold said he planned to station Pier Spinelli, a United Nations undersecretary...in the Jordanian capital of Amman as a United Nations representative, with liaison offices in Syria and Lebanon. It is too early, he said, to determine whether the Arab countries will live together as good neighbors, as they have promised.

President Eisenhower has named retired Lieutenant General Elwood Quesada of the Air Force to be head of the new federal aviation agency. It is a recess appointment. A formal nomination...subject to Senate confirmation...will go to Congress when it reconvenes. The new agency was created by the last Congress in the interest of greater air safety.

The Agriculture Department reports that the prices received by farmers for their products went up 2 percent in the month ending September 15th. This marks the end of a three-month decline in farm prices. Farming costs in the past month went up one-third of 1-percent.

And the United Auto Workers Union and Chrysler are reported near agreement on a new contract.

Secretary Dulles at his news conference today tried to sound conciliatory about the Formosa crisis and succeeded. Though he denied several times that the United States policy had changed, he said frankly that if there were any sign of "give" on the Communist side, it would change. He revealed that the United States had tried to dissuade the Nationalists from building up the defenses on the offshore islands so heavily, and then had acquiesced in their doing so, because of their strong feelings about it. He was unequivocal in saying that if a dependable cease fire were obtained, he would be in favor of the withdrawal of most of the Nationalist forces from the islands. He even said it would be "foolish" to keep them there under those circumstances. He said a cease fire need not be in writing, and that he would be satisfied with one that was de facto if it stuck.

Further, he did not reject the idea of a meeting with Chou En-Lai. Like the president, he said, he would go anywhere to see anybody if it would serve the cause of world peace. But he showed reluctance to give up talks on the ambassadorial level, which he thinks are safer than those on a higher level. Ambassadorial talks can be prolonged indefinitely, whereas talks on a higher level have to be brief, and must reach a climatic conclusion.

Mr. Dulles also agreed that a renunciation of force in the Formosa area has to be binding all around. As though he knew what Chinese Ambassador Tsiang would be saying today in the United Nations, he emphasized that the Nationalists will not get back to the mainland "under their own steam." The only circumstances he could foresee of their getting back, he said, was that they should be invited back by a government set up by a revolution somewhere on the mainland. Mr. Tsiang told the Assembly that when the Chinese people rise in revolt as the Hungarians had done two years ago, and call for help, the Nationalists will fight side by side with them for their freedom. "This," siid Mr. Tsiang, "is our program of recovery of the mainland, no more and no less." Mr. Dulles want a significant step further in saying the invitation to the Nationalists must come from some govennment set up by the mainland revolutionaries. This amounts to a repudiation of the Nationalists' claim to be the legitimate Government of China, and this may have far-reaching consequences in future developments, if or when negotiations get going over a Formosa settlement.

It gives a picture of the situation at present to report - as this reporter is in a position to do - that the Chinese Communists are perhaps just as eager as we are for a cease fire, and have said in private that the instant there is a sign of reversing the build-up of Quemoy, and even just a beginning of the withdrawal of forces, the mainland guns will cease firing. That is how close the crisis is to a definite easement. The Communists await an initiative on our side, we wait on theirs. Neither side is yet ready to act first, but both sides want the shooting to stop.

This is a quite different situation than the one that obtained only a few days ago. Mr. Dulles himself said today that he felt there was "a slight tendency toward stabilization, and less likelihood of developments leading to war." He confirmed a report that the United States does not plan to take the Formosa crisis to the United Nations at this moment. But this, he showed, is not because we are not conciliatory, but because the situation does not yet call for the move. If the level of military action should rise, he said, and the danger of general war appeared greater, then the crisis would have to be taken to the United Nations, which has the duty to preserve the peace.

Everything that Mr. Dulles said today was carefully noncommittal. No doubt he feels he cannot be precise at this stage of the conflict. But if he wants to create a situation of give-and-take this would be a way to start. And whether or not there has been a change in policy, there has been a change in temper and tone. And Mr. Dulles said forthrightly that he is ready to change policy if given a fair opportunity to do so.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The tone of Mr. Dulles' remarks was conciliatory, but he made no commitments. He left himself room in which to maneuver. Someone once said, "For parlor use, the vague generality is a life-saver." When the secretary of state faces a news conference at a time when delicate negotiations are in progress, the same may well held true.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 1, 1958

This is the news:

The Chinese Nationalist government today rejected the suggestion by Secretary of State Dulles that in case of a cease-fire, Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands might be reduced. / President Chiang told an A.P. correspondent on Formosa that the Dulles statement seemed "completely incompatible" with the Nationalist position. / And...later... the Nationalist foreign ministry said the islands were "indispensable shields" to Formosa. / "For this reason," it said, "we must defend them to the best of our ability." / The foreign ministry ~~statement~~ said that "since the Chinese Communists have no intention of accepting a cease-fire, the military necessity which called for the presence of a strong force on the offshore islands will remain. We cannot countenance reduction of this defensive strength."

→

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that as a soldier, he did not think it was a "good thing" to have so many troops garrisoned on Matsu and Quemoy. Anyone, he said, can see that the two islands as real estate are not "greatly vital". He added that of course the Nationalist argument is that if we yield there, we have opened the way to exposing Formosa to attack. "And that," Mr. Eisenhower said, "is a different thing from just concluding that two pieces of territory are the vital issue." He said the "basic issue" as the United States sees it, is to avoid retreat in the face of force. ~~He repeated that the United States wants a peaceful solution. If there is a cease-fire, he said, we shall have an opportunity to negotiate in good faith.~~

On other subjects, the President said he did not "instruct" anyone to ask for the resignation of Sherman Adams. He resigned voluntarily. ~~[illegible]~~ Mr. Eisenhower said it was incomprehensible to him that some Republicans were pessimistic as to what would happen in the November elections. But Republicans, he said, will have to work and contribute, and get out on Election Day and vote.

The President announced that the atomic submarine Seawolf has set a new record for underwater travel...that it has been submerged for 54 days, and is still going strong.

Mr. Eisenhower said it is "encumbent upon all Americans" to comply with the Supreme Court rulings on school integration. He warned in a prepared statement that non-compliance would be "fraught with grave consequences." "Americans," he said, "have always been proud that their institutions rest on the concept of equal justice under law. We must never forget that the rights of all of us depend on respect for the lawfully determined rights of each of us."

Today...in Little Rock...the head of the private school corporation, Dr. Raney, appealed for public donations of money and private building facilities, with which to hold classes on a private, segregated basis. There was doubt his new plan would work. ~~Teachers...as well as the School Board...have been enjoined by court order from working with the private corporation.~~ And School Superintendent Virgil Blossom said that to operate the four high schools (which are closed) cost 19 thousand dollars a week.

The United Auto Workers, and Chrysler, today announced agreement on basic provisions for a new contract. [redacted] There is still no agreement with General Motors, which faces a strike deadline at 10 a.m. tomorrow, Detroit time.

The MILWAUKEE BRAVES won the first game of the World Series...edging out the YANKEES 4 to 3 in ten innings. Tomorrow's pitchers will be Lew Burdette for the Braves, and Bob Turley for New York.

Russia proposed today that three-power talks on suspension of nuclear tests, scheduled for the end of this month, be held on the foreign ministers level. Only yesterday, Russia resumed its nuclear tests...after suspending them last March.

The British "partnership" plan for Cyprus went into effect today, with the Greek Cypriots calling a 24-hour general strike. There was scattered violence, and four British soldiers were injured by bombs. ~~Under the British program, Greek and Turkish Cypriots would help govern the island...on a community basis...for seven years. The plan is opposed by the Greek population on grounds that it furthers the Turkish drive for partition.~~

The last U.S. Marines withdrew from Lebanon today, leaving some 75-hundred Army troops, ~~which~~ who will be pulled out "soon." American Ambassador McClintock told a news conference in Beirut that he is trying to mediate the political crisis in Lebanon. He has suggested that the new government of Premier Karami seek a vote of confidence from Parliament as soon as possible...and that Karami's cabinet be enlarged to include more supporters of former President Chamoun. McClintock said, "I want to get Lebanon back together again like Humpty Dumpty."

King Hussein announced today that British troops will start pulling out of Jordan on October 20.

In Paris, the DeGaulle cabinet today approved new measures, designed to curb Algerian rebel activity in France. / Henceforth, persons caught helping the insurgents, either directly or indirectly, will be tried before military courts. / Police also are given wide powers to detain...or place under restricted residence...anyone suspected of aiding the rebel cause. New, strict controls on the possession of firearms also were decreed.

Premier DeGaulle has power to issue such decrees under the new French constitution, which was approved last Sunday in a national referendum. I have asked my colleague, David Schoenbrun, for a briefing on just what the new constitution provides. / And here, from Paris, is his analysis of that important document.

(Tape runs 6:05
Returns on cue "--to ERM in NY."

That was an ~~analysis~~ examination of the new French constitution, by my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Andre Malraux once said of DeGaulle, "He marched us full speed to the Rubicon and then told us to get out our fishing rods." That was in 1949, when DeGaulle shied from French politics and his whole movement went into a decline. Now...nine years later...it is a different story. DeGaulle, in a real sense, has crossed the Rubicon and assumed power.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, October 1, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... I have asked my colleague, David Schoenbrun, for a briefing on just what the new constitution provides, and here from Paris is his analysis of that important document.

SCHOENBRUN: If you would like to be President of France, a very powerful job under the new constitution, just drop me a line and I'll see what I can do about putting up your candidacy. Theoretically, it is possible for anyone - regardless of nationality, race or age - to become president of the Fifth Republic of France. The framers of the constitution concentrated so hard on defining the powers of the president, that they have forgotten to define his qualifications. This lapse, I'm told, will be corrected later by a special decree - which means that Charles de Gaulle will spell out the requirements for the post for which he is the main candidate. This is only one of the many inconsistencies in this complex document that was adopted on Sunday by an overwhelming vote of four out of five French citizens. To American eyes the constitution looks like a strange hybrid animal, with the head of an American president, the body of a British Parliament and the forked tail of a dictatorship. There's a real whiplash in the tail of the document, in the last two Articles: Article 91 provides a transitional period of four months to create the new institutions, while Article 92 provides that in this four month period - and now I quote directly from the text - "the government may, in all matters, take any measures that it deems necessary for the life of the nation, the protection of its citizens and the safeguard of freedom." In other words - for the next four months Charles de Gaulle is the legal dictator of the French. He can decree any law, take any action, in so broad a field as the life of this nation. When one considers the enormity of this power, then the vote of confidence given him on Sunday, is a modern miracle; an entire nation voluntarily putting its fate in the hands of one man. This is either the most noble or the saddest chapter in French history. Perhaps both at once.

Although this period of absolute power is limited to four months, great power will still remain in the hands of the President when the constitution takes full effect. As Chief of State, he will appoint a prime minister, giving him great influence over the executive power; he also has the right to appeal to the people by referendum over the heads of Parliament or even to dissolve Parliament in case of a conflict, which gives him the whiphand over the Legislative body. Not even the powerful American President can throw Congress out of office at will; and the American President is directly responsible to the people who elect him and can throw him out in four years time, whereas the new French President is elected for seven years and not directly by the people. He'll be elected by a comparatively small select college of officials, such as members of Parliament, mayors of cities and towns, delegates to county councils. All told, only about one hundred thousand men out of the 25 million qualified voters of this nation. The voters have a very small voice, expressed in Parliament, and the constitution has done its best to gag even that small voice. Parliamentary sessions are limited to two year, totalling five and a half months. The area of legislation is limited - and as we've already noted - it can be thrown out of office if it disagrees with the President. This suggests that the framers of the constitution are afraid of the people of France, who do not trust their judgment. This is probably true, since the French, for the past decade, have cast one out of five ballots for communist candidates. Now, that's the dilemma of democracies, and it's pointed up here in France in Article IV, which guarantees freedom for political parties but adds this clause, they must respect the principles of national sovereignty and of democracy. This obviously is aimed at the communists. It could lead to outlawing that party. It's a kind of French equivalent to the Smith Act back home, but no one can tell yet how it will be applied or how the Supreme Court, newly created here, will interpret it.

The creation of this Supreme Court, which the French call the Constitutional Committee, is one of the positive innovations, as is the first approach to our American concept of habeas corpus. That's contained in an article which states that no citizen may be detained arbitrarily. Basic liberties are guaranteed in clear language in this constitution. But perhaps the most important innovation is recognition of the right of independence for the peoples of the former colonies, a right already exercised by Guinea in West Africa, which voted against the constitution and will thus become automatically independent. The big issue, however, is Algeria - and there the constitution does leave the door open for evolution. There's one peculiar clause, an article which says, in a peculiar French language, that a new territorial collective can be made by law. Now, what this means simply is that it would be possible to work out some sort of a dominion status - such as Canada - or a self governing territory - such as Puerto Rico - for the Algerian solution. Government spokesmen tell me that this is what de Gaulle intended. If this is true, I would suggest that this is perhaps more important than all the other articles combined. A constitution, after all, is neither perfect nor permanent. Our own Constitution has been amended some two dozen times. The French have had a dozen different constitutions. The British built a democratic society without one, the Russians a slave state with one. The final test of a society is the integrity of its citizens and of its rulers. No constitution can give the French people the peace that they have not known for almost two decades until the war in Algeria is ended. The constitution at least permits that. Indeed, it makes it easier than before. The rest is up to Charles de Gaulle himself. He has the power, if he wants to use it. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was an examination of the new French Constitution, by my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris. This is Ed Murrow.

Ed. trans. _ P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Chinese Nationalist government today rejected the suggestion by Secretary of State Dulles that in case of a cease-fire, Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands might be reduced. President Chiang told an A.P. correspondent on Formosa that the Dulles statement seemed "completely incompatible" with the Nationalist position. And...later...the Nationalist foreign ministry said the islands were "indispensable shields" to Formosa. "For this reason," it said, "we must defend them to the best of our ability." The foreign ministry said that "since the Chinese Communists have no intention of accepting a cease-fire" the military necessity which called for the presence of a strong force on the offshore islands will remain. We cannot countenance reduction of this defensive strength."

President Eisenhower told his news confe ence today that as a soldier he did not think it was a "good thing" to have so many troops garrisoned on Matsu and Quemoy. Anyone, he said, can see that the two islands as real estate are not "greatly vital." He added that of course the Nationalist argument is that if we yield there, we have opened the way to exposing Formosa to attack. "And that," Mr. Eisenhower said, "is a different thing from just concluding that two pieces of territory are the vital issue." He said the "basic issue" as the United States sees it is to avoid retreat in the face of force.

On other subjects, the President said he did not "instruct" anyone to ask for the resignation of Sherman Adams. He resigned voluntarily. Mr. Eisenhower said it was incomprehensible to him that some Republicans were pessimistic as to what would happen in the November elections. But Republican he said, will have to work and contribute, and get out on Election Day and vote.

The President announced that the atomic submarine Seawolf has set a new record for underwater travel...that it has been submerged for 54 days and is still going strong.

Mr. Eisenhower said it is "encumbent upon all Americans" to comply with the Supreme Court rulings on school integration. He warned in a prepared statement that non-compliance would be "fraught with grave consequences." "Americans," he said, "have always been proud that their institutions rest on the concept of equal justice under law. We must never forget that the fights of all of us depend on respect for the lawfully determined rights of each of us."

Today...in Little Rock...the head of the private school corporation, Dr. Raney, appealed for public donations of money and private building facilities with which to hold classes on a private, segregated basis. There was doubt his new plan would work.

The United Auto Workers and Chrysler today announced agreement on basic provisions for a new contract. There is still no agreement with General Motors, which faces a strike deadline at 10 A.M. tomorrow, Detroit time.

The Milwaukee Braves won the first game of the World Series...edging out the Yankess 4 to 3 in ten innings. Tomorrow's pitchers will be Lew Burdette for the Braves and Bob Turley for New York.

The British "partnership" plan for Cyprus went into effect today with the Greek Cypriots calling a 24 hour general strike. There was scattered violence, and four British soldiers were injured by bombs.

The last U.S. Marines withdrew from Lebanon today, leaving some 75-hundred Army troops who will be pulled out "soon." American Ambassador McClintock told a news conference in Beirut that he is trying to mediate the political crisis in Lebanon. He has suggested that the new government of Premier Karami seek a vote of confidence from Parliament as soon as possible...and that Karami's cabinet be enlarged to include more supporters of former President Chamoun. McClintock said, "I want to get Lebanon back together again like Humpty Dumpty."

King Hussein announced today that British troops will start pulling out of Jordan on October 20.

In Paris, the DeGaulle cabinet today approved new measures designed to curb Algerian rebel activity in France. Henceforth, persons caught helping the insurgents either directly or indirectly will be tried before military courts.

Premier DeGaulle has power to issue such decrees under the new French constitution, which was approved last Sunday in a national referendum. I have asked my colleague, David Schoenbrun, for a briefing on just what the new constitution provides. And here from Paris is his analysis of that important document.

SCHOENBRUN: If you would like to be President of France, a very powerful job under the new constitution, just drop me a line and I'll see what I can do about putting up your candidacy. Theoretically, it is possible for anyone - regardless of nationality, race or age - to become president of the Fifth Republic of France. The framers of the constitution concentrated so hard on defining the powers of the president, that they have forgotten to define his qualifications. This lapse, I'm told will be corrected later by a special decree - which means that Charles DeGaulle will spell out the requreiments for the post for which he is the main candidate. This is only one of the many inconsistencies in this complex document that was adopted on Sunday by an overwhelming vote of four out of five French citizens. To American eyes the constitution looks like a strange hybrid animal, with the head of an American president, the body of a British Parliament and the forked tail of a dictatorship. There's a real whiplash in the tail of the document, in the last two articles; Article 91 provides a transitional period of four months to create the new institutions, while Article 92 provides that in this four month period - and now I quote directly from the text - "the government may, in all matters, take any measures that it deems necessary for the life of the nation, the protection of its citizens and the safeguard of freedom." In other words - for the next four months Charles DeGaulle is the legal dictator of the French. He can decree any law, take any action, in so broad a field as the life of this nation. When one considers the enormity of this power, then the vote of confidence given him on Sunday, is a modern miracle; an entire nation voluntarily putting its fate in the hands of one man. This is either the most noble or the saddest chapter in French history. Perhaps both at once.

Although this period of abolute power is limited to four months, great power will still remain in the hands of the President when the constitution takes full effect. As Chief of State, he will appoint a prime minister, giving him great influence over the executive power; he also has the right to appeal to the people by referendum over the heads of Parliament or even to dissolve Parliament in case of conflict, which gives him the whiphand over the Legislative body. Not even the powerful American President can throw Congress out of office at will, and the American President is directly responsible to the people who elect him and can throw him out in four years time, whereas the new French President is elected for seven years and not directly by the people. He'll be elected by a comparatively small select college of officials, such as members of Parliament, mayors of cities and towns, delegates to county councils. All told, only about one hundred thousand men out of the 25 million qualified voters of this nation. The voters have a very small voice, expressed in Parliament, and the constitution has done its best to gag even that small voice. Parliamentary sessions are limited to two year, totalling five and a half months. The area of legislation is limited and as we've already noted - it can be thrown out of office if it disagrees with the President. This suggests that the framers of the constitution are afraid of the people of France, or do not trust their judgement. This is probably true, since the French, for the past decade, have cast one out of five ballots for communist candidates. Now, that's the dilemma of democracies, and it's pointed up here in France in Article IV, which guarantees freedom for political parties but adds this clause, they must respect the principles of national sovereignty and of democracy. This obviously is aimed at the communists. It could lead to outlawing that party. It's a kind of French equivalent to the Smith Act back home, but no one can tell yet how it will be applied or how the Supreme Court, newly created here, will interpret it.

The creation of this Supreme Court, which the French call the Constitutional Committee is one of the positive innovations, as is the first approach to our American concept of habeas corpus. That's contained in an article which states that no citizen may be detained arbitrarily. Basic liberties are guaranteed in clear language in this constitution. But perhaps the most important innovation is recognition of the right of independence for the peoples of the former colonies, a right already exercised by Guinea in West Africa, which voted against the constitution and will thus become automatically independent. The big issue, however, is Algeria - and there the constitution does leave the door open for evolution. There's one peculiar clause, an article which says, in a peculiar French language, that a new territorial collective can be made by law. Now, what this means simply is that it would be possible to work out some sort of a dominion status - such as Canada - or a self-governing territory - such as Puerto Rico - for the Algerian solution. Government spokesmen tell me that this is what De Gaulle intended. If this is true, I would suggest that this is perhaps more important than all the other articles combined. A constitution, after all, is neither perfect nor permanent. Our own Constitution has been amended some two dozen times. The French have had a dozen different constitutions. The British built a democratic society without one, the Russians a slave state with one. The final test of a society is the integrity of its citizens and of its rulers. No constitution can give the French people the peace that they have not known for almost two decades until the wa in Algeria is ended. The constitution at least permits that. Indeed, it makes it easier than before. The rest is up to Charles DeGaulle himself. He has the power, if he wants to use it. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was an examination of the new French constitution by my colleague David Schoenbrun in Paris.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Andre Malraux once said of DeGaulle, "He marched us full speed to the Rubicon and then told us to get out our fishing rods." That was in 1949, when DeGaulle shied from French politics and his whole movement went into a decline. Now...nine years later...it is a different story. DeGaulle, in a real sense, has crossed the Rubicon and assumed power.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 2, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary Dulles said today that there has been "an exaggerated idea" of a shift in United States policy, regarding the situation in the Formosa Strait. There have been "misinterpretations", he said, and the "misinterpretations" have been "misinterpreted". | Mr. Dulles suggested...at his news conference on Tuesday...that a dependable cease-fire would enable Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands to be reduced. | President Eisenhower was in ~~gmm~~ general agreement with this yesterday at his news conference. This new American position was rejected, however, by the Chinese Nationalists. ~~And I should like~~ I'll try to go into the background of this further, in a few minutes. | The State Department said today that "certain interpretations" had been put on what Eisenhower and Dulles said "which seem to have been misunderstood in Taipeh." The department said that a message had been sent to the United States ambassador to Nationalist China in an effort to clear up the confusion.

→

Vice President Nixon said today that there has been no change in American policy toward Communist China. The United States, he said, has "consistently maintained that we can never accept any arrangement that involves surrender to force or threat of force." He said the United States had made it clear from the beginning...that a cease-fire would open the way for negotiations. For a settlement, he said, "of some of the issues which may have contributed to tension in the area."

The first American "Flying Boxcars" arrived on Formosa today to help with the airlifting of supplies to Quemoy and the other offshore islands. The Quemoy complex was hit today by an estimated 7-thousand Communist shells.

A SPOKESMAN FOR ~~The~~ Democratic Advisory Council said today that ~~the~~ Democrats will continue to criticize Administration policy when they think it is wrong. But, it said, Communist leaders would make "a great mistake" if they think this criticism indicates a lack of unity "were they to press this country too far." The statement was made by Paul Nitze, acting chairman of the council's foreign policy committee.

—)

The leader of the British Labour Party...Hugh Gaitskell...said today that Mr. Dulles "appears to be taking a much more favorable line as regards the evacuation of the offshore islands." Gaitskell told the annual party conference in Scarborough that Nationalist evacuation of the islands was the only way to get a peaceful solution. But, he said, Formosa is another question. The Labour Party already has passed a resolution... calling for neutralization of Formosa under a United Nations guarantee.

Tonight, the Labour Party defeated a resolution which would have committed the next Labourite government to stop production of all nuclear weapons---if needs be, unilaterally.

Russia today accused the United States and Britain of "continued aggression" by their failure to pull all their troops out of Lebanon and Jordan. The accusation was made in the United Nations General Assembly by Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. Actually, the American withdrawal from Lebanon is well under way, and Britain is scheduled to start taking its forces out of Jordan in about two weeks.

Former Lebanese President Camille Chamoun today rejected the proposals made by our ambassador for solving the political crisis in Lebanon. Ambassador McClintock said yesterday he was trying to serve as mediator between Christian and ~~Mmmmm~~ Moslem factions. He had suggested...as a basis for compromise...that Parliament give the new government of Premier Karami a vote of confidence, and that Karami's cabinet be enlarged to include more members of Chamoun's party. He also thought it would be a good idea for Parliament to be expanded from 66 to 88 seats. ~~Chamoun said today that he ~~mmm~~ does not think that the number of Parliament seats should be increased in the present tense situation." Nor, he said, does he think the addition of three or four representatives of his party to the cabinet would satisfy his followers.~~

On Cyprus today, a British radio technician was shot to death while walking down the street in the port city of Larnaca. ~~Mmmmmmmmm~~ Two British soldiers were wounded (when their truck was ~~mmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmm~~ blown up by a mine.

Premier DeGaulle made two speeches in Algeria today but he announced no new Algerian program. DeGaulle ~~he~~ makes another speech tomorrow, before flying back to Paris, and he could make an announcement then.

Russia today carried out two more nuclear weapons tests...north of the Arctic Circle. This time, the tests were announced both by the Atomic [redacted] Energy Commission in Washington (which detected the explosions) and by Moscow radio.

Today...in Washington...a federal court upheld the State Department ban on travel to Red China. United States District Judge Edward Curran said the government may "properly" restrict travel to other countries "when necessitated by foreign policy considerations." / The ruling was made in the case of reporter William Worthy, who violated travel restrictions last year by visiting Communist China and Hungary. Worthy's attorney argued that the travel ban violates freedom of the press...and said today's ruling will be appealed. / ~~The State Department has refused to renew Worthy's passport. / Government attorneys say this is not because of his trip last year but because he will not agree to the restrictions laid down by the Department of State.~~

President Eisenhower has invited Republican Party leaders to a White House strategy meeting on Monday. / Republican "apathy" and Mr. Eisenhower's campaign role will be discussed. / News Secretary Hagerty says the President will speak at the national corn picking contest in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, two weeks from tomorrow. / He will also probably speak here in New York on October 12. This is in addition to the political appearances he will make the latter part of this month in California and Illinois.

The United Auto Workers went on strike today against General Motors, after failing to reach agreement on a new contract. G.M. says "virtually all" its operations are affected. Union officials say they were asking no more than they got in the new contracts with Chrysler and Ford. G.M. officials say they offered to settle on the same terms as the agreement with Ford.

The Milwaukee Braves made it two straight over the New York Yankees today...trouncing the New Yorkers by a score of 13 to 5. ~~For the winning pitcher, Lew Burdette, it was the fourth World Series game he won~~ has The outcome was ~~sealed in the first inning, when~~ in a row, the Braves racked up seven runs.

Edward R. Murrow: October 2, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Nationalist China has issued a blank refusal to pull out its forces from the offshore islands in the Formosa Strait, after a cease fire. It has done this through a newspaper interview by Chiang Kai-Shek and through an official pronouncement of the Nationalist Foreign Office. If these statements were to be taken at their face value, the United States could not hope for a cease-fire, and the crisis, which was beginning to look less serious, would have become forebodingly black. For all the proposals to avert war over the islands include their de-militarization.

After Mr. Dulles's statement on Tuesday, the Chinese Nationalists could have done one of three things. They could have accepted, objected or remained silent. If they accepted, military morale on the islands would go down, and what would be just as serious, so would the morale of the entire Nationalist movement. Mr. Dulles not only favored the reduction of Nationalist forces on the islands, he virtually repudiated the Nationalist claim to be the true government of China. For he said that the return of Chiang to the mainland would come only on the invitation of some revolutionary government set up on the mainland. This was a startling demotion for our Chinese ally, and even though the Nationalist leaders might have expected it, they would not rush into print to say they agreed. At the same time, to be silent would advertise a lack of determination. So the Generalissimo and his Foreign Office talked back. They said No, loudly and clearly. And the question is how much this has affected the chances of peace.

It is recognized in Washington - and may be recognized in Warsaw -- that what the Nationalists are saying is meant primarily for home consumption on Formosa. Chiang is on the spot. If there is peace, he is the one who will have to sacrifice most for it. It will be a peace from which he stands to gain less than nothing. His best chance of coming to power on the mainland lies in a war between this country and Communist China. He now knows we will not fight such a war, unless the Communists force it upon us, which the Communists may not find in their interest to do. So his chances of getting to the mainland are reduced to a mainland revolution. ~~And this week, Chiang's own Ambassador to the United Nations said so in a statement which was just as notable a retreat as anything said by Mr. Dulles.~~

It is possible that Chiang, with his refusal to de-militarize the islands, hopes to make a cease fire harder to get, and so put off what for him will be an evil day. But the main issue in the Warsaw negotiations for a cease fire is not whether Chiang is willing to de-militarize the islands, but whether we are. Chiang is independent, but he does not have the resources to act independently. When or if the time comes, he has little choice but to comply.

It now is becoming clearer how little we have favored militarizing the islands. Mr. Dulles said Tuesday that we opposed it. He might have added, that Assistant Secretary Robertson, the most dedicated pro-Nationalist official in the Department, personally went to Formosa to try to prevent it, and failed. Newsmen in Taipeh report, that Nationalist circles confirm State Department opposition to the build-up on the islands. But they say it was encouraged by local United States military officials.

Now the importance of the islands is their bearing on the security of Formosa and the free world. Chiang argues that if the islands are yielded, Formosa's turn comes next. Mr. Dulles, who talked like that for a while, now has interposed the possibility of what he calls a "dependable" cease fire. Chiang argues that there isn't any such thing as a dependable cease fire with the Communists. Mr. Dulles thinks it could be made a matter of self-interest to the Communists to be dependable. Mr. Dulles will be the final judge as to what is dependable, not Chiang.

However, if it should turn out that the Warsaw negotiations do break down, the crisis need not pass automatically to the stage of open war. It will go first to the United Nations, either on our initiative, or on the initiative of some other power. / The Japanese have been sounding out Asian, European and South American delegates on a resolution to request ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ Secretary General Hammarskjold to work out a solution. / An alternative suggestion is that a small, balanced group of nations undertake the task of finding peace. The United States is friendly to both proposals, but declines to move so long as the Warsaw talks continue. And if these break down it will be the Communists who walk out. / We have no present intention of doing so.

Back in a moment. —
Just George Bryan with a word about the Weather.

Word for Today

Chiang Kai-shek was speaking for home consumption. He objected because he could neither remain silent nor accept. Yet, at the end of the day, he cannot act in an independent fashion for his future is tied too closely to the United States. As George Santayana observed, mere declarations of independence make no one really independent.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary Dulles said today that there has been "an exaggerated idea" of a shift in United States policy regarding the situation in the Formosa Strait. There have been "misinterpretations," he said, and the "misinterpretations" have been "misinterpreted." Mr. Dulles suggested...at his news conference on Tuesday that a dependable cease-fire would enable Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands to be reduced. President Eisenhower was in general agreement with this yesterday at his news conference. This new American position was rejected, however, by the Chinese Nationalists. I'll try to go into the background of this further in a few minutes. The State Department said today that "certain interpretations" had been sent to the United States ambassador to Nationalist China in an effort to clear up the confusion.

Vice President Nixon said today that there has been no chage in American policy toward Communist China. The United States, he said,has "consistently maintained that we can never accept any arrangement that involves surrender to force or threat of force." He said the United States had made it clear from the beginning...that a cease-fire would open the way for negotiations. For a settlement, he said, "of some of the issues which hay have contributed to tension in the area."

The first American "Flying Boxcars" arrived on Formosa today to help with the airlifting of supplies to Quemoy and the other offshore islands. The Quemoy complex was hit today by an estimated 7 thousand Communist shells.

The leader of the British Labour Party...Hugh Gaitskell...said today that Mr. Dulles "appears to be taking a much more favorable line as regards the evacuation of the offshore islands." Gaitskell told the annual party conference in Scarborough that Nationalist evacuation of the islands was the only way to get a peaceful solution. But, he said, Formosa is another question. The Labour Party already has passed a resolution...calling for neutralization of Formosa under a United Nations guarantee.

Tonight, the Labour Party defeated a resolution which would have committed the next Labourite government to stop production of all nuclear weapons---if needs be, unilaterally.

Russia today accused the United States and Britain of "continued aggression" by their failure to pull all their troops out of Lebanon and Jordan. The accusation was made in the United Nations General Assembly by Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. Actually, the American withdrawal from Lebanon is well under way, and Britain is scheduled to start taking its forces out of Jordan in about two weeks.

Former Lebanese President Camille Chamoun today rejected the proposals made by our ambassador for solving the political crisis in Lebanon. Ambassador McClintock said yesterday he was trying to serve as mediator between Christian and Moslem factions. He had suggested...as a basis for compromise...that Parliament give the new government of Premier Karami a vote of confidence and that Karami's cabinet be enlarged to include more members of Chamoun's party. He also thought it would be a good idea for Parliament to be expanded from 66 to 88 seats.

On Cyprus today, a British radio technician was shot to death while walking down the street in the port city of Larnaca. Two British soldiers were wounded when their truck was blown up by a mine.

Russia today carried out two more nuclear weapons tests...north of the Arctic Circle. This time, the tests were announced both by the Atomic Energy Commission in Washington which detected the explosions and by Moscow radio.

Today in Washington...a federal court upheld the State Department ban on travel to Red China. United States District Judge Edward Curran said the government may "properly" restrict travel to other countries "when necessitated by foreign policy considerations." The ruling was made in the case of reporter William Worthy, who violated travel restrictions last year by visiting Communist China and Hungary. Worthy's attorney argued that the travel ban violates freedom of the press...and said today's ruling will be appealed.

President Eisenhower has invited Republican Party leaders to a White House strategy meeting on Monday. Republican "apathy" and Mr. Eisenhower's campaign role will be discussed. News Secretary Hagerty says the President will speak at the national corn picking contest in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, two weeks from tomorrow. He will also probably speak here in New York on October 12. This is in addition to the poltical appearances he will make the latter part of this month in California and Illinois.

The United Auto Workers went on strike today against General Motors, after failing to reach agreement on a new contract. G.M. says "virtually all" its operations are affected. Union officials say they were asking no more than they got in the new contracts with Chrysler and Ford. G.M. officials say they offered to settle on the same terms as the agreement with Ford.

The Milwaukee Braves made it two straight over the New York Yankees today trouncing the New Yorkers by a score of 13 to 5.

Nationalist China has issued a blank refusal to pull out his forces from the offshore islands in the Formosa Strait, after a cease fire. It has do this through a news paper interview by Chiang Kai-Shek and through an official pronouncement of the Nationalist Foreign Office. If these statement were to be taken at their face value, the United States could not hope for a cease fire, and the crisis, which was beginning to look less serious, would have become forebodingly black. For all the proposals to avert war over the island include their de-militarization.

After Mr. Dulles's statement on Tuesday, the Chinese Nationalists could have done one of three things. They could have accepted, objected or remained silent. If they accepted, military morale on the islands would go down, and what would be just as serious, so would the morale of the entire Natioalist movement. Mr. Dulles not only favored the reduction of Nationalist forces on the island, he virtually repudiated the Nationalist claim to be the true government of China. For he said that the return of Chiang to the mainland would come only on the invitation of some revolutionary government set up on the mainland. This was a startling demotion for our Chinese ally, and even though the Nationalist leaders might have expected it, they would not rush into print to say they agreed. At the same time, to be silent would avertise a lack of determination. So the Generalissimo and his Foreign Office talked back. They said No, loudly and clearly. And the question is how much this has affectdd the chances of peace.

It is recognized in Washington - and may be recognized in Warsaw - that what the Nationalists are saying is meant primarily for home consumption on Formosa. Chiang is on the spot. If there is peace, he is the one who will have to sacrifice most for it. It will be a peace from which he stands to gain less than nothing. His best chance of coming to power on the mainland lies in a war between this country and Communist China. He now knows we will not fight such a war, unless theCommunists force it upon us, which the Communists may not find in their interest to do. So his chances of getting to the mainland are reduced to a mainland revolution.

It is possible that Chiang, with his refusal to de-militarize the islands hopes to make a cease fire harder to get, and so put off what for him will be an evil day. But the main issue in the Warsaw negotiations for a cease fire is not whether Chiang is willing to de-militarize the islands, but whether we are. Chiang is independent, but he does not have the resources go act independently. When or if the time comes, he has little choice but to comply.

It now is becoming clearer how little we have favored militarizing the islands. Mr. Dulles said Tuesday that we opposed it. He might have added that Assistant Secretary Robertson, the most dedicated pro-Nationalist official in the Department, personally went to Formosa to try to prevent it and failed. Newsmen in Taipeh report that Nationalist circles confirm State Department opposition to the build-up on the islands. But they say it was encouraged by local United States military officials.

Now the importance of the islands is their bearing on the security of Formosa and the free world. Chiang argues that if the isaands are yielded, Formosa's turn comes next. Mr. Dulles, who talked like that for a while, now has interposed the possibility of what he calls a "dependable" cease fire. Chiang argues that there isn't any such thing as a dependable cease fire with the Communists. Mr. Dulles thinks it could be made a matter of self-interest to the Communists to be dependable. Mr. Dulles will be the final judge as to what is dependable, not Chiang.

However, if it should turn out that the Warsaw negotiations do break down, the crisis need not pass automatically to the stage of open war. It will go first to the United Nations, either on our initiative or on the initiative of some other power. The Japanese have been sounding out Asian, European and South American delegates on a resolution to request Secretary General Hammarskjold to work out a solution. An alternative suggestion is that a small, balanced group of nations undertake the task of finding peace. The United States is friendly to both proposals, but declines to move so long as the Warsaw talks continue. And if these break down it will be the Communists who walk out. We have no present intention of doing so.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First, George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

MURROW: Chiang Kai-shek was speaking for home consumption. He objected, because he could neither remain silent nor accept. Yet, at the end of the day, he cannot act in an independent fashion for his future is tied too closely to the United States. As George Santayana observed, mere declarations of independence make no one really independent.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 3, 1958

This is the news:

Premier DeGaulle today outlined a five-year program for Algeria, with the accent on social and economic reform. / There was no promise of independence. / But, at the same time, he told the Algerian "rightists" that there would be no integration with Metropolitan France. / DeGaulle called on the Moslem rebels to lay down their arms. / He said, "Stop these absurd battles, and promptly you will see hope reborn. / You will see prisons empty. You will see a future open big enough for everybody, and particularly for yourselves." / He promised an election in Algeria within two months. And two-thirds of all representatives chosen, he said, must be Moslem. Six hundred thousand acres of reclaimed land will be turned over to

→

Moslem farmers. At least one-tenth of all the civil service jobs opening up in Metropolitan France are to go to Moslems, and facilities will be provided for all Moslem children to attend school. New hospitals, new highways, new harbors will be built. The oil of the Sahara will be utilized, new factories constructed. And out of all of this 400-thousand new jobs for Moslems are to be created. Speaking before a predominately Moslem crowd in Constantine, DeGaulle said that only France could provide this "profound transformation." The passions of men being what they are, he said, there are but two alternatives: Fraternity or war.

Cyprus had one of its worst days of violence in three years. Terrorists shot down the wives of two British servicemen. One of the women died. And three British soldiers were wounded in new bombing incidents.

In Athens, an anti-British student demonstration was broken up by police armed with machineguns. The students distributed leaflets denouncing the British "partnership" plan for Cyprus...and demanding that Greece resign from NATO.

Archbishop Makarios today urged all Greek Cypriots to "fight" the British program for Cyprus. Makarios said the plan is the result of "illicit collusion" between Britain and Turkey...which, if allowed to stand, will lead to ruin. ~~Under the British program, Greek and Turkish Cypriots would help govern the island...on a community basis...for seven years. The plan is opposed by the Greek population on grounds that it furthers the Turkish drive for partition.~~

In Lebanon, five persons are said to have been killed in new clashes between Lebanese Army troops and anti-government rioters. The United States ambassador, Robert McClintock, is still trying to mediate a settlement between the Christian and Moslem factions. The State Department in Washington says McClintock was asked by "Lebanese political elements" to lend his informal assistance in trying to resolve "local differences." The department spokesman denied that the ambassador is interfering in Lebanese affairs.

For the first time, Communist fighter planes today attacked Chinese Nationalist aircraft engaged in supplying Quemoy. The Nationalist Defense Ministry reports that four Mig-17's jumped a C-47 cargo plane as it was dropping food and medical supplies by parachute to the Quemoy garrison. The gargo plane made a crash landing. Two members of the crew were hurt.

The Moscow radio said today that the United States is "trying to create the impression that it is trying to ease tension in the Formosa area." The truth, says Moscow, is that American policy has remained unchanged.

President Eisenhower entered Walter Reed Army Hospital today for his annual physical checkup. The medical tests are to be completed by tomorrow afternoon, when he expects to get in a round of golf.

This morning, the President conferred with Republican National Chairman Alcorn. Alcorn told reporters afterward that it would be "a very fair conclusion" that Eisenhower will take a more active personal role in this year's election campaign than he has in any other election since taking office. The President's political schedule, he said, will be expanded to give him "a very active part." Alcorn said that if the Democrats want to make Quemoy an issue in the campaign, "we certainly will meet them." ~~And then he proceeded to accuse Senators Kennedy of Massachusetts and Smathers of Florida of "preaching appeasement" in their criticism of Administration policy toward the offshore islands. He wanted to know, he said, if the Democrats would be willing to write off the Aleutian Islands and the Philippines as "a few dots of land."~~

Governor Faubus said today that he would never open the closed high schools in Little Rock as integrated institutions. The only question, he said, is whether the facilities are to be used by the private school corporation on a segregated basis, "or not at all." The governor was asked...at a news conference...what he thought would happen if the schools were opened on that basis, in defiance of the federal courts. He said that in that case, the federal government would have to send in U.S. marshals and the Army...and "forcibly eject" both teachers and students. The federal courts, he said, are "simply playing for a bloc of votes in the northern states."

In Norfolk, Virginia...a plan to give private instruction to 10-thousand high school students was dropped today. Not a single public school teacher offered to serve the private foundation set up to meet the situation caused by the closing of schools.

Senator Thurmond of South Carolina today urged people who believe in ~~integration~~ school segregation to resist the "tyranny" of the Supreme Court. Thurmond argued that the Supreme Court decision, that states may not resort to "evasive schemes" to circumvent public school integration, is not the law.

Production workers are still on strike at most General Motors plants, due to local grievances. A new national contract...similar to the Ford and Chrysler settlements...was agreed on last night. Union and company officials both express hope that local issues will be settled quickly. U.A.W. President Walter Reuther has told the G.M. locals to return to work as soon as agreements are reached. One grievance affecting many locals is the difference in pay for similarly classified jobs.

President Meany of the A.F.L. - C.I.O. today agreed to arbitrate the strike of deck officers on the East and Gulf coasts. Meany's agreement to intervene in the dispute was announced by the American Merchant Marine Institute...representing 21 of the 24 major steamship lines involved. The deck officers are demanding longer vacations and better overtime provisions. They have been striking since Wednesday. Among the sailings cancelled was that of the America from New York. The Constitution did sail today since the American Export Line is not affected.

The United Nations General Assembly has now been meeting here in New York for three weeks. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has been covering this General Assembly session. Dan, how would you sum it up so far?

(Schorr runs 5 minutes (Ends on cue "--to ERM."

That was my colleague, Dan Schorr, reporting on the United Nations General Assembly.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Wordfor Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

schorr 7:45 PM Murrow News Oct.3

The United Nations General Assembly, which ended its third week today, has 72 items on its agenda...ranging all the way from Cyprus to Antarctica. As of to night, however, neither of the world's two leading candidates for the title of crisis--Formosa Straits and the Middle East--are listed on the agenda. They have been discussed, of course...at considerable length in the series of keynote speeches, and even more interminably in the corridor and lounge palaver. But inscription on the agenda is a political act, a move in the diplomatic game in which the big building on the East River is only one arena.

Secretary of State Dulles, early in the session, said he would ask for a debate on Formosa Straits if the Warsaw ambassadorial talks with Red China showed no early signs of progress. And yesterday Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko accused the United States and Britain of stalling on pulling their troops out of Lebanon and Jordan...and said the Middle East issue should be put on the agenda. But he did not immediately move to do so.

Thus, even the suggestion that an issue MAY be raised in the United Nations has its political meaning.

The meaning, in Dulles' case, was that if the Chinese Communists were not conciliatory on Formosa Straits, the United States would ask the Assembly for a resolution condemning Red China's use of force. And this could be invoked to justify any action the United States would take in support of the Nationalist defenders of the offshore islands.

But, Dulles now seems less inclined to bring the issue before the UN soon. British persuasion and American confusion have combined to induce the State Dept. to wait out the Warsaw talks longer than originally intended.

In Gromyko's case, the threat to demand a debate on the Middle East appeared part of a complicated maneuver aimed at keeping the Middle Eastern pot boiling. Dag Hammarshield, in submitting his tentative and incomplete peace plan for the region, had privately asked delegates not to debate it now. The Arab nations, whose resolution sent Hammarshuld on that mission, appeared willing to remain silent...at least for the time being. Nasser's foreign minister, Mahmud Fawzi, is arriving here from Cairo tomorrow, and will consult the ~~four~~ other Arab delegates. Gromyko, JUMPED THE GUN ON THE Arab-Deman ~~in denouncing~~ America and Britain, ~~and even~~ criticizing the Hammarshield plan as prejudiced, appeared in the role of being more Arab than the Arabs themselves. ~~His was the first public word of criticism for the Hammar shuld plan.~~ To most UN observers, it looked like an attempt to force the hand of Egypt's Fawzi and other Arab delegates. ~~Hammarshuld's plan, which~~ Britain's withdrawal from Jordan (the American evacuation from Lebanon is hardly a real issue any more) is conditional on an easing of tension. Gromyko's move seemed aimed at raising tension and thus torpedoing the idea of Arab reconciliation... even while posing as the defender of the Arab world. Jordan's delegate, ~~The Middle East situation should be enriched~~ Abdel Rifai, accused Russia today of "an obstructionist policy on inter-Arab relations"...of "fishing ~~in~~ the troubled waters of the Middle East." It is doubtful that even Nasser is grateful for Russia's attempt to force his hand. The Middle East situation, as seen from the United Nations tonight, looks obscure.

But the Far Eastern situation looks even more obscure. The delegates of the Asia-Afriaa bloc met today and started ~~work on a statement~~ trying to draft a statement calling on all concerned to keep cool and avoid ~~[illegible]~~x an explosion in Formosa Straits. It is doubtful that the Asia-Africa statement, if the delegates succeed in drafting one, will alter the situation much.

The painful fact is that no one at UN has found any way of doing much about the conflict over the offshore islands. India's tireless Krishna Menon, stalking the lobbies and lounges, cane in hand, is trying to act as mediator. But there is no sign that he has any GREAT influence on the Bayping regime at this moment. The other day, as though to show his credentials, ~~Krishna~~ Menon EXHIBITED IN THE CORRIDORS WHAT HE CALLED ~~told all and sundry he had~~ a special message from the ~~Communist~~ BAYPING government saying it wanted a peaceful settlement. It turned out ~~xx~~ that the "special message" had gone to SEVERAL ~~[illegible]~~ of the governments with which Red China has relations, and simply repeated Bayping's ~~position~~ POSITION assertion that the offshore islands were a Chinese internal matter.

~~Thus, at this moment, there is little definite that can be said about the offshore islands except that the major political issue~~

~~Thus, after three weeks of the UN Assembly, there is little definite that can be said tonight.~~

Thus, after three weeks of the UN Assembly, there is little definite that can be said tonight. There are the tenuous outlines of a peace plan for the Middle East--if Russia does not succeed in wrecking it.

And the UN has so far been unable to get ~~its~~ any grip on the Formosa Straits crisis.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

Word for Today

The question is sometimes raised: What can the United Nations accomplish? I think it was three years ago that Dag Hammarskjold said, "The United Nations is not just a product of "do-gooders." It is harshly real. When people---just people---stop thinking of it as a weird Picasso abstraction, and see it as a drawing they made themselves, everything will be all right."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, October 3, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The United Nations General Assembly has now been meeting here in New York for three weeks. My colleague Daniel Schorr has been covering this General Assembly session. Dan, how would you sum it up so far?

SCHORR: The United Nations General Assembly, which ended its third week today, has seventy-two items on its agenda ranging all the way from Cyprus to Antarctica. As of tonight, however, neither of the world's two leading candidates for the title of crisis, Formosa Straits and the Middle East, are listed on that agenda. They have been discussed, of course, at considerable length in a series of keynote speeches and even more interminably in the corridor and lounge palaver. But inscription on the agenda is a political act, a move in a diplomatic game in which the big building on the East River is only one arena.

Secretary of State Dulles, early in the session, said he would ask for a debate on Formosa Straits if the Warsaw ambassadorial talks with Red China showed no early signs of progress. And yesterday, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko accused the United States and Britain of stalling on pulling their troops out of Lebanon and Jordan, said the Middle East issue should be put on the agenda but he did not immediately move to do so. Thus, even a suggestion that an issue may be raised in the UN has its political meaning. The meaning, in Dulles's case, was that if the Chinese Communists were not conciliatory on Formosa Straits, the United States would ask the Assembly for a resolution condemning Red China's use of force, and this could be invoked to justify any action the United States would take in support of the Nationalist defenders of the offshore islands. But Dulles now seems less inclined to bring the issue before the UN very soon. British persuasion and American confusion have combined to induce the State Department to wait out the Warsaw talks longer than originally intended. In Gromyko's case the threat to demand a debate on the Middle East appeared part of a complicated maneuver aimed at keeping the Middle Eastern pot boiling. Dag Hammarskjold, in submitting his tentative and incomplete peace plan for the region, had privately asked delegates not to debate it now. The Arab nations, whose resolution sent Secretary General Hammarskjold on that mission, appeared willing to remain silent, at least for the time being. Nasser's Foreign Minister, Mahmoud Fawzi, is arriving here from Cairo tomorrow and will consult the other Arab delegates. Gromyko jumped the gun on the Arabs, denouncing America and Britain, criticizing the Hammarskjold report as prejudiced, and he appeared in a role of being more Arab than the Arabs themselves. To most UN observers it looked like an attempt to force the hand of Egypt's Fawzi and the other Arab delegates.

Britain's withdrawal from Jordan, the American evacuation from Lebanon, is hardly a real issue any more, Britain's withdrawal from Jordan is conditional on an easing of tension. And Gromyko's move seemed aimed at raising tension and thus torpedoing the idea of Arab reconciliation. Even while he posed as defender of the Arab world. Jordan's delegate Abdul Rifai accused Russia today of an obstructionist policy on inter-Arab relations, of fishing in the troubled waters of the Middle East. It's doubtful that even Nasser is grateful for Russia's attempt to force his hand. The Middle Eastern situation, as seen from the UN tonight, looks obscure. But the Far Eastern situation looks even more obscure. The delegates of the Asia-Africa bloc met today and started trying to draft a statement calling on all concerned to keep cool and avoid an explosion in Formosa Straits. It's doubtful that the Asia-Africa statement, if they succeed in drafting one, will alter the situation much. The painful fact is that no one at UN has found any way of doing much about the conflict about the offshore islands.

India's tireless Krishna Menon, stalking the lobbies and lounges, cane in hand, is trying to act as mediator. But there is no sign that he has any great influence on the Peiping regime at this moment. The other day, as though to show his credentials, Menon exhibited in the corridors what he called a special message from the Peiping government saying it wanted a peaceful settlement. It turned out that the "special message" had gone to several of the governments with which Red China has relations and simply repeated Peiping's position that the offshore islands were a Chinese internal matter.

Thus, after three weeks of the UN Assembly, there is little definite that can be said tonight. There are the tenuous outlines of a peace plan for the Middle East, if Russia does not succeed in wrecking it, and the UN has so far been unable to get any grip on the Formosa Straits crisis. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague Dan Schorr reporting on the United Nations General Assembly. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Premier DeGaulle today outlined a five-year program for Algeria with the accent on social and economic reform. There was no promise of independence. But, at the same time, he told the Algerian rightists that there would be no integration with Metropolitan France. De Gaulle called on the Moslem rebels to lay down their arms. He said, "Stop those absurd battles and promptly you will see hope reborn. You will see prisons empty. You will see a future open big enough for everybody, and particularly for yourselves." He promised an election in Algeria within two months. And two-thirds of all representatives chosen, he said, must be Moslem. Six hundred thousand acres of reclaimed land will be turned over to Moslem farmers. At lease one-tenth of all the civil service jobs opening up in Metropolitan France are to go to Moslems, and facilities will be provided for all Moslem children to attend school. New hospitals, new highways, new harbors will be built. The oil of the Sahara will be utilized,new factories constructed. And out of all of this, 400 thousand new jobs for Moslems are to be created. Speaking before a predominantly Moslem crowd in Constantine, De Gaulle said that only France could provide this "profound transformation."

Cyprus had one of its worst days of violence in three years. Terrorists shot down the wives of two British servicemen. One of the women died. And three British soldiers were wounded in new bombing incidents.

In Athens, an anti-British student demonstration was broken up by police armed with machineguns. The students distributed leaflets denouncing the British "partnership" plan for Cyprus...and demanding that Greece resign from NATO.

Archbishop Makarios today urged all Greek Cypriots to "fight" the British program for Cyprus. Makarios said the plan is the result of "illicit collusion" between Britain and Turkey...which, if allowed to stand, will lead to ruin.

In Lebanon, five persons are said to have been killed in new clashes between Lebanese Army troops and anti-government rioters. The United States ambassador, Robert McClintock, is still trying to mediate a settlement between the Christian and Moslem factions. The State Department in Washington says McClintock was asked by "Lebanese political elements" to lend his informal assistance in trying to resolve "local difference." The department spokesman denied that the ambassador is interfering in Lebanese affairs.

For the first time, Communist fighter planes today attacked Chinese Nationalist aircraft engaged in supplying Quemoy. The Nationalist Defense Ministry reports that four Mig-17's jumped a C-47 cargo plane as it was dropping food and medical supplies by parachute to the Quemoy garrison. The cargo plane made a crash landing. Two members of the crew were hurt.

The Moscow radio said today that the United States is "trying to create the impression that it is trying to ease tension in the Formosa area." The truth says Moscow, is that American policy has remained unchanged.

President Eisenhower entered Walter Reed Army Hospital today for his annual physical checkup. The medical tests are to be completed by tomorrow afternoon, when he expects to get in a round of golf.

This morning, the President conferred with Republican National Chairman Alcorn. Alcorn told reporters afterward that it would be "a very fair conclusion" that Eisenhower will take a more active personal role in this year's election campaign than he has in any other election since taking office. The President's political schedule, he said, will be expanded to give him "a very active part." Alcorn said that if the Democrats want to make Quemoy an issue in the campaign, "we certainly will meet them."

Governor Faubus said today that he would never open the closed high schools in Little Rock as integrated institutions. The only question, he said, is whether the facilities are to be used by the private school corporation on a segregated basis, "or not at all." The governor was asked...at a news conference...what he thought would happen if the schools were opened on that basis, in defiance of the federal courts. He said that in that case the federal government would have to send in U.S. marshals and the Army...and "forcibly eject" both teachers and students. The federal courts, he said, are "simply playing for a bloc of votes in the northern states."

In Norfolk, Virginia...a plan to give private instruction to 10thousand high school students was dropped today. Not a single public school teacher offered to serve the private foundation set up to meet the situation caused by the closing of schools.

Production workers are still on strike at most General Motors plants, due to local grievances. A new national contract...similar to the Ford and Chrysler settlements...was agreed on last night. Union and company officials both express hope that local issues will be settled quickly. U.A.W. President Walter Reuther has told the G.M. locals to return to work as soon as agreements are reached. One grievance affecting many locals is the difference in pay for similarly classified jobs.

President Meany of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. today agreed to arbitrate the strike of deck officers on the East and Gulf coasts.

The United Nations General Assembly has now been meeting here in New York for three weeks. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has been covering this General Assembly session. Dan, how would you sum it up so far?

SCHORR: The United Nations General Assembly, which ended its third week today, has seventy-two items on its agenda ranging all the way from Cyprus to Antarctica. As of tonight, however, neither of the world's two leading candidates for the title of crisis, Formosa Straits and the Middle East are listed on that agenda. They have been discussed, of course, at considerable length in a series of keynote speeches and even more interminably in the corridor and lounge palaver. But inscription on the agenda is a political act, a move in a diplomatic game in which the big building on the East River is only one arena.

Secreaary of State Dulles, early in the session, said he would ask for a debate on Formosa Straits if the Warsaw ambassadorial talks with Red China showed no early signs of progress. And yesterday, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko accused the United States and Britain of stalling on pulling their troops out of Lebanon and Jordan, said the Middle East issue should be put on the agenda, but he did not immediately move to do so. Thus, even a suggestion that an issue may be raised in the UN has its political meaning. The meaning, in Dulles's case, was that if the Chinese Communists were not concilliatory on Formosa Straits, the United States would ask the Assembly for a resolution condemning Red China's use of force, and this could be invoked to justify any action the United States woild take in support of the Nationalist defenders of the offshore islands. But Dulles now seems less inclined to bring the issue before the UN very soon. British persuasion and American confusion have combined to induce the State Department to wait out the Warsaw talks longer than originally intended. In Gromyko's case the threat to demand a debate on the Middle East appeared part of a complicated maneuver aimed at keeping the Middle Eastern pot boiling. Dag Hammarskjold, in submitting his tentative and incomplete peace plan for the region, had privately asked delegates not to debate it now. The Arab nations, whose resolution sent Secretary General Hammarskjold on that mission, appeared willing to remain silent, at least for thetime being. Nasser's Foreign MinisterMahmoud Fawzi, is arriving here from Cairo tomorrow and will consult the other Arab delegates, Gromyko jumped the gun on the Arabs, denouncing America and Britain, criticizing the Hammarskjold report as prejudiced, and he appeared in a role of being more Arab than the Arabs themselves. To most UN observers it looked like an attempt to force the hand of Egypt's Fawzi and the other Arab delegates.

Britain's withdrawal from Jordan, the American evacuation from Lebanon, is hardly a real issue any more, Britain's withdrawal from Jordan is conditional on an easing of tension. And Gromyko's move seemed aimed at raising tension and thus torpedoing the idea of Arab reconciliation. Even while he posed as defender of the Arab world. Jordan's delegate Abdul Rifai accused Russia today of an obstructionist policy on inter-Arab relations, of fishing in the troubled waters of the Middle East. It's doubtful that even Nasser is grateful for Russia's attempt to force his hand. The Middle Eastern situation, as seen from the UN tonight, looks obscure. But the Far Rastern situation looks even more obscure. The delegates of the Asia-Africa bloc met today and started trying to draft a statement calling on all concerned to keep cool and avoid an explosion in Formosa Straits. It's doubtful that the Asia-Africa statement, if they succeed in drafting one, will alter the situation much. The painful fact is that no one at the UN has found any way of doing much about the conflict about the offshore islands.

India's tireless Krishna Menon, stalking the lobbies and lounges, cane in hand, is trying to act as mediator. But there is no sign that he has any great influence on the Peiping regime at this moment. The other day, as though to show his credentials, Menon exhibited in the corridors what he called a special message from the Peiping government saying it wanted a peaceful settlement. It turned out that the "special message" had gone to several of the governments with which Red China has relations and simply repeated Peiping's position that the offshore islands were a Chinese internal matter.

Thus, after three weeks of the UN Assembly, there is little definite that can be said tonight. There are the tenuous outlines of a peace plan for the Middle East, if Russia does not succeed in wrecking it, and the UN has so far been unable to get any grip on the Formosa Straits crisis. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague Dan Schorr reporting on the United Nations General Assembly. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the werd for today.

But, first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The question is sometimes raised: What can the United Nations accomplish? I think is was three years ago that Dag Hammarskjold said, "The United Nations is not just a product of "do-gooders." It is harshly real. When people---just people---stop thinking of it as a weird Picasso abstraction, and see it as a drawing they made themselves, everything will be all right."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Oct. 6, 1958

This is the news:

Pope Pius today suffered a cerebral circulatory attack. / Although he showed some improvement during the day, his condition is still grave.

Here is the report of Winston Burdett in Rome.

(Tape runs 40 seconds,
ends on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y."

10

The White House has issued a statement...expressing President Eisenhower's "very deep concern."

Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter said today that the United States "welcomes" the declared intention of Communist China to suspend its shelling of the offshore islands. Peiping said yesterday that the bombardment would be suspended for one week, if the United States stopped escorting the supply convoys. Herter issued his statement in the absence of Secretary Dulles, who is vacationing at his Duck Island retreat. He expressed hope that this action by the Communists "foreshadows a permanent cessation of their armed attack." He said, "Should this prove to be the case, there would seem to be no further necessity for convoying the supply shipments." Herter went on to say that the question is being given "careful consideration." (The Communist bombardment has stopped, although the Nationalists---escorted by American warships---made a record delivery of supplies to Quemoy early today. Neither the State Department nor the Pentagon will say whether orders have gone out to the 7th Fleet, halting its convoy operation. The British Foreign Office said today...in commenting on the Peiping offer...that it was "glad to see any move in the direction of a relaxation of tension).

Red China today issued its twenty-third "serious warning"...in charging that American warships and planes have again violated Chinese territory. The Communists claim that the violation occurred in the Fukien area after they stopped bombarding Quemoy. They say it shows the United States is not really interested in peace.

The Atomic Energy Commission reports that the Russians fired another nuclear device yesterday in their current series of tests. This is the fifth Soviet test in a little more than two weeks. The detonation again took place north of the Arctic Circle. According to the A.E.C., it was of "lesser yield" than the four preceding tests.

The U.S. atomic submarine "Seawolf" came to the surface today after setting a new record by traveling submerged...continuously...for 60 days. The old record...of 31 days...was set last May by her sister submarine, the Skate. The Seawolf ended its two-month underwater test when it surfaced this morning, 15 miles south of Block Island in Long Island Sound. In the two months, it had traveled 13-thousand, 700 nautical miles non-stop within a 200-mile radius. Her skipper, Commander Richard Laning, said the voyage had "proved the feasibility of protracted flights in inner space."

A political development of some import in the Middle East. Sabri Assali, of Syria, today announced his resignation as one of the vice presidents of the United Arab Republic. Assali was the last premier of Syria before that country merged with Egypt under President Nasser. There have been reports that he was lukewarm to Nasser's program of reform.

The annual conference of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund opened today in New Delhi. President Eisenhower sent the conference a message...appealing to the 66 member nations to increase their contributions. In that way, he said, "the rising needs of our free world economy may be better served."

The White House announces that Harold Burton will retire next Monday as associate justice of the Supreme Court. Justice Burton told the President in a letter that he retiring "in accordance with competent medical advice and with a desire to serve the best interests of all concerned." Burton, a former Republican senator from Ohio, was named to the Supreme Court by President Truman in 1945. The White House says President Eisenhower has approved the resignation "with great regret."

The Supreme Court today began its regular fall term. There was the usual brief opening ceremony...and a separate opinion by Justice Frankfurter on the Little Rock school integration case. Frankfurter said the "tragic aspect" of the action of the State of Arkansas in blocking integration was that the power of the state "was not used to sustain law but for thwarting law." Criticism, he said, "need not be stilled." "Active obstruction or defiance is barred."

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals...in St. Louis...today extended for nine days the restraining order which said that the closed high schools in Little Rock may not be operated as private, segregated institutions. The three-judge court scheduled a further hearing for a week from Wednesday. (In oral arguments today, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked for an injunction...barring operation of the schools on a private, segregated basis.) (Richard Butler, counsel for the Little Rock School Board, said there will be no high school opened in Little Rock, unless the schools are leased to the private corporation.

In Clinton, Tennessee...rewards totaling 60-thousand dollars are being offered for the arrest and conviction of the person...or persons...who dynamited the Clinton High School on Saturday. Damage is estimated at 300-thousand dollars./ School Superintendent James Newman says classes probably ~~xxxxxxxx~~ can be resumed in a vacant grade school in nearby Oak Ridge by Thursday./ The school principal said, "We've been knocked down; we aren't out."

The New York Yankees won the fifth game of the World Series today, defeating the Milwaukee Braves, 7 to nothing. The Braves' lead in the series in now cut to three to two. The series resumes in Milwaukee on Wednesday after a day off for travel.

Edward R. Murrow: October 6, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The Formosa Strait crisis was marked over the week-end by two contradictory actions, one in a conciliatory move by the Chinese Communists in ordering a seven-day cease-fire, the other the issuance of two American pronouncements that seemed to reverse the conciliatory line taken up by Secretary Dulles and President Eisenhower last week. The President roundly criticized Senator Greene, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, for suggesting that home and allied opinion would not back the United States in a war over the offshore islands. Admiral Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, urged in an interview that no pressure be put on Chiang Kai-Shek to abandon the islands, or reduce his forces on them. The interview had been cleared with the White House, State Department and the Pentagon.

The contradiction between Communist policy and our own continued for a time today. The Communists had made their cease-fire conditional on the United States not convoying Nationalist supplies to the islands. Today the firing ceased and supplies flowed to the islands, but the American convoys went along as usual. This, however, was not deliberate defiance of the Communists' terms. The convoys had left Formosa before the Peiping proclamation was made. Today Under Secretary of State Herter said that so long as there is no firing on the islands, convoys are not needed.

Secretary Dulles said last week that if the Communists showed any "sign of give" in the Formosa crisis, the United States was prepared to modify its policy. The cease-fire order was "a sign of give", even though it did not give much, being only for a week and on conditions. However, the State Department accepted it on its face value, and so recommended to the White House.

There may be deeper implications than meet the eye, both in the Peiping offer and the Burke interview. The cease-fire offer was directed to the Chinese Nationalists alone, and was a patriotic appeal to them to abandon the Americans, and rejoin their fellow-Chinese on the mainland. It has been whispered in the United Nations for some time that secret negotiations were held between Communists and Nationalists in Hong Kong last summer, and broke down. The bombardment of Quemoy is said to have been the result of this breakdown. It never was clear who, if anyone, negotiated with the Communists. Washington is quite sure that nobody entitled to speak for Chiang's regime was doing so. Now, however, the Peiping regime is openly bidding for direct talks. And it is recalled that feelers have gone out over the last year or so from the Communists, in which the Nationalists were offered complete amnesty if they joined the Communists, and their leaders were promised good jobs on the mainland. Chiang himself, it was hinted, might be made a Field Marshal for life, or even be left governor of a semi-autonomous Formosa under Communist sovereignty.

Washington has been increasingly aware that the Communists might try to bid for the support of the Nationalists. That is one reason that nothing is said in Washington that suggests a curb on Chiang's freedom and sovereignty. And Admiral Burke eloquently urged against such a curb in yesterday's interview.

The United States no longer promises Chiang a victorious return to the mainland. Last week Secretary Dulles limited this return to a call from some revolutionary regime set up on the mainland. So the continued loyalty of Chiang to this country and the free world now depends, not on material rewards for Chiang, but pretty much on his personal integrity. Washington has unbounded faith in Chiang, but it appreciates more keenly than ever that it must treat him honorably as a free man. Peiping evidently hopes that Chiang has a price. It also hopes it can cut down the loyalty to Chiang of any followers who may be disheartened by the reduced scope of the Nationalist future.

The Chinese offer of a cease-fire sought to split the negotiations into two parts. One would be with the Nationalists alone over the offshore islands. The other would be at Warsaw with the United States over an American withdrawal from Formosa. But this is hardly a suggestion that a deal over the future of Formosa can be made at Warsaw. / For the cease-fire presumably is to end, unless Nationalists agree to direct negotiations, which they have said emphatically today they will not do, as Peiping must have anticipated.

So firing on the islands may well resume at the end of the week. / If so, Nationalist morale on the islands will not have improved. Men who have been long under fire and then have enjoyed a respite, do not go back under fire in high spirits. / So it looks as though the Communists have calculated carefully to gain something and lose nothing from their offer. They score with world opinion for making a conciliatory gesture, and they may have reduced the Nationalist will to resist. /

Back in a moment —

First give Bryan Welch a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The United States is moving cautiously...in its reaction to the Communist offer of a cease-fire. State Department officials may be reminded of the warning that John Clarke once gave. "Bare words," he said, "are no good bargain." And it was another Englishman, John Fuller, who said: "If you buy the cow, take the tail into the bargain."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, October 6, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Here is the report of Winston Burdett in Rome.

BURDETT: Behind the closed gates of his summer palace at Castel Gandolfo tonight, Pope Pius lies dangerously ill, stricken by a paralyzing cerebral attack. The Swiss Guards closed the huge gates to the palace courtyard promptly at ten o'clock this evening, as usual, while correspondents and cameramen were still keeping up their vigil in the little square outside. At twenty-five minutes past ten, the Pope's private physician, Professor Riccardo Galeazzi-List, came out of the gates in his car. He said that the Pope was improving - and that was all; he avoided all other questions. What his true condition is at this hour we do not know. And, now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The White House has issued a statement expressing President Eisenhower's very deep concern.

Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter said today that the United States welcomes the declared intention of ...

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Pope Pius today suffered a cerebral circulatory attack. Although he showed some improvement during the day, his condition is still grave.

Here is the report of Winston Burdett in Rome.

BURDETT: Behind the closed gates of his summer palace at Castel Gandolfo tonight, Pope Pius lies dangerously ill, striken by a paralyzing cerebral attack. The Swiss Guards closed the huge gates to the palace courtyard promptly at ten o'clock this evening, as usual, while correspondents and cameramen were still keeping up their vigil in the little square outside. At twenty-five minutes past ten, the Pope's private physician, Professor Riccardo Galeazzi-List, came out of the gates in his car. He said that the Pope was improving - and that was all; he avoided all other questions. What his true condition is at this hour we do not know. And, now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The White House has issued a statement expressing President Eisenhower's very deep concern.

Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter said today that the United States "welcomes" the declared intention of Communist China to suspend its shelling of the offshore islands. Peiping said yesterday that the bombardment would be suspended for one week, if the United States stopped escorting the supply convoys. Herter issued his statement in the absence of Secretary Dulles, who is vacationing at his Duck Island retreat. He expressed hope that this action by the Communists "foreshadows a permanent cessation of their armed attack." He said, "Should this prove to be the case, there would seem to be no further necessity for convoying the supply shipments." Herter went on to say that the question is being given "careful consideration." The Communist bombardment has stopped, although the Nationalists---escorted by American warships---made a record delivery of supplies to Quemoy early today. Neither the State Department nor the Pentagon will say whether orders have gone out to the 7th Fleet, halting its convoy operation. The British Foreign Office said today...in commenting on the Peiping offer...that it was "glad to see any move in the direction of a relaxation of tension."

Red China today isuued its twenty-third "serious warning"...in charging that American warships and planes have again violated Chinese territory. The Communists claim that the violation occurred in the Fukien area after they stopped bombarding Quemoy. They say it shows the United States is not really interested in peace.

The Atomic Energy Commission reports that the Russians fired another nuclear device yesterday in their current series of tests. This is the fifth Soviet test in a little more than two weeks.

The U.S. atomic submarine "Seawolf" came to the surface today after setting a new record by traveling submerged...continuously...for 60 days. The old record.. of 31 days...was set last May by her sister submarine, the Skate.

A political development of some import in the Middle East. Sabri Assali, of Syria, today announced his resignation as one of the vice presidents of the United Arab Republic. Assali was the last premier of Syria before that country merged with Egypt under President Nasser. There have been reports that he was lukewarm to Nasser's program of reform.

The White House announces that Harold Burton will retire next Monday as associate justice of the Supreme Court. Justice Burton told the President in a letter that he was retiring "in accordance with competent medical advice and with a desire to serve the best interests of all concerned." Burton, a former Republican senator from Ohio, was named to the Supreme Court by President Truman in 1945. The White House says President Eisenhower has approved the resignation "with great regret."

The Supreme Court today began its regular fall term. There was the usual brief opening ceremony...and a separate opinion by Justice Frankfurter on the Little Rock school integration case. Frankfurter said the "tragic aspect" of the action of the State of Arkansas in blocking integration was that the power of the state "was not used to sustain law, but for thwarting law." Criticism, he said, "need not be stilled." "Active obstruction or defiance is barred."

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals...in St. Louis...today extended for nine days the restraining order which said that the closed high schools in Little Rock may not be operated as private, segregated institutions. The three-judge court scheduled a further hearing for a week from Wednesday.

In Clinton, Tennessee...rewards totaling 60 thousand dollars are being offered for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons...who dynamited the Clinton High School on Saturday. Damage is estimated at 300-thousand dollars. School Superintendent James Newman says classes probably can be resumed in a vacant grade school in nearby Oak Ridge by Thursday. The school principal said, "We've been knocked down; we aren't out."

The New York Yankees won the fifth game of the World Series today, defeating the Milwaukee Braves, 7 to nothing. The Braves' lead in the series is now cut to three to two. The series resumes in Milwaukee on Wednesday after a day off for travel.

The Formosa Strait crisis was marked over the weekend by two contradictory actions, one in a conciliatory move by the Chinese Communists in ordering a seven day cease-fire, the other the issuance of two American pronouncements that seemed to reverse the conciliatory line taken up by Secretary Dulles and President Eisenhower last week. The President roundly criticized Senator Green, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, for suggesting that home and allied opinion would not back the United States in a war over the offshore islands. Admiral Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, urged in an interview that no pressure be put on Chiang Kai-Shek to abandon the islands, or reduce his forces on them. The interview had been cleared with the White House, State Department and the Pentagon.

The contradiction between Communist policy and our own continued for a time today. The Communists had made their cease-fire conditional on the United States not convoying Nationalist supplies to the islands. Today the firing ceased and supplies flowed to the islands, but the American convoys went along as usual. This, however, was not deliberate defiance of the Communists' terms. The convoys had left Formosa before the Peiping proclamation was made. Today Under Secretary of State Herter said that so long as there is no firing on the islands, convoys are not needed.

Secretary Dulles said last week that if the Communists showed any "sign of give" in the Formosa crisis, the United States was prepared to modify its policy. The cease-fire order was "a sign of give", even though it did not give much, being only for a week and on conditions. However, the State Department accepted it on its face value, and so recommended to the White House.

There may be deeper implications than meet the eye, both in the Peiping offer and the Burke interview. The cease-fire offer was directed to the Chinese Nationalists alone, and was a patriotic appeal to them to abandon the Americans, and rejoin their fellow-Chinese on the mainland. It has been whispered in the United Nations for some time that secret negotiations were held between Communists and Nationalists in Hong Kong last summer, and broke down. The bombardment of Quemoy is said to have been the result of this breakdown. It never was clear who, if anyone, negotiated with the Communists. Washington is quite sure that nobody entitled to speak for Chiang's regime was doing so. Now, however, the Peiping regime is openly bidding for direct talks. And it is recalled that feelers have gone out over the last year or so from the Communists, in which the Nationalists were offered complete amnesty if they joined the Communists, and their leaders were promised good jobs on the mainland. Chiang himself, it was hinted, might be made a Field Marshal for life, or even be left governor of a semi-autonomous Formosa under Communist sovereignty.

Washington has been increasingly aware that the Communists might try to bid for the support of the Nationalists. That is one reason that nothing is said in Washington that suggests a curb on Chiang's freedom and sovereignty. And Admiral Burke eloquently urged against such a curb in yesterday's interview.

The United States no longer promises Chiang a victorious return to the mainland. Last week Secretary Dulles limited this return to a call from some revolutionary regime set up on the mainland. So the continued loyalty of Chiang to this country and the free world now depends, not on material rewards for Chiang, but pretty much on his personal integrity. Washington has unbounded faith in Chiang, but it appreciates more keenly than ever that it must treat him honorably as a free man. Peiping evidently hopes that Chiang has a price. It also hopes it can cut down the loyalty to Chiang of any followers who may be disheartened by the reduced scope of the Nationalist future.

The Chinese offer of a cease-fire sought to split the negotiations into two parts. One would be with the Nationalists alone over the offshore islands. The other would be at Warsaw with the United States over an American withdrawal from Formosa. But this is hardly a suggestion that a deal over the future of Formosa can be made at Warsaw. For the cease-fire presumably is to end, unless Nationalists agree to direct negotiations, which they have said emphatically today they will not do, as Peiping must have anticipated.

So firing on the islands may well resume at the end of the week. If so, Nationalist morale on the islands will not have improved. Men who have been long under fire and then have enjoyed a respite, do not go back under fire in high spirits. So it looks as though the Communists have calculated carefully to gain something and lose nothing from their offer. They score with world opinion for making a conciliatory gesture, and they may have reduced the Nationalist will to resist.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First, George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The United States is moving cautiously...in its reaction to the Communist offer of a cease fire. State Department officials may be reminded of the warning that John Clarke once gave. "Bare words," he said, 'are no good bargain." And it was another Englishman, John Fuller, who said, "If you buy the cow, take the tail into the bargain."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 7, 1958

This is the news:

The condition of Pope Pius has taken a ~~slight~~ turn for the worse. This morning, his temperature was normal. There was no sign of paralysis, and he began taking regular nourishment. A medical bulletin said: "His condition in general remains satisfactory." Then late this afternoon, a Vatican spokesman reported complications. The temperature, blood pressure, and pulse rate of the Pontiff had increased slightly...causing new concern.

President Eisenhower today named Judge Potter Stewart of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals to succeed Justice Harold Burton on the Supreme Court. The retirement of Justice Burton for health reasons was announced last night. Judge Stewart is 43 years old and a Republican. He was appointed to the Circuit Court by Mr. Eisenhower in April, 1954. Before that, he was a Cincinnati attorney...and, between 1950 and 1953, a member of the Cincinnati City Council. ~~His father, James Garfield Stewart, is a justice of the Ohio Supreme Court.~~ ~~Judge Stewart told reporters that his appointment had come as a surprise.~~ Judge Stewart The circuit court ~~he~~ has been serving ~~xxxxxx~~ covers Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee. He said that in the four years he has been on the bench, he has participated in only one school integration case and that dealt with a situation in Ohio. The decision in that case, he said, upheld integration. ~~There is now an Eisenhower-appointed majority on the Supreme Court for the first time. Of the nine members of the court, Mr. Eisenhower named five...including Chief Justice Warren. Today, Judge Stewart received a recess appointment. A formal nomination...subject to Senate confirmation...will go to Congress when it reconvenes.~~

Secretary of State Dulles returned to Washington today after a long week-end at his Duck Island retreat. At the Washington Airport, Mr. Dulles said: "The Chinese Communists, after having brutally and incessantly bombarded Quemoy for over six weeks, now say they will be humanitarian and peaceful for one week." Dulles said it was not easy to evaluate the Communist statement. "But," he added, "at least for the moment there is a cessation of the bombing. This the United States has been vigorously seeking. Also, the development assures worldwide condemnation of the Chinese Communists if they again resume the fighting." That is Mr. Dulles' prepared statement in full.

Peiping radio quotes the Chinese Communist foreign minister...Chen Yee... as warning the United States not to interpret the temporary cease-fire, proclaimed by the Communists, as a sign of weakness. The foreign minister demanded...again...that all American forces be withdrawn from Formosa, and the Formosa Strait.

Eight Communist Migs flew over Quemoy today and were fired on by anti-aircraft batteries. The Nationalist Defense Ministry says the attack by Communist planes means that Red China already has violated its own cease-fire.

In Washington, the State Department rejected any suggestion that the Nationalists, by sending up an anti-aircraft barrage, had themselves violated the cease-fire. It said the Nationalist action was in response to "a provocative act"---namely, the flight of Communist planes over the island.

Nationalist reports from Formosa...which are not confirmed...say that the Chinese Communists are using the opportunity provided by the cease-fire, to strengthen their artillery positions on the China coast.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko indicated today that Russia will go on testing nuclear weapons for a considerable time. He told a news conference...here in New York...that the continuance of tests by the United States and Britain...after Russia suspended its testing last March...gives the Soviet Government "every ground" to go on experimenting. Until, he said, Russia has conducted the same number of tests as the United States and Britain have taken together as allies. / Gromyko urged the United Nations to approve the Soviet resolution...which recommends that all countries conducting tests end them at once, and then negotiate an appropriate agreement. He declined to say whether Russia would stop testing, even if the resolution were passed. / India's Krishna Menon told the → United Nations General Assembly today that tests must be suspended as a necessary preliminary to any over-all disarmament agreement. But, he said, "we must disarm our arguments first...because if every vote must weather a storm of suspicion, we won't get anywhere."

Premier Kassem of Iraq is reported to have crushed a military revolt, supporting his rival, Colonel Aref. The Associated Press...quoting reliable informants...says that Aref has been placed under house arrest. An entire regiment is said to have been disarmed. But no actual fighting appears to have taken place. It was Kassem and Aref who...together... overthrew the old Iraqi government last July.

In Paris, the DeGaulle government has called for new parliamentary elections late in November. The cabinet decided today to do away with proportional representation. French voters...under a new, less complicated system...will mark their preference for only one candidate. Under the old system, they voted for a list of candidates and gave their order of preference.

Governor Faubus of Arkansas charged today, that the Internal Revenue Service was trying to "get" him for income tax evasion. He told a news conference in Little Rock that the Federal Government had tried in that way, to punish him for his fight for state's rights. Faubus said he had received a letter from the Internal Revenue Service...saying that he owed taxes on income totaling more than a hundred thousand dollars. The income claims, he charged, dated back to 1954 and included rent on the governor's mansion (..where he lives rent-free.)..campaign expenses, and a car that he received as a gift. Faubus acknowledged that the district director of internal revenue had informed him that the letter had been sent prematurely, "and not in accordance with the applicable procedural instruction." The district director said he would review the matter thoroughly...and advise him (Faubus) as soon as possible. Meanwhile, the letter was to be considered of "no effect". In Washington, the Internal Revenue Service said of course the service does not try to "punish" anyone by asserting claims for additional taxes. The acting commissioner of internal revenue...Gordon Delk...pointed out that the district director already has "rescinded the action of the Little Rock agent as having been in error."

Edward R. Murrow: October 7, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Vice President Nixon told Republican leaders at their policy meeting with President Eisenhower yesterday that on his political tour last week he found the country most interested in peace and jobs. The Republican campaign declaration that was issued after the meeting did not mention peace or jobs. Nor did it use President Eisenhower's favorite term, "moderate Republicanism". Instead, it started off the congressional election campaign with a slashing attack on what was called the left-wing instincts of Democrats which, it was charged, would end in socialization and would make all Americans "pawns of a superstate".

The declaration sets the strategy of the Republican campaign for the next four weeks. That does not mean that the country will hear about nothing else. The Democrats will have themes of their own, possibly including peace and jobs, as well as President Eisenhower's leadership. But the Republicans have planned their fight and gone to battle.

The declaration disregards the fact that the past Congress has shown an unusual degree of bi-partisanship, and that Speaker Rayburn and Senator Lyndon Johnson, who have been the outstanding Democratic leaders, are certainly unaware of having "instincts leading to socialization" and a super-state. Instead, ~~it~~ we are promised an old-fashioned slugging match, engendering heat, noise, high feelings, and perhaps a heightened effort on the part of Republicans.

President Eisenhower took an active part in yesterday's deliberations, and will do more campaigning than originally planned. He was said to have been particularly distressed over the possibility that the Quemoy policy may be made a partisan issue, and to be ready to hit back hard if that proves to be true. However, foreign policy was omitted from the declaration.

As the declaration also omitted any reference to Mr. Eisenhower's moderate Republicanism, and focussed instead on Democratic radicalism, it seems to have been designed to unite the Republican ranks as much as to influence voters in general. It also seems clear that the slam-bang campaign now slated is expected to wake up any Republican inclined to apathy.

This reflects the influence of Vice President Nixon in Republican counsels. In his western speeches last week, he was hitting with the vigor he showed in previous campaigns, though with less vituperative overtones, and the stress in the declaration on taxation is the same Mr. Nixon has been using in his speeches.

The declaration makes the generalization that Democrats increase taxes and Republicans cut them. Since the introduction of the income tax, it says, there have been fifteen tax increases, fourteen voted by Democratic Congresses and only one by a Republican Congress. Of ten cuts in income tax, it said, seven were voted by Republican Congresses and three by Democratic Congresses. It boasts that the Eighty-Third Congress made the record tax cut of all times - seven billion four-hundred million dollars, which has saved tax payers by now thirty-three billion dollars, or two hundred dollars a year for every family of four. A Democratic Congress, it is argued, would go on a spending spree. Inflation would be inevitable, and private enterprise and individual initiative could not survive. Price and wage controls and regimentation would follow. Any Democratic-controlled Congress, it is charged, would be far to the left of the New and Fair Deals. It also is charged that the Democratic Party is dominated by certain - unnamed - politico-labor bosses and by left wing extremists, also unnamed. Nobody, the declaration says, will forget the grief brought by the New Deal and Fair Deal in the surge toward centralization. And all this, it added, preceded and was followed by two bloody wars, a remark that re-echoes the charge against the Democrats of being a war party.

Whatever effect such a campaign has on voters, it hardly can keep open much middle ground for continued bi-partisan co-operation in the next two years of Congress.

Back in a moment.—

Just gorge Bryan with a word about the weather,

Word for Today

Many rules have been laid down for the "game of politics". Sometimes the rules are broken with no apparent effect. That is because politics is not an exact science. But Theodore Roosevelt had a rule worth noting. "The most successful politician," he said, "is he who says what everybody is thinking most often and in the loudest voice."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The condition of Pope Pius has taken a turn for the worse. This morning, his temperature was normal. There was no sign of paralysis, and he began taking regular nourishment. A medical bulletin said: "His condition in general remains satisfactory." Then late this afternoon, a Vatican spokesman reported complications. The temperature, blood pressure, and pulse rate of the Pontiff had increased slightly...causing new concern.

President Eisenhower today named Judge Potter Stewart of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals to succeed Justice Harold Burton on the Supreme Court. The retirement of Justice Burton for health reasons was announced last night. Judge Stewart is 43 years old and a Republican. He was appointed to the Circuit Court by Mr. Eisenhower in April, 1954. Before that, he was a Cincinnati attorney... and, between 1950 and 1953, a member of the Cincinnati City Council. The circuit court Judge Stewart has been serving covers Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee. He said that in the four years he has been on the bench, he has participated in only one school integration case and that dealt with a situation in Ohio. The decision in that case, he said, upheld integration.

Secretary of State Dulles returned to Washington today after a long weekend at his Duck Island retreat. At the Washington Airport, Mr. Dulles said: "The Chinese Communists, after having brutally and incessantly bombarded Quemoy for over six weeks, now say they will be humanitarian and peaceful for one week." Dulles said it was not easy to evaluate the Communist statement. "But," he added, "at least for the moment there is a cessation of the bombing. This the United States has been vigorously seeking. Also the development assures worldwide condemnation of the Chinese Communists if they again resume the fighting." That is Mr. Dulles' prepared statement in full.

Peiping radio quotes the Chinese Communist foreign minister...Chen Yee... as warning the United States not to interpret the temporary cease-fire proclaimed by the Communists as a sign of weakness. The foreign minister demanded...again... that all American forces be withdrawn from Formosa and the Formosa Strait.

Eight Communist Migs flew over Quemoy today and were fired on by anti-aircraft batteries. The Nationalist Defense Ministry says the attack by Communist planes means that Red China already has violated its own cease-fiee.

In Washington, the State Department rejected any suggestion that the Nationalists by sending up an anti-aircraft barrage had themselves violated the cease-fire. It said the Nationalist action was in response to "a provocative act"---namely, the flight of Communist planes over the island.

Nationalist reports from Formosa...which are not confirmed...say that the Chinese Communists are using the opportunity provided by the cease-fire to strengthen t eir artillery positions on the China coast.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko indicated today that Russia will go on testing nuclear weapons for a considerable time. He told a news conference...here in New York...that the continuance of tests by the United States and Britain... after Russia suspended its testing last March...gives the Soviet Government "every ground" to go on experimenting. Until, he said, Russia has conducted the same number of tests as the United States and Britain have taken together as allies. Gromyko urged the United Nations to approve the Soviet resolution...which recommends that all countries conducting tests end them at once and then negotiate an appropriate agreement. He declined to say whether Russia would stop testing, even if the resolution were passed. India's Krishna Menon told the United Nations General Assembly today that tests must be suspended as a necessary preliminary to any over-all disarmament agreement. But, he said, "we must disarm our arguments first...because if every vote must weather a storm of suspicion, we won't get anywhere."

Premier Kassem of Iraq is reported to have crushed a military revolt, supporting his rival, Colonel Aref. The Associated Press quoting reliable informants...says that Aref has been placed under house arrest. An entire regiment is said to have been disarmed. But no actual fighting appears to have taken place. It was Kassem and Aref who...together...overthrew the old Iraqi government last July.

In Paris, the DeGaulle government has called for new parliamentary elections late in November. The cabinet decided today to do away with proportional representation. French voters...under a new, less complicated system...will mark their preference for only one candidate. Under the old system, they voted for a list of condidates and gave their order of preference.

Governor Faubus of Arkansas charged today the the Internal Revenue Service was trying to "get" him for income tax evasion. He told a news conference in Little Rock that the Federal Government had tried in that way to punish him for his fight for state's rights. Faubus said he had received a letter from the Internal Revenue Service...saying that he owed taxes on income totaling more than a hundred thousand dollars. The income claims, he charged, dated back to 1954, and included rent on the governor's mansion...where he lives rent-free...campaign expenses, and a car that he received as a gift. Faubus acknowledged that the district director of internal revenue had informed him that the letter had been sent prematurely "and not in accordance with the applicable procedural instruction." The district director said he would review the matter thoroughly... and advise him (Faubus) as soon as possible. Meanwhile, the letter was to be considered of "no effect." In Washington the Internal Revenue Service said of course the service does not try to "punish" anyone by asserting claims for additional taxes. The acting commissioner of internal revenue...Gordon Delk... pointed out that the district director already has "rescinded the action of the Little Rock agent as having been in error."

Vice President Nixon told Republican leaders at their policy meeting with President Eisenhower yesterday that on his political tour last week he found the country most interested in peace and jobs. The Republican campaign declaration that was issued after the meeting did not mention peace or jobs. Not did it use President Eisenhower's favorite term, "moderate Republicanism." Instead, it started off the congressional election campaign with a slashing attack on what was called the left-wing instincts of Democrats which, it was charged, would end in socialization and would make all Americans "pawns of a superstate."

The declaration sets the strategy of the Republican campaign for the next four weeks. That does not mean that the country will hear about nothing else. The Democrats will have themes of their own, possibly including peace and jobs, as well as President Eisenhower's leadership. But the Republicans have planned their fight and gone to battle.

The declaration disregards the fact that the past Congress has shown an unusual degree of bi-partisanship, and that Speaker Rayburn and Senator Lyndon Johnson, who have been the outstanding Democratic leaders, are certainly unaware of having "instincts leading to socialization" and a super-state. Instead, we are promised an old-fashioned slugging match, engendering heat, noise, high feelings, and perhaps a heightened effort on the part of Republicans.

President Eisenhower took an active part in yesterday's deliberations, and will do more campaigning than originally planned. He was said to have been particularly distressed over the possibility that the Quemoy policy may be made a partisan issue, and to be ready to hit back hard if that proves to be true. However, foreign policy was omitted from the declaration.

As the declaration also omitted any reference to Mr. Eisenhower's moderate Republicanism, and focussed instead on Democratic radicalism, it seems to have been designed to unite the Republican ranks as much as to influence voters in general. It also seems clear that the slam-bang campaign now slated is expected to wake up any Republican inclined to apathy.

This reflects the influence of Vice President Nixon in Republican counsels. In his western speeches last week, he was hitting with the vigor he showed in previous campaigns, though with less vituperative overtones, and the stress in the declaration on taxation is the same Mr. Nixon has been using in his speeches.

The declaration makes the generalizatoon that Democrats increase taxes and Republicans cut them. Since the introduction of the income tax, it says, there have been fifteen tax increases, fourteen voted by Democratic Congresses and only one by a Republican Congress. Of ten cuts in income tax, it said, seven were voted by Republican Congresses and three by Democratic Congresses. It boasts that the Eighty-Third Congress made the record tax cut of all times - seven billion four-hundred million dollars, which has saved tax payers by now thirty-three billion dollars, or two hundred dollars a year for every family of four. A Democratic Congress, it is argued, would go on a spending spree. Inflation would be inevitable, and private enterprise and individual initiative could not survive. Price and wage controls and regimentation would follow. Any Democratic-controlled Congress, it is charged, would be far to the left of the New and Fair Deals. It also is charged that the Democratic Party is dominated by certain - unnamed - politico-labor bosses and by left-wing extremists, also unnamed. Nobody, the declaration says, will forget the grief brought by the New Deal and Fair Deal in the surge toward centralization. And all this, it added, preceded and was followed by two bloody wars, a remark that re-echoes the charge against the Democrats of being a war party.

Whatever effect such a campaign has on voters, it hardly can keep open much middle ground for continued bi-partisan co-operation in the next two years of Congress.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment. First - George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Many rules have been laid down for the "game of politics." Sometimes the rules are broken with no apparent effect. That is because politics is not an exact science. But Theodore Roosevelt had a rule worth noting. "The most successful politician," he said, "is he who says what everybody is thinking most often and in the loudest voice."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 8, 1958

This is the news:

Pope Pius lies near death tonight at his summer residence in the Alban Hills, south of Rome. For a direct report, we switch now to Rome and Winston Burdett.

Tape runs 1:40
Ends on cue "--to ERM in NY."

40 = 10
10
40
20 5/25

The State Department said today that American warships have stopped convoying Nationalist supply vessels to Quemoy. The department added, however, that if the Communists break their cease-fire...and go back to shelling the island..."United States escort activity will be resumed forthwith to the extent necessary." It said that on this matter there has been full consultation between our government and the government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. A State Department spokesman said that "obviously" the United States hopes the cease-fire will continue...that an end to the fighting has been our "entire object". (The Communists have said they were suspending the shelling for seven days).

Peiping radio today broadcast a new demand for the withdrawal of American forces from the Formosa area. It warned that if the Americans stay, "military typhoons will occur every day." More than 700 American troops arrived on Formosa today...part of the force assigned to man our Nike-Hercules missiles. The Nike-Hercules is a ground-to-air missile designed for defense against air attack.

The State Department announces that..."barring unforeseen developments..." all American troops will be out of Lebanon by the end of the month. The withdrawal is being made, the announcement says, "in view of the progress made toward more stable international conditions in the area." It says the current unrest in Lebanon appears to have "essentially domestic origins." Nine thousand of the 16-thousand troops sent to Lebanon in July already have been withdrawn. Britain has announced plans to start pulling its forces out of Jordan by October 20.

Tonight, Premier Karami of Lebanon handed in his resignation to President Shehab. It was not known immediately whether the resignation would be accepted. Earlier in the day, 31 deputies in the Lebanese Parliament said they would vote "no confidence" in Premier Karami's two-week-old government. Only three more no-confidence votes would be needed to bring the government down.

Terrorist activity continued today on the island of Cyprus. One British soldier was killed in an ambush. Another soldier, and a civilian employed by the British Army, were hurt.

In Athens, Archbishop Makarios issued a statement...saying that the Greek Cypriot underground was not responsible for the fatal shooting of a British soldier's wife, last week. Nevertheless, the British government of Cyprus tonight officially blamed the incident on the underground movement.

American officials in Washington today welcomed the assurances of President Mirza of Pakistan, that his country will continue to honor all international commitments. The assurances are welcome because Pakistan is both a member of SEATO and the Baghdad Pact. President Mirza is ruling Pakistan through martial law...after abrogating the constitution, and dissolving all political parties. He said...in a proclamation...that he did this because of the "chaotic" political situation, and reports of impending revolt. He promised a new constitution "at an appropriate time."

In the United Nations today, Russia demanded that top priority be given to the question of ending nuclear weapons tests. Russia's deputy foreign minister Zorin argued in the political committee, that all United Nations members (be given an opportunity to speak) on the subject...before the three atomic powers meet to discuss a possible test suspension on October 31. American Ambassador Lodge said that President Eisenhower had made it "abundantly clear" how much the United States wants a suspension of tests. But the United States, he said, feels that there should be a debate on many disarmament questions---not just on suspension of tests.

The State Department said today that Russia's action...in closing the CBS News bureau in Moscow...constitutes indirect censorship, and [redacted] "a form of intimidation." /CBS News correspondent Paul Niven was told by Soviet authorities this morning that he must leave Moscow within a week---not for anything he had done, but because of what the Soviet Press Ministry described as "the large number of anti-Soviet broadcasts" made by CBS. Specifically, the recent television play, "The Plot to Kill Stalin". (Russian Ambassador Menshikov formally protested the broadcast last Monday. And the State Department told him, at that time, that the United States government does not censor network programs.) Niven asked the Press Ministry if CBS might apply to have a replacement sent to Moscow...or arrange for a stringer correspondent. [redacted] Both suggestions were rejected. CBS News issued a statement calling the action "inconsistent" with Russia's often expressed desire for greater mutual understanding. [redacted] The State Department [redacted] said the result will be "a reduction in the exchange of information between the Soviet Union and the United States."

A federal judge in Virginia said today that the private school programs in Charlottesville and Warren County are an "obvious evasion" of the Supreme Court mandate against segregation in the public schools. U.S. District Judge John Paul said the makeshift private schools must either admit Negro students...or stop using school teachers who are paid from public funds. Judge Paul said he was not ruling on the constitutionality of the Virginia law (under which the integrated schools were closed) because that already is being tested in the state supreme court. "But this court," he said, "does have the right to say that if the state is to abandon public education, it must abandon it completely."

The Federal Government today promised financial aid in rebuilding the integrated high school that was bombed last weekend in Clinton, Tennessee. The U.S. Commissioner of Education, Lawrence Derthick, gave assurance of financial help...after receiving a delegation of county officials from Clinton. The amount of federal aid, he said, will depend on a survey to be made by a field representative of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

President Eisenhower today named Gerald Morgan, White House special counsel, as deputy assistant to the President. / Wilton B. Persons was sworn in yesterday as Mr. Eisenhower's chief assistant...succeeding Sherman Adams, who resigned. Today's appointment is effective November first.

A Washington rug cleaning establishment said today that the 24-hundred-dollar oriental rug which Bernard Goldfine loaned to Mr. Adams, will be shipped back to the Boston industrialist "today or tomorrow."

Don Paarlberg...formerly of the Agriculture Department...was sworn in today as Mr. Eisenhower's adviser on economic affairs.

The World Series was evened up today...when the New York Yankees came from behind to edge out the Milwaukee Braves, 4 to 3 in ten innings. With the Yankees and Braves both with three wins to their credit, tomorrow's game in Milwaukee will decide the championship.

Edward R. Murrow: October 8, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Another democracy has been put in mothballs, this time in Pakistan. Its National Assembly and political parties have been dissolved, its Constitution abrogated and its affairs placed under martial law. This is the action of President Iskander Mirza. He has promised a new Constitution "at the appropriate time", a phrase sometimes used by dictators who intend to go on dictating for a good while.

There is at least a superficial resemblance between the role of President Mirza in Pakistan and that of Premier DeGaulle in France. Both came into power because of the incompetence of the democratic system. DeGaulle, however, induced the politicians to put him in, whereas Mirza threw the politicians out. But both men believe in democracy with a conservative tinge, and both took power so as to make over the democratic institutions that were failing to function well.

Mirza doesn't believe democracy as such is an answer to everything. He thinks Pakistan is not mature enough to govern itself wisely; that it is like a child who has to learn to walk and is bound to fall. When it falls, he thinks it has to be put on its feet again so as to go on learning. Now, in Pakistan, the child certainly has fallen, and the question is when Mirza will help it to its feet again.

The immediate crisis that led to Mirza's drastic action resulted from the resignation of six ministers from the coalition Cabinet. They belong to the Awami League, and walked out because they were sure that Prime Minister Noon was not going to hold a general election in February as he is pledged to do. This would have been Pakistan's first nation-wide democratic election.

The long delay in holding a general election is a sign of the trouble Pakistan has had in launching itself as a democratic state. To begin with, the Moslems took a long time drafting a Constitution, and came near to making Pakistan an outright theocratic state, subordinate to Islamic law. However, as finally adopted, the relations with Islamic law were left to be reviewed by a commission at a later date.

The first Pakistan Assembly was made up of former members of the Indian Assembly before partition. It was overthrown in 1954. The issue of its overthrow was then submitted to the courts, which ruled after many long months that the ouster would be valid if a new Assembly were set up. So a constituent Assembly was elected by indirect vote by provincial legislatures, and after adopting the Constitution, continued to rule pending a general election. This is the Assembly now thrown onto the scrap heap. Ther-

The politicians seem to have been in no hurry to risk their power and their jobs at the polls.

President Mirza also is not rushing right off to the people. In his proclamation he says that "the mentality of the political parties has sunk so low" that he no longer believes that elections will improve the chaotic internal condition. He has important reforms to put through, in the field of education and agriculture.

The Foreign Offices of Pakistan's neighbors and allies, as well as its opponents, are closely watching for signs of what Mirza's seizure of power means to the country's foreign policy. He is known as one of the staunchest anti-Communists in the country. As a graduate of the Indian Civil Service - where he had a distinguished career - he is oriented to the West. He counts as a strong and solid man. India undoubtedly hopes that he will be strong enough to reach a settlement over Kashmir and the sharing of river waters.

But Mirza's proclamation contains a disturbing sentence. "We desire", it said, "to have friendly relations with all countries, but political adventurers try their best to create bad blood and misunderstanding between us and countries like the Soviet Union, the United Arab Republic and the People's Republic of China." This sounds like a quiet knock on the door of Cairo and the Iron Curtain countries. But students of Pakistan think it may have a different meaning. They believe Moscow might believe that Mirza's coming to power will result in the United States getting missile bases in East Pakistan, and that Mirza is only trying to allay Russian fears. He went on in his proclamation to promise that Pakistan will continue to honor all international obligations undertaken to safeguard her security. And this reads like a quiet promise to remain faithful to the Bagdad Pact.

Washington is watching the events closely, and can be expected to use its influence in due course to induce Mirza to set Pakistan's fallen democracy back on its feet again.

Back in a moment. -
Just gorge Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Pope Pius has spoken out in his lifetime on many subjects. In 1956, [redacted] he said:

"In the name of religion, of civilization, and of right human sentiment, let there be an end to illegal and brutal repressions...to plans for war... to political preponderance among powers...all of which change earthly life into an abyss of anxiety and terror...and deaden the spirit."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, October 8, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Pope Pius lies near death tonight at his summer residence in the Alban hills south of Rome. For a direct report, we switch now to Rome - and Winston Burdett.

BURDETT: The doctors of Pope Pius XII, who for the past several hours has been lying insensible on his sickbed in Castel Gandolfo, do not expect that he will live through the night. This report comes from Vatican Radio, indeed, from the Vatican speaker who has been broadcasting through the day directly from the antechamber of the Pope's sickroom. It is now past midnight in Rome and it is now reported by that broadcaster that the Pope's doctors had despaired of saving him ever since three o'clock this afternoon. That was immediately following the attack of cardio-pneumonia which in turn followed a cerebral stroke earlier in the day. The doctors have been administering antibiotics but without hope of changing the situation. The Vatican broadcaster, in Castel Gandolfo, says that the Pope's temperature has risen above 104 Fahrenheit, his breathing is hard, he's sinking from moment to moment. The Pope's chief physician, he reports, has said that it is the consensus of all four attending doctors that the Pope's cardio circulatory system will fail during the night. This, then, is the night of the final vigil. A Pontifical Honor Guard has taken charge of the palace in Castel Gandolfo in preparation for the expected death. In that hushed antechamber are gathered the Pope's closest relatives; his nieces and nephews and his sister, his closest collaborators at the Vatican, officials of the Secretariate of State, cardinals of the Roman Curia, members of the Pontifical Court, all waiting outside the door of an old man, in the eighty-third year of his life, the twentieth year of his pontificate, ill beyond hope, but still resisting to the very end. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. P. O.

MURROW: ...

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Pope Pius lies near death tonight at his summer residence in the Alban Hills, south of Rome. For a direct report, we switch now to Rome and Winston Burdett.

BURDETT: The doctors of Pope Pius XII, who for the past several hours has been lying insensible on his sickbed in Castel Gandolfo, do not expect that he will live through the night. This report comes from Vatican Radio, indeed from the Vatican speaker who has been broadcasting through the day directly from the antechamber of the Pope's sickroom. It is now past midnight in Rome and it is now reported by that broadcaster that the Pope's doctors had despaired of saving him ever since three o'clock this afternoon. That was immediately following the attack of cardio-pneumonia which in turn followed a cerebral stroke earlier in the day. The doctors have been administering antibiotics but without hope of changing the situation. The Vatican braadcaster, in Castel Gandolfo says that the Pope's termperature has risen above 104 Fahrenheit, his breathing is hard, he's sinking from moment to moment. The Pope's chief physician, he reports, has said that it is the consensus of all four attending doctors that the Pope's cardio-circulatory system will fail during the night. This, then, is the night of the final vigil. A Pontifical Honor Guard has taken charge of the palace in Castel Gandolfo in prepatation for the expected death. In that hushed antechamber are gathered. the pope's closest relatives; his nieces and nephews and his sister, his closest collaborators at the Vatican, officials of the Secretariate of State, cardinals of the Roman Curia, members of the Pontifical Court, all waiting outside the door of an old man, in the eighty-third year of his life, the twentieth year of his pontificate, ill beyond hope, but still resisting to the very end.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The State Department said today that American warships have stopped convoying Nationalist supply vessels to Quemoy. The Department added, however, that if the Communists break their cease-fire...and go back to shelling the island..."United States escort activity will be resumed forthwith to the extent necessary." It said that on this matter there has been full consultation between our government and the government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek. A State Department spokesman said that "obviously" the United States hopes the cease-fire will continue...that an end to the fighting has been our "entire object." (The Communists have said they were suspending the shelling for seven days.)

The State Department announces that "barring unforeseen developments"... all American troops will be out of Lebanon by the end of the month. The withdrawal is being made, the announcement says, "in view of the progress made toward more stable international conditions in the area." It says the current unrest in Lebanon appears to have "essentially domestic origins." Nine thousand of the 16-thousand troops sent to Lebanon in July already have been withdrawn. Britain has announced plans to start pulling its forces out of Jordan by October 20th,

Tonight, Premier Karami of Lebanon handed in his resignation to President Shehab. It was not known immediately whether the resignation would be accepted. Earlier in the day, 31 deputies in the Lebanese Parliament said they would vote "no confidence" in Premier Karami's two-week-old government. Only three more no-confidence votes would be needed to bring the government down.

Terrorist activity continued today on the island of Cyprus. One British soldier was killed in an ambush. Another soldier and a civilian employed by the British Army were hurt.

In Athens, Archbishop Makarios issued a statement...saying that the Greek Cypriot underground was not responsible for the fatal shooting of a British soldier's wife last week. Nevertheless, the British government of Cyprus tonight officially blamed the incident on the underground movement.

American officials in Washington today welcomed the assurances of President Mirza of Pakistan that his country will continue to honor all international commitments. The assurances are welcome because Pakistan is both a member of SEATO and the Baghdad Pact. President Mirza is ruling Pakistan through martial law...after abrogating the constitution and dissolving all political parties. He said...in a proclamation...that he did this because of the "chaotic" political situation and reports of impending revolt. He promised a new constitution "at an appropriate time."

In the United Nations today, Russia demanded that top priority be given to the question of ending nuclear weapons tests. Russia's deputy foreign minister Zorin argued in the political committee that all United Nations members be given an opportunity to speak on the subject....before the three atomic powers meet to discuss a possible test suspension on October 31. American Ambassador Lodge said that President Eisenhower had made it "abundantly clear" how much the United States wants a suspension of tests. But, the United States, he said, feels that there should be a debate on many disarmament questions---not just on suspension of tests.

The State Department said today that Russia's action...in closing the CBS News bureau in Moscow...constitutes indirect censorship and "a form of intimidation." CBS News correspondent Paul Niven was told by Soviet authorities this morning that he must leave Moscow within a week---not for anything he had done, but because of what the Soviet Press Ministry described as "the large number of anti-Soviet broadcasts" made by CBS. Specifically the recent television play, "The Plot to Kill Stalin." (Russian Ambassador Menshikov formally protested the broadcast last Monday. And the State Department told him at that time that the United States government does not censor network programs.) Niven asked the Press Ministry if CBS might apply to have a replacement sent to Moscow...or arrange for a stringer correspondent. Both suggestions were rejected. CBS News issued a statement calling the action inconsistent with Russia's often expressed desire for greater mutual understanding. The State Deparmment said the result will be "a reduction in the exchange of information between the Soviet Union and the United States."

A federal judge in Virginia said today that the private school program in Charlottesville and Warren County are an "obvious evasion" of the Supreme Court mandate against segregation in the public schools. U.S. District Judge John Paul said the makeshift private schools must either admit Negro students...or stop using school teachers who are paid from public funds. Judge Paul said he was not ruling on the constitutionality of the Virginia law (under which the integrated schools were closed.) because that already is being tested in the state supreme court. "But this court," he said, "does have the right to say that if the state is to abandon public education, it must abandon it completely."

The Federal Government today promised financial aid in rebuilding the integrated high school that was bombed last weekend in Clinton, Tennessee. The United States Commissioner of Education, Lawrence Derthick, gave assurance of financial help...after receiving a delegation of county officials from Clinton. The amount of federal aid, he said, will depend on a survey to be made by a field representative of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The World Series was evened up today...when the New York Yankees came from behind to edge out the Milwaukee Braves, 4 to 3 in ten innings. With the Yankees and Braves both with three wins to their credit, tomorrow's game in Milwaukee will decide the championship.

Another democracy has been put in mothballs, this time in Pakistan. Its National Assembly and political parties have been dissolved, its Constitution abrogated and its affairs placed under martial law. This is the action of President Iskander Mirza. He has promised a new Constitution "at the appropriate time," a phrase sometimes used by dictators who intend to go on dictating for a good while.

There is at least a superficial resemblance between the role of President Mirza in Pakistan and that of Premier DeGaulle in France. Both came into power because of the incompetence of the democratic system. De Gaulle, however, induced the politicians to put him in, whereas Mirza threw the politicians out. But both men believe in democracy with a conservative tinge, and both took power so as to make over the democratic institutions that were failing to function well.

Mirza doesn't believe democracy as such is an answer to everything. He thinks Pakistan is not mature enough to govern itself wisely; that it is like a child who has to learn to walk and is bound to fall.. When it falls, he thinks it has to be put on its feet again so as to go on learning. Now, in Pakistan, the child certainly has fallen, and the question is when Mirza will help it to its feet again.

The immediate crisis that led to Mirza's drastic action resulted from the resignation of six ministers from the coalition Cabinet. They belong to the Awami League, and walked out because they were sure that Prime Minister Noon was not going to hold a general election in February as he is pledged to do. This would have been Pakistan's first nation-wide democratic election.

Mirza's proclamation contains a disturbing sentence. "We desire," it said, "to have friendly relations with all countries, but political adventurers try their best to create bad blood and misunderstanding between us and countries like the Soviet Union, the United Arab Republic and the People's Republic of China."

This sounds like a quiet knock on the door of Cairo and the Iron Curtain countries. But students of Pakistan think it may have a different meaning. They believe Moscow might believe that Mirza's coming to power will result in the United States getting missile bases in East Pakistan, and that Mirza is only trying to allay Russian fears. He went on in his proclamation to promise that Pakistan will continue to honor all international obligations undertaken to safeguard her security. And this reads like a quiet promise to remain faithful to the Baghdad Pact.

Washington is watching the events closely, and can be expected to use its influence in due course to induce Mirza to set Pakistan's fallen democracy back on its feet again.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Pope Pius has spoken out in his lifetime on many subjects. In 1956, he said: "In the name of religion, of civilization, and of right human sentiment, let there be an end to illegal and brutal repressions...to plans for war... to political preponderance among powers...all of which change earthly life into an abyss of anxiety and terror...and deaden the spirit."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 9, 1958

This is the news:

Tonight, tribute to the life and work of Pope Pius is being expressed by religious and secular leaders in all but Communist countries. President Eisenhower said, "The world is poorer. He constantly championed the cause of a just peace among the nations of the earth." Queen Elizabeth expressed her "deep sorrow". Prime Minister Nehru of India offered his "sincere condolences". And there were tributes from Jewish rabbis, the Church of England, and Protestant Church leaders in the United States. Moscow radio did not report the Pope's death on its home service until this afternoon---and then only in two sentences. In a few minutes, we will have a direct report from Rome.

The political committee of the United Nations General Assembly today began its debate on world disarmament, after first observing a minute of silence to mark the death of Pope Pius the Twelfth. After an hour of ineffectual debate, the committee adjourned...in hope that some kind of compromise might be worked out. The United States and Britain are reported drafting a resolution...proposing that no nuclear tests be conducted, so long as negotiations for a permanent test ban are in progress. The resolution refers directly to the talks with Russia, scheduled to start in Geneva at the end of this month. Russia has agreed to the meeting. But it threatens to continue testing, until its nuclear explosions are numerically equal to those of both Britain and the United States.

An agreement on exchanging movies between the United States and Russia was signed today in Moscow. The Russians will see 10 American films, including "Oklahoma", in exchange for seven Soviet films, which will be exhibited in the United States. The arrangement was worked out under the cultural exchange program agreed on in Washington last January.

President Chiang Kai-shek said today that Peiping had tried to split the United States and Nationalist China, and had failed./ Working together, he said, we have not only foiled the Communist attempt to land on Quemoy, but have stabilized the Far Eastern situation as a whole./ Chiang charged that in calling a temporary cease-fire, Communist China had resorted to "political treachery". The Communists, he warned, may expand their hostilities. He said that if they do this, they invite "concerted action by the anti-aggression forces of the free world."/ And he predicted that, in addition to this concerted action, the Chinese people on the mainland would revolt.

Chiang's statement was issued on the occasion of the 47th anniversary of the Chinese Republic. In another statement...marking the anniversary... Foreign Minister Huang warned that the Nationalists never will give up Quemoy or Matsu as the price for a permanent cease-fire./ And the Nationalist Vice President is quoted as saying that the United States should break off the Warsaw talks.

The sixth in the current series of meetings between the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors will be held in Warsaw tomorrow. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, was asked at a news conference today whether the United States was doing anything in the Warsaw talks to get the seven-day ceasefire extended. He said "of course" the United States is pressing for a permanent cease-fire. That is what it has been doing "from the outset".

The Nationalists took advantage of the cease-fire today to land an estimated 7-thousand tons of supplies on Quemoy.

A thousand civilians were evacuated from Quemoy---most of them high school students and teachers. /And CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reports from Little Quemoy that all civilians who want to leave that island have been told to register for evacuation. /Kalisbher says that 700 persons...or about half the population of the small island... have registered.

The situation in Lebanon remains confused. President Shehab conferred during the day with leaders of the Christian and Moslem factions. A report that a new military government might take control is not confirmed. And there are still conflicting reports on whether Premier Karami has resigned.

The New York Yankees have won the World Series...by defeating the Milwaukee Braves 6 to 2 ~~[illegible] This is the greatest World Series comeback in 33 years. After the fourth game, the Braves were leading in the series, 3 to 1. The Yankees had to win the next three games---and they did!~~

Acting Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles says that he has ~~[illegible]~~ cautioned American military men (in this country and overseas) ~~[illegible]~~ against making political statements. They have been told to be "very careful" because "almost any statement about the military situation is likely to have political overtones." ~~Mr. Quarles made this disclosure today in a news conference at the Pentagon. He acted in the absence of Secretary McElroy, who is making a tour of military bases in the Far East.~~

Now, for a direct report on the preparations which are being made in Rome...attendant to the death of Pope Pius. //here is Winston Burdett.

(Tape runs 5:50
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague, Winston Burdett, reporting from Rome.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But, first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Pope Pius is generally recognized as one of the greatest of all Popes. Former President Truman said today that he believed Pius to have been the greatest statesman in the Vatican in 200 years. Certainly this Pope was esteemed by leaders...and followers...of all faiths. As John Clarke observed in the 17th Century, "Goodness and greatness do not always go together."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, October 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now, for a direct report on the preparations which are being made in Rome, attendant to the death of Pope Pius, here is Winston Burdett.

BURDETT: The funeral ceremonies for Pius XII will begin in Rome tomorrow, and in some ways at least they will differ radically from the rites held for any other pope in recent history. His body will be transferred tomorrow afternoon from Castel Gandolfo, where he died, to the great basilica of St. John Lateran, which is the church and See of the Popes as bishops of Rome. From that church, dressed in his full ceremonial robes, followed by the entire pontifical court and the Roman clergy, the body of Pius will be borne in solemn public procession through the streets of Rome, past the Coliseum and the Arch of Constantine, down the broad thoroughfare that now sweeps through the ruins of the Roman Forum, into the heart of the old city, where Pius grew up and studied as a boy, past the renaissance church that hides the house where he was born, and then across the Tiber to Vatican City and St. Peter's. Such a procession has no precedent in the annals of the modern popes. For three days the body of Pope Pius will lie in state, on a catafalque, in the Chapel of the Most Holy Sacrament in St. Peter's, and thousands of foreign pilgrims and native Romans will pass his bier to pay a last farewell. On the third or fourth day, October 12th or 13th, according to Vatican sources tonight, the burial rites will be held at the main altar of the basilica. The Pope's body will be blessed and, still vested in his pontifical robes, will be placed in a triple wooden casket and lowered into a marble vault beneath the altar. The funeral services by long tradition continue for six days after the burial, with a cardinal celebrating a requiem Mass each day. These ritual arrangements in honor of Pope Pius were decided on today by the fifteen cardinals who are now present in Rome. The cardinals held the first of a series of special meetings which they will now continue to hold each day. They also elected one of their own member, Cardinal Masella, 74 yrs. old, to be the chamberlain of the Holy Roman Church, a very special post which Pope Pis left vacant. The chamberlain is responsible for administering the affairs of the Vatican until a new pope is elected. During this interval the cardinals are the trustees of the papal power and the chamberlain is the chief coordinator. But neither he nor they can exercise the papal power. That power is now suspended. It does not reside in the College of Cardinals and that is why this period is called the "vacancy of the Holy See." No briefs or bulls can now be issued. Nothing that the late Pope has ever done can now be overruled or altered, only the next Pope can do that. Nothing can be changed at St. Peter's Basilica or at the palaces of the Vatican. No agreements can be signed with foreign states. No new laws can be passed in Vatican City. No provisions made by Pius, but left unfulfilled by him, may now be executed. No new appointments can be made, not even of the most humble lay officials. Nothing can be touched. A main duty of a chamberlain is to take charge of all properties of the Holy See, whether at the Vatican, in Italy or in foreign lands, and transmit them intact to Pope Pius's successor. The authority of the cardinals and life itself at the Vatican, is thus limited to routine, with the single great exception that on the cardinals now falls the duty of electing the new pope. So in the next few days, as the funeral ceremonies go forward, the cardinals at their daily meetings must now organize and prepare for the coming conclave. The conclave is the elective assembly of the world's cardinals. The cardinals who are now in Rome will prepare the arrangements down to the last detail, from the date that the conclave is to open to the distribution by lot of the rooms the cardinals will occupy, the supply of food, the appointment of doctors and barbers, the admission of carpenters and the assignment of the inside keys. For this elective assembly is not only secret, it is completely cut off from the outside world. Its rule is absolute seclusion. The princes of the church are double-locked inside their living quarters at the Vatican until they have chosen a new pope by a majority of two-thirds plus one. And in the next few days, as the preparations move forward, cardinals from around the world will be arriving in Rome. The first to arrive, since the Pope's death, was Francis Cardinal Spellman, of New York. He flew in by plane this evening from the Azores. A second important arrival tonight was Giovanni Batista Montini, the Archbishop of Milan, a prelate of recognized stature and ability who declined a cardinal's hat at the last consistory so that he might remain at the Vatican as Pope Pius's leading diplomat at the Secretariate of State. If Montini were elected pope, it would be a sensational event, for the archbishop is not a cardinal. And for generations past the Sacred College has always chosen one of its own members. And yet in the early speculation, Montini of Milan, is a leading contender, and legally, he could be pope. Under the Vatican constitution, a pope may or may not be a member of the Sacred College. Indeed, he may or may not be a priest. If he is neither priest nor bishop, but a layman, he must then be ordained and consecrated. The principle was reaffirmed more than once by Pope Pius himself.

And when will the conclave begin? The law of the Vatican is very explicit on that point. The cardinals should begin the election within 15 days and under no circumstances later than 18 days after the death of the late pope. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in N. Y. Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Tonight, tribute to the life and work of Pope Pius is being expressed by religious and secular leaders in all but Communist countries. President Eisenhower said, "The world is poorer. He constantly championed the cause of a just peace among the nations of the earth." Queen Elizabeth expressed her "deep sorrow." Prime Minister Nehru of India offered his "sincere condolences." And there were tributes from Jewish rabbis, the Church of England, and Protestant Church leaders in the United States. Moscow radio did not report the Pope's death on its home service until this afternoon---and then only in two sentences. In a few minutes, we will have a direct report from Rome.

The political committee of the United Nations General Assembly today began its debate on world disarmament after first observing a minute of silence to mark the death of Pope Pius the Twelfth. After an hour of ineffectual debate, the committee adjourned...in hope that some kind of compromise might be worked out. The United States and Britain are reported drafting a resolution...proposing that no nuclear tests be conducted so long as negotiations for a permanent test ban are in progress. The resolution refers directly to the talks with Russia scheduled to start in Geneva at the end of this month. Russia has agreed to the meeting. But it threatens to continue testing until its nuclear explosions are numerically equal to those of both Britain and the United States.

An agreement on exchanging movies between the United States and Russia was signed today in Moscow. The Russians will see 10 American films, including "Oklahoma," in exchange for seven Soviet films whi h will be exhibited in the Untied States. The arrangement was worked out under the cultural exchange program agreed on in Washington last January.

President Chiang Kai-Shek said today that Peiping had tried to split the United States and Nationalist China and had failed. Working together, he said, we have not only foiled the Communist attempt to land on Quemoy, but have stabilized the Far Eastern situation as a whole. Chiang charged that in calling a temporary cease-fire Communist China had resorted to "political treachery." The Communists, he warned, may expand their hosti lities. He said that if they do this, they invite "concerted action by the anti-aggression forces of the free world." And he predicted that, in addition to this concerted action, the Chinese people on the mainland would revolt.

Chiang's statement was issued on the occasion of the 47th anniversary of the Chinese Republic. In another statement...marking the anniversary... Foreign Minister Huang warned that the Nationalists never will give up Quemoy or Matsu as the price for a permanent cease-fire. And the Nationalist Vice President is quoted as saying that the United States should break off the Warsaw talks.

The sixth in the current series of meetings between the American and Chinese Communist ambassadors will be held in Warsaw tomorrow. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, was asked at a news conference today whether the United States was doing anything in the Warsaw talks to get the seven-day ceasefire extended. He said "of course" the United States is pressing for a permanent cease-fire. Thit is what it has been doing "from the outset."

The Nationalists took advantage of the cease-fire today to land an estimated 7-thousand tons of supplies on Quemoy.

A thousand civilians were evacuated from Quemoy---most of them high school students and teachers. And CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reports from Little Quemoy that all civilians who want to leave that island have been told to register for evacuation. Kalischer says that 700 persons...or about half the population of the small island...have registered.

The situation in Lebanon remains confused. President Shehab conferred during the day with leaders of the Christian and Moslem factions. A report that a new military government might take control is not confirmed. And there are still conflicting reports on whether Premier Karami has resigned.

The New York Yankees have won the World Series...by defeating the Milwaukee Braves 6 to 2.

Acting Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles says that he has cautioned American military men in this country and overseas against making political statements. They have been told to be "very careful" because "almost any statement about the military situation is likely to have political overtones."

Now, for a direct report on the preparations which are being made in Rome, attendant to the death of Pope Pius, here is Winston Burdett.

BURDETT: The funeral ceremonies for Pope Pius XII will begin in Rome tomorrow, and in some ways at least they will differ radically from the rites held for any other pope in recent history. His body will be transferred tomorrow afternoon from Castel Gandolfo, where he died to the great basilica of St. John Lateran, which is the church and See of the Popes as bishops of Rome. From that church, dressed in his full ceremonial robes, followed by the enitre pontifical court and the Roman clergy, the body of Pius will be borne in solemn public procession through the streets of Rome, past the Coliseum and the Arch of Constantine, down the broad thoroughfare that now sweeps through the ruins of the Roman Forum, into the heart of the old city, where Pius grew up and studied as a boy, past the renaissance church that hides the house where he was born, and then across the Tiber to Vatican City and St. Peter's. Such a procession has no precedent in the annals of the modern popes. For three days the body of Pope Pius will lie in state, on a catafalque, in the Chapel of the Most Holy Sacrament in St. Peter's and thousands of foreign pilgrims and native Romans will pass his bier to pay a last farewell. On the third or fourth day, October 12th or 13th, according to Vatican sources tonight, the burial rites will be held at the main altar of the basilica. The Pope's body will be blessed and, still vested in his pontifical robes, will be placed in a triple wooden casket and lowered into a marble vault beneath the altar. The funeral services by long tradition continue for six days after the burial, with a cardinal celebrating a requiem Mass each day. These ritual arrangements in honor of Pope Pius were decided on today by the fifteen cardinals who are now present in Rome. The cardinals held the first of a series of special meetings which they will now continue to hold each day. They also elected one of their own members, Cardinal Masella, 74 years old to be the chamberlain of the Holy Roman Church, a very special post which Pope Pius left vacant. The chamberlain is responsible for administering the affairs of the Vatican until a new pope is elected. During this interval the cardinals are the trustees of the papal power and the chamberlain is the chief coordinator. But neither he nor they can exercise the papal power. That power is now suspended. It does not reside in the College of Cardinals and that is why this period is called the "vacancy of the Holy See." No briefs or bulls can now be issued. Nothing that the late Pope has ever done can now be overruled or altered, only the next Pope can do that. Nothing can be changed at St. Peter's Basilica or at the palaces of the Vatican. No agreements can be signed wtth foreign states. No new laws can be passed in Vatican City. No provisions made by Pius, but left unfulfilled by him, may now be executed. No new appointments can be made, not even of the most humble lay officials. Nothing can be touched. A main duty of a chamberlain is to take charge of all properties of the Holy See, whether at the Vatican, in Italy or in foreign lands, and transmit them intact to Pope Pius's successor. The authority of the cardinals and life itself at the Vatican, is thus limited to routine, with the single great exception that on the cardinals now falls the duty of electing the new pope. So in the next few days, as the funeral ceremonies go forward, the cardinals at their daily meetings must now organize and prepare for the coming conclave. The conclave is the elective assembly of the world's cerdinals. The cardinals who are now in Rome will prepare the arrangement down to the last detail, from the date that the conclave is to open to the distribution by lot of the rooms the cardinals will occupy, the supply of food, the appointment of the doctors and barbers, the admission of carpenters and the assignment of the inside keys. For this elective assembly is not only secret, it is completely cut off from the outside world. Its rule is absolute seclusion. The princes of the church are double-locked inside their living quarters at the Vatican until they have chosen a new pope by a majority of two-thirds plus one. And in the next few days, as the preparations move forward, cardinals from around the world will be arriving in Rome. The first to arrive, since the Pope's death, was Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York. He flew in by plane this evening from the Azores. A second important arrival tonight was Giovanni Batista Montini, the Archbishop of Milan, a prelate of recognized stature and ability who declined a cardinal's hat at the last consistory so that he might remain at the Vatican as Pope Pius's leading diplomat at the Secretariate of State. If Montini were elected pope, it would be a sensational event, for the archbishop is not a cardinal. And for generations past the Secred College has always chosen one of its own members. And yet in the early speculation, Montini of Milan, is a leading contender, and legally he could be pope. Under the Vatican constitution, a pope may or may not be a member of the Sacred College. Indeed, he may or may not be a priest. If he is neither preist nor bishop, but a layman, he must then be ordained and consecrated. The principle was reaffirmed more than once by Pope Pius himself.

And when will the conclave begin? The law of the Vatican is very explicit on that point. The cardinals should begin the election within 15 days and under no circumstances later than 18 days after the death of the late pope. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

That was my colleague, Winston Burdett, reporting from Rome.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But, first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Pope Pius is generally recognized as one of the greatest of all Popes. Former President Truman said today that he believed Pius to have been the greatest statesman in the Vatican in 200 years. Certainly this Pope was esteemed by leaders...and followers...of all faiths. As John Clarke observed in the 17th century, "Goodness and greatness do not always go together."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 10, 1958

This is the news:

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors conferred in Warsaw today for two hours and 35 minutes. / Another meeting was scheduled for next Wednesday. (I should like to examine these talks further in a few minutes).

The Chinese Nationalists delivered more supplies to Quemoy today; they also landed troop reinforcements. / The number of new troops put on the island was not announced. / But CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalisher reports from Quemoy that the troop reinforcements landed from one L.S.T. numbered at least 500. More and more of the civilian population of Quemoy is being evacuated.

The Nationalist Defense Ministry today claimed the destruction of five Mig-17's in an air battle over the Formosa Strait. The Communists say they shot down three Nationalist aircraft.

The Atomic Energy Commission announces that Russia exploded another nuclear device today, north of the Arctic Circle. Six Soviet explosions have now been detected since the Russians resumed their nuclear weapons tests on September 20.

The United States also exploded a nuclear device today at the Nevada proving grounds. It was officially described as a "small" shot.

The three atomic powers...the United States, Britain, and Russia... are due to meet in Geneva at the end of this month to discuss a possible ban on nuclear tests. The United States and Britain have offered to suspend tests with the start of these talks, if Russia will do the same. But Russia...which conducted no tests between March and September...says that first it must catch up. United States Ambassador Lodge repeated the Anglo-American offer today in the United Nations Political Committee. He said we would suspend tests for a period of one year...starting from the time that the three powers sit down to talk. Lodge departed from his text to say that American policy on testing had "evolved considerably" in the past year. / He said, "It is a good thing when government policies do evolve, and are not frozen rigidly for all time." / Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin attacked the American position. / He called the Anglo-American offer "negative"... on grounds that it was conditional, and would run for only one year. This was denied by Lodge...who said the United States was ready to suspend its nuclear tests indefinitely, provided reasonable progress was made in the disarmament field from year to year. / Lodge said the United States was willing, in future disarmament negotiations, to reveal technical information which had been withheld in the past.

→

The United States today agreed to discuss with Russia means for guarding against surprise attack. / These technical talks would start in Geneva on November tenth.

In Italy today, the body of Pope Pius was brought in solemn procession from Castel Gandolfo...where he died...to St. Peter's Cathedral in Vatican City...where burial will take place on Monday. / It is estimated that a million persons lined the 17-mile route, and that another throng of half a million filled the great square in front of the basilica of St. Peter...and watched the sealed casket taken inside. The casket was placed in the nave of St. Peter's, in front of the high altar. There, the Pope will lie in state for three days. On Monday, he will be interred in the crypt below the basilica, close to the tomb of St. Peter the Apostle.

In a will...published today...Pope Pius left all his earthly possessions to the Church.

President Eisenhower is sending Secretary of State Dulles to Rome, to attend the Pope's funeral. / Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, former United States ambassador to Italy, and Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission also will attend.

The government reports that in September unemployment dropped by 588-thousand. / The total number of persons unemployed now stands at 4-million, 111-thousand, a low for the year. / The figure, however, is still higher by one and a half million than it was in September, 1957.

Today's report says that hiring...in the past month...was "especially brisk" in the auto and steel industries and among the producers of home appliances. The White House has issued a statement calling the decline in unemployment "much larger than could be expected at this time of year." It said this reflects "the accelerating rate of recovery in our economy."

Vice President Nixon said [redacted] in a speech today...in Pittsburgh... that American workers have "had it better" during the Eisenhower Administration than they ever did under the New and Fair Deals. / Nixon described [redacted] as "malicious" the charge that the Republican Party is the party of the rich. / The only truth in it, he said, is the Republican objective to make the working man rich.

5A

In a speech last night, Nixon said the Truman Administration was "one of the most corrupt Administrations in American history." Paul Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said today that he was shocked and surprised by the Nixon statement. Butler challenged Nixon's "personal standards of conduct", recalling Nixon's private campaign fund of 1952. The Democratic national chairman also charged that the heads of more government agencies in the Eisenhower Administration had been involved in wrongdoing than in any Administration since Grant's.

/

The Agriculture Department issued a report today...indicating that crop production this year will shatter the previous record by nearly 13 percent. Government estimates on corn and wheat production have both been revised upward...due to favorable weather and harvesting conditions.

Here in New York today, the stock market reached a new high for the year. Four million, 600-thousand shares were traded, the biggest turnover of the year so far.

The annual conference of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank ended today in New Delhi. It was decided...at the five-day meeting...to increase the financial resources of both the monetary fund and the bank as recommended by the United States. The action, subject to the approval of member countries, is designed to help the under-developed areas and stimulate trade. The contributions of member countries are yet to be fixed.

President Eisenhower today appointed Lampton Berry, of Columbia, Mississippi, to be the new United States ambassador to Ceylon. Berry has been serving as deputy assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs. He succeeds Maxwell Gluck...who resigned.

Edward R. Murrow: October 10, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The danger of an early war between the United States and Communist China has now subsided. Negotiations have taken the place of the artillery fire at the offshore islands, and are expected to continue to do so. This should bring enormous relief to both sides of the Iron Curtain, for a war between this country and Red China might easily become a world war.

But relief that this has not happened should not be mistaken for confidence that the Formosa Strait dispute will be satisfactorily settled. What the State Department hopes for at this stage is very modest indeed. It is that enough flexibility can be developed so that the talks can proceed. It wants the story off Page One of the world newspapers. It wants the public to forget the dramatic postures assumed at the height of the crisis. It wants an atmosphere created in which the Chinese, both Nationalist and Communist, can make concessions which at this moment are forbidding; not big concessions that attract attention and involve a lot of prestige, but minor ones that make it worth while to go on talking.

Undoubtedly Ambassador Beam urged the Communists in Warsaw today to continue the cease-fire. But if it is continued, it might not be because Mr. Beam was persuasive, for the Communists may have decided to do so before today's meeting. Washington is reported to have received a hint to that effect from the Norwegian Ambassador in Moscow, who had it from the Chinese Ambassador. The State Department denies that any "message" has been received through any ~~intermediary~~ Middle Man.

Today's Warsaw meeting was not so much Communist China's turn to talk as ours. Secretary Dulles had said on September 30 that if the Communists showed some sign of give, our policy would change. The cease-fire was a sign of give. So Ambassador Beam was due to say in what respect we are prepared to discuss a change in our policy. He had his instructions what to say, which for obvious reasons have not been divulged. But it is pretty clear that the immediate negotiations deal only with the offshore islands. The future of Formosa itself is to be discussed separately and later, presumably much later.

But even within the limited scope of the talks we are in an awkward position to negotiate, for the reason that the Nationalists loudly refuse to de-militarize the offshore islands, or reduce forces there. They have said they would not even make a token reduction. Both President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles have publicly stated that they do not approve of the Nationalists keeping so large a part of their army on the islands, and at

Warsaw we presumably are ready to discuss a reduction. / We might suggest that to make it look like a fair bargain the Communists should reduce some of their forces on the mainland opposite the islands. / That might be a way to get Chiang to accept a reduction. / We also may be able to promise that the Nationalists will desist from nuisance raids on the mainland, from dropping propaganda leaflets by air, and broadcasting political messages from nearby islands.

It is hard to believe that the Communists would agree to reduce their forces on the mainland, just to help us deal with Chiang. / So it is no foregone conclusion that the talks will make much headway even in the preliminary stages. / Later on, the problem really gets tough. For the Communists will insist on possession of the offshore islands and in the end will hardly settle for less. / ~~This we might think not unacceptable, in view of the fact that the offshore islands and Formosa have a separate status. The Japanese did not occupy and rule them, and surrender them to Chiang, as they did Formosa and the Pescadores. / Great Britain, when Eden was Prime Minister, agreed that the islands are legally part of the mainland.~~ But Chiang shows no sign of ever being willing to give them up, and we cannot force him to.

The State Department does not consider the cease-fire an American victory, and the Pentagon has issued orders to officers not to make statements that could carry political overtones. There may be good reason to say that the Communists were sorely disappointed that the shelling of the islands did not force them to surrender. / It also seems reasonable to say that there would have been no cease-fire / if the islands had not defended themselves so sturdily. [But the cease-fire should not be represented as having been a Communist defeat, or the Communists simply will not negotiate. And that nobody wants; that is, nobody except the Nationalists, who can gain little from them and stand to lose a good deal.

/

Back in a moment.—
Just. George Bryan with
a word about the weather.

If the Warsaw talks should be successful, there would needs be an element of compromise. Ambrose Bierce wrote a definition of compromise, calling it "such an adjustment of conflicting interests as gives each adversary the satisfaction of thinking he got what he ought not to have, and is deprived of nothing except what was justly his due."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors conferred in Warsaw today for two hours and 35 minutes. Another meeting was scheduled for next Wednesday. (I should like to examine these talks further in a few minutes.)

The Chinese Nationalists delivered more supplies to Quemoy today; they also landed troop reinforcements. The number of new troops put on the island was not announced. But CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reports from Quemoy that the troop reinforcements landed from one L.S.T. numbered at least 500. More and more of the civilian population of Quemoy is being evacuated.

The Nationalist Defense Ministry today claimed the destruction of five Mig-17's in an air battle over the Formosa Strait. The Communists say they shot down three Nationalist aircraft.

The Atomic Energy Commission announces that Russia exploded another nuclear device today, north of the Arctic Circle. Six Soviet explosions have now been detected since the Russians resumed their nuclear weapons tests on September 20.

The United States also exploded a nuclear device today at the Nevada proving grounds. It was officially described as a "small" shot.

The three atomic powers...the United States, Britain, and Russia....are due to meet in Geneva at the end of this month to discuss a possible ban on nuclear tests. The United States and Britain have offered to suspend tests with the start of these talks, if Russia will do the same. But Russia...which conducted no tests between March and September,..says that first it must catch up. United States Ambassador Lodge repeated the Anglo-American offer today in the United Nations Political Committee.. He said we would suspend tests for a period of one year...starting from the time that the three powers sit down to talk. Lodge departed from his text to say that American policy on testing had "evolved considerably" in the past year. He said, "It is a good thing when government policies do evolve and are not frozen rigidly for all time." Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin attacked the American polition. He called the Anglo-American offer "negative"...on grounds that it was conditional and would run for only one year. This was denied by Lodge...who said the United States was ready to suspend its nuclear tests indefinitely, provided reasonable progress was made in the disarmament field from year to year. Lodge said the United States was willing in future disarmament negotiations to reveal technical information which had been withheld in the past.

The United States today agreed to discuss with Russia means for guarding against surprise attack. These technical talks would start in Geneva on November tenth.

In Italy today, the body of Pope Pius was brought in solemn procession from Castel Gandolfo...where he died...to St. Peter's Cathedral in Vatican City... where burial will take place on Monday. It is estimated that a million persons lined the 17 mile route and that another throng of half a million filled the great square in front of the basilica of St. Peter...and watched the sealed casket taken inside. The casket was placed in the nave of St. Peter's in front of the high altar. There, the Pope will lie in state for three days. On Monday, he will be interred in the crypt below the basilica, close to the tomb of St. Peter the Apostle.

In a will...published today...Pope Pius left all his earthly possessions to the Church.

President Eisenhower is sending Secretary of State Dulles to Rome to attend the Pope's funeral. Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, former United States ambassador to Italy, and Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission also will attend.

The government reports that in September unemployment dropped by 588-thousand

The total number of persons unemployed now stands at 4-million,111-thousand, a low for the year. The figure, however, is still hgiher by one and a half million than it was in September, 1957. Today's report says that hiring...in the past month...was "especially brisk" in the auto and steel industries and among the producers of home appliances. The White House has issued a statement calling the decline in unemployment "much larger than could be expected at this time of year." It said this reflects "the accelerating rate of recovery in our economy."

Vice President Nixon said in a speech today...in Pittsburgh...that American workers have "had it better" during the Eisenhower Administration than they ever did under the New and Fair Deals. Nixon described as "malicious" the charge that/Republican Party is the party of the rich. The only truth in it, he said, is the Republican objective to make the working man rich.

In a speech last night, Nixon said the Truman Administration was "one of the most corrupt Administrations in American history." Paul Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said today that he was shocked and surprised by the Nixon statement. Butler challenged Nixon's "personal standards of conduct" recalling Nixon's private campaign fund of 1952. The Democratic national chairman also charged that the heads of more government agencies in the Eisenhower Administration had been involved in wrongdoing than in any Administration since G~~r~~t's.

The Agriculture Department issued a report today...indicating that crop production this year will shatter the previous record by nearly 13 percent. Government estimates on corn and wheat production have both been revised upward... due to favorable weather and harvesting conditions.

The danger of an early war between the United States and Communist China has now subsided. Negotiations have taken the place of the artillery fire at the offshore islands, and are expected to continue to do so. This should bring enormous relief to both sides of the Iron Curtain, for a war between this country and Red China might easily become a world war.

But relief that this has not happened should not be mistaken for confidence that the Formosa Strait dispute will be satisfactorily settled. What the State Department hopes for at this stage is very modest indeed. It is that enough flexibility can be developed so that the talks can proceed. It wants the story off Page One of the world newspapers. It wants the public to forget the dramatic postures assumed at the height of the crisis. It wants an atmosphere created in which the Chinese, both Nationalist and Communist, can make concessions which at this moment are forbidding; not big concessions that attract attention and involve a lot of prestige, but minor ones that make it worth while to go on talking.

Undoubtedly Ambassador Beam urged the Communists in Warsaw today to continue the cease-fire. But if it is continued, it might not be because Mr. Beam was persuasive, for the Communists may have decided to do so before today's meeting. Washington is reported to have received a hint to that effect from the Norwegian Ambassador in Moscow, who had it from the Chinese Ambassador. The State Department denies that any "message" has been received through any middle man.

Today's Warsaw meeting was not so much Communist China's turn to talk as ours. Secretary Dulles had said on September 30 that if the Communists showed some sign of give, our policy would change. The ceasefire was a sign of give. So Ambassador Beam was due to say in what respect we are prepared to discuss a change in our policy. He had his instructions what to say, which for obvious reasons have not been divulged. But it is pretty clear that the immediate negotiations deal only with the offshore islands. The future of Formosa itself is to be discussed separately and later, presumably much later.

But even within the limited scope of the talks we are in an awkward position to negotiate, for the reason that the Nationalists loudly refuse to de-militarize

the offshore islands, or reduce forces there. They have said they would not even make a token reduction. Both President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles have publicly stated that they do not approve of the Nationalists keeping so large a part of their army on the islands, and at Warsaw we presumably are ready to discuss a reduction. We might suggest that to make it look like a fair bargain the Communists should reduce some of their forces on the mainland opposite the islands. That might be a way to get Chiang to accept a reduction. We also may be able to promise that the Nationalists will desist from nuisance raids on the mainland, from dropping propaganda leaflets by air, and broadcasting political messages from nearby islands.

It is hard to believe that the Communists would agree to reduce their forces on the mainland, just to help us deal with Chiang. So it is no foregone conclusion that the talks will make much headway even in the preliminary stages. Later on, the problem really gets tough. For the Communists will insist on possession of the offshore islands and in the end will hardly settle for less. But Chiang shows no sign of ever being willing to give them up, and we cannot force him to.

The State Department does not consider the cease-fire an American victory, and the Pentagon has issued orders to officers not to make statements that could carry political overtones. There may be good reason to say that the Communists were sorely disappointed that the shelling of the islands did not force them to surrender. It also seems reasonable to say that there would have been no cease-fire if the islands had not defended themselves so sturdily. But the cease-fire should not be represented as having been a Communist defeat, or the Communists simply will not negotiate. And that nobody wants; that is, nobody except the Nationalists, who can gain little from them and stand to lose a good deal.

I'll be back in a moment. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

ED MURROW: If the Warsaw talks should be successful, there would needs be an element of compromise. Ambrose Bierce wrote a definition of compromise calling it "such an adjustment of conflicting interests as gives each adversary the satisfaction of thinking he got what he ought not to have and is deprived of nothing except what was justly his due."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Oct. 13, 1958

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today refused to review the case in which Governor Faubus was ordered not to use National Guard troops in the Little Rock school integration dispute. / The order was issued a year ago by Judge Ronald E. Davies after Faubus had used the National Guardsmen to keep nine Negroes from attending Central High. / Faubus had appealed the order, contending that Davies acted without legal authority and that he was prejudiced. / As a result of today's Supreme Court action, the order stands.

The Supreme Court also refused today to review a decision which found two Louisiana laws invalid. The laws...by requiring "certificates of eligibility"...would have made the admission of Negroes to state-supported colleges more difficult. The Supreme Court did agree today to review a lower court decision which held invalid certain Virginia laws aimed at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

In Atlanta, rewards are being posted for the arrest and conviction of whoever bombed the Jewish temple there on Sunday. The Atlanta Journal said in a Page One editorial that the incident had "defiled" the city and the state. Police are questioning three suspects.

The government of South Africa today withdrew its mass indictment of 91 persons, accused of high treason. / The defendants...mostly non-whites... were arrested two years ago, on charges of conspiring to overthrow the government. (They had spoken out against South Africa's racial policies.) Today's action...withdrawing the indictment...stemmed from the inability of the prosecution to amend the charges, which defense attorneys argued were far too sweeping. / It is indicated that the attorney general may now try for an entirely new indictment on (a different set of charges.

Premier DeGaulle today ordered the French Army in Algeria to withdraw at once from all political activity. / DeGaulle told General Salan, the French commander, "The moment has come for the military to stop taking part in any organization which has a political (character,) whatever the reason for that participation may be." / The order was directed...obviously...at the officers who formed the so-called Committees of Public Safety last May, during the (rightist revolt.) DeGaulle said he issued the order, to clear the way for free elections on November 23rd.

Pope Pius was buried today in a four-hour ceremony in the great church of St. Peter. The body of the pontiff...encased in a triple casket...was placed beneath the basilica, close to the grotto of St. Peter, whose altar the Pope himself consecrated during the Holy Year, 1950.

~~The outer casket of polished bronze bears this Latin inscription:~~

"~~The body of Pope Pius the Twelfth. He lived 82 years, seven months and seven days. He ruled over the Universal Church for 19 years, seven months and seven days. He died on October 9, 1958.~~" More than a million persons viewed the Pope's body during the three days it lay in state. ~~And today, for the first time in Vatican history, the burial ceremony was televised throughout Western Europe on a special network.~~

~~The conclave of cardinals...which has the task of naming a new pontiff... will start deliberating in twelve days.~~

~~In Paris today,~~ the NATO council met for two and a half hours today in a new attempt to solve the Cyprus problem. / The American permanent delegate, Randolph Burgess, says the council made "good progress", but gives no details. In Athens, Archbishop Makarios made what he said was a concession. He offered to accept a seven-year period of self-government before the island would gain independence. The conduct of foreign affairs and defense would remain during the seven years in British hands. Makarios said Greek Cypriots cannot be forced to govern in partnership with Turks. And self-government in the seven-year period, he said, must be "genuine".

Another British soldier was killed on Cyprus today in an ambush.

Three persons died today in continuing violence in Beirut. / ~~One of the victims...a supporter of former President Chamoun...was shot by gunmen who stopped his car in the street. He was a distant cousin of former Premier Solh. / Despite the violence, talks aimed at ending the political stalement resumed. / And one report says "agreement in principle" on a new compromise government has been reached.~~

General Schriever, commander of the Air Force ballistics division, predicts that a satellite will be placed in orbit around the moon "in the "not too distant future." Unofficial word from Cape Canaveral is that another try will be made by the Air Force between November 8th and 11th, when the moon again is nearest the earth. / Two moonshoots also have been assigned to the Army. / The "Pioneer" rocket...launched on Saturday... returned to earth early today, consumed by atmospheric friction somewhere over the South Pacific. / The missile penetrated 79-thousand, 120 miles in space, or about one-third the distance to the moon. / Its chances of orbiting the moon were rated...beforehand...as only one in ten. And it sent back valuable information. It indicated that radiation in the outer reaches of space is not as intense as had been thought--- a question closely related to future space flight by Man.

It was quiet today in the Formosa Strait. Communist China claimed again in a Peiping broadcast, that it had extended its cease-fire "for humanitarian reasons." The extension, it said, "has nothing to do with the cease-fire intrigue of the United States."

Secretary of State Dulles will hold a news conference tomorrow afternoon, and doubtless will be asked about the Formosa situation.

The disarmament debate continued today in the United Nations. The debate would appear snarled...and here, to try to unravel it, is my colleague Daniel Schorr.

Tape runs 5:50
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow."

Dan Schorr our U.N. Correspondent,

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

schorr murrow 7:45 PM oct.13

5:47

For the past 12 years the United Nations has debated disarmament, with nothing to show for its efforts...and today it was debating again...a discussion that will probably go on for another two or three weeks. At the U.N. today, they talked of "suspension" or "discontinuation" of testing...with ~~[illegible]~~ warnings ~~[illegible]~~ of the effects of radioactive fallout. And, as they talked, explosions were going on both in the Soviet Union and the United States. Russia asked suspension of testing now and forever, and exploded her sixth bomb within two weeks in her Arctic proving grounds.
The United States asked suspension for a year, starting Oct.31...and ~~maintain continued~~ WENT ON WITH a series of ten tests in her Nevada proving grounds. France ~~asked~~ ASKED/ nothing...and worked on preparations for her ~~[illegible]~~ first test explosion in her Sahara proving grounds which, she hopes, will serve as an admission card to the exclusive nuclear club.

On Oct. 31, a conference is scheduled to open in Geneva where the United States, Britain and Russia are to discuss nuclear arms control. Already ~~[illegible]~~ scientists of East and West have agreed--and this is the first dent yet made in the hard crust of the disarmament deadlock--on how a test ban should be policed. But whether there will be any ban to police is a matter for the politicians, and the jockeying now going on among the politicians at the United Nations does not make the prospects seem promising...at least not on the surface.

The United States and Britain hoped to avoid any all-out debate that might harden lines before the Geneva conference. Russia insisted on a debate, with the precise purpose of exerting pressure to win concessions before the conference. Thus, the debate now in progress along the East River is a type of political gamesmanship, in preparation for the smaller debate along the Lake of Geneva.

One ploy in Soviet gamesmanship is to threaten to call off the whole thing unless she wins in advance. Khrushchev tried that ploy, before the scientific meeting in July, when he threatened to boycott the meeting unless there was advance agreement on a test ban. We did not get the advance commitment, and the Soviet delegation showed up in Geneva all the same.

Now, it seems, similar ploys are being tried. First Russia proposed that the Oct.31 meeting be raised to the foreign ministers level, without saying what would happen if the West declined. The word from Washington is that the West WILL decline a foreign ministers' meeting.

Then, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko said that if there was no concession to the Soviet demand for an unconditional ban on testing, Russia would have "all grounds" to go on testing until she caught up with the American and British explosions during the six months that the Soviets were not testing. If that is a serious threat, then the Soviets have some 44 explosions to catch up with...and that would mean suspension on Oct. 31 would be impossible...and a conference on that date almost meaningless.

But Gromyko chose his words carefully. To say that Russia has "all grounds" to continue testing, does not mean she will actually do so. Western diplomats believe, perhaps hopefully, that this is just another part of the war of nerves and that, whatever happens in the next few weeks at U.N., the Soviet delegation will show up at Geneva. Those on the sidelines THINK that some formula will be found for a U.N. resolution that Russia can accept as satisfactory.

It was noted that before the UN Assembly today, Soviet Delegate Valerian Zorin, arguing for a resolution calling for immediate and unconditional suspension of testing, said the American resolution would "constitute a ~~xxxiax~~ serious handicap" for the Geneva negotiations. He did not say it would make the Geneva talks impossible.

Thus, there is moderate optimism at the U.N. that, despite her belligerent stand in the debate, Russia will show up in Geneva on Oct. 31 and that she will stop testing on that date. But, if the conference opens and a temporary suspension of testing is achieved, that is only a small step. The prospects for agreement at the conference do not, judging from an analysis of the debate, look very bright.

The Soviet position is that a ban on testing should be treated as a separate matter--that suspension should be unconditional and permanent. The Soviet delegation added today that it is willing to accept ~~xxixxkix~~ controls, including inspection posts on Soviet territory. But the American position, an amalgam of views in the Administration that favored an end of testing and those that feared such a development...that position is ~~that~~ suspension will only continue after the first year if, during that time, "reasonable progress," as the State Dept. puts it, is made on other aspects of disarmament.

Thus, the pressure NOW is on Russia to accept temporary and conditional suspension...rather than risk the responsibility for continued explosions. But, after that, regardless of the outcome of the Geneva talks, the pressure will be on the United States and Britain to continue SUSPENSION...and Russia will not feel any compulsion to make any far-reaching concessions.

The best reason for believing that Russia will accept a one-year suspension of tests is that she has nothing to lose from it. She can go along for a year, and then defy the West to take the onus of breaking the nuclear armistice.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

Word for Today

~~The world is full of disagreement.~~ The arms race moves apace, and the politicians...at their conference tables.. ~~are~~ are making very slow progress indeed. It would appear sometimes as though we had very nearly lost our senses. Oscar Wilde once said when he was discouraged, that it seemed as though as soon as people ~~are~~ are old enough to know better, they don't know anything at all."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today refused to review the case in which Governor Faubus was ordered not to use National Guard troops in the Little Rock school integration dispute. The order was issued a year ago by Judge Ronald E. Davies after Faubus had used the National Guardsmen to keep nine Negroes from attending Central High. Faubus had appealed the order, contending that Davies acted without legal authority and that he was prejudiced. As a result of today's Supreme Court action, the order stands.

The Supreme Court also refused today to review a decision which found two Louisiana laws invalid. The laws...by requiring "certificates of eligibility"... would have made the admission of Negroes to state-supported colleges more difficult. The Supreme Court did agree today to review a lower court decision which held invalid certain Virginia laws aimed at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

In Atlanta, rewards are being posted for the arrest and conviction of whoever bombed the Jewish temple there on Sunday. The Atlanta Journal said in a Page One editorial that the incident had "defiled" the city and the state. Police are questioning three suspects.

The government of South Africa today withdrew its mass indictment of 91 persons accused of high treason. The defendants...mostly non-whites....were arrested two years ago on charges of conspiring to overthrow the government. They had spoken out against South Africa's racial policies. Today's action... withdrawing the indictment...stemmed from the inability of the prosecution to amend the charges, which defense attorneys argued were far too sweeping. It is indicated that the attorney general may now try for an entirely new indictment on a different set of charges.

Premier DeGaulle today ordered the French Army in Algeria to withdraw at once from all political activity. DeGaulle told General Salan, the French commander, "The moment has come for the military to stop taking part in any organization which has a political character whatever the reason for that participation may be." The order was directed...obviously...at the officers who formed the so-called Committee of Public Safety last May during the rightest revolt. DeGaulle said he issued the order to clear the way for free elections on November 23rd.

Pope Pius was buried today in a four-hour ceremony in the great church of St. Peter. The body of the pontiff...encased in a triple casket...was placed beneath the basilica, close to the grotto of St. Peter, whose altar the Pope himself consecrated during the Holy Year, 1950. More than a million persons viewed the Pope's body during the three days it lay in state.

The NATO council met for two and a half hours today in a new attempt to solve the Cyprus problem. The American permanent delegate, Randolph Burgess, says the council made "good progress" but gives no details. In Athens, Archbishop Makarios made what he said was a concession. He offered to accept a seven-year period of self-government before the island would gain independence. The conduct of foreign affairs and defense would remain during the seven years in British hands. Makarios said Greek Cypriots cannot be forced to govern in partnership with Turks. And self-government in the seven-year period, he said, must be "genuine."

Another British soldier was killed on Cyprus today in an ambush.

Three persons died today in continuing violence in Beirut.

General Schreever, commander of the Air Force ballistics division, predicts that a satellite will be placed in orbit around the moon "in the not too distant future." Unofficial word form Cape Canaveral is that another try will be made by the Air Force between November 8th and 11th when the moon again is nearest the earth. Two moonshoots also have been assigned to the Army. The "Pioneer" rocket...launched on Saturday...returned to earth early today consumed by atmospheric friction somewhere over the South Pacific.. The missile penetrated 79-thousand, 120 miles in space, or about one-third the distance to the moon. Its chances of orbiting the moon were rated...beforehand...as only one in ten. And it sent back valuable information. It indicated that radiation in the outer reaches of space is not as intense as had been thought---a question closely related to future space flight by Man.

It was quiet today in the Formosa Strait. Communist China claimed again in a Peiping broadcast that it had extended its cease-fire "for humanitarian reasons." The extension, it said, "has nothing to do with the cease-fire 'intrigue of the United States."

Seceetary of State Dulles will hold a news conference tomorrow afternoon and doubtless will be asked about the Formosa situation.

The disarmament debate continued today in the United Nations. The debate would appear snarled...and here, to try to unravel it, is my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: For the past 12 years, the United Nations has debated disarmament, with nothing to show for its efforts...and today it was debating again...a discussion that will probably go on for another two or three weeks. At the U.N. today, they talked of "suspension" or "discontinuation" of testing...with warnings of the effects of radioactive fallout. And, as they talked, explosions were going on both in the Soviet Union and the United States. Russia asked suspension of testing now and forever, and exploded her sixth bomb within two weeks in her Arctic proving grounds. The United States asked suspension for a year, starting October 31...and went on with a series of ten tests in her Nevada proving grounds. France asked nothing..and worked on preparations for her first test explosion in her Sahara proving grounds which, she hopes, will serve as an admission card to the exclusive nuclear club.

On October 31, a conference is scheduled to open in Geneva where the United States, Britain and Russia are to discuss nuclear arms control. Already scientists of East and West have agreed---and this is the first dent yet made in the hard crust of the disarmament deadlock---on how a test ban should be policed. But whether there will be any ban to police is a matter for the politicians, and the jockeying now going on among the politicians at the United Nations does not make the prospects seem promising...at least not on the surface.

The United States and Britain hoped to avoid any all-out debate that might harden lines before the Geneva conference. Russia insisted on a debate, with the precise purpose of exerting pressure to win concessions before the conference. Thus, the debate now in progress along the East River is a type of political gamesmanship in preparation for the smaller debate along the Lake of Geneva.

One ploy in Soviet gamesmanship is to threaten to call off the whole thing unless she wins in advance. Khrushchev tried that ploy before the scientific meeting in July, when he threatened to boycott the meeting unless there was advance agreement on a test ban. He did not get the advance commitment, and the Soviet delegation showed up in Geneva all the same.

Now, it seems, similar ploys are being tried. First Russia proposed that the October 31 meeting be raised to the foreign ministers level, without saying what would happen if the West declined. The word from Washington is that the West will decline a foreign ministers' meeting.

Then, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko said that if there was no concession to the Soviet demand for an unconditional ban on testing, Russia would have "all grounds" to go on testing until she caught up with the American and British explosions during the six months that the Soviets were not testing. If that is a serious threat, then the Soviets have some 44 explosions to catch up with... and that would mean suspension on October 31 would be impossible...and a conference on that date almost meaningless.

But Gromyko chose his words carefully. To say that Russia has "all grounds" to continue testing, does not mean she will actually do so. Western diplomats believe, perhaps hopefully, that this is just another part of the war of nerves and that, whatever happens in the next few weeks at U.N., the Soviet delegation will show up at Geneva. Those on the sidelines think that some formula will be found for a U.N. resolution that Russia can accept as satisfactory.

It was noted that before the UN Assembly today, Soviet Delegate Valerian Zorin, arguing for a resolution calling for immediate and unconditional suspension of testing, said the American reoolution would "constitute a serious handicap" for the Geneva negotiations. He did not say it would make the Geneva talks impossible.

Thus, there is moderate optimism at the U.N. that, despite her belligerent stand in the debate, Russia will show up in Geneva on October 31 and that she will stop testing on that date. But, if the conference opens and a temporary suspemsion of testing is achieved, that is only a small step. The prospects for agreement at the conference do not, judging form an analysis of the debate, look very bright.

The Soviet position is that a ban on testing should be treated as a separate matter---that suspension should be unconditional and permanent. The Soviet delegation added today that it is willing to accept controls, including inspection posts on Soviet territory. But the American position, an amalgam of views in the Administration that favored an end of testing and those that feared such a development...that position is suspension will only continue after the first year if, during that time, "reasonable progress," as the State Department puts it, is made on other aspects of disarmement.

Thus, the pressure now is on Russia to accept temporary and conditional suspension...rather than risk the responsibility for continued explosions. But, after that, regardless of the outcome of the Geneva talks, the pressure will be on the United States and Britain to continue suspension...and Russia will not feel any compulsion to make any far-reaching concessions.

The best reason for believing that Russia will accept a one-year suspension of tests is that she has nothing to lose from it. She can go along for a year, and then defy the West to take the onus of breaking the nuclear armistice.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The arms race moves apace, and the politicians...at their conference tables...are making very slow progress indeed. It would appear sometimes as though we had very nearly lost our senses. Oscar Wilde once said when he was discouraged that it seemed as though as soon as people are old enough to know better, they don't know anytning at all."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 14, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the United States "welcomes" extension of the Communist cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. But it hopes the cease-fire will be extended for more than two weeks. Dulles told his news conference, "Short suspensions of armed attack do not provide a solid foundation upon which to stabilize the situation in the interest of peace." He said the Communists are trying to drive a wedge between the United States and Nationalist China, and force the United States out of the area. He indicated that all is not going well in the Warsaw talks, and I should like to examine that part of the Dulles news conference further in a few minutes.

Mr. Dulles hoped that Democrats and Republicans would "calm down" in their debate over certain aspects of foreign policy. [redacted] Dulles said that he and President Eisenhower had discussed the problem. They agreed that foreign policy in general was a proper campaign subject...but that political argument over current policy, as in the Formosa crisis, was "highly undesirable." They did believe it was proper to discuss the "underlying principles" involved in such policies. Dulles praised former President Truman for not joining Democratic criticism of [redacted] Administration policy in the Middle East and Far Eastern situations. A reporter asked [redacted] whether a recent statement of Vice President Nixon fit within the limits of what he---Dulles---had just prescribed. Dulles said...laughingly...that [redacted] the Nixon statement might fit "without" the limits, which he hoped both sides would observe. Later, the State Department issued a clarification [redacted] saying that Dulles regarded the week-end statement issued by the Advisory Council of the Democratic National Committee also to be "without the limits."

This is President Eisenhower's 68th birthday. He began the day by attending a Republican breakfast, at which he said the Republican Party can win back control of Congress---"if we dedicate ourselves completely to the job." He told Republican campaign leaders that they have peace and "a sound, logical government" on their side. He said, "There may be no just and permanent peace at this time, but there is no shooting."

~~And he urged a "chain letter" drive to get out the vote. Mr. Eisenhower said he had seen what can be accomplished in this way from the letters he wrote to 450 business and professional friends at the time he was trying to put through the defense reorganization program. It was the flood of support aroused by these letters, he said, which led Congress to pass the measure in a satisfactory form.~~

Later in the day, Mr. Eisenhower paid his respects to the memory of Pope Pius by attending a pontifical requiem mass at St. Matthew's Cathedral...accompanied by members of his cabinet. The mass also was attended by the justices of the Supreme Court and members of the foreign diplomatic corps.

Tonight, Mr. Eisenhower is marking his birthday anniversary with a family dinner at the White House.

Britain today accused Russia of trying to "stampede" the United Nations into acting on the question of nuclear tests before the Geneva talks scheduled for October 31. / Allan Noble, British minister of state, told the United Nations Political Committee that Moscow, in effect, has delivered an ultimatum---either the Western powers agree to the Soviet proposals "here and now", or Russia will continue testing. / Britain supports a resolution...sponsored by the United States and 16 other countries...which calls for a suspension of tests for the duration of the Geneva talks. The suspension would be continued if these talks on nuclear arms control bear fruit. / Russia has its own resolution...calling for an unconditional cessation of tests right now to last "for all time." The British minister of state pointed out today that there would be no reason for any power ever to hold further tests, if the Geneva talks succeed. / The Soviet representative, Valerian Zorin, denied that Russia had delivered an ultimatum. It is the West, he said, which issues ultimatums...by its insistence on conditions.

Today...in Algeria...French Army officers obeyed the order of Premier DeGaulle and resigned from the Committee of Public Safety. / Among those resigning was General Massu, a leader in the right-wing revolt of May 13. Civilian leaders remaining on the committee then issued a communique calling on committeemen throughout Algeria to protest DeGaulle's order which forbade Army officers from taking part in politics. / The committee said it would "continue the struggle to bring about the objectives of May 13---that is, the complete and final integration of Algeria and the Sahara with Metropolitan France." / There is no question, it said, that Algeria "will return to the errors of the past." In Paris, Premier DeGaulle has called a meeting of his cabinet for tomorrow.

~~Madagascar voted today to become a republic within the French community. The vote was taken in the island's six provincial assemblies.~~

The White House expressed shock today over the bombing of another Jewish temple---this time in Peoria, Illinois. / News Secretary Hagerty told reporters that President Eisenhower regarded the "bombings of these places of worship as a shocking and deplorable thing." / He noted that the F.B.I. had been instructed to place its facilities at the disposal of the police in both Peoria and Atlanta. The bombing in Peoria early today caused considerably less damage than the incident in Atlanta on Sunday. Six windows of the Peoria temple were smashed.

→

Governor Stratton of Illinois said, "Violence is the dying gasp of those who are losing a fight."

Edward R. Murrow: October 14, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

A mystifying change has come over the Quemoy crisis. The cease-fire which this country assumed would open a season of negotiations with the Chinese Communists has not done so. We were prepared to negotiate. Ambassador Beam, at Warsaw, knew what to say if Ambassador Wang told him his government had suspended the shelling of Quemoy and asked what we were prepared to do in return. But obviously Ambassador Wang did not say it, and did not ask what we were prepared todo. On the contrary, everything the Communists have said, implies that the cease-fire was not meant for us, that it was not granted in the interest of negotiations with us, and that the offshore islands are none of our business. We are told in every way that the only issue between us and the Communists is our total withdrawal from the Formosa area, and this is all that the Peiping Government will discuss with us. And since this is nothing we can discuss, there simply are no negotiations.

Mr. Dulles at his news conference this afternoon did not put things quite as badly as that. But he hinted it strongly. In his prepared statement he said that the Communists "have made it crystal clear that their objective in the Far East goes far beyond the offshore islands, and has as its primary, if not exclusive, purpose to take over Taiwan. The offshore islands", Mr. Dulles said, "are treated as a matter of indifference." And he quoted the Communist proclamation of the cease-fire in saying that "It was to enable the Chinese compatriots on Quemoy, both military and civilian, to get sufficient supplies, including food and military equipment, to strengthen their entrenchment."

A cease-fire that was granted to enable the islanders to strengthen their defensive position is a contradiction, and it only becomes intelligible if the real purpose of the attack was political, and if the Communists now believe the political objective is better served by interrupting the bombardment. The political objective, Mr. Dulles said, is to drive a wedge between us and our allies, our allies in the Formosa area in the first place, but also in the rest of the world.

Mr. Dulles was quite clear in saying that we are not trying to pressure Chiang Kai-Shek into reducing his forces on the offshore islands. As it now turns out, there is no point in doing so. The Communists are not trying to induce us to do so. Thinning out the troops on the islands, Mr. Dulles said, is not a bargaining point. It now is simply a military question, where best to dispose of forces for military results.

Mr. Dulles did not try to say how long he thought the cease-fire would last, but he did not find it dependable, nor did he think it would be dependable, unless some kind of sanctions could be applied if it were broken. He admitted there are other areas in the Far East where the Communists may now try to apply pressure, but he said he thought it less likely that they would do so, in view of the fact that the United States has taken a firm hand in the Formosa area.

He also was asked to comment on former Governor Dewey's proposal to submit the question of the offshore islands to the World Court. / Mr. Dulles said he had not discussed this with Mr. Dewey. / He believed, he said, in using the provisions of the United Nations Charter for mediation and judicial settlement, consequently he would be in favor of submitting this question to the World Court. / But he did not think it would be practical. The World Court is an agency of the United Nations, and the Chinese Communists have rejected United Nations intervention in the crisis. / He explained that we could not take the case to the World Court by ourselves. It would require action by the Security Council or the Assembly. / He was sure the proposal would be vetoed in the Council, and he doubted that a two-thirds majority would be found for it in the Assembly.

So he was very dubious, he said, of the possibility of getting a positive solution of the crisis through the United Nations. The one possibility, for which so much hope had been raised, was negotiations. And today Mr. Dulles left it clear that there are no negotiations. / This does not mean that the firing on Quemoy is sure to resume, indeed a resumption seems unlikely for the time being. / So the mystifying question is just where we stand. If Mr. Dulles did not offer an answer to that question, Today it almost certainly is because he does not know any.

Back in a moment—

Just a word from Jorge Ryan about the Weather,

Word for Today

One is reminded...in the Formosa situation....

~~In the Formosa situation, one is reminded~~ of something Mao Tse-tung wrote some 20 years ago. "A revolution," he said, "does not march a straight line. It wanders where it can, retreats before superior forces, advances wherever it has room...attacks whenever the enemy retreats or bluffs...and, above all, is possessed of enormous patience."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the United States "welcomes" extension of the Communist cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. But it hopes the cease-fire will be extended for more than two weeks. Dulles told his news conference, "Short suspensions of armed attack do not provide a soldd foundation upon which to stabilize the situation in the interest of peace." He said the Communists are trying to drive a wedge between the United States and Nationalist China and force the United States out of the area. He indicated that all is not going well in the Warsaw talks, and I should like to examine that part of the Dulles news conference further in a few minutes.

Mr. Dulles hoped that Democrats and Republicans would "calm down: in their debate over certain aspects of foreign policy. Dulles said that he and President Eisenhower had discussed the problem. They agreed that foreign policy in general was a proper campaign subject...but that political argument over current policy as in the Formosa crisis was "highly undesirable." They did believe it was proper to dsscuss the "underlying principles" involved in such policies. Dulles praised former President Truman for not joining Democratic criticism of Administration policy in the Middle East and Far Eastern situations. A reporter asked whether a recent statement of Vice President Nixon fit within the limits of what he---Dulles---had just prescribed. Dulles said...laughingly...that the Nixon statement might fit "without" the limits, which he hoped both sides would observe. Later, the State Department issued a clarification saying that Dulles regarded the week-end statement issued by the Advisory Council of the Democratic Cational Committee also to be "without the limits."

This is President Eisenhower's 68th birthday. He began the day by attending a Republican breakfast at which he said the Republican Party can win back control of Congress---"if we dedicate ourselves completely to the job." He told Republican campaign leaders that they have peace and "a sound, logical government" on their side. He said, "There may be no just and permanent peace at this time, but there is no shooting."

Later in the day, Mr. Eisenhower paid his respects to the memory of Pope Pius by attending a pontifical requiem mass at St Matthew's Cathedral... accompanied by members of his cabinet. The mass also was attended by the justices of the Supreme Court and members of the foreign diplomatic corps.

Tonight, Mr. Eisenhower is marking his birthday anniversary with a family dinner at the White House.

Britain today accused Russia of trying to "stampede" the United Nations into acting on the question of nuclear tests before the Geneva talks scheduled for October 31. Allan Noble, British minister of state, told the United Nations Political Committee that Moscow, in effect, has delivered an ultimatum---either the Western powers agree to the Soviet proposals "here and now," or Russia will continue testing. Britain supports a resolution...sponsored by the United States and 16 other countries...which calls for a suspension of tests for the duration of the Geneva talks. The suspension would be continued if these talks on nuclear arms control bear fruit. Russia has its own resolution...calling for an unconditional cessation of tests right now to last "for all time." The British minister of state pointed out today that there would be no reason for any power ever to hold further tests, if the Geneva talks succeed. The Soviet representative, Valerian Zorin, denied that Russia had delivered an ultimatum. It is the West, he said, which issues ultimatums...by its insistence on conditions.

Today...in Algeria...French Army officers obeyed the order of Premier DeGaulle and resigned from the Committee of Public Safety. Among those resigning was General Massu, a leader in the right-wing revolt of May 13. Civilian leaders remaining on the committee then issued a communique calling on committeemen throughout Algeria to protest DeGaulle's order which forbade Army officers from taking part in politics. The committee said it would "continue the struggle to bring about the objectives of May 13---that is, the complete and final integration of Algeria and the Sahara with Metropolitan France." There is no question, it said, that Algeria "will return to the errors of the past." In Paris, Premier DeGaulle has called a meeting of his cabinet for tomorrow.

The White House expressed shock today over the bombing of another Jewish temple---this time in Peoria, Illinois. News Secretary Hagerty told reporters that President Eisenhower regarded the "bombings of these places of worship as a shocking and deplorable thing." He noted that the F.B.I. had been instructed to place its facilities at the disposal of the police in both Peoria and Atlanta. The bombing in Peoria early today caused considerably less damage than the incident in Atlanta on Sunday. Six windows of the Peoria temple were smashed. Governor Stratton of Illinois said, "Violence is the dying gasp of those who are losing a fight."

A mystifying change has come over the Quemoy crisis. The cease-fire which this country assumed would open a season of negotiations with the Chinese Communists has not done so. We were prepared to negotiate. Ambassador Beam, at Warsaw, knew what to say if Ambassador Wang told him his government had suspended the shelling of Quemoy and asked what we were prepared to do in return. But obviously Ambassador Wang did not say it, and did not ask what we were prepared to do. On the contrary, everything the Communists have said, implies that the cease-fire was not meant for us, that it was not granted in the interest of negotiations with us, and that the offshore islands are none of our business. We are told in every way that the only issue between us and the Communists is our total withdrawal from the Formosa area, and this is all that the Peiping Government will discuss with us. And since this is notiing we can discuss, there simply are no negotiations.

Mr. Dulles at his news conference this afternoon did not put things quite as badly as that. But he hinted it strongly. In his prepared statement he said that the Communists "have made it crystal clear that their objective in the Far East goes far beyond the offshore islands, and has as its primary, if not exclusive, purpose to ta e over Taiwan. The offshore islands," Mr. Dulles said, "are treated as a matter of indifference." And he quoted the Communist proclamation of the cease-fire in saying that "It was to enable the Chinese compatriots on Quemoy, both military and civilian, to get sufficient supplies, including food and military equipment, to strengthen their entrenchment."

A cease-fire that was granted to enable the islanders to strengthen their defensive positoon is a contradiction, and it only becomes intelligible if the real purpose of the attack was political, and if the Communists now believe the political objective is better served by interrupting the bombardment. The political objective, Mr. Dulles said, is to drive a wedge between us and our allies, aur allies in the Formosa area in the first place, but also in the rest of the world.

Mr. Dulles was quite clear in saying that we are not trying to pressure Chiang Kai-Shek into reducing his forces on the offshore islands. As it now turns out, there is no point in doing so. The Communists are not tyying to induce us to do so. Thinning out the troops on the islands, Mr. Dulles said, is not a bargaining point. It now is simply a military question, where best to dispose of forces for military results.

Mr. Dulles did not try to say how long he thoughtthe cease-fire would last, but he did not find it dependable, nor did he think it would be dependable unless some kind of sanctions could be applied if it were broken. He admitted there are other areas in the Far East where the Communists may now try to apply pressure, but he said he thought it less likely that they would do so, in view of the fact that the United States has taken a firm hand in the Formosa area.

He also was asked to comment on former Governor Dewey's proposal to submit the question of the offshore islands to the World Court. Mr. Dulles said he had not discussed this with Mr. Dewey. He believed, he said, in using the provisions of the United Nations Charter for mediation and judicial settlement, consequently he would be in favor of submitting this question to the World Court. But he did not think it would be practical. The World Court is an agency of the United Nations, and the Chinese Communists have rejected United Nations intervention in the crisis. He explaindd that we could not take the case to the World Court by ourselves. It would require action by the Security Council or the Assembly. He was sure the proposal would be vetoed in the Council, and he doubted that a two-thirds majority would be found for it in the Assemh y.

So he was very dubious, he said, of the possibility of getting a positive solution of the crisis through the United Nations. The one possibility, for which so much hope had been raised, was negotiations. And today Mr. Dulles left it clear that there are no negotiations. This does not mean that the firing on Quemoy is sure to resume, indeed a resumption seems unlikely for the time being. So the mystifying question is just where we stand. If Mr. Dulles did not offer an answer to that question, today it almost certainly is because he does not know any.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: One is reminded...in the Formosa situation...of something Mao Tse-tung wrote some 20 years ago. "A revolution," he said, "does not march a straight line. It wanders where it can, retreats before superior forces, advances wherever it has room...attacks whenever the enemy retreats or bluffs...and, above all, is possessed of enormous patience."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 15, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today repeated what Secretary of State Dulles said yesterday---that the United States is not going to try to "coerce" Nationalist China into reducing its garrisons on the offshore islands. He conceded that a reduction might be desirable from a military standpoint.

Mr. Eisenhower said that he...personally...will decide whether the new civilian space agency should take over a large number of the Army's missile experts. He said this when asked to comment on a report that Army experts...as well as facilities...were being transferred to the space agency. A spokesman for Keith Glennan, head of the agency, said earlier the transfers were under consideration but that no decision had been made. General Medaris of the Army ordnance missile command has flown to Washington. There are reports that he may see the President in an effort to keep the transfer from being carried out. Dr. Wernher Von Braun, one of the top Army missilemen, issued a statement...saying that "it would seem something less than prudent" to re-arrange the set-up at this time.

President Eisenhower, though head of the Republican Party, in the midst of the congressional election campaign, placed himself somewhat above party for a few minutes in his news conference today.

He did so by disavowing the republican campaign policy statement, made a week ago, after a meeting of party leaders at the White House. A questioner read to him an abbreviated quotation from the statement to the effect that the only alternative to nationalization and socialization is a republican congress. He was asked if he believed it. The president did not recognize the passage and at first doubted the accuracy of the quotation. Then he seemed to brush it aside. "Anyhow," he said, "it was not my statement. It was theirs. I think that politicians do love to make things very positive."

This was not the only remark by the president to take some of the sharpness out of the partisanship in the campaign. He was asked if he approved of Vice President Nixon's statement that the Acheson-Truman foreign policy had led to war, and the policy of the Eisenhower administration led to peace.

He said he had not read the statement, and like Secretary Dulles yesterday, he avoided a rebuke to Mr. Nixon personally. But he was forthright in saying that foreign policy ought to be kept out of partisan debate. Then he did something unusual-- he quoted ex-President Truman with approval, something reporters did not remember his ever having done before.

"I notice," he said, "that one of the most prominent members of the other party takes the same stand. He happens to have borne the same responsibility of the presidency. I believe that it is in the long-term interest of America in the world, that we do not indulge in this kind of thing."

Mr. Eisenhower also took the occasion to speak with some gentleness about criticism of foreign policy, after drawing a distinction between basic policy, and its operation. "At times, humans, being human," he said, "are going to make errors. Therefore I do not by any means decry intelligent questioning and criticism of any particular point."

Another feature of the campaign came up for comment, the activity of so-called hate groups, some of which, he was told, were identified with the republican side. He was asked if he approved of members of his party soliciting or accepting support from such people, and the name of Joseph Kamp was mentioned. / Mr. Eisenhower said he had read a pamphlet written by Kamp in the 1952 campaign that "called him every name but gentleman." /"I deplore that kind of exaggeration and hate mongering," he said, "but if the man went into the voting booth and voted for me, I don't know what I could do about it." / He was asked if the national committee might not condemn such tactics specifically. "I hadn't thought about it," he said, "but so far as I am concerned, I deplore it as strongly as I know how." /After a whisper from Secretary Haggerty, the president added that Senator Knowland had repudiated Kamp in California, "apparently knowing about some effort the man was going to make."

The activity of hate groups in the south also came up, and stirred the president to his most heated reply. He was told that recent bombing of southern synagogues has been ascribed to the "confederate underground." He resented the term.

"From babyhood," he said, "I was brought up to respect the word confederate very highly. For hoodlums to describe themselves as any relation to the confederacy is an insult to the word. They should be described as nothing but Al Capones and Babyfaced Nelsons."

Mr. Eisenhower was urbane and unruffled when Field Marshal Montgomery's memoirs cropped up. The British general has asserted that General Eisenhower's conduct of the campaign in western Europe, needlessly prolonged the war. The criticism was given unexpected weight by a statement from Germany of General Blumentritt who had been General von [redacted] Rundstedt's chief of staff.

The German said Montgomery was right, and that the war might have ended in 1945, at a great saving in lives, and before the Russians reached Berlin.

The two statements appearing at this moment in the election campaign certainly seemed charged with political possibilities. But Mr. Eisenhower handled the subject skillfully.

"The only thing I can say is this," he said. "We won the war in 11 months from the day we landed, and I heard no single prediction at the time, that the war would be over in less than two years. Winston Churchill told me that if we captured Paris by Christmas, he would consider it the greatest military operation in all times. I think I have been criticized by everybody who can write a book, and I will be in the future."

The Chinese Nationalist Defense Ministry announces that it has stopped flying reconnaissance missions over the China mainland. A ministry spokesman says the reconnaissance flights were discontinued because Nationalist intelligence made them no longer necessary. Other reports from Formosa say the flights were discontinued after consultations with the United States Government.

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors met in Warsaw today for two hours and fifteen minutes. And another meeting was set for a week from tomorrow.

Communist China today announced that it had arrested two British citizens in Shanghai on charges of counter-revolutionary activity. They had been operating, it said, under the guise of working for the religious organization known as the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Tunisia broke off diplomatic relations today with the United Arab Republic. The Tunisian government did not announce at once why it had made the diplomatic break. Recently, however, it accused President Nasser of meddling in its internal affairs. President Bourguiba will address the Tunisian national assembly tomorrow in what is billed as a "major speech".

Secretary General Hammarskjold today recommended drawing up standby plans under which member countries would supply troops for what he called "conflict situations". Hammarskjold based his recommendation on the experience of the United Nations Emergency Force in Egypt, and United Nations observers in Lebanon and Jordan. He suggested that the plans be flexible. In each new conflict situation, he said, (in which the United Nations might be asked to intervene with military personnel) "the nature of the actual organization required would be determined by the particular needs of the situation." He feels that a United Nations force "of the type generally envisaged" would have little practical value. Consequently, he recommends that the General Assembly do no more than endorse certain basic principles and rules which would "provide an adaptable framework for later operations." Hammarskjold said that, as a next step, governments might plan for the possibility of providing men and materiel promptly...on an emergency basis...for a specific United Nations operation. In each instance, however, the United Nations action would have to be authorized either by the General Assembly or the Security Council. No troops would be supplied by a "big power" member of the Security Council, or from any other country with a special interest in the situation. / Hammarskjold also suggested, as another principle, that a country would first have to give consent before a United Nations force could be stationed on its soil. / Hammarskjold's recommendation resembles the proposal made last month by Secretary of State Dulles for a standby "peace force". The proposal was attacked at that time by Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko.

→

Lebanon was quiet today, after the formation of a new government. Rashid Karami remains premier, but coming in as deputy premier, in the new four-man cabinet, is a leader of the Phalange Party, supporting former President Chamoun. / The two other cabinet posts are filled by a politician who...all along...has maintained a neutral position, and by a leader of the violently anti-Chamoun faction, called the National Front. With the formation of this coalition government, the Phalange Party has called off its three-week general strike. The Phalangists reportedly have not decided whether to support the new government in a confidence vote, but are waiting first, to hear the government declare its policy.

The Russians have conducted their eighth nuclear weapons test since September 30. In announcing the new Soviet test, the Atomic Energy Commission gives no date. But it says the explosion was of "high yield".

The United States also continued its tests today at the Nevada proving grounds.

A Polaris test vehicle exploded today at Cape Canaveral after it inadvertently took off and gained a few hundred feet altitude. The missile was destroyed in the air by the range safety officer. No one was injured.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis today continued indefinitely the order prohibiting the closed high schools in Little Rock from operating as segregated, private institutions. The three-judge court heard arguments today...and continued the restraining order, pending its final decision. The court said in a three-page statement that plans for a private corporation to lease the high school buildings were "for the purpose...apparently...of nullifying racial integration."

The Federal Reserve Board has ordered margin requirements on stock purchases raised to 90 percent, effective tomorrow. This is the second increase in the margin requirement since early in August. It was raised then from 50 percent to 70 percent.

This is Ed Murrow....

Ill be back in a moment with the word for today....

But first George Bryan with a word about the weather...

Word for Today

There is not much doubt tonight that the election campaign is in full tilt. And politicking takes strange forms. Edmund Kiefer said, "Kissing babies is a politician's way of offering lip service to the voters." William O'Brion thinks this is all wrong. "Don't kiss the babies," he says. Kiss the mothers. They're the ones who vote."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today repeated what Secretary of State Dulles said yesterday---that the United States is not going to try to "coerce" Nationalist China into reducing its garrisons on the offshore islands. He conceded that a reduction might be desirable from a military standpoint.

Mr. Eisenhower said that he...personally...will decide whether the new civilian space agency should take over a large number of the Army's missile experts. He said this when asked to comment on a report that Army experts... as well as facilities...were being transferred to the space agency. A spokesman for Keith Glennan, head of the agency, said earlier the transfers were under consideration, but that no decision had been made. General Medaris of the Army ordnance missile command has flown to Washington. There are reports that he may see the President, in an effort to keep the transfer from being carried out. Dr. Wernher Von Braun, one of the top Army missilemen, issued a statement... saying that "it would seem something less than prudent" to re-arrange the set-up at this time.

President Eisenhower, though head of the Republican Party, in the midst of the congressional election campaign, placed himself somewhat above party for a few minutes in his news conference today.

He did so by disavowing the republican campaign policy statement, made a week ago, after a meeting of party leaders at the White House. A questioner read to him an abbreviated quotation from the statement to the effect that the only alternative to nationalization and socialization is a republican congress. He was asked if he believed it. The president did not recognize the passage and at first doubted the accuracy of the quotation. Then he seem to brush it aside. "Anyhow," he said, "it was not my statement. It was theirs. I think that politicians do love to make things very positive."

This was not the only remark by the president to take some of the sharpness out of the partisanship in the campaign. He was asked if he approved of Vice President Nixon's statement that the Acheson-Truman foreign policy had led to war, and the policy of the Eisenhower administration led to peace.

He said he had not read the statement, and like Secretary Dulles yesterday, he avoided a rebuke to Mr. Nixon personally. But he was forthright in saying that foreign policy ought to be kept out of partisan debate. Then he did something unusual---he quoted ex-President Truman with approval, something reporters did not remember his ever having done before.

"I notice," he said, "that one of the most prominent member of the other party takes the same stand. He happens to have borne the same responsibility of the presidency. I believe that it is in the long-term interest of America in the world, that we do not indulge in this kind of thing."

Mr. Eisenhower also took the occasion to speak with some gentleness about criticism of foreign policy, after drawing a distinction between basic policy and its operation. "At times, humans, being human," he said, "are going to make errors. Therefore I do not by any means decry intelligent questioning and criticism of any particular point."

Another feature of the campaign came up for comment, the activity of so-called hate groups, some of which, he was told, were identified with the republican side. He was asked if he approved of members of his party soliciting or accepting support from such people, and the name of Joseph Kamp was mentioned. Mr. Eisenhower said he had read a pamphlet written by Kamp in the 1952 campaign that "called him every name but gentleman." "I deplore that kind of exaggeration and hate mongering," he said, "but if the man went into the voting booth and voted for me, I don't know what I could do about it." He was asked if the national committee might not condemn such tactics specifically. "I hadn't thought about it," he said, "but so far as I am concerned, I deplore it as strongly as I know how." After a whisper from Secretary Hagerty, the president added that Senator Knowland had repudiated Kamp in California, "apparently knowing about some effort the man was going to make."

The activity of hate groups in the south also came up, and stirred the president to his most heated reply. He was told that recent bombing of southern synagogues has been ascribed to the "confederate underground." He resented the term. 'From babyhood," he said, "I was brought up to respect the word confederate very highly. For hoodlums to describe themselves as any relation to the confederacy is an insult to the word. They should be described as nothing but Al Capones and Babyfaced Nelsons."

Mr. Eisenhower was urbane and unruffled when Field Marshal Montgomery's memoirs cropped up. The British general has asserted that General Eisenhower's conduct of the campaign in western Europe, needlessly prolonged the war. The criticism was given unexpected weight by a statement from Germany of General Blumentritt who had been General von Rundstedt's chief of staff.

The German said Montgomery was right, and that the war might have ended in 1945, at a great saving in lives, and before the Russians reached Berlin.

The two statements appearing at this moment in the election campaign certainly seemed charged with political possibilities. But Mr. Eisenhower handled the subject skillfully.

"The only thing I can say is this," he said. "We won the war in 11 months from the day we landed, and I heard no single prediction at the time, that the war would be over in less than two years. Winston Chruchill told me that if we captured Paris by Christmas he would consider it the greatest military operation in all times. I think I have been criticized by everybody who can write a book, and I will be in the future."

The Chinese Nationalist Defense Ministry announces that it has stopped flying reconnaissance missions over the China mainland. A ministry spokesman says the flights were discontinued because Nationalist intelligence made them no longer necessary. Other reports from Formosa say the flights were discontinued after consultations with the United States Government.

The American and Chinese Communist ambassadors met in Warsaw today for two hours and fifteen minutes. And another meeting was set for a week from tomorrow.

Communist China today announced that it had arrested two British citizens in Shanghai on charges of counter-revolutionary activity. They had been operating it said, under the guise of working for the religious organization known as the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Tunisia broke off diplomatic relations today with the United Arab Republic. The Tunisian government did not announce at once why it had made the diplomatic break. Recently, however, it accused President Nasser of meddling in its internal affairs. President Bourguiba will address the Tunisian national assembly tomorrow in what is billed as a "major speech."

Secretary General Hamaarskjold today recommended drawing up standby plans under which member countries would supply troops for what he called "conflict situations." No troops would be supplied by a "big power" member of the Security Council, or from any other country with a special interest in the situation. Hammarskjold also suggested as another principle that a country would first have to give consent before a United Nations force could be stationed on its soil. Hammarskjold's recommendation resembles the proposal made last month by Secretary of State Dulles for a standby "peace force." The porposal was attacked at that time by Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko.

Lebanon was quiet today after the formation of a new government. Rashid Karami remains premier, but coming in as deputy premier in the new four-man cabinet is a leader of the Phalange Party, supporting former President Chamoun. The two other cabinet posts are filled by a politician who...all...along...has maintained a neutral position and by a leader of the violently anti-Chamoun faction called the National Front. With the formation of this coalition government, the Phalange Party has called off its three-week general strike. The Phalangists reportedly have not decided whether to support the new government in a confidence vote, but are waiting first to hear the government declare its policy.

The Russians have conducted their eighth nuclear weapons test since September 30th. In announcing the new Soviet test, the Atomic Energy Commission gives no date. But it says the explosion was of "high yield."

The United States also continued its tests today at the Nevada proving grounds.

A Polaris test vehicle exploded today at Cape Canaveral after it inadvertently took off and gained a few hundred feet altitude. The missile was destroyed in the air by the range safety officer. No one was injured.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis today continued indefinitely the order prohibiting the closed high schools in Little Rock from operating as segregated, private institutions. The three-judge court heard arguments today...and continued the restraining order, pending its final decision. The court said in a three-page statement that plans for a private corporation to lease the high school buildings were "for the purpose...apparently...of nullifying racial integration."

The Federal Reserve Board has ordered margin requirements on stock purchases raised to 90 percent effective tomorrow. This is the second increase in the margin requirement since early in August. It was raised then from 50 percent to 70 percent.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But, first George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: There is not much doubt tonight that the election campaign is in full tilt. And politicking takes strange forms. Edmund Kiefer said, "Kissing babies is a politician's way of offering lip service to the voters." William Obrion thinks this is all wrong. "Don't kiss the babies," he says. Kiss the mothers. They're the ones who vote."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 16, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today sent Vice President Nixon a telegram, in an effort to straighten out Republican campaign policy regarding debate on foreign policy. The issue came up on Tuesday...when Secretary of State Dulles said at his news conference that he wished both parties would "calm down" and not argue "current aspects" of foreign policy. Later that same day---Tuesday---the State Department issued a clarifying statement, emphasizing that Dulles meant both parties and was not just criticizing a statement by Nixon...which one of the reporters at the news conference had asked him about. [redacted] Then yesterday there were new statements on the subject by Messrs. Eisenhower, Dulles and Nixon. Mr. Dulles issued a statement saying that Mr. Nixon had a right to answer the attack by the Democratic Advisory Council on the Administration's China policy. Nixon's answer had been that the Acheson foreign policy resulted in war and that the Eisenhower-Dulles policy resulted in peace. Mr. Eisenhower was asked at his news conference yesterday whether he subscribed to this. His reply was that he deplored this kind of give and take. Mr. Eisenhower said the theory he subscribes to, is that foreign policy ought to be kept out of partisan debate. Later in the day in Los Angeles, Vice President Nixon said he was going to keep on striking back at the Democrats when they criticized Administration policy in the field of foreign affairs. He said, "If my view differs from that which the President has expressed, the difference is not because of any difference we have as individuals. The difference is because of the positions we hold." Nixon explained that it was the duty of the President to mobilize the country behind him, [redacted] to play a unifying role. [redacted] But, said Nixon, it was his duty to hit back. To allow our policies to be attacked with impunity, he said, would lead to "inevitable defeat". It was in the wake of all these statements that President Eisenhower today sent his telegram to Nixon.

→

The President said that while he thought the basic elements of foreign policy do not lend themselves to political argument, certain aspects of that policy have been challenged by the Democrats...as in the case of Quemoy and Matsu. These challenges, Mr. Eisenhower said, should be met. And, he told Mr. Nixon, "no one could do this more effectively than you." He assured Nixon that there is "no real difference" in the Nixon and Dulles positions. (If all this ~~[illegible]~~ confusion, it is because there has been a certain amount of confusion). Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will leave on a political tour of the country which will take him to the West Coast.

Russia today accused the United States of violating its air space twice on the 30th of September. / The Russians charge...in a formal note of protest...that the incursions were made by a single American aircraft / in the vicinity of the Bering Strait. They say that other American planes made flights over Kamchatka and the Kurile Islands in July and August / as well as September. And the flights, they say, were carried out "for the purpose of reconnaissance." / The Russian note refers indirectly to the crash...early in September...of the C-130 transport plane inside Soviet Armenia. Six American airmen died in that accident, and nine others are not accounted for. The Russian note makes its accusation and then says, "This at a time / when the U.S. Government was doing its best to deny the violation of the frontier by another [redacted] aircraft in the south of the Soviet Union." / The State Department has explained that the transport strayed over the border by accident.

The United States is reported to have delivered a shipload of M-41 tanks to the Nationalist Army today on Formosa. The M-41 is a light tank, developed during the Korean War to travel on poor roads. More American tanks are said to be on the way.

The head of the Communist Party in Poland reports that more than 15 percent of the party's members have been expelled in the past year. Wladyslaw Gomulka makes this report in a speech to the 12th plenum of the party published tonight. Gomulka says most of these party members were dropped because they showed insufficient interest. Only 792 of the 207-thousand dropped were expelled for "revisionist tendencies." Gomulka boasted that the Communist Party in Poland had "created a climate" in which revisionists could no longer live. At the same time, he said that "obstacles" remain among university students. His speech ran 70 pages.

An Israeli military court today sentenced eight Israelis to prison terms ranging up to 17 years for their part in killing 43 Arabs in a border village two years ago. The incident occurred on the eve of Israel's invasion of Egypt when the Arab victims unknowingly violated a curfew. The eight defendants were members of the border patrol. The minimum sentence was seven years.

On Cyprus today, the British imposed new security measures in an attempt to put an end to mounting violence throughout the island. One of the new measures calls for postal censorship "to prevent the smuggling of arms by parcel post."

President Bourguiba of Tunisia said today that his country broke off diplomatic relations with the United Arab Republic because Egypt had plotted against his life and against his government. He accused President Nasser of flirting dangerously with Communism and declared Tunisia's firm alignment with the West.

General DeGaulle has won a major victory on the Algerian front...and for that story, we switch to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 4:55
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, (reporting on what he very correctly called "an historic turning point in French history."

This is Ed Murrow. I'lll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But, first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

General DeGaulle has scored a significant victory over the ultra-nationalists. As the saying goes, "This could be it." In his memoirs, DeGaulle brooded over the role of what he termed "the man of destiny". Hope of playing a great role, he said, spurs him on. "For Glory gives herself only to those who have always dreamed of her."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, October 16, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EDT

MURROW: ... And, for that story we switch to Paris, and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Charles De Gaulle has liberated the French for the 2nd time in history. The first time - 14 years ago, he liberated them from the Nazi's. Today, De Gaulle liberated the French from themselves. It might be said that this is even a greater victory for he did it himself without the aid of allied armies and without having to fire a shot. He has put to route the colonial military clique who thought that Algers was the capital of France. This clique is composed of the ultra-nationalistic French colonials and the hot-headed colonels drunk with the heavy wine of revolutionary psychological warfare. It was this clique of colonials and colonels which seized power in Algers on May 13th, delivering the coup de grasse to the moribund 4th Republic. At that time, it seemed that Charles De Gaulle whom they brought back to power was the prisoner of his sponsors. He decorated and promoted insurgent officers and took into his government Jacques Soustelle, one of the leaders in the plot against the Republic. De Gaulle did offer an amnesty to the Moslem rebels, but he continued to pursue the war without seeking any new road to peace. De Gaulle, however, was apparently biding his time. Once his regime was legalized by the massive endorsement of his constitution on September 28th, he opened the2nd front, undertaking the war against the French rebels as well as the fight against the Moslem Nationalists. He publicly rejected the colonial policy of integration. He repeated his amnesty offer to the Moslems with no conditions attached and he proposed a generous five-year program of political and social justice for the Algerian people. But, that was only the start. This week De Gaulle struck to split the 2nd front wide open. On Monday, he ordered the Army officers to withdraw from the colonial committees of Public Safety and to cease promptly all political activities. "The role of the Army," said De Gaulle "is to assure free elections not to participate in them." He said, "The list must be open to candidates of all opinions adding the words, I say allopinions." The colonials screamed with rage and called for a general strike and mass demonstration to be staged today. Today, has ended. It is past midnight in Algers and the colonials have been badly beaten. The Army obeyed De Gaulle and banned the strike, the colonial cliques own followers began to desert. Out of a total membership of 64 on the principal committee of Algers, only 24 showed up for this mornings meeting and of those 24, 10 voted to call off the strike. Moslem members of the committee denounced it and resigned, as did its major public spokesman, wealthy newspaper owner Allan De Serigny, sometimes called the Brains of the Brainless. The mass demonstration turned out to be a comic parade of a few dozen young students. The people stayed home and the forum - once the scene of horric moments was empty. The 2nd front had collapsed.

Charles de Gaulle has won a major battle. He has not, however, won the war. The colonials and the colonels openly defeated have gone underground to reorganise. The opportunities for sabotage in Algeria are endless. As for the first front, the Moslem Nationalist rebellion is still active, despite some recent signs of physical and moral fatigue. Great difficulities remain ahead. Neither De Gaulle nor the men around him sh have any illusions about an easy victory. They're not even talking about victory at all. They say they're seeking an honorable test, they do not rule out any solution - not even independence, if that is the clearly expressed desire of the majority ofthe Algerian peoples. An official spokesman in De Gaulle's office told me today, that any candidate who wants to campaign on the basis of independence can do so, providing that he enjoys his civic rights and is not campaigning with a gun in his hand. This is undoubtedly an historic turning point in French and Algerian history. No one can be sure today just where this turning point will lead. It certainly will not lead backwards to an outmoded colonial past, that, died today. It will not be a rut in which France will stand still. That is not de Gaulle's style and in any case, events will not permit the status quo. De Gaulle says that the turning point will lead to peace. His words are often prophetic, always oracular and difficult to understand. De Gaulle does not always say what he means. But, he always means what he says, and he says, he means peace in Algeria.

I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague David Schoenbrun reporting on what he called an historic turning point in French history.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today sent Vice President Nixon a telegram in an effort to straighten out Republican campaign policy regarding debate on foreign policy. The issue came up on Tuesday...when Secretary of State Dulles said at his news conference, that he wished both parties would "calm down" and not argue "current aspects" of foreign policy. Later that same day---Tuesday---the State Department issued a clarifying statement emphasizing that Dulles meant both parties and was not just criticizing a statement by Nixon...which one of the reporters at the news conference had asked him about. Then yesterday there were new statements on the subject by Messrs. Eisenhower, Dulles and Nixon. Mr. Dulles issued a statement saying that Mr. Nixon had a right to answer the attack by the Democratic Advisory Council on the Administration's China policy. Nixon's answer had been that the Acheson foreign policy resulted in war and that the Eisenhower - Dulles policy resulted in peace. Mr. Eisenhower was asked at his news conference yesterday whether he subscribed to this. His reply was that he deplored this kind of give and take. Mr. Eisenhower said the theory he subscribes to is that foreign policy ought to be kept out of partisan debate. Later in the day in Los Angeles Vice President Nixon said he was going to keep on striking back at the Democrats when they criticized Administration policy in the field of foreign affairs. He said, "If my view differs from that which the President has expressed, the difference is not because of any difference we have as individuals. The difference is because of the positions we hold." Nixon explained that it was the duty of the President to mobilize the country behind him, to play a unifying role. But, said Nixon, it was his duty to hit back. To allow our policies to be attacked with impunity, he said, would lead to "inevitable defeat." It was in the wake of all these statements that President Eisenhower today sent his telegram to Nixon. The President said that while he thought the basic elements of foreign policy do not lend themselves to political argument, certain aspects of that policy have been challenged by the Democrats as in the case of Quemoy and Matsu. These challenges, Mr. Eisenhower said, should be met. And, he told Mr. Nixon, "no one could do this more effectively than you." He assured Nixon that there is "no real difference" in the Nixon and Dulles positions. Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will leave on a political tour of the country which will take him to the West Coast.

Russia today accused the United States of violating its air space twice on the 30th of September. The Russians charge...in a formal note of protest that the incursions were made by a single American aircraft in the vicinity of the Bering Strait. They say that other American planes made flights over Kamchatka and the Kurile Islands in July and August as well as September. And the flights, they say, were carried out "for the purpose of reconnaissance." The Russian note refers indirectly to the crash....early in September...of the C-130 transport plane inside Soviet Armenia. Six American airmen died in that accident, and nine others are not accounted for. The Russian note makes its accusation and then says, "This at a time when the U.S. government was doing its best to deny the violation of the frontier by another aircraft in the south of the Soviet Union." The State Department has explained that the transport strayed over the border by accident.

The United States is reported to have delivered a shipload of M-41 tanks to the Nationalist Army today on Formosa. The M-41 is a light tank, developed during the Korean War to travel on poor roads. More American tanks are said to be on the way.

The head of the Communist Party in Poland reports that more than 15 percent of the party's members have been expelled in the past year. Wladyslaw Gomulka makes this report in a speech to the 12th plenum of the party published tonight. Gomulka says most of these party members were dropped because they showed insufficient interest. Only 792 of the 207 thousand dropped were expelled for "revisionist tendencies." Gomulka boasted that the Communist Party in Poland had "created a climate" in which revisionists could no longer live. At the same time, he said that "obstacles" remain among university students. His speech ran 70 pages.

An Israeli military court today sentenced eight Israelis to prison terms ranging up to 17 years for their part in killing 43 Arabs in a border village two years ago. The incident occurred on the eve of Israel's invasion of Egypt when the Arab victims unknowingly violated a curfew. The eight defendants were members of the border patrol. The minimum sentence was seven years.

On Cyprus today, the British imposed new security measures in an attempt to put an end to mounting violence throughout the island. One of thenew measures calls for postal censorship "to prevent the smuggling of arms by parcel post."

President Bourguiba of Tunisia said today that his country broke off diplomatic relations with the United Arab Republic because Egypt had plotted against his life and against his government. He accused President Nasser of flirting dangerously with Communism and declared Tunisia's firm alignment with the West.

General DeGaulle has won a major victory on the Algerian front...and for that story, we switch to Paris And David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: Charles DeGaulle has liberated the French for the second time in history. The first time - 14 years ago, he liberated them from the Nazis. Today, DeGaulle liberated the French from themselves. It might be said that this is even a greater victory for he did it himself without the aid of allied armies and without having to fire a shot. He has put to route the colonial military clique who thought that Algiers was the capital of France. This clique is composed of the ultra-nationalistic French colonials and the hot-headed colonels drunk with the heavy wine of revolutionary psychological warfare. It was this clique of colonials and colonels which seized power in Algiers on May 13th, delivering the coup de grasse to the moribund 4th Republic. At that time, it seemed that Charles DeGaulle whom they brought back to power was the prisoner of his sponsors...He decorated and promoted insurgent officers and took into his government Jacques Soustelle, one of the leaders in the plot against the Republic. DeGaulle did offer an amnesty to the Moslem rebels, but he continued to pursue the war without seeking any new road to peace. DeGaulle, however, was apparently biding his time. Once his regime was legalized by the massive endorsement of his constitution on September 28th, he opened the 2nd front, undertaking the war against the French rebels as well as the fight against the Moslem Nationalists. He publicly rejected the colonial policy of integration. He repeated his amnesty offer to the Moslems with no conditions attached and he proposed a generous five year program of political and social justice for the Algerian people. But, that was only the start. This week DeGaulle struck to split the 2nd front wide open. On Monday, he ordered the Army officers to withdraw from the colonial committees of Public Safety and to cease promptly all political activities. "The role of the Army," said DeGaulle "is to assure free elections not to participate in them. He said, "The list must be open to candidates of all opinions adding the words, I say all opinions." The colonials screamed with rage and called for a general strike and mass demonstration to be staged today. Today, has ended. It is past midnight in Algiers and the Colonials have been badly beaten. The Army obeyed DeGaulle and banned the strike, the colonial cliques own followers began to desert. Out of a total membersiip of 64 on the principal committee of Algiers only 24 showed up for this morning's meeting and of those 24, 10 voted to call off the strike. Moslem members of the committee denounced it and resigned, as did its major public spokesman, wealthy newspaper owner Allan De Serigny, sometimes called the Brains of the Brainless. The mass demonstration turned out to be a comic parade of a few dozen young students. The people stayed home and the forum, once the scene of horric moments was empty. The second front had collapsed.

Charles DeGaulle has won a major battle. He has not, however, won the war. The colonials and the colonels openly defeated have gone underground to reorganize. The opportunities for sabotage in Algeria are endless. As for the first front, the Moslem Nationalist rebellion is still active, despite some recent signs of physical and moral fatigue. Great difficulties remain ahead. Neither DeGaulle nor the men around him have any illusions about an easy victory. They're not even talking about victory at all. They say they're seeking an honorable test, they do not rule out any solution - not even independence, if that is the clearly expressed desire of the majority of the Algerian peoples. An official spokesman in DeGaulle's office told me today, that any candidate who wants to campaign on the basis of independence can do so, providing that he enjoys his civic rights and is not campaigning with a gun in his hand. This is undoubtedly an historic turning point in Franch and Algerian history. No one can be sure today just where this turning point will lead. It certainly will not lead backwards to an outmoded colonial past; that, died today. It will not be a rut in which France will stand still. That is not DeGaulle's style and in any case, events will not permit the status quo. DeGaulle says that the turning point will lead to peace. His words are often prophetic, always oracular and difficult to understand. De Gaulle does not always say what he means. But, he always means what he says, and he says, he means peace in Algeria.

I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun reporting on what he called "an historic turning point in French history."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

But, first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: General DeGaulle has scored a significant victory over the ultra-nationalists. As the saying goes, "This could be it." In his memoirs, DeGaulle brooded over the role of what he termed "the man of destiny." Hope of playing a great role, je said spurs him on. "For Glory gives herself only to those who have always dreamed of her."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 17, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles will go to Formosa next week to confer with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. / Mr. Dulles is leaving Washington tonight for Rome, where on Sunday he will attend a pontifical requiem mass for the late Pope Pius the Twelfth. / Then, next Wednesday, he will fly on to Formosa for his meeting with Chiang. Assistant Secretary of State Walter Robertson will fly directly from Washington to join in the talks. And he is due to arrive there ahead of Dulles. / The State Department says they are going at the invitation of the Nationalist Government. / There is no announcement as to the purpose of the meeting. / But according to informants, the entire range of problems in the Formosa crisis will be discussed. There is speculation that this discussion may include the possible reduction of Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands. Both Dulles and President Eisenhower have said they regarded the islands over-garrisoned from a military standpoint. They have also said they would not "coerce" Chiang Kai-shek into reducing the garrisons. The Nationalist ambassador to the United States, George Yeh, said today in Washington that his government has "no intention" of giving up the offshore islands. Such a withdrawal, he said, would mean a retreat for the entire free world.

—7

It was confirmed today that the United States is turning over to Nationalist China some 65 or 70 Nike-Hercules missiles for the defense of Formosa against air attack. American troops will help man the missiles until the Nationalists have been sufficiently trained in their operation. This training period may last 12 to 18 months.

The State Department said today that it is renewing its permission for the representatives of 25 American news organizations to travel in Red China. Passport validations for this purpose are being renewed for seven months. The Chinese Communists want to send reporters to the United States on a reciprocal basis. The State Department has not agreed to this. And so Red China, so far, has refused to let the 25 American newsmen in China. Earlier, when [illegible] invited American reporters to visit the mainland, the State Department prohibited them from going.

→

President Eisenhower left Washington today on a six-day political tour that will take him to the West Coast. He made his first speech around noon at the national corn-picking contest near Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Mr. Eisenhower told a farm audience...estimated at more than 85-thousand...that "real progress" is being made in solving farmers' problems. Net farm income, he said, is 20 percent higher than last year. He called the United Nations Charter the basic tenet of America's foreign policy. He said: "I have no other thought for the next two years (if the good Lord gives me that long) but to work for peace." Democratic Senator Kennedy spoke at the corn-picking contest in the morning...and said that Administration policy had driven 4-million persons off the farm.

Former President Truman said today that it was President Eisenhower who first made a campaign issue out of foreign policy---[illegible] in the presidential campaign of 1952. He said he was "glad" that Mr. Eisenhower, after some experience, had come around to his point of view. A reporter asked Mr. Truman if Vice President Nixon has assumed control of the

→

[redacted] Republican Party. He said that was a matter for the Republicans to "settle for themselves."

Acting Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles said today that an increase [redacted] in military spending is being planned for fiscal 1960. He said the increase---due to rising defense costs---would be less than 10 percent, perhaps within 5 percent. The military budget for fiscal 1959 was 40-billion, 750-million dollars.

In Beirut today, the Lebanese parliament gave Premier Karami a vote of confidence. The approval came after Karami reshuffled his cabinet to include the pro and anti-Chamoun parties.

The Little Rock private school corporation announces that it will open a private, segregated high school on Monday. The corporation will start the operation for about 500 high school seniors [redacted] with 61-thousand dollars it says it has received in private contributions. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says it will test the legality of the move in Federal Court.

Today...at the Witchita, Kansas airport...a man was killed when a bomb exploded in his hands. The bomb was in a package about the size of a shoe box, wrapped in brown paper. [redacted] The victim is quoted as having told → a clerk in the airport terminal...just before the explosion...that he had "found a bomb in a telephone booth." He carried 25-thousand dollars in flight insurance.

In Atlanta, Georgia...a county grand jury today indicted five men on charges of dynamiting the Jewish temple there last Sunday. Conviction could carry the death penalty. The indictments were returned under a Georgia state law that prescribes 20 years imprisonment, or possible electrocution, for dynamiting a building within city limits. The five are identified as Wallace A. Allen, Kenneth Chester Griffin, George Bright, and two brothers, Richard and Robert Cowling. Richard Cowling has not been apprehended. And the other four are being held without bail. Atlanta police say they have established the identity of a man believed to have been financing anti-Semitic activity in the South. Police declined to give his name...but released the text of a letter in which he was praised as "a fat cat who is putting his dollars where his mouth is, God bless him." One of the five suspects...apprehended early this week in connection with the temple bombing...was not indicted today, and has been set free. The other four, in talking to reporters for the first time this afternoon, denied their guilt.

On October 8, the Soviet government ordered CBS to close its Moscow bureau. The order was issued, the Press Ministry said, because of Soviet dissatisfaction with some recent CBS programs, notably "The Plot to Kill Stalin". / CBS News Correspondent Paul Niven was given two weeks to close up the bureau and leave Russia. Yesterday, he left. He reached London today / on his way home. And here is his first report / from London / since being "liberated from censorship."

(Tape runs 5:07
(Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague, Paul Niven. He was broadcasting from London, following ~~his~~ explusion by the Soviet government...an action which the State Department said amounted to "indirect censorship," resulting in "a reduction in the exchange of information between the Soviet Union and the United States." |

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The real issue in the closing of the CBS News bureau in Moscow is freedom of information. Correspondents besides Paul Niven have been expelled from Moscow. And, each time, information and understanding are harder to come by. "Before I built a wall," Robert Frost said, "I'd ask to know what I was walling in or walling out."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Essoyan

Friday, October 17, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EDT

MURROW: ... End, here is his first report from London, since being liberated from censorship.

NIVEN: The last correspondent before me to be ordered out of the Soviet Union a month ago was Roy Essayan? of the Associated Press. He received the news with mixed emotions as I did. In an effort to cheer him up another old Moscow hand sent him a cable from Paris, saying, "Come on out, the air is fine." Well, the air is fine even in smoggy London. It's good to see advertising signs instead of militant slogans, good to read newspapers full of controversy instead of ardent applause and unanimous approval, good to see the familiar London bobby with his black helmet and remember that he occupies a different role in society from that of the Soviet MVD man. It's good to eat better food and it is a little better - even in England. And, good to see better/dressed people, though in all physical respects, the Moscow I left yesterday is a far more prosperous and agreeable place than the Moscow I first saw two years ago.

For a newsman, it's especially good to write a script and come over here to the good old BBC and read it without submitting it hours in advance to an unseen and unpredictable censor. Censorship remains the biggest obstacle to Western news coverage in the Soviet Union - bigger even than the frequent of explusion of correspoddents. The returning correspondent suddenly liberated from censorship inevitably searches his mind and his file of mutilated Moscow scripts for stories that he hasn't been able to tell until this moment. In the realm of hard fact, he finds surprisingly little. This is proof perhaps that censhrship always fails in its purpose or perhaps that we in Moscow have learned to get around it. Looking under the black crayon at what the censor deleted from my scripts, I find that most of the news did get out by one means or another. When a so-called spontaneous demonstrations of indignant Moscow workers stormed the American Embassy during the Middle East crisis, the censor wouldn't let us say that they broke 274 windows, but in one way or another, we did. When the Soviet Union resumed testing nuclear weapons three weeks ago, the censor wouldn't let us mention that, for several days, but the world found out about it from Washingtonand Tokyo. One of the Russian TU-104 Jets crashed a couple of months ago, there's never been a line about that in the Soviet press, but American correspondents did get the story out. Facts will out, and in that sense, the Soviet apparatus for controlling and censoring news doesn't work. But the black crayon is also directed against criticism of the Soviet Union and against what the Russians call speculation. By and large the Soviets dislike any article or broadcast or part of an article or broadcast that reflects unfavorably on their government or their civilization. Meanwhile, they're delighted to have their achievements and their good points written up. The result is a tremendous imbalance in all Moscow dispatches. For instance, a group of American women doctors visited the Soviet Union this summer and held a news conference. They said that they were much impressed with Soviet progress in medicine. That we could report. They also said that the general level of patient care left much to be desired. That, the censor crossed out. The women doctors said they had been given loads of statistics on the number of physicians and nurses in the Soviet Union but no statistics on the incidents of various diseases. Again, we could report the first part but not the second. The censor also crosses out any speculation on the future policy of the Soviet government. But even with his chains suddenly taken off, a correspondent finds other inhabitions. It would be comforting to be able to come out and say that Soviet power is made of straw and proceed to expose it. Iknow of no evidence to support such a thesis. It might be comforting to some and exciting to everybody to learn that Nikita Khrushchev is losing his grip or likely to be ousted. But, I think, is equally untrue. He's been on vacation for most of the last two months but his stamp is everywhere. Not only is there no sign of any move against him in the central committee but it's inconceivable in present circumstances that such a move could succeed. Coming out of Moscow on vacation two months ago I noticed that the huge apartment community on the way to the airport was bigger than ever. Coming out again yesterday, I saw further enormous buildings where only cranes had been two months ago and then more cranes further down the highway. Whatever else it may be the Soviet Union is impressive. And, to one who does not share or admire its values, it is freightening. Not, I hasten to add in a military sense. I don't know a single western diplomat in Moscow who expects the Soviet Union to begin a World War. The Russians claim themselves that their system will sweep the world without a war. I'm fairly sure, Mr. Khrushchev believes that. Again, it would be comforting for a correspondent coming out of Moscow to say that Khrushchev is wrong and go on to prove it. I can't do that either.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Paul Niven.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles will go to Formosa to confer with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek. Mr. Dulles is leaving Washington tonight for Rome, where on Sunday he will attend a pontifical requiem mass for the late Pope Pius the Twelfth. Then, next Wednesday, he will fly on to Formosa for his meeting with Chiang. Assistant Secretary of State Walter Robertson will fly directly from Washington to join in the talks. And he is due to arrive there ahead of Dulles. The State Department says they are going at the invitation of the Nationalist Government. There is no announcement as to the purpose of the meeting. But according to informants, the entire range of problems in the Formosa crisis will be discussed. There is speculation that this discussion may include the possible reduction of Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands. Both Dulles and President Eisenhower have said they regarded the islands over-garrisoned from a military standpoint. They have also said they would not "coerce" Chiang Kai-Shek into reducing the garrisons. The Nationalist ambassador to the United States, George Yeh, said today in Washington that his government has "no intention of giving up the offshore islands. Such a withdrawal, he said, would mean a retreat for the entire free world.'

It was confirmed today that the United States is turning over to Nationalist China some 65 or 70 Nike-Hercules missiles for the defense of Formosa against air attack. American troops will help man the missiles until the Nationalists have been sufficiently trained in their operation. This training period may last 12 to 18 months.

President Eisenhower left Washington today on a six day political tour that will take him to the West Coast. He made his first speech around noon at the national cornpicking contest near Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Mr. Eisenhower told a farm audience...estimated at more than 85-thousand...that "real progress" is being made in solving farmers' problems. Net farm income, he said, is 20 percent higher than last year. He called the United Nations Charter the basic tenet of America's foreign policy. He said: "I have no other thought for the next two years (if the good Lord gives me that long) but to work for peace." Democratic Senator Kennedy spoke at the corn-picking contest in the morning...and said that Administration policy had driven 4-million persons off the farm.

Former President Truman said today that it was President Eisenhower who first made a campaign issue out of foreign policy---in the presidential campaign of 1952. He said he was "glad" that Mr. Eisenhower after some experience had come around to his point of view. A reporter asked Mr. Truman if Vice President Nixon has assumed control of the Republican Party. He said that was a matter for the Republicans to "settle for themselves."

Acting Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles said today that an increase in military spending is being planned for fiscal 1960. He said the increase---due to rising defense costs---would be less than 10 percent, perhaps within 5 percent. The military budget for fiscal 1959 was 40-billion, 750-million dollars.

In Beirut today, the Lebanese parliament gave Premier Karami a vote of confidence. The approval came after Karami reshuffled his cabinet to include the pro and anti-Chamoun parties.

The Little Rock private school corporation announces that it will open a private, segregated high school on Monday. The corporation will start the operation for about 500 high school seniors with 61-thousand dollars it says it has received in private contributions. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says it will test the legality of the move in Federal Court.

Today...at the Witchita, Kansas airport...a man was killed when a bomb exploded in his hands. The bomb was in a package about the size of a shoe box, wrapped in brown paper. The victim is quoted as having told a clerk in the airport terminal...just before the explosion...that he had "found a bomb in a telephone booth." He carried 25-thousand dollars in flight insurance.

In Atlanta, Georgia...a county grand jury today indicted five men on charges of dynamiting the Jewish temple there last Sunday. Conviction could carry the death penalty. The indictments were returned under a Georgia state law that prescribes 20 years imprisonment of possible electrocution for dynamiting a building within city limits. One of the five suspects...apprehended early this week in connection with the temple bombing...was not indicted today and has been set free. The other four in talking to reporters for the first time this afternoon denied their guilt.

On October 8, the Soviet government ordered CBS to close its Moscow bureau. The order was issued, the Press Ministry said, because of Soviet dissatisfaction with some recent CBS programs, notably "The Plot to Kill Stalin." CBS News Correspondent Paul Niven was given two weeks to close up the bureau and leave Russia. Yesterday, he left. He reached London today on his way home. And here is his first report from London since being "liberated from censorship."

NIVEN: The last correspondent before me to be ordered out of the Soviet Union a month ago was Roy Essoyan of the Associated Press. He received the news with mixed emotions as I did. In an effort to cheer him up another old Moscow hand sent him a cable from Paris, saying, "Cone on out, the air is fine." Well, the air is fine even in smoggy London. It's good to see advertising signs instead of militant slogans, good to read newspapers full of controversy instead of ardent applause and unanimous approval, good to see the familiar london bobby with his black helmet and remember that he occupies a different role in society from that of the Soviet MVD man. It's good to eat better food and it is a little better - even in England. And, good to see better dressed people, though in all physical respects, the Moscow I left yesterday is a far more prosperous and agreeable place than the Moscow I first saw two years ago.

For a newsman, it's especially good to write a script and come over here to the good old BBC and read it without submitting it hours in advance to an unseen and unpredictable censor. Censorship remains the biggest obstacle to Western news coverage in the Soviet Union - bigger even than the frequent of expulsion of correspondents. The returning correspondent suddenly liberated from censorship inevitably searches his mind and his file of mutilated Moscow acripts for stories that he hasn't been able to tell until this moment. In the realm of hard fact, he finds surprisingly little. This is proof perhaps that censorship always fails in its purpose or perhaps that we in Moscow have learned to get around it. Looking under the black crayon at what the censor deleted from my scripts, I find that most of the news did get out by one means or another. When a so-called spontaneous demonstration of indignant Moscow workers stormed the American Embassy during the Middle East crisis, the censor wouldn't let us say that they broke 274 windows, but in one way or another, we did. When the Soviet Union resumed testing nuclear weapons three weeks ago, the censor wouldn't let us mention that, for several days, but the world found out about it from Washington and Tokyo. One of the Russian TU-104 Jets crashed a couple of months ago, there's never been a line about that in the Soviet press, but American correspondents did get the story out. Fact were out, and in that sense, the Soviet apparatus for controlling and censoring news doesn't work. But the black crayon is also directed against criticism of the Soviet Union and against what the Russians call speculation. By and large the Soviets dislike any article or broadcast or part of an article or broadcast that reflects unfavorably on their government or their civilization. Meanwhile, they're delighted to have their achievements and their good points written up. The result is a tremendous imbalance in all Moscow dispatches. For instance, a group of American women doctors visited the Soviet Union this summer and held a news conference. They said that they were much impressed with Soviet progress in medicine. That we could report. They also said that the general level of patient care left much to be desired. That, the censor crossed out. The women doctors said they had been given loads of statistics on the number of physicians and nurses in the Soviet Union but no statistics on the incidents of various diseases. Again, we could report the first part but not the second. The censor also crosses out any speculation on the future policy of the Soviet government. But even with his chains suddenly taken off, a correspondent finds other inhibitions. It would be comforting to be able to come out and say that Soviet power is made of straw and proceed to expose it. I know of no evidence to support such a thesis. It might be comforting to some and exciting to everybody to learn that Nikita Khrushchev is losing his grip or likely to be ousted. But I think, is equally untrue. He's been on vacation for most of the last two months but his stamp is everywhere. Not only is there no sign of any move against-him in the central committee, but it's inconceivable in present circumstances that such a move could succeed. Coming out of Moscow on vacation two months ago, I noticed that the huge apartment community on the way to the airport was bigger than ever. Coming out again yesterday, I saw further enormous buildings where only cranes had been two months ago and then more cranes further down the highway. Whatever else it may be the Soviet Union is impressive. And, to one who does not share or admire its values, it is frightening. Not, I hasten to add in a military sense. I don't know a single western diplomat in Moscow who expects the Soviet Union to begin a World War. The Russians claim themselves that their system will sweep the world without a war. I'm fairly sure, Mr. Khrushchev believes that. Again, it would be comforting for a correspondent coming out of Moscow to say that Khrushchev is wrong and go on to prove it. I can't do that either.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Paul Niven. He was broadcasting from London, following expulsion by the Soviet government...an action which the State Department said amounted to "indirect censorship" resulting in "a reduction in the exchange of information between the Soviet Union and the United States."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The real issue in the closing of the CBS News bureau in Moscow is freedom of information. Correspondents besides Paul Niven have been expelled from Moscow. And, each time, information and understanding are harder to come by. "Before I built a wall," Robert Frost said, "I'd ask to know what I was walling in or walling out."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Oct. 20, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says it is "a tragedy" that the Chinese Communists have resumed shelling of the offshore islands after a cease-fire that lasted 15 days. / Red China announced a two-week extension of the cease-fire a week ago, and it was hoped that the suspension of hostilities might continue indefinitely. / The Communists said they were resuming their bombardment because American warships were again escorting Nationalist convoys to Quemoy. / This is categorically denied by the United States defense command and by the State Department. / A department spokesman in Washington says...further...that American warships will not resume their escort service until it becomes "a military necessity." (The Navy says [redacted] that Vice Admiral Smoot, commander of U.S. forces in the area, has authority to decide when a military necessity exists. / Secretary Dulles is due to arrive on Formosa later tonight. During a stopover at Fairbanks, Alaska, he telephoned President Eisenhower, who was in Denver. / And Mr. Eisenhower authorized him to continue his trip, despite the end of the cease-fire. Dulles then issued his statement calling the new bombardment a tragedy. He said his talks with Chiang could not have the "same scope and character" as would have been possible if the cease-fire had continued. / "Nevertheless," he said, "I believe that consultations can usefully be held." / Dulles described his mission as "a mission of peace." "All who love peace must hope that the present resumption of fighting will be of short duration."

→

In London, official comment was brief. The British Foreign Office said it could "only deplore any return to the use of force."

Communist artillery fire against the Quemoy complex today was not sustained. The first bombardment began at 4 a.m., New York time, and continued for two hours and forty minutes. / In this period, some 11-thousand shells were fired. It was quiet for an hour and fifteen minutes, and then the shelling started up again. / This time, the Communist fire was directed at Tatan, an island of only 96 acres in the mouth of Amoy Harbor. Later, there was sporadic fire against other islands of the Quemoy complex. / Nationalist guns returned the fire.

General Maxwell Taylor, U.S. Army chief of staff, has flown to Formosa, cutting short a tour of American installations in Japan.

Former President Truman charged today that "Dulles foreign policy" is to blame for the fighting in the Formosa Strait. / Mr. Truman praised Governor Harriman of New York...who is seeking re-election...and spoke disparagingly of Nelson Rockefeller, the Republican candidate. / Rockefeller, he said, had served in his administration, and in the administration of President Roosevelt, as "a public relations man." / Rockefeller served [redacted] the two Democratic presidents in several capacities, including that of [redacted] coordinator of [redacted] inter-American affairs, and membership on the international development advisory board. Truman says Rockefeller did a "good job" but had no administrative duties and consequently lacks experience.

President Eisenhower has arrived in Los Angeles, where tonight he will make a major political speech. He rode in a motorcade with both Senator Knowland, Republican candidate for governor, and Governor Knight, the party's candidate for the seat Knowland is giving up. There is some hostility between Knowland and Knight because Knight would have preferred to seek another term as governor. Knowland wanted the governorship for himself.

→

The Atomic Energy Commission announces that Russia has conducted another nuclear test---the 11th since the end of last month. American nuclear tests in the Nevada desert were postponed today because of unfavorable wind conditions.

The United States and Britain have told Russia...in separate notes... that they deem it "impractical" for the foreign ministers of the three atomic powers to attend the Geneva conference, scheduled to start a week from Friday. The three powers will discuss the possible cessation of nuclear weapons tests. The United States says that later, if the presence of foreign ministers seems ("necessary and desirable", Secretary of State Dulles would be prepared to attend.

Yugoslavia today called for a special meeting of the United Nations General Assembly, if the Geneva conference fails.

The Army took over the government of Thailand today in a bloodless coup. The prime minister and his entire cabinet resigned. Field Marshal Sarit, head of the armed forces, said the action was necessary "to meet a serious Communist threat, internal and external, and to preserve the constitutional monarchy."/ A similar Army coup recently took place in Burma.

→

A Polish delegation, headed by Communist Party leader Gomulka, will go to Moscow on Friday./ This was reported today by the Soviet news agency Tass.

The United States Supreme Court today upheld a lower court ruling that Negroes must be admitted to the New Orleans city park./ The Supreme Court also set aside the transfer of two television channels, approved by the Federal Communications Commission. The transfers were those of Channel 2 from Springfield, Illinois to St. Louis...and Channel 8 from Peoria, Illinois to the Davenport-Rock Island-Moline area of Iowa and Illinois. The Supreme Court directed that the Court of Appeals consider testimony of alleged wire-pulling given last spring at hearings before the House Subcommittee on Legislative Oversight.

The United States Court of Appeals has granted a new trial to John Joseph Frank, the ex-FBI agent convicted of failing to register as an agent for the Dominican Republic./ The court ruled...2 to 1...that Frank was deprived of a fair trial on grounds that the prosecution tried to connect him with the Galindez case. Professor Galindez, a strong critic of Trujillo, disappeared here in New York in March, 1956. It has been charged that Trujillo ordered Galindez kidnaped and flown to the Dominican Republic. He has not been seen since.

—7

Edward R. Murrow: October 20, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The brief renewal of the bombardment of Quemoy was a message, but precisely what the Chinese Communists were "saying with guns" is not absolutely clear. / Ostensibly they were telling United States ships not to resume convoying Nationalist supplies. / But no United States ships have been within twenty miles of Communist waters since the first days of the cease-fire. The Pentagon is categorical on that point. So that interpretation is unconvincing. / It may be that the Communists mistook some Nationalist ships for American. (All the ships in the Nationalist Navy originally came from this country.) But that explanation argues for Communist carelessness, and it rules out that the Communists were saying something political. / The Quemoy campaign has been more political than military all along, and a political motive certainly should be sought. / It is not hard to find one. / It seems almost certain that the Communists were saying something to coincide with Secretary Dulles's visit to Formosa.

Mr. Dulles's coming all the way to Formosa also was a message, and American assurance of goodwill - among other things. / The Communists answered it by briefly renewing the bombardment. By doing so they seemed intent on saying once more that the offshore islands are the exclusive concern of the Chinese. That is what they said when they first announced the cease-fire. The Communists want the Nationalists to understand that the United States has never been prepared to resist the bombardment of the islands, and that our efforts had nothing to do with the cease-fire. So by starting the bombardment again and stopping it, they appear to be warning the Nationalists to distrust Mr. Dulles and to deal directly with them.

The persuasiveness of such a message depends on the state of mind on Formosa. It is legitimate to ask whether the meeting between Chiang Kai-Shek and Mr. Dulles is a sign of strength or a sign of weakening in our relations with the Chiang Government. It was requested by Chiang. Presumably he wanted to know where he stood. In the course of the bombardment, the United States position toward Nationalist China has changed. We have made it known that we no longer look on the Nationalist regime as the legal government of all China. Mr. Dulles said that Chiang might get back to the mainland as the result of a revolution there, but it would be at the invitation of a regime set up by the revolutionaries. That rules out Chiang ever invading the mainland. We also have criticized his policy of putting a third of his army on the offshore islands. Chiang knows we want the garrisons reduced. While we have said we will not pressure him into doing this, or into giving up the islands, Chiang is not satisfied. He asked Mr. Dulles to talk things over face to face.

Deputy Secretary of State Robert Murphy told a business advisory group at Hot Springs what Mr. Dulles hopes to accomplish by his Formosa visit. The meeting was secret, but the Wall Street Journal says it learned from listeners what Mr. Murphy said. He outlined two aims.... to get Chiang's agreement to moves which would encourage the Communists to continue the cease-fire indefinitely, and at the same time to emphasize that the United States will continue to give military and economic support to the Formosa Government. The newspaper says that United States officials are worried that American pressure on Chiang might undermine the Nationalist will to maintain an independent government allied with the United States. Such a development would give the Reds a bloodless victory by bringing the collapse of the Formosa Government without a shot. This, it says, was one of Mr. Murphy's chief points at Hot Springs. Mr. Murphy is quoted as saying that the Dulles trip may result in a cease-fire of indefinite length. That was before the bombardment was renewed today. It must have come as a considerable surprise to Mr. Murphy.

The Communists, to say the least, are unpredictable. They also are illogical. When they announced the cease-fire they explicitly said it was to enable the islands to be replenished both by food and military supplies. If the Communists intended to renew the effort to blockade the islands, this was inane if not insane. And unless the Communists are that crazy, they surely were making a political calculation. They must have concluded that the Dulles visit was a sign of weakening in American-Formosan relations, and they are doing their best to ~~spoil~~ Ruin them.

Back in a moment.—

Jerge Bryan—

Word for Today

Why did Red China resume its bombardment of the offshore islands? For what purpose was it timed to coincide with the arrival of Secretary Dulles? This is worth asking because...as Spinoza observed..."The knowledge of an effect depends on, and involves, the knowledge of a cause." And there is an old Buddhist maxim: "Every effect becomes a cause."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles says it is "a tragedy" that the Chinese Communists have resumed shelling of the offshore islands after a cease-fire that lasted 15 days. Red China announced a two-week extension of the cease-fire a week ago, and it was hoped that the suspension of hostilities might continue indefinitely. The Communists said they were resuming their bombardment because American warships were again escorting Nationalist convoys to Quemoy. This is categorically denied by the United States defense command and by the State Department. A department spokesman in Washington says...further...that American warships will not resume their escort service until it becomes "a military necessity." The Navy says that Vice Admiral Smoot, commander of U.S. forces in the area, has authority to decide when a military necessity exists. Secretary Dulles is due to arrive on Formosa later tonight. During a stopover at Fairbanks, Alaska, he telephoned President Eisenhower, who was in Denver. And Mr. Eisenhower authorized him to continue his trip, despite the end of the cease-fire. Dulles then issued his statement calling the new bombardment a tragedy. He said his talks with Chiang could not have the "same scope and character" as would have been possible if the cease-fire had continued. "Nevertheless," he said, "I believe that consultations can usefully be held." Dulles described his mission as "a missionof peace." "All who love peace must hope that the present resumption of fighting will be of short duration."

In London, official comment was brief. The British Foreign Office said it could "only deplore any return to the use of force."

Communist artillery fire against the Quemoy complex today was not sustained. The first bombardment began at 4 AM, New York time, and continued for two hours and forty minutes. In this period, some 11 thousand shells were fired.

It was quiet for an hour and fifteen minutes, and then the shelling started up again. This time, the Communist fire was directed at Tatan, an island of only 96 acres in the mouth of Amoy Harbor. Later, there was sporadic fire against other islands of the Quemoy complex. Nationalist guns returned the fire.

General Maxwell Taylor, U.S. Army chief of staff, has flown to Formosa cutting short a tour of American installations in Japan.

Former President Truman charged today that "Dulles foreign policy" is to blame for the fighting in the Formosa Strait. Mr. Truman praised Governor Harriman of New York...who is seeking re-election...and spoke disparagingly of Nelson Rockefeller, the Republican candidate. Rockefeller, he said, had served in his administration and in the administration of President Roosevelt as "a public relations man." Rockefeller served the two Democratic presidents in several capacities, including that of coordinator of inter-American affairs and membership on the international development advisory board. Truman says Rockefeller did a "good job" but had no administrative duties and consequently lacks experience.

President Eisenhower has arrived in Los Angeles, where tonight he will make a major political speech. He rode in a motorcade with both Senator Knowland, Republican candidate for governor, and Governor Knight, the party's candidate for the seat Knowland is giving up. There is some hostility between Knowland and Knight because Knight would have preferred to seek another term as governor. Knowland wanted the governorship for himself.

The Atomic Energy Commission announces that Russia has conducted another nuclear test---the 11th since the end of last month. American nuclear tests in the Nevada desert were postponed because of unfavorable wind conditions.

The United States and Britain have told Russia...in separate notes... that they deem it "impractical" for the foreign ministers of the three atomic powers to attend the Geneva conference, scheduled to start a week from Friday.

The three powers will discuss the possible cessation of nuclear weapons tests. The United States says that later, if the presence of foreign ministers seems "necessary and desirable," Secretary of State Dulles would be prepared to attend.

Yugoslavia today called for a special meeting of the United Nations General Assembly, if the Geneva conference fails.

The Army took over the government of Thailand today in a bloodless coup. The prime minister and his entire cabinet resigned. Field Marshal Sarit, head of the armed forces, said the action was necessary "to meet a serious Communist threat, internal and external, and to preserve the constitutional monarchy." A similar Army coup recently took place in Burma.

A Polish delegation, headed by Communist Party leader Gomulka will go to Moscow on Friday. This was reported today by the Soviet news agency Tass.

The United States Supreme Court today upheld a lower court ruling that Negroes must be admitted to the New Orleans city park. The Supreme Court also set aside the transfer of two television channels approved by the Federal Communications Commission. The transfers were these of Channel 2 from Springfield, Illinois to St. Louis...and Channel 8 from Peoria, Illinois to the Davenport-Rock Island-Moline area of Iowa and Illinois. The Supreme Court directed that the Court of Appeals consider testimony of alleged "wire-pulling" given last spring at hearings before the House Sub-Committee on Legislative Oversight.

The United States Court of Appeals has granted a new trial to John Joseph Frank, the ex-FBI agent convicted of failing to register as an agent for the Dominican Republic. The court ruled...2 to 1...that Frank was deprived of a fair trial on grounds that the prosecution tried to connect him with the Galindez case. Professor Galindez, a strong critic of Trujillo, disappeared here in New York in March, 1956. It has been charged that Trujillo ordered Galindez kidnapped and flown to the Dominican Republic. He has not been seen since.

The brief renewal of the bombardment of Quemoy was a message, but precisely what the Chinese Communists were "saying with guns" is not absolutely clear. Ostensibly they were telling United States ships not to resume convoying Nationalist supplies. But no United States ships have been within twenty miles of Communist waters since the first days of the cease-fire. The Pentagon is categorical on that point. So that interpretation is unconvincing. It may be that the Communists mistook some Nationalist ships for American. All the ships in the Nationalist Navy originally came from this country. But that explanation argues for Communist carelessness, and it rules out that the Communists were saying something political. The Quemoy campaign has been more political than military all along, and a political motive certainly should be sought. It is not hard to find one. It seems almost certain that the Communists were saying something to coincide with Secretary Dulles's visit to Formosa.

Mr. Dulles's coming all the way to Formosa also was a message, and American assurance of goodwill- among other things. The communists answered it by briefly renewing the bombardment. By doing so they seemed intent on saying once more that the offshore islands are the exclusive concern of the Chinese. That is what they said when they first announced the cease-fire. The Communists want the Nationalists to understand that the Unitd States has never been prepared to resist the bombardment of the islands, and that our efforts had nothing to do with the cease-fire. So by starting the bombardment again and stapping it, they appear to be warning the Nationalists to distrust Mr. Dulles and to deal directly with them.

The persuasiveness of such a message depends on the state of mind on Formosa. It is legitimate to ask whether the meeting between Chiang Kai-Shek add Mr. Dulles is a sign of strength or a sign of weakening in our relations with the Chiang Government. It was requested by Chiang. Presumably he wanted to know where he stood. In the course of the bombardment, the United States position toward Nationalist China has changed. We have made it known that we no longer look on the Nationalist regime as the legal government of all China. Mr. Dulles said that Chiang might get back to the mainland as the result of a revolution there, but it would be at the invitation of a regime set up by the revolutionaries. That rules out Chiang ever invading the mainland. We also have criticized his policy of putting a third of his army on the offshore islands Chiang knows we want the garrisons reduced. While we have said we will not pressure him into doing this, or into giving up the islands, Chinag is not satisfied. He asked Mr. Dulles to talk things over face to face.

Deputy Secretary of State Robert Murphy told a business advisory group at Hot Springs what Mr. Dulles hopes to accomplish by his Formosa visit. The meeting was secret, but the Wall Street Journal says it learned from listeners what Mr. Murphy said. He outlined two aims...to get Chiang's agreement to moves which would encourage the Communists to continue the cease-fire indefinitely and at the same time to emphasize that the United States will continue to give military and economic support to the Formosa Government. The newspaper says that United States officials are worried that American pressure on Chiang might undermine the Nationalist will to maintain an independent government allied with the United States. Such a development would give the Reds a bloodless victory by bringing the collapse of the Formosa Government without a shot. This, it says, was one of Mr. Murphy's chief points at Hot Springs. Mr. Murphy is quoted as saying that the Dulles trip may result in a cease-fire of indefinite length. That was before the bombardment was renewed today. It must have come as a considerable surprise to Mr. Murphy.

TheCommunists, to say the least, are unpredictable. They also are illogical. When they announced the cease-fire they explicitly said it was to enable the islands to be replenished both by food and military supplies. They must have concluded that the Dulles visit was a sign of weakening in American-Formosan relations, and they are doing their best to ruin them.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Why did Red China resume its bombardment of the offshore islands? For what purpose was it timed to coincide with the arrival of Secretary Dulles? This is worth asking because...as Spinoza observed..."The knowledge of an effect depends on and involves the knowledge of a cause." And there is an old Buddhist maxim: "Every effect becomes a cause."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 21, 1958

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles conferred for three and a half hours today with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. And they will meet again tomorrow. An American spokesman said today's meeting dealt with "an assessment of political and military matters, as well as Communist propaganda." He said, "Mr. Dulles is not here to twist anybody's arm or apply any heat or pressure." He declined to say whether reduction of Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands had been discussed. But the resumption of Communist shelling, he said, does not mean the purpose of the Dulles mission has been changed. Dulles said last night...on his arrival in Taipei...that the talks were not aimed at reaching any new agreement.

"We hope," he said, "through re-examination, to consolidate a relationship of mutual trust."

The Chinese Communist shelling today was relatively light. ~~Six Communist Migs tangled briefly with eight Nationalist Sabrejets flying a patrol mission. / No report of any of the aircraft being shot down.~~

The new military government of Thailand has banned all political parties and prohibited the holding of public meetings. The government said today that it will honor "all international commitments, including adherence to the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization." / Army elements, led by Marshal Sarit, seized power yesterday in a bloodless coup. / But at least a hundred persons are reported under arrest. / The prime minister and his cabinet immediately resigned.

The prime minister of Ceylon today expressed doubt whether the party-cabinet system of democratic government was "quite suitable" to some countries of Southeast Asia. / There is political instability, he said, in Ceylon due to the fact that no party has an over-all majority. But he hoped to keep the party system in Ceylon and make it work. / He noted that the system had failed---not only in Thailand---but in Burma and Pakistan.

President Heuss of West Germany...speaking at London's historic Guildhall...said today that the past cannot be undone. But war between Britain and Germany, he said, "must never happen again." Heuss arrived in London yesterday on a three-day state visit---the first head of a German state to visit England since 1907.

President Eisenhower told a political rally in San Francisco today that a Republican Congress should be elected in order to bring about necessary labor reform. He said the last Democratic Congress ignored his recommendations and tried instead to pass legislation which was "insipid and wholly unsatisfactory." This was a reference to the Kennedy-Ives bill, which died in the House. Mr. Eisenhower made no reference to the "right to work" measure, which would outlaw the union shop in California. The measure is supported by Senator Knowland, who is running for governor, and opposed by Governor Knight, the Republican senatorial candidate. Mr. Eisenhower chose a labor theme on which Knowland and ~~Knight~~ Knight could agree. But...later...when reporters asked Knight if he would vote for Knowland for governor, he shrugged his shoulders and walked away.

Tonight, the President is flying to Chicago...where tomorrow he will make a major speech.

Vice President Nixon is saying tonight...in Baltimore...that there is a "radical wing" of the ~~Communist~~ Democratic Party which supports a policy of "weakness and vacillation" in international affairs. Nixon says a weak policy is a war policy. He does not question the sincerity of Administration critics. "There is," he says, "no war party in ~~the United States.~~ All Americans want peace."

Former President Truman was campaigning today in Pennsylvania. Republican economic philosophies, he said, haven't changed since the days of McKinley and Harding. He referred to Mr. Eisenhower's recent statement that in a free ecohomy, you have cycles---slopes and downward trends. Mr. Truman said, "The Republicans call this the cyclical theory of business progress. That's where Big Business gets the 'upward trends' and the rest of us get the 'down slopes' and go broke."

Senator Smathers of Florida held a news conference today. (Smathers is chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee). He predicted that President Eisenhower would no more be able to transfer his popularity to

→

Republican candidates in this election than he was in 1956. Smathers disclosed that he had written a letter to Chairman Butler of the Democratic National Committee, asking him to talk less about party differences over civil rights. "I humbly suggest," said Smathers, "that we cease firing on the issues of 1960 and let's concentrate on winning the election of 1958." (Butler recently said that Democrats unwilling to take a strong pro-civil rights stand should leave the party).

Governor Faubus of Arkansas said today that he does not believe private, segregated classes can be operated indefinitely in Little Rock through contributions. About 300 seniors attended classes for two hours today in a building leased by the Little Rock Private School Corporation.

The Bolivian government says it has squashed a revolt, staged by the extreme right-wing Falange. / A state of emergency was declared in (lä päs') La Paz, capital of Bolivia. / And twenty persons have been placed under arrest.

In Havana, the United States Embassy reports two Americans kidnaped by Cuban rebels. / The Americans are identified as C.R. Bennett and Kenneth Drews, both employes of the Texas Oil Company. / And the embassy is demanding their release "without delay". / The incident recalls the series of abductions of American citizens last June.

The Cuban government today ordered special security precautions to prevent rebel violence during the presidential election on November third. All public entertainment on Election Day was banned. / And the suspension of constitutional guarantees, due to expire tomorrow, is almost certain to be extended. / The rebels have threatened to kill all candidates for national, provincial and municipal office, unless they withdraw by the end of this month. / Four candidates for the Cuban Congress have been killed so far.

Edward R. Murrow: October 21, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

In his news conference last Wednesday, President Eisenhower washed his hands of a highly partisan attack on the Democratic Party for heading toward socialization, & nationalization, which was issued by Republican leaders after a meeting at the White House. / "It was not my statement" he said, "it was theirs. I think that politicians do love making things very positive."

In Los Angeles last night Mr. Eisenhower himself made things very positive. / "This campaign" he said, "gives us a critical choice. Either we choose a left-wing government, or sensible, forward-looking government." And he went on to characterize the Democrats as spendthrifts, favoring an overwhelming Federal Government. / He pointed out the existence of two wings in the Democratic Party, the one in the South, and "at the other extreme", as he put it, "is the stronger wing, dominated by political radicals. / It is against the spread of their radical influence that we are waging this campaign."

It was the strongest attack he has made on the Democratic Party. / After hearing him, people were talking about "The new Eisenhower" in the way they recently did, though in an opposite sense, about "The new Nixon".

What makes this speech noteworthy is that it followed last week's controversy over Vice President Nixon branding the Democrats as a war Party. First Mr. Dulles read a lecture against injecting foreign policy in Party debate. Then the President spoke out still more clearly. Mr. Nixon responded with a significant reply. It was all right, he said, for the President to consider himself leader of all the people. That was his function. But Mr. Nixon was out fighting a political campaign, and it was his function to conduct a strongly partisan fight.

The significance of this statement is that in making it Mr. Nixon took over the Republican leadership in the campaign. To use corporate language, he kicked Mr. Eisenhower upstairs. Until that moment, Mr. Eisenhower had been head of the Party. In the controversy over what constituted permissible partisan debate, Mr. Nixon prevailed. Mr. Dulles revised his statement and then re-revised it, and ended by coming out in complete agreement with Mr. Nixon. So did Mr. Eisenhower.

It would be mistaken to think that Mr. Eisenhower, with his strongly partisan speech last night, was trying to regain the Party leadership. He was not leading. He simply followed the line and copied the Nixon technique. He boasted that in six years - that is, in the years of his Administration -

no young Americans have had to go to war. / And he followed this with the statement that "if all of us go full out, as our fine Vice President Dick Nixon has - together we will achieve victory."

The President's speech last night occasioned some surprise. / But it should not be forgotten that Mr. Nixon's strongly partisan line in the campaign also came as a surprise. The public had been carefully tutored to believe that a new Nixon had been maturing in recent years, a balanced, sagacious, statesmanlike Nixon. His influence on policy was reported to have been always beneficent, and often even liberal, especially in foreign affairs. Liberal journalists who talked with him for the first time came away almost incredulous but somewhat dazzled. Democratic politicians began fearing that the new Nixon would be hard to beat in 1960, and this was borne out by public opinion polls.

If some disagreement remained over Mr. Nixon's stature, there was none as to his political mastery. / This Fall the political master decided to discard the new Nixon, or at least to push him into the shadows, and to emerge as the fighting Nixon of 1954 and previous years. / By doing this he consolidated his position with the so-called Taft wing of the Republican Party, a much larger element than the Eisenhower Republicans. It is the element that will dominate the 1960 Convention. / In that year the Party must start re-building itself after eight years of Eisenhower. / There will be no Eisenhower, or any other national hero in sight, to win a large Independent vote. A hard uphill fight must be waged, and be waged by a fighting Party man.

That is what Mr. Nixon has begun to do. / It may be too late to salvage many Republican seats in the next Congress, but nobody is going to blame Nixon, he will have done his best. / And in the process he will have out-distanced his rivals for the 1960 nomination.

Back in a moment—

Just Jung Bryan With a word about the Weather.

Word for Today

It is quite a problem...how candid one should be when he is a candidate. Petroleum V. Nasby once announced his candidacy [illegible] concluding with these words: "I feel it due my Dimekratik brethrin that I stait the reasons. They run az follows: First, I want a offis. Second, I need a office. Third, a offis wood suit me---therefore, fourth, I shood like to have a offis."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles conferred for three and a half hours today with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. And they will meet again tomorrow. An American spokesman said today's meeting dealt with "an assessment of political and military matters, as well as Communist propaganda." He said, "Mr. Dulles is not here to twist anybody's arm or apply any heat or pressure." He declined to say whether reduction of Nationalist garrisons on the offshore islands had been discussed. But the resumption of Communist shelling, he said, does not mean the purpose of the Dulles mission has been changed. Dulles said last night....on his arrival in Taipei...that the talks were not aimed at reaching any new agreement. "We hope," he said, "through re-examination to consolidate a relationship of mutual trust."

The Chinese Communist shelling today was relatively light.

The new military government of Thailand has banned all political parties and prohibited the holding of public meetings. The government said today that it will honor "all international commitments, including adherence to the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization." Army elements, led by Marshal Sarit seized power yesterday in a bloodless coup. But at least a hundred persons are reported under arrest. The prime minister and his cabinet immediately resigned.

The prime minister of Ceylon today expressed doubt whether the party-cabinet system of democratic government was "quite suitable" to some countries of Southeast Asia. There is political instability, he said, in Ceylon due to the fact that no party has an over-all majority. But he hoped to keep the party system in Ceylon and make it work. He noted that the system had failed---not only in Thailand---but in Burma and Pakistan.

President Eisenhower told a political rally in San Francisco today that a Republican Congress should be elected in order to bring about necessary labor reform. He said the last Democratic Congress ignored his recommendations and tried instead to pass legislation which was "insipid and wholly unsatisfactory." This was a reference to the Kennedy-Ives bill, which died in the House. Mr. Eisenhower made no reference to the "right to work" measure which would outlaw the union shop in California. The measure is supported by Senator Knowland, who is running for governor, and opposed by Governor Knight, the Republican senatorial candidate. Mr. Eisenhower chose a labor theme on which Knowland and Knight could agree. But....later...when reporters asked Knight if he would vote for Knowland for governor, he shrugged his shoulders and walked away.

Tonight, the President is flying to Chicago...where tomorrow he will make a major speech.

Vice President Nixon is saying tonight...in Baltimore...that there is a "radical wing" of the Democratic Party which supports a policy of "weakness and vacillation" in international affairs. Nixon says a weak policy is a war policy. He does not question the sincerity of Administration critics. "There is," he says, "no war party in the United States. All Americans want peace."

Former President Truman was campaigning today in Pennsylvania. Republican economic philosophies, he said, haven't changed since the days of McKinley and Harding. He referred to Mr. Eisenhower's recent statement that in a free economy, you have cycles---slopes and downward trends. Mr. Truman said, "The Republicans call this the cyclical theory of business progress. That's where Big Business gets the 'upward trends' and the rest of us get the 'down slopes' and go broke."

Senator Smathers of Florida held a news conference today. (Smathers is chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee.) He predicted that President Eisenhower would no more be able to transfer his popularity to Republican candidates in this election than he was in 1956. Smathers dislosed that he had written a letter to Chairman Butler of the Democratic National Committee asking him to talk less about party differences over civil rights.

Governor Faubus of Arkansas said today that he does not believe private, segregated classes can be operated indefinitely in Little Rock through contributions. About 300 seniors attended classes for two hours today in a building leased by the Little Rock Private School Corporation.

The Bolivian government says it has squashed a revolt, staged by the extreme right-wing Falange. A state of emergency was declared in La Paz, capital of Bolivia. And twenty persons have been placed under arrest.

In Havana, The United States Embassy reports two Americans kidnaped by Cuban rebels. The Americans are identified as C.R. Bennett and Kenneth Drews, both employees of the Texas Oil Compnny. And the embassy is demanding their release "without delay." The incident recalls the series of abductions of American citizens last June.

The Cuban government today ordered special security precautions to prevent rebel violence during the presidential election on November 3rd. All public entertainment on Election Day was banned. And the suspension of constitutional guarantees due to expire tomorrow is almost certain to be extended. The rebels have threatened to kill all candidates for national, provincial and municipal office, unless they withdraw by the end of this month. Four candidates for the Cuban Congress have been killed so far.

In his news conference last Wednesday, President Eisenhower washed his hands of a highly partisan attack on the Democratic Party for heading toward socialization and nationalization which was issued by Republican leaders after a meeting at the White House. "It was not my statement" he said, "it was theirs. I think that politicians do love making things very positive."

In Los Angeles last night Mr. Eisenhower himself made things very positive. "This campaign" he said, "gives us a critical choice. Either we choose a left-wing government, or sensible, forward-looking government." And he went on to characterize the Democrats as spendthrifts, favoring an overwhelming Federal Government. He pointed out the existence of two wings in the Democratic Party, the one in the South, and "at the other extreme," as he put it, "is the stronger wing, dominated by political radicals. It is against the spread of their radical influence that we are waging this campaign."

It was the strongest attack he has made on the Democratic Party. After hearing him, people were talking about "The new Eisenhower" in the way they recently did, though in an opposite sense, about "The new Nixon."

What makes this speech noteworthy is that it followed last week's controversy over Vice President Nixon branding the Democrats as a war party. First Mr. Dulles read a lecture against injecting foreign policy in party ddbate. Then the President spoke out still more clearly. Mr. Nixon responded with a significant reply. It was all right, he said, for the President to consider himself leader of all the people. That was his function. But Mr. Nixon was out fighting a political campaign, and it was his function to conduct a strongly partisan fight.

The significance of this statement is that in making it Mr. Nixon took over the Republican leadership in the campaign. To use corporate language, he kicked Mr. Eisenhower upstairs. Until that moment, Mr. Eisenhower had been head of the Party. In the controversy over what constituted permissible partisan debate, Mr. Nixon prevailed. Mr. Dulles revised his statement and then re-revised it, and ended by coming out in complete agreement with Mr. Nixon. So did Mr. Eisenhower.

It would be mistaken to think that Mr. Eisenhower, with his strongly partisan speech last night, was trying to regain the Party leadership. He was not leading. He simply followed the line and copied the Nixon technique.

He boasted that in six years - that is, in the years of his Administration - no young Americans have had to go to war. And he followed this with the statement that "if all of us go full out, as our fine Vice President Dick Nixon has - together we will achieve victory."

The President's speech last night occasioned some surprise. But it should not be forgotten that Mr. Nixon's strongly partisan line in the campaign also came as a surprise. The public had been carefully tutored to believe that a new Nixon had been maturing in recent years, a balanced, sagaciuus, statesmanlike Nixon. His influence on policy was reported to have been always beneficient and often liberal, expecially in foreign affairs. Liberal journalists who talked with him for the first time came away almost incredulous but somewhat dazzled. Democratic politicians began fearing that the new Nixon would be hard to beat in 1960, and this was borne out by public opinion polls.

If some disagreement remained over Mr. Nixon's stature, there was none as to his political mastery. This fall the political master decided to discard the new Nixon, or at least to push him into the shadows and to emerge as the fighting Nixon of 1954 and previous years. By doing this he consolidated his position with the so-called Taft wing of the Republican Party, a much larger element than the Eisenhower Republicans. It is the element that will dominate the 1960 convention. In that year the Party must start re-building itself after eight years of Eisenhower. There will be no Eisenhower, or any other national hero in sight to win a large Independent vote. A hard uphill fight must be waged, and be waged by a fighting Party man.

That is what Mr. Nixon has begun to do. It may be too late to salvage many Republican seats in the next Congress, but nobody is going to blame Nixon; he will have done his best. And in the process he will have out-distanced his rivals for the 1960 nomination.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: It is quite a problem...how candid one should be when he is a candidate. Petroleum V. Nasby once announced his candidacy, concluding with these words: "I feel it due my Dimekratik brethrin that I stait the reasons. They run az follows: First, I want a offis. Second, I need a office. Third, a office wood suit me---therefore, fourth, I shood like to have a offis."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Oct. 22, 1958

This is the news:

The text of the speech that President Eisenhower is making in Chicago tonight already has been released. He will give the following arguments why Republicans should be elected next month: The recession is "rapidly running out," proving that the Democrats were wreng in advocating "an avalanche of Federal spending." Personal income is at an all-time high without help from "a Federal wheelchair." The Democrats are, in fact, "two distinct parties, masquerading under one name." By virtue of their "built-in antagonisms", they are "incapable of offering America anything except deadlocked government." Republicans and Democrats agree on the need for a peaceful world and a strong national defense. But on matters domestic and non-military they part company. Republicans favor less Federal intrusion into America's city and community life. The "radicals" stand exactly for the opposite.

This speech in Chicago marks the end of President Eisenhower's current political tour, which took him to the West Coast. He will fly back to Washington early tomorrow.

News Secretary Hagerty today accused former President Truman of rewriting history. / Hagerty referred to Mr. Truman's charge that President Eisenhower "went to Korea and surrendered to the Communists" in accepting the settlement he did. / Hagerty was sure Mr. Truman would have a hard time "selling" that to the American people. / Until Mr. Eisenhower took office, he said, the war in Korea was being fought on "a "can't win it" basis, with a mounting toll of American lives."

Mr. Truman continued his attacks today, characterizing the foreign policy of the Eisenhower Administration as a policy of "blunder, bluster, and brink of war." The reason the President and Vice President are campaigning the way they are, he said, is [redacted] because they are afraid they are going to "get licked". And as grounds for this fear, he listed unemployment, reduced farm income, a 12-billion-dollar budget deficit, and "the highest cost of living in history."

Adlai Stevenson told [redacted] a Democratic meeting in Chicago that the Republicans have "fallen back on the old charges of radicalism, because they can't talk about corruption, prosperity, deficit spending, [redacted] or peace."

The Army will try tonight to place a new kind of satellite in orbit around the earth. The launching is scheduled to take place at Cape Canaveral, and the initial vehicle will be the Army's Jupiter C. In the final stage it is a folded aluminum and plastic balloon. At the proper altitude, this is [redacted] to be inflated automatically with nitrogen. And if all goes well, this balloon of some 12-feet in diameter will be visible hundreds of miles above the earth in the reflected light of the sun.

The announcement of the attempt was made today by (the Army missile chief, [redacted] General Medaris. Medaris also said today that if the proposal to deprive the Army of many of its missile scientists is carried out, it could be fatal. (Under the proposal, these scientists would be taken over by the new civilian space agency.) General Medaris spoke at the annual convention of the United States Army Association. The association then passed a resolution...urging President Eisenhower to maintain the Army Ordnance Missile Command, which has its headquarters [redacted] at the Redstone Arsenal in Alabama.

Dispatches from Formosa say that "major disagreements" have developed in the talks between Secretary of State Dulles and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. This despite the fact that Assistant Secretary of State Robertson said this morning that there is no rift...and that Dulles and Chiang are in "complete accord." (I should like to discuss these talks further in a few minutes).

→

The Chinese Communists today continued their bombardment of the Quemoy island complex.

And Communist China issued what it calls its 39th and 40th "serious warnings" against the alleged violation of its territory by American warships and planes. The Communists have proclaimed a territorial limit of 12 miles. The United States recognizes a three-mile limit.

Communist Hungary today rejected an American appeal that Cardinal Mindszenty be allowed to attend the conclave of cardinals in Rome. The cardinals will seclude themselves this week-end to start balloting for a new Pope. The United States requested safe-conduct for Cardinal Mindszenty...who took asylum in our legation in Budapest during the Hungarian uprising and has been there ever since. The request was rejected on grounds that it constituted interference in Hungary's internal affairs. Tomorrow, ~~incidentally~~, marks the second anniversary of the start of the Hungarian revolt.

Yugoslavia announces that an agreement has been signed whereby it will get 200-thousand tons of Russian wheat. Russia promised the wheat to Yugoslavia a year ago. When it was not sent, Yugoslavia accused Russia of holding up delivery as part of an economic "squeeze." There is speculation that Russia has finally signed ~~one~~ an agreement to give the impression that Soviet-Yugoslav relations ~~are~~ have improved.

A British airliner collided near Naples today with a jet fighter belonging to the Italian Air Force. All 31 persons on board the airliner were killed. The fighter pilot...who was on a training mission...parachuted into the sea and was rescued. His condition is described as "grave". The airliner...powered by four turbo-prop engines...was on a British European Airways flight from London to Naples. The accident occurred at an altitude of about 23-thousand feet over what was the Anzio Beachhead in World War Two.

Edward R. Murrow: October 22, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

News that Secretary Dulles plans further meetings with Chiang Kai-shek tonight and tomorrow before returning to the United States would seem to bear out reports from Formosa that the talks have not resulted as yet in major agreements. The only positive outcome so far is the announcement that the United States will resume convoying supplies to the offshore islands when the military need for it arises. Chiang is presumed to have pressed for this promise. In giving it the United States XXXXXX simply reverted to its position before the cease-fire.

The nearest thing to a clarification of the talks so far was given by Assistant Secretary Walter Robertson, who said that two misunderstandings had been cleared up: Nationalist fears that we want Chiang to give up the islands, and Washington fears that Chiang might use the islands to mount an invasion of the mainland. But it hardly seems likely that Mr. Dulles would fly halfway around the world and back to correct such misunderstandings. As stated they could hardly be classed as misunderstandings. Both President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles have publicly assured Chiang that we do not want him to abandon the islands, but only to reduce the garrisons to a reasonable military size. And as for the Nationalists mounting an invasion of the mainland, they cannot do it without our prior approval under terms of their alliance with us. The only right to independent military action they enjoy under the treaty is to take emergency steps in self defense. A mainland invasion would hardly fit into that description.

When Mr. Dulles arrived in Taipeh he said he had come for a re-assessment of the position. This means a re-assessment of Communist objectives in the light of the Communists' confusing behavior. But it also means a study and definition of the consequences of a renunciation by the Nationalists of their hopes to invade the mainland. For that is giving up a big and unlikely future as the Government of China for a small and perhaps attainable future of staying on indefinitely in Formosa.

Mr. Robertson yesterday denied that the offshore islands were being held by the Nationalists as a base for an attack on the mainland. Only someone with the military intelligence of a moron, he said, would think an invasion could be staged from the islands under the Communist mainland guns. The Nationalists say the islands are the eyes of Formosa from which preparations for the invasion of Formosa can be seen. But they have asked in vain for an unqualified American promise to defend them. This is not necessarily a setback. Such a promise can only be given by the President, and under the terms of the Congressional resolution defining our Formosa policy, he himself may not be able to give it.

But behind the talks as reported may lie the quite simple reality that Mr. Dulles has been re-assessing the future of the Formosa regime, and that is what he went to Formosa to do. He could not have enjoyed the assignment. But Chiang, sensing a deep change, asked for the meeting and Mr. Dulles could not stay away without seriously undermining Nationalist morale.

There is a possibility that a misunderstanding exists in Communist minds that may have led to the renewal of the bombardment. It is an outside possibility, but the Communists may have believed we had broken the condition about doing no more convoying to the islands. Joseph Greene, assistant to Mr. Dulles, who was briefing correspondents about the talks, was asked if the Secretary was aware "that a United States Navy ship with sixteen guns had been part of a convoy Sunday night near Quemoy." Mr. Greene answered: "I suppose so."

What this questioner knew or thought he knew is not reported. But the Navy Department said today that on Sunday night an American LSD was in waters near Quemoy -- though never nearer than twelve miles - "engaged on a job that was not a supply job". Further, United States destroyers were on patrol duty in the Straits, but at no time nearer than twelve miles to any land whatever, and it was categorically asserted that United States ships are not engaged in convoy duty and have not been since the early hours of the cease-fire.

Presumably something circumstantial was reported in Taipeh about American convoying on Sunday night. Such rumors probably are unavoidable. It is within the realm of possibility that the Communists heard such a report and believed it. But it is less far-fetched to believe the Communists needed no such excuse, and resumed the bombardment so as to do as much harm to the Dulles visit ~~XXXX~~ as they could.

Back in a moment—
Just a word from George Bryan about the weather,

Word for Today

If there is disagreement between Secretary of State Dulles and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, it might well lie in a difference of approach. Mr. Dulles went to Formosa to make a re-assessment. President Chiang...quite understandably...would like more concrete support. "Each mind," as Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "has its own method."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The text of the speech that President Eisenhower is making in Chicago tonight already has been released. He will give the following arguments why Republicans should be elected next month: The recession is "rapidly running out," proving that the Democrats were wrong in advocating "an avalanche of Federal spending." Personal income is at an all-time high without help from "a Federal wheelchair." The Democrats are, in fact, "two distinct parties, masquerading under one name." By virtue of their "built-in antagonisms," they are "incapable of offering America anything except deadlocked government." Republicans and Democrats agree on the need for a peaceful world and a strong national defense. But on matters domestic and non-military they part company. "Republicans favor less Federal intrusion into America's city and community life. The "radicals" stand exactly for the opposite.

This speech in Chicago marks the end of President Eisenhower's current political tour, which took him to the West Coast. He will fly back to Washington early tomorrow.

News Secretary Hagerty today accused former President Truman of rewriting history. Hagerty referred to Mr. Truman's charge that President Eisenhower "went to Korea and surrendered to the Communists" in accepting the settlement he did. Hagerty was sure Mr. Truman would have a hard time "selling" that to the American people. Until Mr. Eisenhower took office, he said, the war in Korea was being fought on "a can't win it" basis with a mounting toll of American lives.

Mr. Truman continued his attacks today, characterizing the foreign policy of the Eisenhower Administration as a policy of "blunder, bluster, and brink of war." The reason the President and Vice President are campaigning the way they are, he said, is because they are afraid they are going to "get licked." And as grounds for this fear, he listed unemployment, reduced farm income, a 12-billion-dollar budget deficit, and "the highest cost of living in history."

Adlai Stevenson told a Democratic meeting in Chicago that the Republicans have "fallen back on the old charges of radicalism, because they can't talk about corruption, prosperity, deficit spending, or peace."

The Army will try tonight to place a new kind of satellite in orbit around the earth. The launching is scheduled to take place at Cape Canaveral, and the initial vehicle will be the Army's Jupiter C. Im the final stage it is a folded aluminum and plastic balloon. At the proper altitude, this is to be inflated automatically with nitrogen. And if all goes well, this balloon of some 12-feet in diameter will be visible hundreds of miles above the earth in the reflected light of the sun.

The announcement of the attempt was made today by the Army missile chief, General Medaris. Medaris also said today that if the proposal to deprive the Army of many of its missile scientists is carried out, it could by fatal. Under the proposal, these scientists would be taken over by the new civilian space agency. General Medaris spoke at the annual convention of the United States Army Association. The association then passed a resolution...urging President Eisenhower to maintain the Army Ordnance Missile Command, which has its headquarters at the Redstone Arsenal in Alabama.

Dispatches from Formosa say that "major disagreements" have developed in the talks between Secretary of State Dulles and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. This despite the fact that Assistant Secretary of State Robertson said this morning that there is no rift....and that Dulles and Chiang are in "complete accord." (I should like to discuss these talks further in a few minutes.)

The Chinese Communists today continued their bombardment of the Quemoy island complex.

And Communist China issued what it calls its 39th and 40th "serious warnings" against the alleged violation of its territory by American warships and planes. The Communists have proclaimed a territorial limit of 12 miles. The United States recognizes a three-mile limit.

Communist Hungary today rejected an American appeal that Cardinal Mindszenty be allowed to attend the conclave of cardinals in Rome. The cardinals will seclude themselves this week-end to start balloting for a new Pope. The United States requested safe-conduct for Cardinal Mind zenty...who took asylum in our legation in Budapest during the Hungarian uprising and has been there ever since. The request was rejected on grounds that it constituted interference in Hungary's internal affairs. Tomorrow, marks the second anniversary of the start of the Hungarian revolt.

Yugoslavia announces that an agreement has been signed whereby it will get 200 thousand tons of Russian wheat. Russia promised the wheat to Yugoslavia a year ago. When it was not sent, Yugoslavia accused Russia of holding up delivery as part of an economic squeeze. There is speculation that Russia has finally signed an agreement to give the impression that Soviet-Yugoslav relations have improved.

A British airliner collided near Naples today with a jet fighter belonging to the Italian Air Force. All 31 persons on board the airliner were killed. The accident occurred at an altitude of abutt 23-thousand feet over what was the Anzio Beachhead in World War Two.

News that Secretary Dulles plans further meetings with Chiang Kai-shek tonight and tomorrow before returning to the United States would seem to bear out reports from Formosa that the talks have not resulted as yet in major agreements. The only positive outcome so far is the announcement that the United States will resume convoying supplies to the offshore islands when the military need for it arises. Chiang is presumed to have pressed for this promise. In giving it the United States simply reverted to its position before the cease-fire.

The nearest thing to a clarification of the talks so far was given by Assistant Secretary Walter Robertson, who said that two misunderstandings had been cleared up: Nationalist fears that we want Chiang to give up the islands, and Washington fears that Chiang might use the islands to mount an invasion of the mainland. But it hardly seems likely that Mr. Dulles would fly halfway around the world and back to correct such misunderstandings. As stated they could hardly be classed as misunderstandings. Both President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles have publicly assured Chiang that we do not want him to abandon the islands, but only to reduce the garrisons to a reasonable military size. And as for the Nationalists mounting an invasion of the mainland, they cannot do it without our prior approval under terms of their alliance with us. The only right to independent military action they enjoy under the treaty is to take emergency steps in self-defense. A mainland invasion would hardly fit into that description.

When Mr. Dulles arrived in Taipeh he said he had come for a re-assessment of the position. This means a re-assessment of Communist objectives in the light of the Communists' confusing behavior. But it also means a study and definition of the consequences of a renunciation by the Nationalists of their hopes to invade the mainland. For that is giving up a big and unlikely future as the Government of China for a small and perhaps attainable future of staying on indefinitely in Formosa.

Mr. Robertson yesterday denied that the offshore islands were being held by the Nationalists as a base for an attack on the mainland. Only someone with the military intelligence of a moron, he said, would think an invasion could be staged from the islands under the Communist mainland guns. The Nationalists say the islands are the eyes of Formosa from which preparations for the invasion of Formosa can be seen. But they have asked in vain for an unqualified American promise to defend them. This is not necessarily a setback. Such a promise can only be given by the President, and under the terms of the Congressional resolution defining our Formosa policy, he himself may not be able to give it.

But behind the talks as reported may lie the quite simple reality that Mr. Dulles has been re-assessing the future of the Formosa regime, and that is what he went to Formosa to do. He could not have enjoyed the assignment. But Chiang, sensing a deep change, asked for the meeting and Mr. Dulles could not stay away without seriously undermining Nationalist morale.

There is a possibility that a misunderstanding exists in Communist minds that may have led to the renewal of the bombardment. It is an outside possibility, but the Communists may have believed we had broken the condition about doing no more convoying to the islands. Joseph Greene, assistant to Mr. Dulles, who was briefing correspondents about the talks, was asked if the Secretary was aware "that a United States Navy ship with sixteen guns had been part of a convoy Sunday night near Quemoy." Mr. Greene answered: "I suppose so."

What this questioner knew or thought he knew is not reported. Bu the Navy Department said today that on Sunday night an American LSD was in waters near Quemoy - though never nearer than twelve miles - "engaged on ajob that was not a supply job." Further, United States destroyers were on patrol duty in the Straits, but at no time nearer than twelve miles to any land whatever, and it was categorically asserted that United States ships are not engaged in convoy duty and have not been since the early hours of the cease-fire.

Presumably something circumstantial was reported in Taipeh about American convoying on Sunday night. Such rumors probably are unavoidable. It is within the realm of possibility that the Communists heard such a report and believed it. But it is less far-fetched to believe the Communists needed no such excuse, and resumed the bombardment so as to do as much harm to the Dulles visit as they could.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: If there is disagreement between Secretary of State Dulles and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, it might well lie in a difference of approach. Mr. Dulles went to Formosa to make a re-assessment. President Chiang...quite understandably...would like more concrete support. "Each mind," as Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "has its own method."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 23, 1958

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists today suspended their bombardment of Quemoy, and the other offshore islands. / The guns became quiet just as Secretary of State Dulles concluded three days of talks with ~~Chinese Nationalist Leader~~ Chiang Kai-shek. / The Communists broke a cease-fire...which had lasted fifteen days...when Dulles arrived on Formosa for the conference. They simply turned the bombardment on and off.

Secretary Dulles and President Chiang issued a joint communique. It said neither the new shelling...nor Communist propaganda...had split the ~~Americas~~ United States and Nationalist China "as the Communists had hoped." And it said the Chinese Communist policy of seeking to conquer Formosa, and expel the United States from the Western Pacific (with the backing of the Soviet Union) "cannot possibly succeed." / The communique stated that "under present conditions" the defense of Quemoy and Matsu is closely related with the defense of Formosa. / This would appear to be a reaffirmation of the American position that there will be no yielding on the part of the United States in the face of armed force. / The communique also says that the United States recognizes the Republic of China as "the authentic spokesman for Free China and of the hopes and aspirations entertained by the great mass of Chinese people." Moreover, the government of the Republic of China considers the restoration of freedom on the mainland to be its "sacred mission". / But the foundation of this mission, the communique stipulates, "resides in the minds and hearts of the Chinese people and not in the use of force."

→

A statement on the Formosa situation by Secretary Dulles was released in Washington this afternoon by the State Department. The statement was made by Mr. Dulles six days ago in a prerecorded interview with the British independent television network. / Dulles said in the interview that the United States is not going to attack..."or tolerate attacks"...against the Chinese Communists. He said, "When the Communists attack, I think we have to stand firm."

CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reports from Taipei that Chiang has agreed...in principle...to an eventual reduction of his garrisons on the offshore islands whenever a de facto truce exists in the area. The reduction, Kalischer says, would involve 15-thousand to 20-thousand troops. He says Chiang also agreed that if all goes well in this initial attempt at disengagement, to make further pacific gestures---such as lifting the Nationalist blockade of the port of Amoy.

In France today, Premier DeGaulle held his first news conference since coming to power in June. For a direct report on that, we switch to Paris and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

Tape runs 4:50
Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

Soviet Premier Khrushchev today announced that Russia will loan the United Arab Republic 400-million rubles, to help President Nasser built the Aswan High Dam. The loan, figured at the official Soviet rate of exchange, amounts to roughly 100-million dollars. Khrushchev made the announcement at a Kremlin reception for the visiting vice president of the United Arab Republic. The money would be spent for the first stage of construction. Completion of the dam would require expenditure of at least a billion dollars. It was the withdrawal of a United States offer to help finance the project which led...in 1956...to Nasser's seizure of the Suez Canal.

The Swedish Academy today awarded the Nobel Prize for literature to the Russian auther, Boris Pasternak (NACH'). The academy gave the award to Pasternak "for his important achievement both in contemporary lyrical poetry, and in the field of the great Russian epic tradition." Pasternak has received acclaim...outside of Russia...for his novel, "Doctor Zhivago" (ZHEE-VAH'-GO), which is critical of Soviet society. The auther still lives in Russia, and there is speculation whether he will be allowed to receive the prize amounting to about 42-thousand dollars. An official of the Swedish Academy today called Pasternak's writing "high above all political frontiers."

→

Cuban rebel forces have released the two American employes of the Texas Oil Company kidnapped on Monday. In announcing their release, State Department spokesman Lincoln White said that the forces...led by Fidel Castro...had demonstrated "their careless disregard for the human rights of American citizens." Forty-nine American citizens have been kidnaped by the Cuban rebels so far this year. All have been released. Damage to American property due to rebel action is estimated at two and a half million dollars. The State Department tonight ordered the 55 American women and children in the rebel-held area of Oriente Province evacuated. It said the evacuation would take place as soon as possible.

The government reports no change in the cost of living in September. This is the second month living costs have held steady after a two-year climb. Government experts say the October cost-of-living index may show a slight increase over September because of higher car prices. But in the next six months they expect prices...generally...to remain fairly stable.

The Federal Reserve Board today authorized five of its reserve banks to raise their interest rates from 2 percent to two and a half percent. The other seven reserve banks probably will receive similar authorization soon. The rate increase is an anti-inflationary move. ~~It had been expected in the New York financial district for some time.~~

~~"Moonwatch" teams around the world have called off their search for the "balloon satellite" which the Army launched at Cape Canaveral last night. The malfunction has not been determined.~~ Cause of the failure -

President Eisenhower today promoted Rear Admiral Rickover, developer of the nuclear powered submarine, to the rank of vice admiral. Rickover will retain both of his present posts---chief of the naval reactors branch of the Atomic Energy Commission and assistant chief of the Bureau of Ships for nuclear propulsion. The promotion is a recess appointment, subject to Senate approval when Congress reconvenes.

The Civil Rights Commission will hold a hearing in Montgomery, Alabama on December 8 to look into charges that Negroes in Alabama are being deprived ~~of~~ the right to vote. Last Monday, ~~[illegible]~~ members of the commission staff were denied access to the voting records of Macon County. A commission spokesman says a decision whether to subpoena the records will be made, "depending on developments."

President Eisenhower returned to Washington today after his cross-country campaign trip and declared himself well-satisfied with the results. He said he found no "pessimism or apathy" in the Republican ranks.

Vice President Nixon is speaking here in New York tonight. [redacted] Without referring to the Democrats by name, Nixon will say that "the reactionaries of today are the radicals who seek bigger and bigger government, so that they can spend and [redacted] spend, and elect and elect."

And speaking in Boston, former President Truman will attack the Republicans on the issue of civil rights. [He will say that Mr. Eisenhower failed to exert his "moral responsibility"...that the President has never told the country whether he believes the Supreme Court decision against segregation to be morally right.]

THIS IS ED MURROW. I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH THE [redacted] WORD FOR TODAY. FIRST, HERE IS [redacted] GEORGE BRYAN WITH A WORD ABOUT THE WEATHER.

Word for Today

On the subject of politicking, I have found this quotation. "One of the most remarkable pecularities of the present time," it says, "is that the principal leaders of the political parties are traveling about the country from state to state, holding forth...like preachers...hour after hour." John Quincy Adams made the observation, back in 1840.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, October 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM

MURROW: ... In France, today, Premier de Gaulle held his first news conference since coming to power in June. For a direct report on that, we switch to Paris and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The big break in the Algerian deadlock has at last been set up. For the first time in four years of war, a French Chief of Government has invited rebel representatives to come here and negotiate an end to hostilities. Only Charles de Gaulle, with his enormous authority and prestige, could have done this without being accused of cowardice or treason. Only Charles de Gaulle could get the army to swallow the bitter pill of negotiations with the F.L.N. In fact, only Charles de Gaulle could convince the French, and the peoples of the world, who are watching this development with such interest, that cease-fire talks are not a bitter pill at all, but rather a triumph of reason, justice and honor. For France is not surrendering, nor making concessions under the gun. On the contrary, if there's been any sign of weakness these past few months it has been weakness in the rebel camp.

The F.L.N. was not able to prevent the Moslems from voting in the French referendum. The F.L.N. itself has been making peace overtures to the French this past week. In Cairo and in New York, the Prime Minister and Information Minister of the so-called Algerian Provisional Government, have both said that they are seeking a cease-fire, and would no longer insist upon French recognition of their right to independence as a prior condition to peace talks. These concessions have come from the rebels.

De Gaulle's offer today is the offer of a man who is self-confident and generous, not weak. And it takes a self-confident man to say what de Gaulle said today, and to pay tribute to the men who are fighting him. He said, "The ultimate purpose of France is to make a brave man's peace - a peace with honor and courage for the future of Algeria." That future, de Gaulle repeated, would be built by the freely elected representatives of the Algerian people. He appealed once again to the rebels to give up their arms; to fight for their ideals legally, inside the free community of Algeria. Any citizen who wishes to be a candidate for office, and who enjoys his civic rights - who is not a criminal - de Gaulle said, can do so no matter what his political opinions. This means that anyone can run for office, even if he believes in independence for Algeria, just so long as he is not bearing arms against France, or has not renounced French citizenship.

As for those who are fighting in the Algerian hills, they have only to raise a white flag, ask for a cease-fire, and French officers on the spot will receive them, and will treat them honorably, Charles de Gaulle guarantees.

At this point came the most sensational moment of today's news conference. The moment that made history - when de Gaulle said, "As for the organization outside of Algeria," and by that he meant, of course, the F.L.N. rebel government, "if it wants to seek peace, it need only send its delegates to the French Embassies in Morocco or Tunisia" ... and he, Charles de Gaulle, will guarantee their safe conduct to and from France. De Gaulle, therefore, has invited the F.L.N. to come here, and to talk peace, if that is what it wants - as the F.L.N. says it is. De Gaulle went even further. He said that the political future of Algeria would be worked out in a democratic fashion after elections, with the door wide open. And he said the future will be based upon, and now I quote de Gaulle, "... the personality of Algeria and its close association with France." These are historic words. He did not say that Algeria was French and would remain French. He spoke about its personality and its association to the French. Then he said that he would include the Saharan territories in a community linked to the Free States of Morocco and Tunisia. This is an unmistakable bid for North African unity - perhaps a federation of three countries linked voluntarily to France.

De Gaulle has broken clearly with the past. He's making a supreme bid for a Democratic Community of North Africa and the French Republic in whatever form the people choose. On one condition - that the choice is peacefully made, and not imposed by force by either side. He excludes only a surrender, or a grant of independence under the gun to rebel forces. De Gaulle has given the F.L.N. a challenging but very difficult choice: To give up the rebellion and to trust his word for an honorable evolution of their country, or to continue indefinitely a struggle which neither side can hope to win for a very long time.

The next word is up to the F.L.N.

That's the situation here in Paris tonight. David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. sk

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists today suspended their bombardment of Quemoy and the other offshore islands. The guns became quiet just as Secretary of State Dulles concluded three days of talks with Chiang Kai-shek. The Communists broke a cease-fire...which had lasted fifteen days...when Dulles arrived on Formosa for the conference. They simply turned the bombardment on and off.

Secretary Dulles and President Chiang issued a joint communique. It said neither the new shelling...nor Communist propaganda...had split the United States and Nationalist China "as the Communists had hoped." And it said the Chinese Communist policy of seeking to conquer Formosa and expel the United States from the Western Pacific "with the backing of the Soviet Union" "cannot possibly succeed." The communique stated that "under present conditions" the defense of Quemoy and Matsu is closely related with the defense of Formosa. This would appear to be a reaffirmation of the American position that there will be no yielding on the part of the United States in the face of armed force. The communique also says that the United States recognizes the Republic of China as "the authentic spokesman for Free China and of the hopes and aspirations entertained by the great mass of Chinese people." Moreover, the government of the Republic of China considers the restoration of freedom on the mainland to be its "sacred mission." But the foundation of this mission, the communique stipulates "resides in the minds and hearts of the Chinese people and not in the use of force."

A statement on the Formosa situation by Secretary Dulles was released in Washington this afternoon by the State Department. The statement was made by Mr. Dulles six days ago in a prerecorded interview with the British independent television network. Dulles said in the interview that the United States is not going to attack..."or tolerate attacks"...against the Chinese Communists. He said, "When the Communists attack, I think we have to stand firm."

CBS News Correspondent Peter Kalischer reports from Taipei that Chiang has agreed...in principle...to an eventual reduction of his garrison on the off-shore islands whenever a de facto truce exists in the area. The reduction, Kalischer says, would involve 15-thousand to 20-thousand troops. He says Chiang also agreed that if all goes well in this initial attempt at disengagement, to make further pacific gestures---such as lifting the Nationalist blockade of the port of Amoy.

In France today, Premier DeGaulle held his first news confernnce since coming to power in June. For a direct report on that, we switch to Paris and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The big break in the Algerian deadlock has at last been set up. For the first time in four years of war, a French Chief of Government has invited rebel representatives to come here and negotiate an end to hostilities. Only Charles DeGaulle, with his enormous authority and prestige, could have done this without being accused of cowardice or treason. Only Challes DeGaulle could get the army to swallow the bitter pill of negotiations with the F.L.N. In fact, only Charles DeGaulle could convince the French and the people of the world, who are watching this dvelopment with such interest, that cease-fire talks are not a bitter pill at all, but rather a triumph of reason, justice and honor. For France is not surrendering, nor making concessions under the gun. On the contrary, if there's been any sign of weakness these past few months, it has been weakness in the rebel camp. The F.L.N. was not able to prevent the Moslems from voting in the French referendum. The F.L.N. itself has been making peace overtures to the French this past week. In Cairo and in New York, the Prime Minister and Information Minister of the so-called Algerian Provisional Government, have both said that they are seeking a cease-fire, and would no longer insist upon French recognition of their right to independence as a prior condition to peace talks.

These concessions have come from the rebels.

DeGaulle's offer today is the offer of a man who is self-confident and generous, not weak. And it takes a self-confident man to say what DeGaulle said today, and to pay tribute to the men who are fighting him. He said, "The ultimate purpose of France is to make a brave man's peace - a peace with honor and courage for the future of Algeria." That future, DeGaulle repeated, would be built by the the freely elected representatives of the Algerian people. He appealed once again to the rebels to give up their arms; to fight for their ideals legally, inside the free community of Algeria. Any citizen who wishes to be a candidate for office, and who enjoys his civic rights - who is not a criminal - De Gaulle said, can do so no matter what his political opinions. This means that anyone can run for office even if he believes in independence for Algeria, just so long as he is not bearing arms against France, or has not renounced French citizenship.

As for those who are fighting in the Algerian hills, they have only to raise a white flag, ask for a cease - fire, and French officers on the spot will receive them and will treat them honorably, Charles De Gaulle guarantees.

At this point came the most sensational moment of todays' news conference. The moment that made history - when deGaulle said, "As for the organization outside of Algeria," and by that he meant, of course, the F.L.N. rebel government, "if it wants to seek peace, it need only send its delegates to the French Embassies in Morrocco or Tunisia"...and he, Charles DeGaulle will guarantee their safe conduct to and from France. DeGaulle, therefore, has invited the F.L.N. to come here, and to talk peace, if that is what it wants - as the F.L.N. says it is. DeGaulle went even further. He said that the political future of Algeria would be worked out in a democratic fashion after elections, with the door wide open. And he said the future will be based upon, and now I quote DeGaulle, "...the personality of Algeria and its close association with France." These are historic words. He did not say that Algeria was French and would remain French. He spoke about its personality and its association to the French. Then he said that he would include the Saharan territories in a community linked to the Free States of Morocco and Tunisia. This is an unmistakable bid for North African unity - perhaps a federation of three countries linked voluntarily to France.

De Gaulle has broken clearly with the past. He's making a supreme bid for a Democratic Community of North Africa and the French Republic in whatever form the people choose. On one condition - that the choice is peacefully made, and not imposed by force by either side. He excludes only a surrender, or a grant of independence under the gun to rebel forces. DeGaulle has given the F.L.N. a challenging but very difficult choice: To give up the rebellion and to trust his word for an honorable evolution of their country, or to continue indefinitely a a struggle which niether side can hope to win for a very long time. The next word is up to the F.L.N.

That's the situation here in Paris tonight. David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Rurrow in New York.

MURROW: Soviet Premier Khrushchev today announced that Russia will loan the United Arab Republic 400-million rubles to help President Nasser build the Aswan High Dam. The loan, figured at the official Soviet rate of exchange, amounts to roughly 100-million dollars. Khrushchev made the announcement at a Kremlin reception for the visiting vice president of the United Arab Republic.

The Swedish Academy today awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature to the Russian author, Boris Pasternak. The academy gave the award to Pasternak "for his important achievement both in contemporary lyrical poetry and in the field of the great Russian epic tradition." Pasternak has received acclaim...outside of Russia for his novel, "Doctor Zhivago" which is critical of Soviet society.

Cuban rebel forces have released the two American employees of the Texas Oil Company kidnapped on Monday. In announcing their release, State Department spokesman Lincoln White said that the forces...led by Fidel Castro...had demonstrated "their careless disregard for the human rights of American citizens." Forty-nine American citizens have been kidnapped by the Cuban rebels so far this year. All have been released. Damage to American proporty due to rebel action is estimated at two and a half million dollars. The State Department tonight ordered the 55 American women and children in the rebel-held area of Oriente Province evacuated. It said the evacuation would take place as soon as possible.

The government reports no change in the cost of living in September. This is the second month living costs have held steady after a two-year climb.

The Federal Reserve Board today authorized five of its reserve banks to raise their interest rates from 2 percent to two and a half percent. The other seven reserve banks probably will receive similar authorization soon. The rate increase is an anti-inflationary move. Pres. Eisenhower today promoted Rear Admiral Rickover to the rank of vice admiral. Rickover will retain both of his present posts ---chief of the naval reactors branch of the Atomic Energy Commission and assistant chief of the Brueau of Ships for nuclear propulsion. The promotion is a recess appointment, subject to Senate approval when Congress reconvenes.

The Civil Rights Commission will hold a hearing in Montgomery, Alabama on Demember 8 to look into charges that Negroes in Alabama are being deprived of the right to vote. Last Monday members of the commission staff were denied access to the voting records of Macon County. A commission spokesman says a decision whether to subpoena the records will be made, "depending on developments."

President Eisenhower returned to Washington today after his cross-country campaign trip and declared himself well-satisfied with the results. He said he found no"pessimism or apathy" in the Republican ranks.

Vice President Nixon is speaking here in New York tonight. Without referring to the Democrats by name, Nixon will say that "the reactionaries of today are the radicals who seek bigger and bigger government, so that they can spend and spend, and elect and elect."

And speaking in Boston, former President Truman will attack the Republicans on the issue of Civil rights. He will say that Mr. Eisenhower failed to exert his "moral responsibility"...that the President has never told the country whether he believes the Supreme Court decision against segregation to be morally right.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW On the subject of politicking, I have found this quotation. "One of the most remarkable pecularities of the present time," it says, "is that the principal leaders of the political parties are traveling about the country from state to state holding forth like preachers...hour after huur. John Quincy Adams made the observation, back in 1840.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 24, 1958

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Secretary of Commerce Weeks "with keen regret". Weeks has been commerce secretary since the beginning of the Eisenhower Administration. / He tendered his resignation for business and personal reasons which, he said, made it imperative for him to return to private life. / Mr. Eisenhower has named Lewis Strauss, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, to succeed Weeks. / Strauss resigned as A.E.C. chairman last June. / Since then, he has been serving as special assistant to the President on matters dealing with "atoms for peace". His new appointment is subject to approval by the Senate, and it may be opposed by Democrats who disagreed with him on policy when he was head of the A.E.C. / Democratic Senator Smathers...who is a member of the Commerce Committee...said today that he is "a little at a loss" to understand how Strauss would fit in the post of secretary of commerce. ~~Actually,~~ Before going to the A.E.C., Strauss was a New York investment banker.

→

President Eisenhower today issued a statement...hailing yesterday's announcement by the Commerce and Labor Departments that the cost of living last month remained unchanged. He said, "It confirms the fact that recovery is possible without inflation." And he said, "We must preserve this stability in the value of the dollar without recourse to stifling controls."

Here in New York today, Vice President Nixon had breakfast with Nelson Rockefeller, the Republican candidate for governor. After the breakfast, both men said that reports of a rift between them are untrue. The reports began this week when Rockefeller balked at President Eisenhower's description of Democrats as "political radicals". He also questioned Mr. Eisenhower's use of the word "fumigate", with reference to corruption in labor unions. There was also speculation that Nixon might be cool toward Rockefeller because Rockefeller also had become a potential candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 1960. This speculation concerning a possible rift increased last night...when both Rockefeller and Nixon were in New York City but did not meet. /This, the New York Times noted, made Rockefeller the first major Republican candidate not to greet Nixon in the fifteen states the Vice President had visited so far in the 1958 campaign. It was in the wake of such comment that today's meeting of Nixon and Rockefeller...at breakfast...was arranged. /Rockefeller said today that he has "every expectation" of serving out a four-year term as New York governor, if he is elected. /"I have no interest," he said, "in the presidential nomination." Nixon said that both he and the President want to build up strong leaders in the party. He said, "All of us current national figures will be helped by developing other national figures, no matter who is the candidate in 1960."

Secretary of State Dulles today gave President Eisenhower a personal report on his talks with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. When he came out of the White House, Dulles read a prepared statement...saying that Communist shelling in the Formosa Strait may be "more for psychological than for military purposes." /He said, "The Communists seem to believe that they can best achieve domination of the Western Pacific if they perpetuate confusion...and if they alternatively give hopes for peace and fears of war." Dulles said he came back from his meeting with Chiang confident that the Chinese Communists will not gain their ends, "either through their military efforts or their propaganda guile."

→

The Communists today resumed their shelling of Quemoy and Matsu after breaking off the bombardment for almost 24 hours. Nationalist guns answered the Communist fire.

The meeting of American and Chinese Communist ambassadors scheduled for today in Warsaw was not held. The talks were postponed until tomorrow for what are officially described as "administrative reasons".

A report from London says the United States and Britain are planning to provide Yugoslavia with nearly 300-million dollars in new economic aid. The United States program would amount, it is said, to about 250-million dollars...while British credits would total around 42-million. Most of the money would be used to boost agriculture and improve transportation.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said tonight that Russia would like to give "powerful aid" to the industrial development of Brazil. Russia, he said, could supply Brazil with machinery. He also proposed an exchange of specialists. Yesterday, Khrushchev promised TO LOAN Egypt a hundred million dollars to start work on the Aswan High Dam.

Pakistan again has a cabinet and a prime minister.../following the dissolution of the republic on October 7./ President Mirza appointed a 12-man cabinet today and named General Ayub prime minister. Mirza and Ayub have been ruling the country jointly since they seized power...to save the country, they said, from "bloody revolution."/ They have not restored the constitution, and martial law continues.

President Bourguiba of Tunisia today expressed hope that Premier DeGaulle's offer to negotiate with Algerian rebel leaders...in Paris...will facilitate a settlement. There has been no reaction, so far, from the revolutionary provisional government./ An official of the National Liberation Front...here in New York...said today that DeGaulle's offer is receiving "careful study". There may be a reply, he said, in one or two days.

In Nova Scotia, rescuers are still trying to reach 85 miners...trapped in the No. 2 pit of the Cumberland Coal Mine at SpringHill. One report says 91 miners are missing. Six bodies have been brought to the surface, and another four bodies reportedly have been found. The men were trapped two miles from the pithead, due to an underground upheaval... more than perhaps an earthquake./ Of the 174 men in the mine at the time of the accident, 79 escaped. For the rest, mine officials said tonight there is "practically no hope."

→

A Canadian Air Force bomber crashed in Detroit tonight...setting fire to twenty homes. All six men aboard the aircraft are believed dead. One women...who was in one of the homes...was treated for burns.

Edward R. Murrow: October 24, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

Boris Pasternak is the sixty-eight-year-old Russian poet who single-handedly has put the Kremlin on the spot. / He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature yesterday, for his deeply poetic, highly religious and devastatingly powerful novel, "Doctor Zhivago"- the non-political story of a cultured Russian doctor, who disintegrates spiritually and physically, in the harshness and cruelty of the Russian Revolution.

The Swedish Academy of Literature promptly sent Pasternak a telegram of congratulations and invited the tall, spry, bold poet to come to Stockholm for the presentation ceremonies on December tenth. It now up to the Soviet Government to decide whether to let him go. / "Doctor Zhivago", published last year in Italy, and this year a roaring best-seller in the United States, still has not been published in the Soviet Union, where the book was written, and where its author lives.

If the Russians permit Pasternak to go to Stockholm, to receive world applause for his literary cameo, they will be hard-pressed to explain why his award-winning book has not been published in Russia. And, if they don't permit Pasternak to go, they will be showing off the naked power they hold over every Soviet citizen, and make a farce of their protestations for freer cultural exchange.

Pasternak's personal defection to the West is probably not a consideration. He has a wife and three sons, of whom he is very proud. One is a pianist, like Pasternak's mother; another, an engineer; and the third a student of Physics. They also have their own families. In these circumstances, even the Russians don't have to be blunt.

More than likely, Pasternak, whose two sisters live in London, would never consider defection in any case, because Pasternak is profoundly Russian - an immensely attractive product of the pre-revolutionary Russian intelligentsia, the intelligentsia that bubbled just prior to the Bolshevik seizure of power with ideological ferment and literary creativity, the intelligentsia that produced Dostoevsky and Tolstoy.

Pasternak - grey-haired, sharp-eyed, fluent in French, German and English, who looks more like an American Indian than a Slavic poet with Jewish blood - Pasternak and his wife live alone, in a small, unpretentious, wooden cottage in Peredelniko (Pe-re-dél-niko), a writer's colony about fifteen miles southwest of Moscow. It was there, for five years starting in about 1948, that he wrote "Doctor Zhivago".

This novel -- following his still unexcelled Russian translations of Shakespeare -- was supposed to have been published simultaneously in Russia and in Italy, in October 1956. An unexpurgated manuscript was sent to a Communist publisher in Milan. But, in Moscow, the Union of Soviet Writers -- whose job it is to pass on all Soviet literature -- decided that the "book's cumulative effect casts doubt on the validity of the Bolshevik Revolution, which it depicts as if it were the great crime in Russian history". This Union then asked Pasternak to postpone publication for six months while "certain revisions" were made. Both Pasternak and the publisher agreed. Six months later, the Union of Soviet Writers went a step further, deciding that the book shouldn't be published at all -- that the revisions were "too extensive" -- that Zhivago probably couldn't be published. The Italian publisher refused and was subsequently subjected to enormous pressure. Russian diplomats stationed in Rome went to Milan to plead with him. Soviet censors from Moscow flew to Milan to try to stop publication.

But Doctor Zhivago was published last Fall in Italy. Just a few months ago -- in Britain and the United States. Whether it will ever be published in Russia is unknown at this time.

Last December, when Pasternak met with Western reporters in Peredelniko, he told them he'd accepted the "appointment" of a "young and enthusiastic Communist" to help him "improve" the manuscript. The message of the book - the dignity and beauty of the free man -- couldn't be changed anyway, he reasoned. Then, in fluent English and with a directness that astonished reporters, he said: "You have the right to ask me whether I believe what I have written. My answer is yes. I have borne witness as an artist: I have written about the times I lived through". To one reporter he said: "It is in our power to do but one thing - and that is not to distort the living voice of life."

Pasternak's book is unlike anything to come out of the Soviet Union. It is fresh, emotional, poetical, powerful. In fact, it is truly amazing that it was ever written in Russia.

One of Pasternak's characters, who manages to survive both Zhivago's death and World War Two, looks back upon the Hitlerian invasion and says: "When the war broke out, its real horrors, its real dangers, its menace of real death were a blessing compared with the inhuman reign of the lie, and they brought relief because they broke the spell of the dead letter."

Later, ~~this same character~~ one of his characters argues: "It has often happened in history that a lofty ideal has degenerated into a crude materialism. Thus, Greece gave way to Rome, and the Russian enlightenment has become the Russian revolution".

The Swedish Academy has not only recognized a great talent, it has confronted the Russians with a real dilemma; and the success of the book proves again the power of words. ~~So far neither the Russian press nor radio has reported the award.~~ The Russians tonite are calling the award "a hostile political act".

Back in a moment

Fint Jorge Bryan

Word for Today

No one knows the power of words better than a dictator. Byron wrote:

"But words are things, and a small drop of ink...falling like dew...

produces that which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think."

A dictatorship cannot stand for too much independent thinking, and so in Russia, when it first came Published the fine novel by Boris Pasternak is being roundly denounced.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today accepted the resignation of Secretary of Commerce Weeks "with keen regret." Weeks has been commerce secretary since the beginning of the Eisenhower Administration. He tendered his resignation for business and personal reasons, which, he said, made it imperative for him to return to private life. Mr. Eisenhower has named Lewis Strauss, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, to succeed Weeks. Strauss resigned as A.E.C. chairman last June. Since then, he has been serving as special assistant to the President on matters dealing with "atoms for peace." His new appointment is subject to approval by the Senate, and it may be opposed by Democrats who disagreed with him on policy when he was head of the A.E.C. Democratic Senator Smathers...who is a member of the Commerce Committee...said today that he is "a little at a loss" to understand how Strauss would fit in the post of secretary of commerce. Before going to the A.E.C. Strauss was a New York investment banker.

President Eisenhower today issued a statement...hailing yesterday's announcement by the Commerce and Labor Departments that the cost of living last month remained unchanged. He said, "It confirms the fact that recovery is possible without inflation." And he said, "We must preserve this stability in the value of the dollar without recourse to stifling controls."

Here in New York today, Vice President Nixon had breakfast with Nelson Rockefeller, the Republican candidate for governor. After the breakfast, both men said that reports of a rift between them are untrue. The reports began this week when Rockefeller balked at President Eisenhower's description of Democrats as "political radicals." He also questioned Mr. Eisenhower's use of the word "fumigate," with reference to corruption in labor unions. There was also speculation that Nixon might be cool toward Rockefeller because Rockefeller also had become a potential candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 1960. This speculation concerning a possible rift increased last night...when both Rockefeller and Nixon were in New York City but did not meet. This, the New York Times noted, made Rockefeller the first major Republican candidate not to greet Nixon in the fifteen states the Vice President had visited so far in the 1958 campaign. It was in the wake of such comment that today's meeting of Nixon and Rockefeller...at breakfast...was arranged. Rockefeller said today that he has "every expectation" of serving out a four-year term as New York governor, if he is elected. "I have no interest," he said, "in the presidential nomination." Nixon said that both he and the President want to build up strong leaders in the party. He said, "All of us current national figures will be helped by developing other national figures, no matter who is the candidate in 1960."

Secretary of State Dulles today gave President Eisenhower a personal report on his talks with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. When he came out of the White House, Dulles read a prepared statement...saying that Communist shelling in the Formosa Strait may be "more for psychological than for military purposes." He said, "The Communists seem to believe that they can best achieve domination of the Western Pacific if they perpetuate confusion...and if they alternatively give hopes for peace and fears of war." Dulles said he came back from his meeting with Chiang confident that the Chinese Communists will not gain their ends, "either through their military efforts or their propaganda guile."

The Communists today resumed their shelling of Quemoy and Matsu after breaking off the bombardment for almost 24 hours. Nationalist guns answered the Communist fire.

The meeting of American and Chinese Communist ambassadors scheduled for today in Warsaw was not held. The talks were postponed until tomorrow for what are officially described as "administrative reasons."

A report from London says the United States and Britain are planning to provide Yugoslavia with nearly 300 million dollars in new economic aid. The United States program would amount, it is said, to about 250 million dollars... while British credits would total around 42 million. Most of the money would he used to boost agriculture and improve transportation.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said tonight that Russia would like to give "powerful aid" to the industrial development of Brazil. Russia, he said, could supply Brazil with machinery. He also proposed an exchange of specialists. Yesterday, Khrushchev promised to loan Egypt a hundred million dollars to start work on the Aswan High Dam.

Pakistan again has a cabinet and a prime minister...following the dissolution of the republic on October 7th. President Mirza appointed a 12-man cabinet today and named General Ayub prime minister. Mirza and Ayub have been ruling the country jointly since they seized power...to save the country, they said, from "bloody revolution." They have not restored the constitution, and martial law continues.

President Bourguiba of Tunisia today expressed hope that Premier DeGaulle's offer to negotiate with Alge. an rebel leaders...in Paris...will facilitate a settlement. There has been no reaction, so far, from the revolutionary provisional government. An official of the National Liberation Front...here in New York...said today that DeGaulle's offer is receiving "careful study." There may be a reply, he said, in one or two days.

In Nova Scotia, rescuers are still trying to reach 85 miners..trapped in the No. 2 pit of the Cumberland Coal Mine at SpringHill. One report says 91 miners are missing. Six bodies have been brought to the surface, and another four bodies reportedly have been found. The men were trapped more than two miles from the pithead, due to an underground upheaval...perhaps an earthquake. Of the 174 men in the mine at the time of the accident, 79 escaped. For the rest, mine officials said tonight there is "practically no hope."

A Canadian Air Force bomber crashed in Detroit tonight...setting fire to twenty homes. All six men aboard the aricraft are believed dead. One woman.. who was in one of the homes...was treated for burns.

Boris Pasternak is the sixty-eight-year-old Russian poet who singlehandedly has put the Kremlin on the spot. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature yesterday for his deeply poetic, highly religious and devastatingly powerful novel, "Doctor Zhivago" - the non-political story of a cultured Russian doctor who disintegrates spiritually and physically in the harshness and cruelty of the Russian Revolution.

Thw Swedish Academy of Literature promptly sent Pasternak a telegram of congratulations and invited the tall, spry, bold poet to come to Stockholm for the presentation ceremonies on December tenth. It now is up to the Soviet Government to decide whether to let him go. "Doctor Zhivago," published last year in Italy, and this year a roaring best-seller in the United States, still has not been published in the Soviet Union, where the book was written, and where its author lives.

If the Russians permit Pasternak to go to Stockholm, to receive world applause for his literary cameo, they will be hard-pressed to explain why his award-winning book has not been published in Russia. And, if they don't permit Pasternak to go, they will be showing off the naked power they hold over every Soviet citizen, and make a farce of their protestations for freer cultural exchange.

Pasternak - grey-haired, sharp-eyed, fluent in French, German and English, who looks more like an American Indian than a Slavic poet with Jewish blood - Pasternak and his wife live alone, in a small, unpretentious, wooden cottage in Peredelniko, a writers' colony about fifteen miles southwest of Moscow. It was there, for five years starting in about 1948, that he wrote "Doctor Zhivago."

This novel - following his still unexcelled Russian translations of Shakespeare - was supposed to have been published simultaneously in Russia and in Italy, in October 1956. An unexpurgated manuscript was sent to a Communist publisher in Milan, But, in Moscow, the Union of Soviet Writers - whose job it is to pass on all Soviet literature - decided that the "book's cumulative effect casts doubt on the validity of the Bolshevik Revolution, which it depicts as if it were the great crime in Russian history." This Union then asked Pasternak to postpone publication for six months while "certain revisions" were made. Both Pasternak and the publisher agreed. Six months later, the Union of Soviet Writers went a step further, deciding that the book shouldn't be published at all - that the revisions were "too extensive" - thatZhivago probably couldn't be published. The Italian publisher refused and was subsequently subjected to enormous pressure. Russian diplomats stationed in Rome went to Milan to plead with him. Soviet censors from Moscow flew to Milan to try to stop publication.

Pasternak's book is unlike anything to come out of the Soviet Union. It is fresh, emotional, poetical, powerful. In fact, it is truly amazing that it was ever written in Russia.

On of Pasternak's characters, who manages to survive both Zhivago's death and World War Two, looks back upon the Hitlerian invasion and says: "When the war broke out, its real horrors, its real dangers, its menace of real death were a blessing compared with the inhuman reign of the lie, and they brought relief because they broke the spell of the dead letter."

One of his characters argues: "It has often happened in history that a lofty ideal has degenerated into a crude materialism. Thus, Greece gave way to Rome, and the Russian enlightenment has become the Russian revolution."

The Swedish Academy has not only recognized a great talent, it has confronted the Russians with a real dilemma; and the success of the book proves again the power of words. The Russians tonight are calling the award "a hostile political act."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

MURROW: No one knows the power of words better than a dictator. Byron wrote: "But words are things, and a small drop of ink...falling like dew...produced that which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think."

A dictatorship cannot stand for too much independent thinking, and so in Russia the fine novel by Boris Pasternak is being roundly denounced.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Oct. 27, 1958

This is the news:

Russia today rejected the proposal for a one-year suspension of nuclear weapons tests. The United States and Britain had offered to suspend tests for one year, starting next Friday, if Russia would do the same. Friday was chosen because that is when three-power talks on nuclear arms control are scheduled to start in Geneva. Russia's deputy foreign minister, Valerian Zorin, told the United Nations today that the Soviet Union "categorically" declines the Anglo-American offer. He claimed that any suspension for one year would be a ruse...since, he said, "one year is needed to study the results of a conducted series of tests and to make preparations for the next series." He skipped over the fact that the United States and Britain had said they would continue the suspension on a year-to-year basis, if negotiations with Russia bore fruit./ He called again for an immediate, unconditional test ban "to last forever." The Soviet deputy foreign minister said, however, that Russia will attend the Geneva talks./ And Russia, he said, will contribute to their success "in every possible way."

In Washington, no immediate comment by the State Department./ But some Washington officials say they would not be surprised if Russia suspends its tests anyway...when the Geneva conference starts.

In Rome, the conclave of cardinals will ballot again tomorrow in its effort to elect a new Pope. / The 51 cardinals were unable to agree on a new pontiff today on what are believed to be their fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth ballots. / Unlike yesterday, the smoke signals from the Sistine Chapel today were unmistakably black. (Puffs of white smoke yesterday touched off false reports that a Pope had been chosen.) The princes of the Church obviously have encountered difficulty in agreeing on a successor to Pius the Twelfth. / And the great crowd...estimated at 200-thousand, which gathered in St. Peter's Square today...showed its disappointment at the delay. / Further balloting will take place each day until a new pontiff has been named. / There was speculation that tomorrow's balloting will decide. The election of a Pope requires a majority of two-thirds, plus one.

The president of Pakistan has followed up the Army coup of October 7, by handing over "all powers of government" to Army strong man, General Ayub. Only last Friday, President Mirza appointed Ayub prime minister. The president said today that he was turning the government over to Ayub because he felt that two-man rule might hamper the restoration of political stability. Until October 7, Pakistan had been a democratic republic...with a constitution and national and provincial assemblies. These were dissolved because of what was termed "the chaotic internal situation."

President Eisenhower campaigned briefly in West Virginia and Pennsylvania today before coming on to New York late tonight. He will make two talks tomorrow...here in New York City...and the White House says he will be greeted at the airport by both Representative Keating, [redacted] Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, and Nelson Rockefeller, Republican candidate for [redacted] governor. When Vice President Nixon arrived in New York [redacted] last week, Mr. Rockefeller was busy campaigning upstate.

Mr. Eisenhower is saying in Pittsburgh this evening that the recession has been overcome "without flogging the economy into inflation." [redacted] Republicans, he is saying, saved the country from the [redacted] "hare-brained spending schemes" of the Democrats. And he will say that in calling some Democrats "irresponsible and radical", he is being conservative.

The chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Paul Butler, said today that Vice President Nixon is "whistling in the dark" when he speaks of a [redacted] Republican trend developing in the past 10 days. The trend in nearly every section of the country, Butler said, is toward the Democratic Party.

Twenty-two men died today in a coal mine in Bishop, Virginia. They were trapped by a gas explosion in the same mine operated by the Pocahontas Fuel Company, in which 37 men died last year. The announcement that the bodies of the 22 had been found came from Crawford Wilson, chief of the West Virginia Bureau of Mines. Although the mine entrance is in Virginia, most of the diggings are in West Virginia. And the mine is regarded officially as a West Virginia operation. There were 188 men underground at the time of the explosion early this morning. One hundred and sixty-six escaped.

In Spring Hill, Nova Scotia...hope has virtually been abandoned for the rescue of any of the 75 coal miners missing since Thursday night. Eighteen bodies have been recovered, in addition to the 75 missing.

The Chinese Communists today continued their shelling of the Quemoy complex. Under the semi-truce...announced by Red China...Communist guns are to shell the landing beaches and other supply areas only on odd-numbered days of the month. / Since yesterday---October 26---was an even-numbered day, there was no shelling of these targets although shells did land elsewhere on the island. / Today's bombardment was heavier than yesterday, but still relatively light. No supply convoys were sent to Quemoy either yesterday or today because of rough seas. / The Nationalists announce that during last week's bombardment 19 civilians on the offshore islands were killed... and 233 homes destroyed.

Edward R. Murrow: October 27, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The most far-reaching and uprooting re-organization of human beings ever to have taken place outside satiric fiction, is underway in the People's Republic of China. / It is the establishment of "communes" that are to include and control the entire peasant population of China, about five hundred million people. It is being done with a rush. It started last April, and my colleague Alexander Kendrick informs me that by latest reports received in London, already three hundred and seventy-five millions have been herded into the new organization. / The final fourth of the peasant population is to be rounded up by Spring.

A commune is an amalgamation of farm collectives, which swallows up all the activities of a region - shops, schools, social services and recreation - and then adds a contingent of new small industries. / By controlling the manpower of the region, it can staff the new factories or supply the state with mass labor wherever needed. / The men taken from the farms are replaced by women. Children go into communal nurseries. / Everybody eats at central Mess Halls. The only property left to individuals is a few farm animals and chickens. Everything else, land, houses, tools, equipment, belongs to the commune.

This of course spells the end of family life in China, which is one of the reasons behind the policy. / The Chinese family has been the core of Chinese civilization, and the Communist dictatorship has found it an obstruction to easy and quick socialization. / It started out combatting the family through compulsory collectivization of farms, as well as through vigorous propaganda among the young, who were rewarded for spying on their parents. Against the commune the family will have no defense. Members not too old or too young have to work, and work where told. They can be sent out of the district. The normal center of family life, the children and the common meals and the little bit of family land, are all yielded to the control of the commune.

The Soviet Union tried collectivization on a less drastic scale and needed all the ruthlessness of Stalin to get it going. / It is still meeting trouble. In 1951 Khrushchev proposed something similar to the Chinese commune, the "Agrogorod", which was to be a forcible amalgamation of collective farms built into big communities. But the scheme was a hot potato and it was dropped, and state control of collective is being relaxed.

For the Chinese the problem is somewhat different. China is primarily agricultural, whereas Russian socialism depends first of all on industry.

And the Chinese have dreamed a bigger dream. These new communes are to be self-sufficient, having their own food and making their own goods.# In pushing for a big increase in steel output this year, the Chinese did not try to put up huge new steel mills. They have been putting up small iron works and smelters in communes throughout the country. / They hope to end with a state controlled centrally in all ways political, but with the vast country behind the cities, economically independent. / If havoc hits the cities, China cannot be demobilized. / It can function despite the worst weapons of the atomic age, better than Russia, and far better than industrial countries in the West.

Two features of the commune should be mentioned. Workers get free rice, get it in addition to their wages. This is practical communism as not hitherto ventured on a large scale anywhere in the world. / Everybody works, everybody is paid wages. Wages vary according to the value of the work done. If a worker wants vegetables with his rice, he pays for it out of his wages.

The other feature is that the commune is geographically identical with the Hsiang (Shyong) or district. A typical district might have twelve thousand families, or fifty thousand inhabitants. It would be not unlike a county, but a county of farms, shops and small factories, in which the district officials are officers of the communes. The local representative of the central government is the Secretary of the commune. And this puts the commune wholly under the control of the central government. As each commune also has a militia, the state has unlimited manpower for war, and the means with which to impose its authority on the population.

There are signs that the rush into the future is going too fast. Too many farm workers have gone into factories, and food is rotting in the fields. Resistance is being met, particularly from women. A tremendous campaign to impose the commune is in full progress. On paper, entry is voluntary, both by existing collectives and individuals. But those who refuse to join are easy to denounce, and national compliance is expected.

But however, compliance is one thing and enthusiasm is another. And without enthusiasm such a revolution may not win out. But if it should, we may live to see the largest country in the world adopt an ant-hill type of society, with unthinkable consequences, to itself, and, indeed, to everybody else.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

There is something awful...recalling George Orwell's "1984"... in the story of the Chinese communes. As Boris Pasternak writes in his Nobel Prize-winning novel: "Revolutionaries who take the law into their own hands are horrifying, not because they are criminals, but because they are like machines that have got out of control, like runaway trains."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Russia today rejected the proposal for a one-year suspension of nuclear weapons tests. The United States and Britain had offered to suspend tests for one year starting next Friday if Russia would do the same. Friday was chosen because that is when three-power talks on nuclear arms control are scheduled to start in Geneva. Russia's deputy foreign minister, Valerian Zorin, told the United Nations today that the Soviet Union "categorically" declines the Anglo-American offer. He claimed that any suspension for one year would be a ruse... since, he said, "one year is needed to study the results of a conducted series of tests and to make preparations for the next series." He skipped over the fact that the United States and Britain had said they would continue the suspension on a year-to-year basis, if negotiations with Russia bore fruit. He called again for an immediate, unconditional test ban "to last forever." The Soviet deputy foreign minister said, however, that Russia will attend the Geneva talks. And Russia, he said, will contribute to their success "in every possible way."

In Washington, no immediate comment by the State Department. But some Washington officials say they would not be surprised if Russia suspends its tests anyway...when the Geneva conference starts.

In Rome the conclave of cardinals will ballot again tomorrow in its effort to elect a new Pope. The 51 cardinals were unable to agree on a new pontiff today on what are believed to be their fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth ballots. Unlike yesterday, the smoke signals from the Sistine Chapel today were unmistakably black. Puffs of white smoke yesterday touched off false reports that a Pope had been chosen. The princes of the Church obviously have encountered difficulty in agreeing on a successor to Pius the Twelfth. And the great crowd...estimated at 200-thousand, which gathered in St. Peter's Square today... showed its disappointment at the delay. Further balloting will take place each day until a new pontiff has been named. There was speculation that tomorrow's balloting will decide. The election of a Pope requires a majority of two-thirds plus one.

The president of Pakistan has followed up the Army coup of October 7 by handing over "all powers of government" to Army strong man, General Ayub. Only last Friday, President Mirza appointed Ayub prime minister. The president said today that he was turning the government over to Ayub because he felt that two-man rule might hamper the restoration of political stability. Until October 7, Pakistan had been a democratic republic...with a constitution and national and provinical assemblies. These were dissolved because of what was termed "the chaotic internal situation."

President Eisenhower campaigned briefly in West Virginia and Pennsylvania today before coming on to New York late tonight. He will make two talks tomorrow...here in New York City...and the White House says he will be greeted at the airport by both Representative Keating, Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate and Nelson Rockefeller, Republican candidate for governor. When Vice President Nixon arrived in New York last week, Mr. Rockefeller was busy campaigning upstate.

Mr. Eisenhower is saying in Pittsburgh this eveinng that the recession has been overcome "without flogging the economy into inflation." Republicans, he is saying, saved the country from the "hare-brained spending schemes" of the Democrats. And he will say that in calling some Democrats "irresponsible and radical" he is being conservative.

The chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Paul Butler, said today that Vice President Nixon is "whistling in the dark" when he speaks of a Republican trend developing in the past 10 days. The trend in nearly every section of the country, Butler said, is toward the Democratic Party.

Twenty-two men died today in a coal mine in Bishop, Virginia. They were trapped by a gas explosion in the same mine operated by the Pocahontas Fuel Company in which 37 men died last year. The announcement that the bodies of the 22 had been found came from Crawford Wilson, chief of the West Virginia Bureau of Mines. Although the mine entrance is in Virginia, most of the diggings are in West Virginia. And the mine is regarded officially as a West Virginia operation. There were 188 men underground at the time of the explosion early this morning. One hundred and sixty-six excaped.

In Spring Hill, Nova Scotia...hope is virtually been abandoned for the rescue of any of the 75 coal miners missing since Thursday night. Eighteen bodies have been recovered, in addition to the 75 missing.

The Chinese Communists today continued their shelling of the Quemoy complex. Under the semi-truce...announced by Red China...Communist guns are to shell the landing beaches and other supply areas only on odd-numbered days of the month. Since yesterday---October 26---was an even-numbered day, there was no shelling of these targets although shells did land elsewhere on the island. Today's bombardment was heavier than yesterday, but still relatively light. No supply convoys were sent to Quemoy either yesterday or today because of rough seas. The Nationalists announce that during last week's bombardment 19 civilians on the offshore islands were killed and 233 homes destroyed.

The most far-reaching and uprooting re-organization of human beings ever to have taken place outside satiric fiction, is underway in the People's Republic of China. It is the establishment of "communes" that are to include and control the entire peasant population of China, about five hundred million people. It is being done with a rush. It started last April, and my colleague Alexander Kendrick informs me that by latest reports received in London, already three hundred and seventy-five millions have been herded into the new organization. The final fourth of the peasant population is to be rounded up by Spring.

A commune is an amalgamation of farm collectives, which swallows up all the activities of a region - shops, schools, social services and recreation - and then adds a contingent of new small industries. By controlling the manpower of the region, it can staff the new factories or supply the state with mass labor wherever needed. The men taken from the farms are replaced by women. Children go into communal nurseries. Everybody eats at central mess halls. The only property left to individuals is a few farm animals and chickens. Everything else, land, houses, tools, equipment, belongs to the commune.

This of course spells the end of family life in China, which is one of the reasons behind the policy. The Chinese family has been the core of Chinese civilization and the Communist dictatorship has found it an obstruction to easy and quick socialization. It started out combatting the family through compulsory collectivization of farms, as well as through vigorous propaganda among the young, who were rewarded for spying on their parents. Against the commune the family will have no defense. Members not too old or too young have to work, and work where told. They can be sent out of the district. The normal center of family life, the children and the common meals and the little bit of family land, are all yielded to the control of the commune.

The Soviet Union tried collectivization on a less drastic scale and needed all the ruthlessness of Stalin to get it going. It is still meeting trouble. In 1951 Khrushchev proposed something similar to the Chinese commune, the "Agrogorod," which was to be a forcible amalgamation of collective farms built into big communities.. But the scheme was a hot potato and it was dropped, and state control of collective is being relaxed.

For the Chinese the problem is somewhat different. China is primarily agricultural, whereas Russian socialism depends first of all on industry. And the Chinese have dreamed a bigger dream. These new communes are to be self-sufficient, having their own food and making their own goods. In pushing for a big increase in steel output this year, the Chinese did not try to put up huge new steel mills. They have been putting up small iron works and smelters in communes throughout the country. They hope to end with a state controlled centrally in all ways political, but with the vast country behind the cities, economically independent. If havoc hits the cities, China cannot be demobilized. It can function despite the worst weapons of the atomic age, better than Russia and far better than industrial countries in the West.

Two features of the commune should be mentioned. Workers get free rice, get it in addition to their wages. This is practical communism as not hitherto ventured on a large scale anywhere in the world. Everybody works, everybody is paid wages. Wages vary according to the value of the work done. If a worker wants vegetables with his rice, he pays for it out of his wages.

The other feature is that the commune is geographically identical with the Hsiang (Shyong) or district. A typical district might have twelve thousand families, or fifty thousand inhabitants. It would be not unlike a county, but a country of farms, shops and small factories, in which the district officials are officers of the communes. The local representative of the central government is the Secretary of the commune. And this puts the commune wholly under the control of the central government. As each commune also has a militia, the state has unlimited manpower for war, and the means with which to impose its authority on the population.

But without enthusiasm such a revolution may not win out. But if it should, we may live to see the largest country in the world adopt an ant-hill type of society, with unthinkable consequences, to itself, and, indeed, to everybody else.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: There is something awful...recalling George Orwell's "1984"...in the story of the Chinese communes. As Boris Pasternak writes in his Nobel Prize winning novel: "Revolutionaries who take the law into their own hands are horrifying, not because they are criminals, but because they are like machines that have got out of control like runaway trains."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Oct. 28, 1958

This is the news:

Cardinal Roncalli, patriarch of Venice and son of a peasant, today was elected supreme pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church. For a first-hand report, we switch to Winston Burdett in Rome.

(Tape runs 5:30
(Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague, Winston Burdett, reporting from Rome on the election of a new Pope.

President Eisenhower has sent a message of congratulation to the new pontiff on his election. Mr. Eisenhower said, "My best wishes for the success of your endeavors are, I am certain, shared by men of good will everywhere."

There was another slackening today in the Chinese Communist bombardment of Quemoy. Since this was an even-numbered day of the month, the shelling...according to the Communist timetable...was not to have been directed at the beaches used for landing supplies. And there is no word that any of these beaches were hit today.

Secretary of State Dulles told a news conference today that the Communists...in their alternate-day shelling..."have shown themselves to be shooting, not for military purposes, but merely for the purpose of promiscuous killing. The shelling, he said, is designed primarily to kill civilians, who are least protected.

Mr. Dulles said that Chiang Kai-shek's renunciation of force, in going back to the mainland, is a completely new policy...and should be highly significant in future long-range developments.

Last night, President Eisenhower ended his Pittsburgh speech with the late news that Communist China had announced the withdrawal of the last of its troops from North Korea. / A reporter asked Mr. Dulles whether this news, reported by the President, marked a significant milestone. / Dulles apparently did not hear the reference to Mr. Eisenhower...and said he thought the development had "very little significance." It was his impression, Dulles said, that the withdrawal was only to the other side of the Yalu River...and that the Chinese troops could readily be brought back into Korea. / He said that Russia's unwillingness to join the United States and Britain in a one-year suspension of nuclear weapons tests, demonstrated Soviet insincerity. The United States and Britain have offered to suspend tests for one year, effective with the start of three-power talks in Geneva on Friday. Russia announced yesterday that it would attend the talks, but that it would not agree to a one-year suspension. / The tests, it said, should be ended unconditionally "for all time." Dulles said today that the Russians apparently found out...at last summer's meeting of atomic experts...that we are ahead of them in the nuclear weapons field. / And he served notice that if Russia goes on testing after Friday, so will the United States. / Dulles said that Russia's loan of 400-million rubles to Egypt, for work on the Aswan High Dam, came as no surprise. / He didn't think it was "anything to get excited about." A ruble can be bought in Switzerland, he said, "for a few cents."

In a speech here in New York tonight, Mr. Dulles will make an appeal for solidarity between Canada and the United States. He will urge citizens of both countries not to exaggerate their differences.

→

President Eisenhower today attended two Republican rallies in New York City. And, at both rallies, he plugged for the election of Nelson Rockefeller as governor and Representative Keating as senator. Tonight, Mr. Eisenhower will be admitted to the National Football Foundation Hall of Fame. (He played in the backfield at West Point). On the subject of physical and mental fitness, he will say that the contest with Soviet Russia "is likely to be long indeed"...and that ~~him~~ every American is part of the "team". According to the advance text, it will not be a political talk. Mr. Eisenhower will climax his campaigning with a nationwide broadcast from Baltimore on Friday night.

Vice President Nixon announces that he will fly to Alaska on Saturday, returning in time to vote. Alaska will elect two U.S. senators, one representative and a governor in a special election on November 25th.

The Treasury Department reported today that the national debt has reached a new high of 280-billion, 851-million dollars. The debt has increased appreciably in the past month, due to government borrowing of about 4-billion dollars.

Another coal mine explosion---this time near Craigsville, West Virginia. Seventeen men were trapped. / Four of them have been rescued---three of them in serious condition because of burns. / The fate of the remaining 13 is not known. (Twenty-two miners were killed in a similar accident yesterday near Bishop, Virginia.

The Nobel Prize in physics was awarded jointly today to three Russian nuclear scientists. They had specialized in high speed, sub-atomic particles...one product of which was a device for counting cosmic rays. The Kremlin must now decide whether to allow them to receive the award. This morning the Soviet Writers Union expelled Boris Pasternak, who last week was (awarded) the Nobel Prize in literature for his anti-Communist novel, "Doctor Zhivago."

Cronkite
41,000 -

Back in a moment -

Jim Hagerty -

The Nobel Prize in chemistry was awarded today to Dr. Frederick Sanger, of England, for his pioneer work on the structure of insulin. [redacted] Sanger's work included breaking down the protein molecule...an achievement which has enabled scientists to delve more deeply into the [redacted] secrets of living matter.

Word for Today

For three days, the world has been witness to the drama of the election of a new Pope...a drama played against the background of nineteen centuries before an audience of nearly all of mankind. There was color and suspense, and one recalls that Matthew Arnold said, "The true meaning of religion is not merely morality but morality touched by emotion."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, October 28, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: For a first-hand report, we switch to Winston Burdett in Rome.

BURDETT: For one hour and ten minutes as thesun sank behind the dome of St. Peter's Basilica and night closed over the city, the crowd filling the great square waited in silence. They knew that the work of the conclave wasover, the choice was made, the Church had a new Pope. A tiny whisp of smoke that was neither white or black, but a wavering gray and that lasted only 40 seconds had told them that. Add, a sudden scattered burst of life in the darkened rooms of the Vatican Palaces that loom about the Square had confirmed the signal from the chimney of the Sistine Chapel, a Pope had been made. But, no one in that vast crowd knew his name. This was the time of highest expectancy and tension waiting for him to appear, and yet, in the Square and in the wide avenues that lead to it, there was quiet. The street lights went on, a full moon rose in the East, the crowd grew larger. The great marble faceade of St. Peter's with its giant columns and its row of baroque balconies was white and radiant in the glare of the television footlight. Every now and then the spotlight played restlessly back and forth across the Palace offices,searching for a sign of activity. The crowd waited in awe. Suddenly, there was action. A company of palatine guards brilliant in blue and red stepped in perfect formation out of the shadow and marched in to the light that filled the empty space in front of the Cathedral portico. Behind them came the Swiss guards and then a company of papal gendarmes, then troops of every branch of the Italian armed forces, led by a Carabinieri band, sent by the Italian government to do honor on Vatican soil to the new head of the Church.

They stood at attention in the center of that huge stage, directly below the little balcony high up on the fascade of the Cathedral where the Pope would appear. The light went on behind the balcony and the window opened, five or six little figures stepped out, a tiny cluster of gray-purple against athe white expanse of the Cathedral. One of those men on the balcony was Nicola Cardinal Canali, who is 84 years old. Two of the other Cardinals assisted him as he moved forward to the microphone. We have heard that Canali felt seriously ill during the conclave, but we also know, that he is a man of dynamic will and energy. By virtue of his rank in the Sacred College, thehonor of announcing the name of the new Pope fell this time to him. One could not hope feeling as he steadied himself at the microphone that Canali would have risen from his sickbed to be there at this moment. The loudspeaker filled the Square with his voice as he pronounced the two sentence ritual in Latin, "I announce to you a great joy,"Habemus Papam: We have a Pope," "The Most Reverend Lord, Angelo Giuseppe Cardinal Roncalli, who has chosen for himself the name, John the 23rd." There was a universal shout, and then again, a few moments of silence. Cardinal Canali turned and left, the window closed, the palatine guards stood motionless again below an entry balcony. The other balconies to right and left filled up with purple figures crowding at the ledge, the Cardinals were now eager spectators like the rest of us. Somewhere inside the Vatican, the new Pope, having been dressed in his pontifical robes, his white cossack and red mantle trimmed with ermine and having received from those who had elected him the first kiss of obedience. Somewhere in those halls, Rancalli was being carried for the first time on his portable throne to that little balcony up above us. Rome could not have given him a more magnificent welcome. Roncalli, the Patriarch of Venice will be 77 years old on November 25th. All who know him speak of his vigor and affability his personal warmth and heartness, his quick wit and quick smile. He is a robust man who stands erect. When he stepped out into the center of light on that balcony tonight, he seemed overwhelmed by what had happened. His head was down, his gestures were short and strained. Yet, when he bestowed his apostalic blessing to the city and the world, his voice was steady, vibrant and strong.

Roncalli, it is believed, was strongly favored by the six French Cardinals who voted in this conclave, he was primarily their candidate. They know him from the years when he served as Papal Nuncio in Paris and they admire him as a man of liberal, generous and modern spirit. But, he could not have become the 262nd head of the Catholic Church, he could not have won 35 votes in the conclave, unless the 16 other Cardinals of Italy, who undoubtedly had their own rival candidates in mind, unless they had decided in the end to support him. Itis a tribute to his fame and his gift that he had the trust of both sides. At 77, Roncalli tonight, must remember an injunction of Pius the 12th, Pius urged whatever Cardinal might be elected as successor not to refuse the office, however, overwhelming the burden might seem. He who had bestowed the honor Pius said, would give his successor the strength to hold it.

And, now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Cardinal Roncalli, patriarch of Venice and son of a peasant, today was elected supreme pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church. For a first-hand report, we switch to Winston Burdett in Rome.

BURDETT: For one hour and ten minutes as the sun sank behind the dome of St. Peter's Basilica and night closed over the city, the crowd filling the great square waited in silence. They knew that the work of the conclave was over, the choice was made, the Church had a new Pope. A tiny wisp of smoke that was neither white nor black, but a wavering gray and that lasted only 40 seconds had told them that. And, a sudden scattered burst of life in the darkened rooms of the Vatican Palaces that loom about the square had confirmed the signal from the chimney of the Sistine Chapel, a Pope had been named. But, no one in that vast crowd knew his name. This was the time of highest expectancy and tension waiting for him to appear, and yet, in the Square and in the wise avenues that lead to it, there was quiet. The street lights went on, a full moon rose in the East, the crowd grew larger. The great marble fascade of St. Peter's with its giant columns and its row of baroque bllconies was white and radiant in the glare of the television footlight. Every now and then the spotlight played restlessly back and forth across the Palace offices, searching for a sign of activity. The crowd waited in awe. Suddenly, there was action. A company of palatine guards brilliant in blue and red stepped in perfect formation out of the shadow and marched in to the light that filled the empty space in front of the Cathedral portico. Behind them came the Swiss guards and then a company of papel gendarmes, then troops of every branch of the Italian armed forces, led by a Carabinieri band, sent by the Italian government to do honor on Vatican soil to the new head of the Church.

They stood at attention in the center of that huge stage, directly below the little balcony high up on the fascade of the Cathedral where the Pope would appear. The light went on behind the blacony and the window opened, five or six little figures stepped out, a tiny cluster of gray-purple against the white expanse of the Cathedral. One of those men on the blacony was Nicolas Cardinal Canali, who is 84 years ald. Two of the other Cardinals assisted him as he moved forward to the microphone. We have heard that Caneli felt seriously ill during the conclave, but we also know, that he is a man of dynamic will and energy. By virtue of his rank in the Sacred College, the honor of announcing the name of the new Pope fell this time to him. One could not hope feeling as he steadied himself that Canali would have risen from his sickbed to be there at this moment. The loudspeaker filled the Square with his voice as he pronounced the two sentence ritual in Latin, "I announce to you a great joy, Habemus Papam: We have a Pope, The Most Reverend Lord, Angelo Giuseppe Cardinal Roncalli, who has chosen for himself the name, John the 23rd." There was a universal shout, and then again, a few moments of silence. Cardinal Canali turned and left, the window closed, the palatine guards stood motionless again below an entry balcony. The other balconies to right and left filled up with purple figures crowding at the ledge, the Cardinals now eager spectators like the rest of us. Somewhere inside the Vatican, the new Pope, having been dressed in his pontifical robes, his white cossack and red mantle trimmed with ermine and having received from those who had elected him the first kiss of obedience. Somewhere in those halls, Roncalli was being carried for the first time on his portable throne to that little balcony above us. Rome could not have given him a more significant welcome. Roncalli, the Patriarch of Venice will be 77 years old on November 25th. All who know him speak of his vigor and affability, his personal warmth and heartness, his quick wit and quick smile. He is a robust man who stands erect. When he stepped out into the center of light on that balcony tonight, he seemed overwhelmed by what had happened. His head was down, his gestures were short and strained. Yet, when he bestowed his apostalic blessing to the city and the world, his voice was steady, vibrant and strong.

Roncalli, it is believed, was strongly favored by the six French Cardinals who voted in this conclave, he was primarily their candidate. They know him from the years when he served as Papal Nuncio in Paris and they admire him as a man of liberal, generous and modern spirit. But, he could not have become the 262nd head of the Catholic Church, he could not have won 35 votes in the conclave, unless the 16 other Cardinals of Italy, who undoubtedly had their own rival candidates in mind, unless they had decided in the end to support him. It is a tribute to his fame and his gift that he had the trust of both sides. At 77, Roncalli tonight must remember an injunction of Pius the 12th, Pius urged whatever Cardinal might be elected as successor not to refuse the office, however overwhelming the burden might seem. He who had bestowed the honor Pius said, would give his successor the strength to hold it.

And now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Winston Burdett, reporting from Rome on the election of a new Pope.

President Eisenhower has sent a message of congratulations to the new pontiff on his election. Mr. Eisenhower said, "My best wishes for the success of your endeavors are, I am certain shared by men of good will everywhere".

There was another slackening today in the Chinese Communist bombardment of Quemoy. Since this was an even numbered day of the month, the shelling, according to the Communist timetable...was not to have been directed at the beaches used for landing supplies. And there is no word that any of these beaches were hit today.

Secretary of State Dulles told a news conference today that the Communists in their alternate-day shelling..."have shown themselves to be shooting, not for military purposes, but merely for the purpose of promiscuous killing. The shelling, he said, is designed primarily to kill civilians, who are least protected.

Mr. Dulles said that Chiang Kai-shek's renunciation of force in going back to the mainland is a completely new policy...and should be highly significant in future long-range developments.

Last night, President Eisenhower ended his Pittsburgh speech with the late news that Communist China had announced the withdrawal of the last of its troops from North Korea. A reporter asked Mr. Dulles whether this news reported by the President marked a significant milestone. Dulles apparently did not hear the reference to Mr. Eisenhower...and said he though the development had "very little significance." It was his impression, Dulles said, that the withdrawal was only to the other side of the Yalu River...and that the Chinese troops could readily be brought back into Korea. He said that Russia's unwillingness to join the United States and Britain in a one-year suspension of nuclear weapons tests demonstrated Soviet insincerity. The United States and Britain have offered to suspend tests for one year, effective with the start of three-power talks in Geneva on Friday. Russia announced yesterday that it would attend the talks but that it would not agree to a one-year suspension. The tests, it said, should be ended unconditionally "for all time." Dulles said today that the Russians apparently found out...at last summer's meeting of atomic experts...that we are ahead of them in the nuclear weapons field. And he served notice that if Russia goes on testing after Friday, so will the United States. Dulles said that Russia's loan of 400-million rubles to Egypt for work on the Aswan High Dam came as no surprise. He didn't think it was "anything to get excited about." A ruble can be bought in Switzerland he said,"for a few cents."

In a speech here in New York tonight, Mr. Dulles will make an appeal for solidarity between Canada and the United States. He will urge citizens of both countries not to exaggerate their differences.

President Eisenhower today attended two Republican rallies in New York City. And, at both rallies, he plugged for the election of Nelson Rockefeller as governor and Representative Keating as senator. Tonight, Mr. Eisenhower will be admitted to the National Football Foundation Hall of Fame. (He played in the backfield at West Point.) On the subject of physical and mental fitness, he will say that the contest with Soviet Russia "is likely to be long indeed"... and that every American is part of the "team." According to the advance text, it will not be a political talk. Mr. Eisenhower will climax his campaigning with a nationwide broadcast from Baltimore on Friday night.

Vice President Nixon announces that he will fly to Alaska on Saturday, returning in time to vote. Alaska will elect two U.S. senators, one representative and a governor in a special election on November 25th.

The Treasury Department reported today that the national debt has reached a new high of 280-billion, 851-million dollars. The debt has increased appreciably in the past month, due to government borrowing of about 4-billion dollars.

Another coal mine explosion---this time near Craigsville, West Virginia. Seventeen men were trapped. Four of them have been rescued---three of them in serious condition because of burns. The fate of the remaining 13 is not known.

Twenty-two miners were killed in a similar accident yesterday near Bishop, Virginia.

The Nobel Prize in Physics was awarded jointly today to three Russian nuclear scientists. They had specialized in high speed, sub-atomic particles... one product of which was a device for counting cosmic rays. The Kremlin must now decide whether to allow them to receive the award. This morning the Soviet Writers Union expelled Boris Pasternak, who last week was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature for his anti-Communist novel, "Doctor Zhivago."

The Nobel Prize in Chemistry was awarded today to Dr. Frederick Sanger, of England, for his pioneer work on the structure of insulin. Sanger's work included breaking down the protein molecule...an achievement which has enabled scientists to delve more deeply into the secrets of living matter.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: For three days, the world has been witness to the drama of the election of a new Pope...a drama played against the background of nineteen centuries before an audience of nearly all of mankind. There was color and suspense, and one recalls that Matthew Arnold said, "The true meaning of religion is not merely morality but morality touched by emotion."

Goodnight and good luck!

This is the news:

Twelve of the 67 miners missing in the Spring Hill mine disaster in Nova Scotia have been found alive. / The twelve had been trapped for six days, 4-thousand feet underground. / A rescue worker...digging at a rock fall...heard what seemed to be a man's voice coming through a broken air line. / He shouted through the 6-inch pipe, and a voice came back, "There are twelve of us here. Come and get us." The voice belonged to Gorley Kempt, married and the father of two children. / Kempt gave the names of the other 11 miners...and said they needed water and were weak, but otherwise were all right. Hot soup and coffee were poured into the pipe. And rescue teams took turns, removing the last separating tons of coal and rock. / The unexpected rescue of the twelve has caused mine officials to say that still others may have survived, and every effort will be made to get them out. / Altogether, 93 men were trapped by the underground upheaval last Thursday night. Twenty-six bodies have been recovered.

—)

President Eisenhower today conferred for more than an hour with his new Aeronautics and Space Council. / No decision was reached on the request of the civilian space agency to take over the Army's team of space scientists and technicians. News Secretary Hagerty said there will be no decision until after several more meetings are held.

On another subject, Hagerty said the President is planning...tentatively.. to speak at the meeting of the Colombo countries in Seattle on November 10. The Colombo organization was set up to promote the cooperative economic development of Southeast Asia.

Vice President Nixon today cast his absentee ballot in next week's election. He voted for both Senator Knowland and Governor Knight and against Proposition 16, which proposed a tax on the state's private schools. He declined to say whether how he voted on the so-called "right to work" issue.

Here in New York today, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt said that she will vote for District Attorney Frank Hogan, Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate. Mrs. Roosevelt had said a few days ago that she was undecided whether to vote for Hogan. But today she said she would vote for the Democratic Party "as a whole" because she believed that it was "important to the nation for the party to win."

Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission today held his first news conference since taking the post in July. He said the United States will suspend its testing of nuclear weapons when the talks with Russia (on setting up a control system) start in Geneva on Friday. However, if the Russians go on testing, he said, it "would not be long" before we would also resume testing. He said this country could profitably continue testing to perfect small "clean" hydrogen bombs for tactical and defense purposes. The A.E.C. chairman called the current series of Soviet tests "the most intensive anyone has had" on the basis of rate of detonation. But, he said, there is no evidence that the Russians are deliberately making weapons "dirtier than normal".

The United States scheduled five atomic tests today in the Nevada desert, to beat the Friday deadline. Two of the tests have been carried out so far.

Pope John the Twenty-third today appealed to the leaders of all countries for peace. / In his first broadcast...less than 24 hours after his election...the new pontiff said the ingenuity of man should be devoted, not to developing "pernicious instruments of death and destruction," but to human betterment. / His special thought, he said, went to the faithful "in those countries where the Catholic religion has no freedom, or enjoys it only in part." / And he prayed for the day when pastors no longer are either exiled or confined, "or prevented from the free accomplishment of their ministries." / The Vatican announces that the coronation of the new Pope will take place next Tuesday.

The Russian author, Boris Pasternak, has declined the Nobel Prize for Literature awarded to him last week by the Swedish Academy. / He said, in a letter to the academy, that he had to reject the prize "considering the meaning it has been given in the society to which I belong." Pasternak's best known work is "Doctor Zhivago", a novel which contains passages critical of the Soviet state. Yesterday, he was expelled from the Soviet Writers Union. Today, the Moscow radio denounced him as a "decadent poet", an "internal expatriate". /And Pravda accuses him of "slanderously representating Soviet reality." /Moscow papers, at the same time, are full of praise for the three Russian scientists chosen to receive the Nobel Prize for Physics. They are expected to go to Stockholm to accept the prize in person.

→

The NATO Council attempt to arrange a round-table conference on the Cyprus question was abandoned today---at least for the time being. The conference would have been attended by Britain, Greece and Turkey. Greece had wanted the Turks before such a meeting to renounce any plans they might have for partitioning the island. The Greek government said tonight that it has no alternative but to submit its case to the United Nations. ~~And the Greek Cypriot leader, Archbishop Makarios, says he is flying to New York to be on hand for the debate.~~

Today...in ~~Amman~~ Beirut... Premier Karami said that the United States has offered Lebanon economic assistance to help it recover from five months of civil strife. Karami said the Lebanese government will soon ask for the withdrawal of United Nations observers, sent to Lebanon at the height of the crisis. The last United States forces dispatched to Lebanon were pulled out a week ago. The last British troops were flown out of Jordan today.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion said today that Israel will not allow "any foreign army" to occupy ~~Jordan~~ (Western Jordan), if King Hussein is overthrown. Ben Gurion's statement...made before the Israeli parliament...appeared directed at President Nasser of the United Arab Republic. "There is reason," he said, "to be concerned about Nasser's designs."

→

Edward R. Murrow: October 29, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The governments of four countries that belong to what we like to call the free world have been taken over recently by Generals, two of them this week - Burma and Pakistan. The third is Thailand, the fourth Iraq. In Thailand, Burma and Pakistan the rule of the Generals means the suppression of democratic government - in Burma and Thailand for a limited time, in Pakistan perhaps indefinitely. As to Iraq, it is not easy to say how much democratic government will be installed by the revolutionaries who overthrew King Feisal's regime. It may even be a misnomer to class Iraq as having been much of a democracy before the uprising. But the abolition of the Constitution in Pakistan, its suspension in Burma and its suppression in Thailand are major events, and happening at about the same time they cry out for attention. If there is profound faith in keeping part of the world free, as contrasted with the Communist dictatorships, the sudden passing of constitutional governments and the resort to military rule should cause great concern.

There is some comfort in the fact that the ascendancy of the four Generals does not signify a change of political relations with the West - with the possible exception of Iraq. General Ayub in Pakistan and General

Sarit in Thailand have proclaimed their fidelity to their alliances. Pakistan is a member of the Bagdad Pact, Thailand of SEATO. Burma is not officially an adherent of the West. / It did not remain in the British Commonwealth after gaining its independence, and some time ago discontinued its acceptance of American aid, choosing an outright policy of neutrality in the cold war. / The new man in command, General Ne Win, is anti-Communist, and his assumption of power is being justified by the need of suppressing Communist underground activity. But he will not depart from the neutral policy of U Nu. / So if the West has not gained in Burma, it has not lost.

Iraq also is a member of the Bagdad Pact, and one of the first acts of General Kassem on seizing power was to reassure the West that ~~it~~ he would maintain the alliance. / But there already are indications that Communist influence is rising in Bagdad. / Kassem has kept himself from being brought under Nasser's control by ousting his right-hand man, Colonel Aref, who was Nasser's strongest disciple in Iraq. / But that has not made Kassem automatically pro-Western. It is reported that Nasser's acceptance of a Soviet loan for the Asswan Dam was part of an understanding with Moscow that will leave Iraq in the Soviet sphere of influence.

The fact that the West is not losing politically in Pakistan, Thailand and Burma is, to be sure, a matter of gratification in Western countries. But it may be asked whether the West is not losing out in a way that does affect the cold war. This war is a rivalry for power, and Western power has not yet been hurt by the rise of the Generals. But it is also a rivalry for men's minds, and it is hard to say which rivalry is more fundamental. If men's minds are lost - if the area of freedom narrows - Western military power loses part of its principal base. Otherwise the cold war itself would simply be a conflict between Generals.

It can be said of the passing of democracy in these countries that they were not ready for it, which no doubt is so. That is, they were not ready when they chose democratic government, only relatively few years ago. They lacked seasoning and experience. Democracy is not a slogan, or something in the way of government that a nation can put on like an overcoat. It has to be learned, oftener than not in the school of failure. But when democracy works, men are free, and when it fails they forfeit some of their freedom. These countries chose democracy because they wanted freedom. Now they are losing some of it, and obviously the West is that much weakened.

There is a limit to the help that this country can give to restore democratic institutions in the countries that now have lost them. We cannot interfere in their domestic affairs. But we can wield an enormous influence, and should want to do so. / We can tailor our assistance to them to produce conditions in which democracy can take root. / We can advise and encourage them. We can increase cultural exchanges, strengthen the work of our technicians, so as ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ to promote the capability for self help. / In other words, we can take an interest in them as younger students in the same school of self-government that we attend. Whether or not we have given enough of this kind of aid in the past, is not now the point. The point is that the right kind is now needed most of all.

Back in a moment

Just Jim Bryan.

Word for Today

Four countries have been taken over by generals, perhaps because their peoples were not sufficiently trained to make democracy work. But democracy is a worthy goal. Henry Adams said, "I grant democracy is an experiment, but it is the only direction society can take that is worth taking. Every other possible step is backward."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO

Wednesday, October 29, 1958
7:45-8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Twelve of the 67 miners missing in the Spring Hill mine disaster in Nova Scotia have been found alive. The twelve had been trapped for six days, 4-thousand feet underground. A rescue worker...digging at a rock fall....heard what seemed to be a man's voice coming through a broken air line. He shouted through the 6-inch pipe, and a voice came back, "There are twelve of us here. Come and get us." The voice belonged to Gorley Kempt, married and the father of two children. Kempt gave the names of the other 11 miners...and said they needed water and were weak, but otherwise were all right. Hot soup and coffee were poured into the pipe. And rescue teams took turns, removing the last separating tons of coal and rock. The unexpected rescue of the twelve has caused mine officials to say that still others may have survived, and every effort will be made to get them out. Altogether, 93 men were trapped by the underground upheaval last Thursday night. Twenty-six bodies have been recovered.

President Eisenhower today conferred for more than an hour with his new Aeronautics and Space Council. No decision was reached on the request of the civilian space agency to take over the Army's team of space scientists and technicians. News Secretary Hagerty said there will be no decision until after several more meetings are held.

Vice President Nixon today cast his absentee ballot in next week's election. He voted for both Senator Knowland and Governor Knight and against Proposition 16, which proposed a tax on the state's private schools. He declined to say how he voted on the so-called "right to work" issue.

Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission today held his first news conference since taking the post in July. He said the United States will suspend its testing of nuclear weapons when the talks with Russia (on setting up a control system) start in Geneva on Friday. However, if the Russians go on testing, he said, it "would not be long" before we could also resume testing. He said this country could profitably continue testing to perfect small "clean" hydrogen bombs for tactical and defense purposes. The A.E.C. chairman called the current series of Soviet tests "the most intensive anyone has had" on the basis of rate of detonation. But, he said, there is no evidence that the Russians are deliberately making weapons "dirtier than normal".

The United States scheduled five atomic tests today in the Nevada desert, to beat the Friday deadline. Two of the tests have been carried out so far.

Pope John the Twenty-third today appealed to the leaders of all countries for peace. In his first broadcast....less than 24 hours after his election... the new pontiff said the ingenuity of man should be devoted, not to developing "pernicious instruments of death and destruction," but to human betterment. His special thought, he said, went to the faithful "in those countries where the Catholic religion has no freedom or enjoys it only in part." And he prayed for the day when pastors no longer are either exiled or confined, "or prevented from the free accomplishment of their ministries." The Vatican announces that the coronation of the New Pope will take place next Tuesday.

The Russian author, Boris Pasternak, has declined the Nobel Prize for Literature awarded to him last week by the Swedish Academy. He said, in a letter to the academy, that he had to reject the prize "considering the meaning it has been given in the society to which I belong." Pasternaks' best known work is "Doctor Zhivago", a novel which contains passages critical of the Soviet state. Yesterday, he was expelled from the Soviet Writers Union. Today, the Moscow radio denounced him as a "decadent poet", and "internal expatriate".

And Pravda accused him of "slanderously representing Soviet reality." Moscow papers, at the same time, are full of praise for the three Russian scientists chosen to receive the Nobel Prize for Physics. They are expected to go to Stockholm to accept the prize in person.

The NATO Council attempt to arrange a round-table conference on the Cyprus question was abandoned today----at least for the time being. The conference would have been attended by Britain, Greece and Turkey. Greece had wanted the Turks before such a meeting to renounce any plans they might have for partitioning the island. The Greek government said tonight that it has no alternative but to submit its case to the United Nations.

Today...in Beirut...Premier Karami said that the United States has offered Lebanon economic assistance to help it recover from five months of civil strife. Karami said the Lebanese government will soon ask for the withdrawal of United Nations observers, sent to Lebanon at the height of the crisis. The United States forces dispatched to Lebanon were pulled out a week ago. The last British troops were flown out of Jordan today.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion said today that Israel will not allow "any foreign army" to occupy Western Jordan, if King Hussein is overthrown. Ben Gurion's statement....made before the Israeli parliament...appeared directed at President Nasser of the United Arab Republic. "There is reason, he said, "to be concerned about Nasser's designs."

The governments of four countries that belong to what we like to call the free world have been taken over recently by Generals, two of them this week - Burma and Pakistan. The third is Thailand, the fourth Iraq. In Thailand, Burma and Pakistan the rule of the Generals means the suppression of democratic government - in Burma and Thailand for a limited time, in Pakistan perhaps indefinitely. As to Iraq, it is not easy to say how much democratic government will be installed by the revolutionaries who overthrew King Feisal's regime. It may even be a misnomer to class Iraq as having been much of a democracy before the uprising. But the abolition of the Constitution in Pakistan, its suspension in Burma and its suppression in Thailand are major events, and happening at about the same time they cry out for attention. If there is profound faith in keeping part of the world free, as contrasted with the Communist dictatorships, the sudden passing of constitutional governments and the resort to military rule should cause great concern.

There is some comfort in the fact that the ascendancy of the four Generals does not signify a change of political relations with the West - with the possible exception of Iraq. General Ayub in Pakistan and General Sarit in Thailand have proclaimed their fidelity to their alliances. Pakistan is a member of the Bagdad Pact, Thailand of SEATO. Burma is not officially an adherent of the West. It did not remain in the British Commonwealth after gaining its independence, and some time ago discontinued its acceptance of American aid, choosing an outright policy of neutr neutrality in the cold war. The new man in command, General Ne Win, is anti-Communist, and his assumption of power is being justified by the need of suppressing Communist underground activity. But he will not depart from the neutral policy of U Nu. So if the West has not gained in Burma, it has not lost.

Iraq also is a member of the Bagdad Pact, and one of the first acts of General Kassem on seizing power was to reassure the West that he would maintain the alliance. But there already are indications that Communist influence is rising in Badgad. Kassem has kept himself from being brought under Nasser's control by ousting his right-hand man, Colonel Aref, who was Nasser's strongest disciple in Iraq. But that has not made Kassem automatically pro-Western. It is reported thar Nasser's acceptance of a Soviet loan for the Asswan Dam was part of an understanding with Moscow that will leave Iraq in the Soviet sphere of influence.

The fact that the West is not losing politically in Pakistan, Thailand and Burma is, to be sure, a matter of gratification in Western countries. But it may be asked whether the West is not losing out in a way that does affect the cold war. This war is a rivalry for power, and Western power has not yet been hurt by the rise of the Generals. But it is also a rivalry for men's minds, and it is hard to say which rivalry is more fundamental. If men's minds are lost - if the area of freedom narrows - Western military power loses part of its principal base. Otherwise the cold war itself would simply be a conflict between Generals.

It can be said of the passing of democracy in these countries that they were not ready for it, which no doubt is so. That is, they were not ready when they chose democratic government, only relatively few years ago. They lacked seasoning and experience. Democracy is not a slogan, or something in the way of government that a nation can put on like an overcoat. It has to be learned, oftener than not in the school of failure. But when democracy works, men are free, and when it fails they forfeit some of their freedom. These countries chose democracy because they wanted freedom. Now they are losing some of it, and obviously the West is that much weakened.

There is a limit to the help that this country can give to restore democratic institutions in the countries that now have lost them. We cannot interfere in their domestic affairs. But we can wield an enormous influence, and should want to do so. We can tailor our assistance to them to produce conditions in which democracy can take root. We can advise and encourage them. We can increase cultural exchanges, strengthen the work of our technicians, so as to promote the capability for self help. In other words, we can take an interest in them as younger students in the same school of self-government that we attend. Whether or not we have given enough of this kind of aid in the past is not now the point. The Point is that the right kind is now needed most of all.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN:

ED MURROW: Four countries have been taken over by generals, perhaps because their peoples were not sufficiently trained to make democracy work. But democracy is a worthy goal. Henry Adams said, "I grant democracy is an experiment, but it is the only direction society can take that is worth taking. Every other possible step is backward."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Oct. 30, 1958

This is the news:

Russia said today that it finds the Anglo-American proposal for a one-year suspension of nuclear weapons tests "completely unacceptable". The official Soviet statement---broadcast by Moscow radio---demanded instead the "immediate and universal cessation of nuclear weapons tests for all time." Russia, it said, has the "complete right" to continue testing after the talks on nuclear arms control open in Geneva tomorrow. It based this "right" on the fact that the United States and Britain continued testing after Russia suspended its tests last March. Both western countries have offered to suspend tests for one year, effective with the start of tomorrow's talks. But before there is a permanent ban, they want an effective control system.

Russia today sent formal notes to Washington and London on this subject. / The State Department says the note directed to this country has been received, and that it is under study. / The department says its offer to suspend tests---if Russia will do the same---still holds.

The American, British and Soviet delegations met in Geneva today, and agreed on procedure to be followed in the sessions that start tomorrow. The talks will be held behind closed doors. | No country is to try to "propagandize" its position through leaks to the press or radio. The Russians are believed to have reiterated their demand, that the talks be conducted on the foreign ministers level.

The United States may have today ended its fall series of nuclear tests in Nevada. / The climactic "shot" came in the morning, when a device... equal to 20-thousand tons of T.N.T....was exploded deep inside a mesa. It was the most powerful explosion that Man has ever set off underground. There is the possibility of another, smaller "shot" tonight. | And of course, if the Russians resume testing tomorrow, this [illegible]d.

There was near-panic in Los Angeles today...when it was reported that the radio-active fallout had risen to twice the maximum safe level. Mayor Poulson telephoned the White House...and talked to Dr. Libby of the Atomic Energy Commission. Dr. Libby said that wind from the Nevada tests had blown toward Los Angeles this morning...that there was "some" fallout...but that it was "not hazardous."

The Moscow radio tonight broadcast Egyptian reports of troop movements in Israel---reports which the Israeli government earlier today labeled false. The West, Moscow said, is preparing a "new military adventure" in the Middle East.

The Nobel Prize for Medicine was awarded jointly today to three American scientists for their work with genes---those elements of the chromosome that determine heredity. / A biologist at the University of Wisconsin, Professor Joshua Lederberg, was given [redacted] half the 41-thousand-dollar prize. The other half was divided equally between Professor George Beadle, a biologist at the California Institute of Technology, and Professor Edward Tatum, a bio-chemist at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, here in New York. / Their work could have strong bearing on the future of cancer research.

The Russian novelist, Boris Pasternak, said today that he would like to stay in the Soviet Union. / Pasternak turned down the Nobel Prize for Listerature yesterday after being attacked ~~him~~ by the Soviet radio and press for his anti-Communist writing. / ~~The head of the Young Communist League said he ought to "emigrate to his capitalist paradise." Pasternak received visitors today...but said he would make no further statement regarding the controversy beyond expressing his hope to remain in Russia.~~

A new major split developed today in the Italian Socialist Party. Pietro Nenni tendered his resignation as party leader, after suffering a defeat...on a policy issue...at the hands of pro-Communist members. The central committee later rejected Nenni's resignation. ~~But the Socialist Party...which is the third largest in Italy---is reported split four ways.~~

In debate today...in the House of Commons...British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd said he was "absolutely satisfied" that the United States wants a peaceful settlement of the Formosa dispute. "But so far," he said, "there has been no flexibility shown by the Peiping government." Lloyd said...in answer to Labourite criticism...that capitulation to Peiping would be "very dangerous", that it would lead to the withdrawal of the United States from its "great responsibilities" in the Far East.

On Cyprus, two British soldiers were killed today by a land mine. And two Greek-Cypriots were shot to death---one while he lay in a hospital, after suffering gunshot wounds in an earlier attack. The Greek-Cypriot underground organization EOKA scattered leaflets...saying that it would call a cease-fire, if the British also would forego force.

Two time-bombs exploded today in a town in Western Algeria. First reports say that nine persons---three Europeans and six Moslems---were killed.

In Cuba today, rebel leader Fidel Castro ordered new widespread attacks on rail and highway transport. Castro repeated his warning to candidates in next Monday's election to withdraw their names or be killed. And he was reported planning a new general strike. Havana was quiet today. ~~Two thousand new troops were sworn into the Cuban Army, and President Batista said order would be maintained on Election Day "at all costs."~~

President Eisenhower today cancelled plans for spending the week-end at his Gettysburg farm. He will, however, go to Gettysburg on Tuesday to vote. And tomorrow night he will broadcast his final campaign speech from Baltimore.

Vice President Nixon is saying tonight...in Witchita, Kansas...that the Democratic campaign has "run out of gas." The Democrats, he will say, "have nothing left but hot air on phoney issues which have been destroyed by the magnificent record of the Eisenhower Administration." ~~Earlier today, in Fort Dodge, Iowa, Nixon labeled as a "phoney" the Democratic~~ argument that farmers are better off under Democratic Administrations. Nixon said that gross farm income in the first half of 1958, reached a record high of 13-billion, 800-million dollars. "And the spiraling inflation in farmers' costs," he said, "has been brought to a halt."

—)

Republican Chairman Meade Alcorn said today that "studies" had been made...showing the Democrats can never provide real progress in the field of civil rights. On the other side, Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson accused President Eisenhower of using "scare words" in an attempt to purge Democratic members of Congress---members, Johnson said, whose works the President has been accepting since taking office. He said, "If the Democratic Party is guilty of political radicalism, then President Eisenhower has acquiesed to political radicalism for six years."

In Chicago tonight, Adlai Stevenson said that the country...in the six years of the Eisenhower Administration...has been facing one crisis after another. And during that time, Stevenson said, "the White House has been reassuring America that all was well at home and abroad."

Edward R. Murrow: October 30, 1958. 7.45 p.m.

The China crisis is slipping off the world stage without taking a final, formal bow. The bombardment of Quemoy continued today, but on so small a scale as to suggest that it may dwindle into silence altogether. Such a silence might be broken by occasional shelling, but that would be the situation that existed before the crisis. So this may be the moment to take stock of what has happened and what the crisis has left in its wake.

It brought two outstanding developments, the cease-fire, and the Dulles visit to Formosa with its joint communique, in which the Nationalists renounced the use of force to fulfil their mission on the mainland. But before these it brought the most tense moment internationally since the Berlin blockade. Both President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles stood unflinchingly at the brink of war, promising to assist in the defense of the offshore islands if the attack on them threatened the security of Formosa. The Soviet Union warned that it would regard an attack on Communist China to be an attack on itself. A war over the islands might have appeared irrational, if not well-nigh impossible to most of the world. But for a brief time it could have happened.

Then enormous pressure was brought by other countries on us and the Chinese Communists to negotiate. The State Department found allied opinion - aside from correct statements of loyalty by officials - completely hostile to our decision to defend the islands, and also found American opinion, insofar as it was aroused by the crisis, badly frightened over the possibility of war. The Chinese Communists were warned that they must be reasonable or lose whatever support they enjoy among Afro-Asian countries. The formal negotiations begun in Warsaw proved to be a sham. The Chinese refused to discuss the offshore islands at all.

Quite unexpectedly Mr. Dulles turned away from the brink and began saying conciliatory things, no doubt as a result of allied pressure and the state of opinion in this country. And almost as unexpectedly the Communists ordered a cease-fire. To the relief of all concerned the crisis seemed headed toward a compromise, the Nationalists to withdraw from the offshore islands, or reduce their forces on them, and the discussions about Formosa to be pigeonholed.

But things did not proceed normally. Mr. Dulles, in his conciliatory statements, had virtually written off the Nationalist Government as the legal government of all China, by saying it would return to the mainland only if invited by a revolutionary government. / Both he and President Eisenhower strongly criticized the ~~over-garrisoning of~~ heavy troop concentration on the islands. Chiang Kai-Shek was so deeply disturbed that he urged Mr. Dulles to come to Formosa on his way back from Rome. / Perhaps because of this visit, the Communists resumed the bombardment of Quemoy. Perhaps they only did it to save face, as the cease-fire was being too loudly hailed as a Communist defeat.

Without any real contact with the Communists, Mr. Dulles was in the odd position of having to feel his way out of the crisis in the dark. / On the visit to Formosa he could not logically urge a reduction of forces on the offshore islands because they were again under attack. / But he could try to induce Chiang Kai-Shek to disavow publicly the use of force against the mainland. This he did, by showing him that Dr. Adenauer had renounced force to obtain the unification of Germany, as had Vietnam and Korea, who likewise look forward to unification.

Chiang's disavowal of force can be called the big result of the China crisis. / And it raises the legitimate question whether this does not logically lead the United States into a "two-China policy." The State Department denies that it does. So do the Nationalists. When they quote the joint communique they stress the word "principal" in it. What was renounced was the use of force as the "principal" means of winning back the mainland. Mr. Dulles, talking about the communique at his news conference, did not even mention the word "principal". He spoke only of the renunciation of force. But he has left no doubt that he expects the Communist Government of China to be overthrown from within, and he will do nothing to adjust this country to the fact of its existence. He will not recognize it, and if the United Nations decides to admit it, it will be - figuratively speaking - over his dead body.

However, as the result of the crisis, the Chiang Government has been demoted, and this is a setback not only for Chiang but for the State Department, which ordained it in the interest of peace. But that is as far as Mr. Dulles intends to retreat. Now he banks on future events on the mainland saving him from having to accept still more serious consequences.

Word for Today

There have been threats for a long time...both on the part of Nationalist leaders on Formosa and on the part of the Communist leaders in Peiping. The Nationalists said they would overthrow the Communists by force. And the Communists said--and are still saying---they will liberate Formosa. As Potamus, the old Roman said, "To threaten and to strike are not always the same thing."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1958
7: 45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Russia said today that it finds the Anglo-American proposal for a one-year suspension of nuclear weppons tests "completely unacceptable." The official Soviet statement---broadcast by Moscow radio---demanded instead the "immediate and universal cessation of nuclear weapons tests for all time." Russia, it said, has the "complete right" to continue testing after the talks on nuclear arms control open in Geneva tomorrow. It based this "right" on the fact that the United States and Britain continued testing after Russia suspended its tests last March. Both western countries have offered to suspend tests for one year, effecting with the start of tomorrow's talks. But before there is a permanent ban, they want an effective control system.

Russia today sent formal notes to Washington and London on this subject. The State Department says the note directed to this country has been received and that it is under study. The department says its offer to suspend tests---if Russia will do the same--- still holds.

The American, British and Soviet delegations met in Geneva today and agreed on procedure to be followed in the sessions that start tomorrow. The talks will be held behind closed doors. No country is to try to "propagandize" its position through leaks to the press or radio. The Russians are believed to have reiterated their demand that the talks be conducted on the foreign ministers level.

The United States may have ended its fall series of nuclear tests today in Nevada. The climactic "shot" came in the morning, when a device...equal to 20 thousand tons of T.N.T....was exploded deep inside a mesa. It was the most powerful explosion that Man has ever set off underground. There is the possibility of another, smaller "shot" tonight. And of course, if the Russians resume testing tomorrow, this test series may be resumed.

There was near-panic in Los Angeles today...when it was reported that the radio-active fallout had risen to twice the maximum safe level. Mayor Poulson telephoned the White House...and talked to Dr. Libby of the Atomic Energy Commission. Dr. Libby said that wind from the Nevada tests had blown toward Los Anglees this morning...that there was "some" fallout...but that it was "not hazardous."

The Moscow radio tonight broadcast Egyption reports of troop movements in Israel---reports which the Israeli government earlier today labeled false. The West, Moscow said, is preparing a "new military adventure" in the Middle East.

The Nobel Prize for Medicine was awarded jointly today to three American scientists for their work with genes---those elements of the chromosone that determine heredity. A biologist at the University of Wisconsin, Professor Joshua Lederberg, was given half the 41-thousand dollar prize. The other half was divided equally between Professor George Beadle, a biologist at the California Institute of Technology, and Professor Edward Tatum, a bio-chemist at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, here in New York. Their work could have strong bearing on the future of cancer research.

The Russian novelist, Boris Pasternak, said today that he would like to stay in the Soviet Union. Pasternak turned down the Nobel Prize for Literature yesterday after being attacked by the Soviet radio and press for this anti-Communist writing. The head of theYoung Communist League said he ought to "emigrate to his capitalist paradise." Pasternak received visitors today...but said he would make no further statement regarding the controversy beyond expressing his hope to remain in Russia.

A new major split developed today in the Italian Socialist Party. Pietro Nenni tendered his resignation as party leader, after suffering a defeat...on a policy issue...at the hands of pro-Communist members. The central committee later rejected Nenni's resignation.

In debate today...in the House of Commons...British Foreign Secretary Slewyn Lloyd said he was "absolutely satisfied" that the United States wants a peaceful settlement of the Formosa dispute. "But so far," he said, "there has been no flexibility shown by the Peiping government." Lloyd said...in answer to Labourite criticism...that capitulation to Peiping would be "very dangerous," that it would lead to the withdrawal of the United States from its "great responsibilities" in the Far East.

On Cyprus, two British soldiers were killed today by a land mine. And two Greek-Cypriots were shot to death---one while he lay in a hospital after suffering gunshot wounds in an earlier attack. The Greek-Cypriot under-g round organization EOKA scattered leaflets...saying that it would call a cease-fire, if the British also would forego force.

Two time-bombs exploded today in a town in Western Algeria. First reports say that nine persons---Three Europeans and six Moslems--- were killed.

In Cuba today, rebel leader Fidel Castro ordered new widespread attacks on rail and highway transport. Castro repeated his warning to candidates in next Monday's election to withdraw their names or be killed. And he was reported planning a new general strike. Havana was quiet today.

President Eisenhower today cancelled plans for spending the week-end at his Gettysburg farm. He will, however, go to Gettysburg on Tuesday to vote. And tomorrow night he will broadcast his final campaign speech from Baltimore.

Vice President Nixon is saying tonight...in Witchita, Kansas...that the Democratic campaign has "run out of gas." The Democrats, he will say, "have nothing left but hot air on phoney issues which hvve been destroyed by the magnificent record of the Eisenhower Administration."

Republican Chairman Meade Alcorn said today that "studies" had been made...showing the Democrats can never provide real progress in the field of civil rights. On the other side, Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson accused President Eisenhower of using "scare words" in an attempt to purge Democratic members of Congress---members, johnson said, whose works the President has been accepting since taking office. He said, "If the Democratic Party is guilty of political radicalism, then President Eisenhower has acquiesed to political radicalism for six years."

In Chicago tonight, Adlai Stevenson said that the country...in the six years of the Eisenhower Admonistration...has been facing one crisis after another. And during that time, Stevenson said, "the White House has been reassuring America that all was well at home and abroad."

The China crisis is slipping off the world stage without taking a final formal bow. The bombardment of Quemoy continued today, but on so small a scale as to suggest that it may dwindle into silence altogether. Such a silence might be broken by occasional shelling, but that would be the situation that existed before the crisis. So this may be the moment to take stock of what has happened and what the crisis has left in its wake.

It brought two outstanding developments, the cease-fire, and the Dulles visit to Formosa with its joint communique, in which the Nationalists renounced the use of force to fulfill their mission on the mainland. But before these it brought the mose tense moment internationally since the Berlin blockade. Both President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles stood unflinchingly at the brink of war promising to assist in the defense of the offshore islands if the attack on them threatened the security of Formosa. The Soviet Union warned that it would regard on attack on Communist China to be an attack on itself. A war over the islands might have appeared irrational, if not well-nigh impossible to most of the world. But for a brief time it could have happened.

Thenenormous pressure was brought by other countries on us and the Chinese Communists to negotiate. The State Department found allied opinion - aside from correct statements of loyalty by officials - completely hostile to our decision to defend the islands, and also found American opinion, insofar as it was aroused by the crisis, badly frightened over the possibility of war. The Chinese Communists were warned that they must be reasonable or lose whatever support they enjoy among Afro-Asian countries. The formal negotiations begun in Warsaw proved to be a sham. The Chinese refused to discuss the offshore islands at all.

Quite unexpectedly Mr. Dulles turned away from the brink and began saying conciliatory things, no doubt as a result of allied pressure and the state of opinion in this country. And almost as unexpectedly the Communists ordered a cease-fire. To the relief of all concerned the crisis seemed headed toward a compromise, the Nationalists to withdraw from the offshore islands, or reduce their forces on them, and the discussions about Formosa to be pigeonholed.

But things did not proceed normally. Mr. Dulles, in his conciliatory statements, had virtually written off the Nationalist Government as the legal government of all China, by saying it would return to the mainland only if invited by a revolutionary government. Both he and President Eisenhower strongly criticized the heavy troop concentration on the islands. Chiang Kai-shek was so deeply disturbed that he urged Mr. Dulles to come to Formosa on his way back from Rome. Perhaps because of this visit, the Communists resumed the bombardment of Quemoy. Perhaps they only did it to save face, as the cease-fire was being too loudly hailed as a Communist defeat.

Without any real contact with the Communists, Mr. Dulles was in the odd position of having to feel his way out of the crisis in the dark. On the visit to Formosa he could not logically urge a reduction of forces on the offshore islands because they were again under attack. But he could try to induct Chiang Kai-Shek to disavow publicly the use of force against the mainland. This he did, by showing him that Dr. Adenauer had renounced force to obtain the unification of Germany, as had Vietnam and Korea, who likewise look forward to unification.

Chiang's disavowal of force can be called the big result of the China crisis. And it raises the legitimate question whether this does not logically lead the United States into a "two-China policy." The State Department denies that it does. So do the Nationalists. When they quote the joint communique they stress the word "principal" in it. What was renounced was the use of force as the "principal" means of winning back the mainland. Mr. Dulles, talking a bout the communique at his news conference, did not even mention the word "principal." He spoke only of the renunciation of force.

However, as the result of the crisis, the Chiang Government has been demoted, and this is a setback not only for Chiang, but for the State Department which ordained it in the interest of peace. But that is as far as Mr. Dulles intends to retreat. Now he banks on future events on the mainland saving him from having to accept still more serious consequences.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: There have been threats for a long time...both on the part of Nationalist leaders on Formosa and on the part of the Communist leaders in Peiping. The Nationalists said they would overthrow the Communists by force. And the Communists said---and are still saying---they will "liberate" Formosa. As Potanus, the old Roman said, "To threaten and to strike are not always the same thing."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Oct. 31, 1958

This is the news:

The nuclear arms conference opened in Geneva today...attended by representatives of Britain, Russia and the United States. The first meeting lasted about three hours. / For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and Alexander Kendrick.

(Tape runs 3:45
Ends on cue: "--to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Alex Kendrick, reporting on the start of the Geneva conference dealing with nuclear tests.

Russia today formally warned Iran that it had placed itself in danger by signing a new military treaty with the United States. The Soviet warning apparently refers to the realignment of the Baghdad Pact last summer after the military coup in Iraq. Secretary of State Dulles at that time committed the United States to the defense of Turkey, Pakistan and Iran as a virtual partner in the Baghdad alliance. Russia claims that the treaty with Iran "directly endangers the southern frontiers of the Soviet Union." And to this, it says, it cannot "remain indifferent."

Tomorrow marks what is accepted as the fourth anniversary of the start of the Algerian War. Tonight...on the eve of that anniversary... French Premier DeGaulle ordered the immediate release of 1-thousand persons held as political prisoners in Algeria. ~~The order was announced both in Paris and Algiers in a one-sentence communique.~~

In Cairo, the head of the Algerian provisional government...Ferhat Abbas...said tonight that the rebels "are not prepared to hoist a white flag and accept defeat." He said, with reference to DeGaulle's offer to negotiate, that his ministers are prepared to negotiate. But, he said, "not in Paris with ropes around their necks."

→

The State Department today spelled out the agreement between Secretary Dulles and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek regarding the use of force against Communist China. Chiang...in a joint communique... renounced force as the "principal" means of winning back the mainland. Premier Chen of Nationalist China spoke today of counter-attacking, if the Communists "enlarge" their attacks on the off-shore islands. A State Department spokesman said this statement does not represent a departure from announced policy. What Chiang promised in the communique, he said, "does not preclude the use of force in self-defense, or in case of a large-scale uprising on the mainland." The spokesman, Lincoln White, said that some people had misinterpreted the communique. "We understand it," he said, "to mean that the Republic of China will not itself initiate war to re-establish its authority upon the mainland." This understanding was upheld today by Chiang himself...who said that in carrying out his "mission" he was depending largely on political means. The Nationalist leader issued the statement on the occasion of his 72nd birthday.

In Baltimore tonight, President Eisenhower is making his last speech of the political campaign. And he is calling for the election of a Republican Congress. /"For progressive and effective government," he will say, "we need Republican control of both the congressional and executive branches." /Mr. Eisenhower will also submit the following arguments: Only "sturdy Republican opposition"...and his vetoes...blocked the spending programs of Democratic "extremists" for ending the recession. / Instead, the Republicans came forth with "practical, sensible programs" and today "every economic indicator proves that our Republican faith in the economy was right." "All across America things are good. They are getting better every day." Under ~~him~~ a Republican ~~administration, Americans have~~ been given ~~a sound, expanding economy,~~ a national defense modern and strong, and, above all, a nation at peace and steadily striving to bring a just and ~~lasting~~ peace to the world." "Today America...and all the world... knows that in less than four years we are rapidly closing the missile gap that we inherited." /The Democrats are "gloom-dogglers", split on every issue---states rights, civil rights, "and so on down the line."

Earlier today, Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler said the President should throw away his "ghost-written Hallowe'en speech" and "talk about the facts." Butler charged that both Mr. Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon have been "scaring the daylights" out of small children and big contributors with talk of Democratic radicalism, socialism, and "hare-brained schemes." / At a Democratic rally in Casper, Wyoming, Senate Leader Lyndon Johnson said, "There are Republicans who lack faith in the strength of America. It ~~is the difference, he said, between 'can do' and 'should do'~~." / And he challenged Mr. Eisenhower to list the "socialist" and "radical" Democratic laws he would repeal.

→

Today...on the economic front.. ~~the Interstate Commerce Commission decided to allow the Pennsylvania and New York Central Railroads to raise their passenger fares as of midnight tonight. / First Class fares will be raised by 15 percent, basic coach fares by 5 percent. / Commuter rates are not affected.~~

The Agriculture Department reported that prices which farmers receive for their products dropped in the past month by more than 2 percent. At the same time, farm production costs went up nearly 1 percent.

Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court made one of his rare speeches today in his home state of California. For a report on that, we switch to Los Angeles and my colleague, Jack Beck.

(Tape runs 2:30
Returns on cue: "--now back to Ed Murrow."

That was the report of Jack Beck, on the speech which Chief Justice Warren made today in Los Angeles.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) First, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The three atomic powers have met in Geneva to discuss the possible banning of nuclear tests. And the world is watching to see what the outcome will be. The prospects for agreement are not bright. Nations may argue. But the atom is serene. For as Emerson said, "The solar system has no anxiety about its reputation."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, October 31, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and Alexander Kendrick.

KENDRICK: Sandwiched between a meeting of the Executive Council of the International Wheat Conference on one side and a meeting of the Panel of Conciliation of the general agreement on trade and tariffs on the other, the three power conference on the suspension of nuclear testing was formally opened in the Palace of Nations here this afternoon under the usual photographic floodlights. On the public record, the opening was an auspicious one. The Soviet delegate, Semyon Tsarapkin, a diplomat who looks like a wrestler, spoke as if he had never listened to Radio Moscow or read the remarks made in the UN General Assembly by his Foreign Ministery superior Valerian Zorin. Although indicating that Soviet tests will continue until an agreement is reached, Mr. Tsarapkin did not call the Anglo-American proposal for a year by year suspension of tests, a fraud and a dilusion. He said, the Soviet Government accepted the idea of a control system and was anxious to see a permanent cessation of testing, so, that the development of nuclear weapons could be slowed down and the radio-active contamination of the air ended. The Soviet delegate, in fact, spoke with such moderation that the subsequent remarks of the two Western delegates: Ambassador James Wadsworth for the United States, and David Ormsby-Gore for Britain, though mild as toasts seemed almost pugnacious. They too said, they would like to see nuclear testing halted and a control system adopted and that everybody should get together and do same. Then, the floodlights were turned off, the photographers and correspondents and delegates wives and visitors were ushered out of the room and the conference went into strictly secret session as it will function from now to its end. It then remains to dicipher all thehoneyed words, whereupon, it developed, that all through his speech, the Soviet delegate spoke of complete and immediate cessation of tests. And, all thorugh their speeches, the American and British delegate, uttered only the lesser word, "suspension." It was also clear that when the Soviet delegate mentioned a control system, he mentioned it only after a cessation of testing, while the Western delegates clearly predicated even a prolonged suspension upon the existance and functioning of a control system. Finally, it emerged that while the Soviet delegate envisioned a cessation of testing as a means of limiting the development of nuclear weapons, the Western delegates saw suspension in itself as no disarmament or limitation measure at all, but only a prelude to possible agreements limiting the production of fissionable materials and of both nuclear and conventional weapons. It is on the basis of such striking differences - not only of approach but of principle that the conference has gone behind locked doors. The success that all the delegates so movingly hope for depends upon the reconciliation of these views. Aside from offering thanks for at least one public hour of tranquality and harmony in these troubled times, only three things remain to be noted tonight in Geneva: One is that the American delegation numbering 21 persons is larger then the Soviet and British delegations put together. The second is that the futuristic map of the world under which the conference is sitting has as its most prominent feature a large Chinese dragon. The third, is that there seems to be no sign here of Donald McClaine, the fugative British diplomat, despite reports that he is a member of the Soviet delegation. Now, from the Palace of Nations, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Alex Kendrick reporting on the start of the Geneva Conference dealing with nuclear tests.

... for a report on that we switch to Los Angeles and my colleague Jack Bock.

BOCK: Earl Warren returned to Los Angeles today to dedicate the new Court House in the county of his birth. He returned as the Chief Justice of a Supreme Court, whose rulings during his tenure have been subject to increasing criticism. It has been suggested in some quarters that the Court under Warren has sought to legislate rather then to interpret law. Although criticism of court decisions is as old as Mulvery vs Madison, it does not befit the custom of the court to indulge in defense of its decisions. So, when Mr. Justice Warren spoke today in dedication of the giant $24 million building, which henceforth is to house the machinery of justice in Los Angeles County, he principly addressed himself to other problems; namely, the inability of our present court system to handle the mountainous volume of litigation now thrust upon it. But, in so doing, the Chief Justice made a point or two which might be construed as having some relevance to the current criticism leveled against the court. Here in part is what he said:

WARREN: The bedrock test of our system is the extent to which our ideals are given concrete reality in the lives of our people, a system of law - however just, which existed only in theory would be a slim reed on which to base our claim that here in America, justice is within the reach of every citizen. It is for this reason that over the entrance to the building of our Supreme Court in Washington, is inscribed the motto: "Equal Justice Under Law." This is not a boast, itis an ideal, it is a goal, and, it is against this background, that we must view all of our courts - state and federal, for the role of the courts is not merely to define the rights, it is also to administer the remedy. Unless the remedy is actually applied to persons and things, the right is a mere pius idea. And, more than that, unless the remedy is applied in seasonable time, it's still remains but a delusion.

BECK: That was Mr. Justice Warren speaking in dedication of the new court housein Los Angeles County.

Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was the report of Jack Beck on the speech which Chief Justice Warren made today in Los Angeles.

PT/n.m.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1958
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The nuclear arms conference opened in Geneva today...attended by representatives of Britain, Russia and the United States. The fitst meating lasted about three hours. For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and Alexander Kendrick.

ALEXANDER KENDRICK: Sandwiched between a meeting of the Executive Council of the International Wheat Conference on one side and a meeting of the Panal of Concilliation of the general agreement on trade and tariffs on the other, the three power conference on the suspension of nuclear testing was formally opened in the Palace of Nations here this afternoon under the usual photographic floodlights. On the pubiic record, the opening was an auspicious one. The Soviet delegate, Semyon Tsarapkin, a diplomat who looks like a wrestler, spoke as if he had never listened to Radio Moscow or read the remarks made in the UN General Assembly by his Foreign Ministry superior Valerian Zorin. Although indicating that Soviet tests will continue until an agreement is reached, Mr. Tsarapkin did not call the Anglo-American proposal for a year by year suspension of tests, a fraud and a delusion. He said, the Soviet Government accepted the idea of a control system and was anxious to see a permanent cessation of testing, so, that the development of nuclear weapons could be slowed down and the radio-active contamination of the air ended. The Soviet delegate, in fact, spoke with such moderation that the subsequent remarks of thr two Western delegates: Ambassador James Wadsworth for the United States, and David Ormsby-Gore for Britain, though mild as toasts seemed almost pugnacious. They too said they would like to see nuclear testing halted and a control system adopted and that everybody should get together and do the same. Then, the floodlights were turned off, the photographers and correspondents and delegates wives and visitors were ushered out of the room and the conference went into strictly secret session as it will function from now to its end. It then remained to decipher all the honeyed words, whereupon, it developed, that all through his speech, the Soviet delegate spoke of complete and immediate cessation of tests. And, all through their speeches, the American and British delegate, uttered only the lesser word, "suspension." It was also clear that when the Soviet delegate mentioned a control system, he mentioned it only after a cessation of testing, while the Western delegates clearly predicted even a prolonged suspension upon the existence and functioning of a control system. Finally, it emerged that while the Soviet delegate envisioned a cessation of testing as a means of limiting the development of nuclear weapons, the Western delegates saw suspension in itself as no disarmament of limitation measure at all, but only a prelude to possible other agreements limiting the production of fissionable materials and of both nuclear and conventional weapons. It is on the basis of such striking differences - not only of approach but of principle that the conference has gone behind locked doors. The success that all the delegates so movingly hope for depends upon the reconciliation of these views. Aside from offering thanks for at least one public hour of tranquility and harmony in these troubled times, only three things remain to be noted tonight in Geneva: One is that the American delegation numbering 21 persons is larger than the Soviet and British delegations put together. The second is that the futuristic map of the world under which the conference is sitting has as its most prominent feature a large Chinese dragon. The third, is that there seems to be no sign here of Donald McClaine, the fugative British diplomat, despite reports that he is a member of the Soviet delegation. Now from the Palace of Nations, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Alex Kendrick reporting on the start of the Geneva Conference dealing with nuclear tests.

Russia today formally warned Iran that it had placed itself in danger by signing a new military treaty with the United States. The Soviet warning apparently refers to the realignment of the Baghdad Pact last summer after the military coup in Iraq. Secretary of State Dulles at that time committed the United States to the defense of Turkey, Pakistan and Iran as a virtual partner in the Baghdad alliance. Russia claims that the treaty with Iran "directly endangers the southern frontiers of the Soviet Union." And to this, it says, it cannot "remain indifferent."

Tomorrow marks what is accepted as the fourth anniversary of the start of the Algerian War. Tonight...on the eve of that anniversary... French Premier DeGaulle ordered the immediate release of 1-thousand persons held as political prisoners in Algeria.

In Cairo, the head of the Algerian provisional government...Ferhat Abbas... said tonight that the rebels "are not prepared to hoist a white flag and accept defeat." He said, with reference to DeGaulle's offer to negotiate, that his ministers are prepared to negotiate. But, he said, "not in Paris with ropes around their necks."

The State Department today spelled out the agreement between Secretary Dulles and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek regarding the use of force against Communist China. Chiang...in a joint communique...renounced force as the "principal" means of winning back the mainland. Premier Chen of Nationalist China spoke today of counter-attacking, if the Communists "enlarge" their attakks on the off-shore islands. A State Department spokesman said this statement does not represent a departure from announced policy. What Chiang promised in the communique, he said, "does not preclude the use of force in self-defense, or in case of a large-scale uprising on the mainland."

In Baltimore tonight, President Eisenhower is making his last speech of the political campaign. And he is calling for the election of a Republican Congress. "For progressive and effective government," he will say, "we need Republican control of both the congressional and executive branches." Mr. Eisenhower will also submit the following arguments: Only "sturdy Republican opposition"...and his vetoes..blocked the spending programs of Democratic "extremists" for ending the recession. Instead, the Republicans came forth with "practical, sensible, programs" and today "every economic indicator proves that our Republican faith in the economy was right." "All across America things are good. They are getting better every day." "Today America....and all the world...knows that in less than four years we are rapidly closing the missile gap that we inherited." The Democrats are "gloom-dogglers" split on every issue---states rights, civil rights, "and so on down the line."

Earlier today, Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler said the President should throw away his "ghost-written Halloween speech" and "talk about the facts." Butler charged that both Mr. Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon have been "scaring the daylights" out of small children and big contributors with talk of Democratic radicalism, socialism, and "hare-brained schemes." At a Democratic rally in Casper, Wyoming, Senate Leader Lyndon Johnson said, "There are Republicans who lack faith in the strength of America. And he challenged Mr. Eisenhower to list the "socialist" and "radical" Democratic laws he would repeal.

The Agriculture Department reported that prices which farmers receive for their products dropped in the past month by more than 2 percent. At the same time, farm production costs went up nearly 1 percent.

Chief Justice Warren of the Supreme Court made one of his rare speeches today in his home state of California. For a report on that, we switch to Los Angeles and my colleague, Jack Beck.

BECK: Earl Warren returned to Los Angeles today to dedicate the new Court House in the county of his birth. He returned as the Chief Justice of a Supreme Court, whose rulings during his tenure have been subject to increasing criticism. It has been suggested in some quarters that the Court under Warren has sought to legislate rather than to interpret law. Although criticism of court decisions is as old as Mulberry vs. Madison, it does not befit the custom of the court to indulge in defense of its decisions. So, when Mr. Justice Warren spoke today in dedication of the giant $24 million building, which henceforth is to house the machinery of justice in Los Angeles County, he principally adressed himself to other problems; namely, the inability of our present court system to handle the mountainous volume of litigation now thrust upon it. But, in so doing, the Chief Justice made a point or two which might be construed as having some relevance to the current criticism leveled against the court. Here in part is what he said:

WARREN: The bedrock test of our system is the extent to which our ideals are given concrete reality in the lives of our people, a system of law - however just, which existed only in theory would be a slim reed on which to base our claim that here in America, justice is within the reach of every citizen. It is for this reason that over the entrance to the building of our Supreme Court in Washington, is inscribed the motto: "Equal justice Under Law." This is not a boast, it is an ideal; it is a goal, and it is against this background, that we must view all of our courts - state and federal for the role of the courts is not merely to define the rights, it is also to administer the remedy. Unless the remedy is actually applied to persons and things, the right is a mere plus idea. And, more than that, unless the remedy is applied in seasonable time, it still remains but a delusion.

BECK: That was Mr. Justice Warren speaking in dedication of the new court house in Los Angeles County.

Now, back to Ed Murrow.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The three atomic powers have met in Geneva to discuss the possible banning of nuclear tests. And the world is watching to see what the outcome will be. The prospects for agreement are not bright. Nations may argue. But the atom is serene. For as Emerson said, "The solar system has no anxiety about its reputation."

Goodnight and good luck!